

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

PREFACE

THIS is the Second Series of the compilation entitled "Words and Phrases," published by us in 1904. It contains the judicial interpretation and construction of words and phrases found in the reported decisions of the American appellate courts since the original compilation, down to January 1, 1913. The alphabetical arrangement of the matter is exactly the same as that of the First Series; and one having located a definition of a word or phrase in this series has but to look under the same heading in the First Series to find the earlier definitions. Reference from the First Series to the Second Series may be made in like manner.

JUDICIAL AND STATUTORY DEFINITIONS

WORDS AND PHRASES

SECOND SERIES

The sign "&," for "and," has been used in practice too long for a court to entertain an objection to its employment. Pickens v. State, 58 Ala. 384.

See Etcetera—Etc.

A life policy issued for three months bound insurer to renew quarterly during insured's life on the payment of premiums for the age attained according to a schedule of increasing rates. It provided that it might be exchanged at any time after insured became 60 years old for a policy on the uniform premium plan at the rate for his then age as printed below. Below was a schedule of rates ranging from age 60 to 65 and beneath the columns specifying the rates was printed "&c." Held, that the policy did not become automatically a level-premium policy, without exchange, when insured became 65 years old, merely because the schedule did not specify rates for a greater age; the character "&c." meaning "and so on" in increasing ratio if the ordinary rate should be changed to a level rate after insured became 65. Jones v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. of New York, 61 S. E. 388, 389, 147 N. C. 540, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 808.

& Co.

The use by an individual of his name, followed by the term "& Co.," used as a trade-name, did not necessarily create the presumption that he had a partner or partners, or that such title included more than one person. Willey v. Crocker-Woolworth Nat. Bank, 75 Pac. 106, 108, 141 Cal. 508.

The St. Louis city charter, which authorizes the assembly to establish "a building line" along boulevards, does not prevent the assembly from establishing different building lines along the same boulevard; the word "line," as used in the charter, meaning a mark of division or demarkation, an outline or contour, a limit or boundary, and not a straight line. City of St. Louis v. Handlan, 145 S. W. 421, 422, 242 Mo. 88.

Code Civ. Proc. § 86, provided that each stenographer specified in the act, on request, must furnish with all reasonable diligence, to the defendant in a criminal case "a copy," written out at length from his stenographic notes, of the testimony and proceedings, on payment, by the person requiring same, of the fees allowed by law; that, if the district attorney or Attorney General requires such a copy in a criminal case, the stenographer is entitled to his fees therefor, which shall be a county charge, and must be paid like other county charges. General Construction Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 22) § 35, declares that words in the singular number include the plural, and in the plural include the singular. Held, that the latter section could not be applied to section 86, so as to authorize the district attorney to require more than one transcript of the testimony for his use at the expense of the county; and that, in view of such section, the district attorney had no inherent power to incur such expense as might result from ordering two or more transcripts of the testimony in an important criminal case. Moynahan v. City of New York, 98 N. E. 482, 484, 205 N. Y. 181.

The provision in paragraph 454, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, for statuary produced from "a solid block or mass of marble," etc., is not limited to statuary made from single blocks, and is held to include certain statutes, each carved from three solid blocks of marble. United States v. Perry, 133 Fed. 841.

ABANDON—ABANDONMENT

See Temporary Abandonment.

"Abandonment" is generally understood to mean the intentional relinquishment of a known right, and results from a mere exercise of the will, and so far as it relates to a vested estate in real property is ineffectual to transfer title. Sharkey v. Candiani, 85 Pac. 219, 224, 48 Or. 112.

"Abandonment" does not embrace the sale or conveyance of property, but is the giving up of a thing absolutely, without reference to any particular person or purpose, and includes both the intention to relinquish all claim to and dominion over the property mentioned and the external act by which this intention is executed, or the actual relinquishment of the property so that it may be appropriated by the next comer. "Abandonment must be made by the owner, without being pressed by any duty, necessity, or utility to himself, but simply because he desires no longer to possess a thing; and, further, it must be made without a desire that any other person shall acquire the same, for, if it were made for a consideration, it would be a barter or sale, and, if without consideration, but with an intention that some other person should become the possessor, it would be a gift." St. Peter's Church v. Bragaw, 56 S. E. 688, 689, 144 N. C. 126, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 633 (quoting and adopting definition in Stephens v. Mansfield, 11 Cal. 363, and citing Richardson v. McNulty, 24 Cal. 339; Black's Law Dict. p. 4; 1 Words and Phrases, pp. 4, 5, 11; Middle Creek Ditch Co. v. Henry, 39 Pac. 1058, 15 Mont. 558; Mitchell v. Carder, 21 W. Va. 285; Derry v. Ross, 5 Colo. 300; Hagan v. Gaskill, 6 Atl. 880, 42 N. J. Eq. 217; Phillips v. Hamilton, 95 Pac. 846, 848, 17 Wyo. 41; Douglas Oil Fields v. Same, 95 Pac. 849, 17 Wyo. 54; Worsham v. State, 120 S. W. 439, 444, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 253, 18 Ann. Cas. 134. There can be no abandonment to a definite person. Norman v. Corbley, 79 Pac. 1059, 1060, 32 Mont. 195 (quoting 1 Cyc. p. 4); Watts v. Spencer, 94 Pac. 39, 42, 51 Or. 262.

The word "abandoned," as used in Laws 1910, c. 494, providing that no liquor tax certificates should issue for traffic in liquor to exceed one for each 750 in population, but that such prohibition should not apply to premises in which such traffic in liquor was lawfully carried on within one year before the passage of the act, "provided such traffic was not abandoned during the said period," refers to an actual cessation of traffic in liquors. In re Farley, 138 N. Y. Supp. 1050, 1053, 154 App. Div. 282.

Intention

To constitute "abandonment" there must be an intent and actual failure to use. Hough v. Porter, 98 Pac. 1083, 1107, 51 Or. 318. But the abandonment need not be directly proved, and may be inferred from acts which necessarily point to actual abandonment. Edward & John Burke v. Bishop, 175 Fed. 167, 173 (quoting and adopting definition in Saxlehner v. Eisner & Mendelson Co., 179 U. S. 19, 31, 21 Sup. Ct. 7, 11, 45 L. Ed. 60).

Whether the act of the party constitutes an "abandonment" of property previously occupied by him depends entirely upon the intention with which it is done. An abandonment of property held by possessory title takes place instantly when the occupant deserts it without an intention of ever reclaiming it for himself, and careless of what may thereafter become of it. Mere absence and nonuser of the property do not prove an intention to abandon, although conduct of that kind may continue unexplained for such length of time as not to be consistent with any other hypothesis. Farmers' Canal Co. v. Frank, 100 N. W. 286, 292, 72 Neb. 136.

An "abandonment" is an intentional relinquishment of a known right, the intention to be ascertained from the conduct and declarations of the party in respect thereto; and there was no abandonment of a reservoir and water right appurtenant thereto, though the owner gave up its domicile in the state, and there was a nonuser for a period of 10 years, where, before it left the state, it executed a mortgage on the property, and the mortgagee foreclosed and had a sale after its departure, as there was no intention of the mortgagee to abandon; and the mortgagor, by his failure to pay the license fees, etc., could not defeat the mortgagee's interest. Moore v. United Elkhorn Mines (Or.) 127 Pac. 964, 967.

Nonuser

Nonuser alone, at least short of the period of the statute of limitations, is not sufficient to prove an "abandonment"; but nonuser continued for a considerable length of time, coupled with other acts of a character tending to show an intention on the part of the owner not to resume, or repossess himself of the thing whose use he relinquished, may constitute an abandonment. Alamosa Creek Canal Co. v. Nelson, 98 Pac. 1112, 1113, 42 Colo. 140.

Though mere nonuser of an easement, even for more than 20 years, will not afford conclusive evidence of "abandonment," such nonuser for a prescriptive period, united with an adverse use of the servient estate, inconsistent with the existence of the easement, will extinguish it. Canton Co. v. City of Baltimore, 67 Atl. 274, 275, 108 Md. 69, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 129 (citing Washburn, Easements, §§ 551, 552; 14 Cyc. p. 1195; Woodruff v. Paddock, 29 N. E. 1021, 180 N. J. 618; Matter of City of New York, 77 N. Y. Supp. 31, 78 App. Div. 394; Smyles v. Hastings, 22 N. Y. 224; Smith v. Langewald, 4 N. E. 571, 140 Mass. 205; Spackman v. Steddel, 88 Pa. 453; Horner v. Stillwell, 35 N. J. Law, 307; Bently v. Root, 32 Atl. 918, 19 R. I. 205; McKinney v. Lanning, 38 N. E. 601, 139 Ind. 170; Lathrop v. Ellsner, 58 N. W. 791, 98 Mich. 599; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Quinn, 22 S. W. 221, 94 Ky. 310; Cleadenin v. Maryland Const. Co., 37 Atl. 711, 86 Md. 85; Story v. Ulman, 41 Atl. 121, 88 Md. 244).

In the absence of legislative provision to that effect, mere temporary nonuser of a portion of the territory appropriated by a boom company for the purposes for which it was organized, did not of itself constitute an "abandonment" thereof. Nicomen Boom Co. v. North Shore Boom & Driving Co., 82 Pac. 412, 416, 40 Wash. 315 (citing 3 Elliott, Railroads, § 931; Townsend v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 101 Fed. 767, 42 C. C. A. 570; Roanoke Inv. Co. v. Kansas City & S. E. R. Co., 17 S. W. 1000, 108 Mo. 50; Perth Amboy Terra Cotta Co. v. Ryan, 53 Atl. 699, 68 N. J. Law, 474; Denison & S. R. Co. v. St. Louis S. W. R. Co., 72 S. W. 161, 96 Tex. 233; Welsh v. Taylor, 31 N. E. 896, 184 N. Y. 450, 18 L. R. A. 535; Durfee v. Peoria, D. & E. R. Co., 30 N. E. 696, 140 Ill. 435; Barlow v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 29 Iowa, 276; Memphis & L. R. Co. v. Humphreys, 48 S. W. 86, 65 Ark. 631; Eddy v. Chace, 5 N. E. 306, 140 Mass. 471; Johnston v. Hyde, 33 N. J. Eq. 632).

Forfeiture distinguished

There is a distinction between "abandonment" and "forfeiture," as applied to oil and gas leases; abandonment resting on the intention of the lessee to relinquish the premises, which is a question of fact for the jury, while forfeiture is based on an enforced release. Garrett v. South Penn Oil Co., 66 S. E. 741, 745, 66 W. Va. 587.

Losing distinguished

The distinction between "losing" and "abandonment" lies in the fact that losing is involuntary, while abandonment is by intent or design. But the result, as it relates to the property, is practically the same; the owner not appearing to lay claim to it. In the one case the finder has the right to the possession against all except the true owner. In the other he acquires the absolute property by right of his occupancy. It is the presumption of abandonment that obtains until the owner appears and claims the property that gives the right as legal possessor to the first occupier; the presumption being disputable by the rightful owner. Such presumption or influence does not obtain as to property intentionally left or deposited in a designated place, and possibly forgotten for the time being, as the loss depends upon something more than knowledge or ignorance, or the memory or want of memory of the owner as to the locality at any given moment. "In such case, the taker is not justified in concluding that the goods were lost, because there is little doubt he must have believed that the owner would know where to find them again, and he had no pretense to consider them abandoned or derelict." And where plaintiff, while in possession of defendant's premises under a lease, discovered rich specimens of gold-bearing quartz lying on top of the ground, and by investigation he dug up a large quantity of such quartz found lying in the soil unconnected with any ledge, pocket, placer, or other natural deposit, the quartz being imbedded in the loose surface soil, there being also evidences of a sack or duck cloth in which the quartz might have been buried, such quartz was not "lost" or "abandoned" property, and therefore belonged to the owner of the soil, and not to the finder. Ferguson v. Ray, 77 Pac. 600, 602, 44 Or. 557, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 477, 102 Am. St. Rep. 648, 1 Ann. Cas. 1 (citing 1 Bl. Com. [Lewis' Ed.] c. 8, *295, 296; 2 Bl. Com. [Lewis' Ed.] c. 26, *402; 2 Kent, Com. *356; McLaughlin v. Waite [N. Y.] 5 Wend. 405, 21 Am. Dec. 232).

Repudiation synonymous

An allegation in a complaint that defendant "abandoned" a contract is equivalent to an allegation that the contract was repudiated, though technically "abandonment" is the relinquishment of a right, and "repudiation" the renunciation of a duty. Parker

Land & Improvement Co. v. Ayers, 87 N. E. 1062, 1063, 48 Ind. App. 518.

Sale or transfer distinguished

The terms "sale" and "transfer" are distinguishable from the term "abandonment," in that the latter implies surrender of something deemed useless, while the former implies a thing of value. Where a deed provided that, in case the grantees should abandon the property, it should revert to the grantors, a resale of the property by the grantees did not constitute an abandonment so as to work a forfeiture. St. Peter's Church v. Bragaw, 56 S. E. 688, 690, 144 N. O. 126, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 633 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, pp. 4, 5, 11).

Surrender distinguished

A mining lease may be abandoned by the lessee with the consent of the lessor; such "abandonment" amounting to a surrender of the lessee's right and a restoration of the lessor's possession. Charleston, S. C., Mining & Manufacturing Co. v. American Agricultural Chemical Co. (Tenn.) 150 S. W. 1143, 1145.

Of cargo

Where a portion of the cargo of a stranded vessel was salvaged by strangers, under directions, however, of an agent of the insurer which had written a valued policy on the cargo, and with the consent of the agent of the vessel owners, while the master stood by and gave advice, but exercised no control, the operation was equivalent to an "abandonment" to the insurer as effecting a surrender of the vessel's lien for freight which could not thereafter be resumed as to the salvaged cargo or its proceeds. Portland Flouring Mills Co. v. Portland & Asiatic S. S. Co., 158 Fed. 113, 116.

Of child

"Abandonment," as a criminal offense, contains two essential ingredients, separation from the child and failure to supply its needs; and mere absence from one's child does not constitute the offense, but it begins and continues as long as there is a failure on the part of the father to perform his parental duty, and consequent dependence of the child. Phelps v. State, 72 S. E. 524, 525, 10 Ga. App. 41; Williams v. State, 55 S. E. 480, 126 Ga. 637 (citing Mays v. State, 51 S. E. 503, 123 Ga. 507, and citations).

If, when the defendant separated from his wife, he left the children in proper care, he was not guilty of the crime of "abandonment." But if, after having thus left them, they became destitute and dependent because of their mother's inability to support them, and if he willfully neglected his duty to support his destitute and dependent offspring, he was properly convicted. Brown v. State, 50 S. E. 378, 379, 122 Ga. 568.

In order to constitute the crime of "abandonment" as defined in Pen. Code 1895, § 114, it is necessary that the child shall be not only deserted, but left in a destitute condition; if, notwithstanding the desertion, the wants of the child be provided for by others, the statutory crime of abandonment is not made out. Mays v. State, 51 S. E. 503, 123 Ga. 507.

Under Pen. Code 1895, § 114, as amended by Acts 1907, p. 57, providing that if any father shall willfully and voluntarily "abandon" his child, leaving it in a dependent condition, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, the offense is fully consummated if the father abandons a child in a dependent condition, and an allegation in an indictment therefor that the child was abandoned in a destitute condition is surplusage, and need not be proved. Where a father forcibly and by threats of personal violence drives his wife and babe from home, leaving the child dependent on the mother and others for support, he is guilty of "abandonment." In a prosecution under the statute, evidence of unfriendly relations between the father and the mother is inadmissible, being no justification of the abandonment. Daniels v. State, 69 S. E. 588, 8 Ga. App. 469.

Where, after his wife obtained a divorce and they were living apart, accused failed to comply with the provisions of the decree requiring him to pay her a weekly allowance for the children's support, he was not guilty of the crime of desertion and abandonment of his minor children, denounced by Pub. Laws 1907, No. 144, where the decree of divorce absolutely deprived him of all custody or right over his children, and imposed upon the wife the duty of furnishing them support, subject to his contribution; so there could be no "desertion," which is the act of a consort leaving his wife and children with intent to cause a perpetual separation, or "abandonment," which is the act by which a man deserts and abandons his minor children. People v. Dunston (Mich.) 138 N. W. 1047, 1049, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1065.

A two year old boy was taken charge of by his grandmother after his mother's death, and was afterwards removed to the home of a friend of his uncle by the latter, and on the assurance that she would care for the child, the father consented to leave him with her, and she cared for the child, sent him to school, etc., for nearly seven years, and the father if given the child's tutorship would leave him with her. The father occasionally visited the child, and sent it small presents. Held, that the father has not abandoned the child within Civ. Code, art. 305, providing that no cause of exclusion from tutorship is applicable to a father except abandonment of his children, etc.; "abandonment" meaning the disregard of the paternal duty to see that the child is cared for and leaving it to support itself, so that the father will be confirmed as the natural tutor of such child. In re Alexander, 84 South. 125, 126, 127 La. 853.

Where the conduct of parents indicated their settled intention to leave their child permanently in the care of her aunts, though there was no actual abandonment of the child by the mother, her acts constituted "abandonment" within P. L. 1902, p. 259, as amended by P. L. 1905, p. 272, providing that any unmarried person of full age may petition the orphans' court of the county in which a minor child may reside for permission to adopt such child, and that if either parent shall have abandoned the child the consent of the other parent shall be sufficient, so that the mother's consent was not necessary to an adoption of the child by the aunts. Wood v. Wood, 77 Atl. 91, 94, 77 N. J. Eq. 593.

Evidence held not to justify a finding that a parent has abandoned a minor child, within Civ. Code, § 224, providing that a child cannot be adopted without the consent of its parents, unless the child has been abandoned. To constitute an "abandonment," there must be an intention to do so, express or implied, from the conduct of the parent respecting the child. In re Cozza, 126 Pac. 161, 167, 163 Cal. 514.

Of convict hiring system

Under the constitutional provision that the Legislature shall "abandon" the system of leasing or hiring convicts, etc., "abandon" means to give up absolutely; to forsake entirely. Henry v. State, 39 South. 856, 876, 87 Miss. 1.

Of copyright

To constitute "abandonment of a copyright" there must be a clear, unequivocal, and decisive act of the person entitled, showing a determination not to have the right relinquished. Publication in a foreign country without the consent of the author, or without the consent of the owner of the exclusive right to publish in this country, is not an abandonment. A United States copyright of a work of an English author by the American publishers is not abandoned because of the foreign publication of the work by, or with consent of, the author, without the copyright notice, and without consent of the owners of such copyright. Harper & Bros. v. M. A. Donohue & Co., 144 Fed. 491, 498 (citing 1 Cyc. p. 5; Boudcault v. Wood, 2 Biss. 84, 8 Fed. Cas. 988; Goldmark v. Kreling, 35 Fed. 661).

"Abandonment" of an easement necessarily implies nonuser; but nonuser does not create abandonment, however long continued. Adams v. Hodgkins, 84 Atl. 530, 531, 109 Me. 361, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 741.

An easement may be lost, as provided in Civ. Code 1895, § 3068, by "abandonment" or nonuser, if the abandonment or nonuser continued for a term sufficient to raise the presumption of release or abandonment. Nonuser of a street for a period of some 40 years raises a very strong presumption of abandonment. Kelsoe v. Oglethorpe, 48 S. E. 366, 367, 120 Ga. 951, 102 Am. St. Rep. 138.

The fact that a landowner, having an easement in a ditch which entitled him to be supplied with water therefrom, used some other method of conveying water to his land for a time, did not constitute an "abandonment" thereof. Farmers' High Line Canal & Reservoir Co. v. New Hampshire Real Estate Co., 92 Pac. 290, 294, 40 Colo. 467.

The erection of a building in a street west of respondent's premises and the building of a fence closing the street, the effect of which was to inclose the northwesterly half of the street abutting on a small part of a certain lot, leaving unobstructed the way from that part which was west of respondent's land to L. street, did not as a matter of law conclusively show an intention on respondent's part to "abandon" the way over the westerly part of the street, the use of which was continued. New England Structural Co. v. Everett Distilling Co., 75 N. E. 85, 87, 189 Mass. 145.

Of homestead or residence

The word "abandonment," as used in reference to the abandonment of a homestead, has a well defined meaning. It requires a union of the act of removing from a homestead and an intention to not further retain it as a homestead, or the formation of an intention after such removal of remaining away; in other words, physical act of removing is not sufficient, unless attended or followed by an intention to actually abandon the homestead. Jones v. Kepford, 100 Pac. 923, 924, 17 Wyo. 468; Edison-Keith & Co. v. Bedwell, 122 Pac. 392, 393, 52 Colo. 310; Herman v. Smith (Tex.) 141 S. W. 1087, 1090; Armstrong v. Neville, 117 S. W. 1010, 1012; Victor v. Grimmer, 95 S. W. 274, 275, 118 Mo. App. 592 (citing Holmes v. Nichols, 67 S. W. 722, 93 Mo. App. 513; Bealey v. Blake, 55 S. W. 288, 153 Mo. 657; Duffey v. Willis, 12 S. W. 520, 99 Mo. 132; Mills v. Mills, 42 S. W. 709, 141 Mo. 195).

Removal from a homestead with a fixed intent not to return and use it as such constitutes an "abandonment" thereof, whether another homestead has been acquired or not. Republic Guaranty & Surety Co. v. Wm. Cameron & Co. (Tex.) 143 S. W. 317, 320.

A homestead is not "abandoned" by the removal of the husband with his family and living elsewhere, when there is an intention to return later and make it their home. In re Schulz, 135 Fed. 228, 229 (quoting and adopting Porter v. Chapman, 4 Pac. 237, 65 Cal. 385).

An enforced temporary absence on account of the destruction of the dwelling house on a homestead does not operate as an "abandonment" of the homestead right. Newton v. Russian, 85 S. W. 407, 408, 74 Ark. 88.

In order to constitute an "abandonment of residence," where one leaves his home, considerable time must elapse after leaving, together with some evidence of intention to abandon the residence. Sfate v. Tomsa, 52 South. 988, 989, 126 La. 682.

The removal of a party from premises on which he has declared a homestead after a void execution sale thereof, and his surrender of the possession to the execution purchaser, do not constitute an "abandonment of the homestead," within Civ. Code, § 1243, providing that a homestead can be abandoned only by a declaration of abandonment, etc., and he cannot declare a second homestead on other land. In re Clavo's Estate, 93 Pac. 295, 6 Cal. App. 774.

The fact that there was 16 months' delay after the levy of an execution on a homestead before proceedings were taken under a statute providing a method for subjecting to execution the excess of value over the exemption, did not show an "abandonment"; a part of the delay being explainable by the pendency of a suit to enjoin execution sale. Lean v. Givens, 81 Pac. 128, 130, 146 Cal. 739, 106 Am. St. Rep. 79.

"If, prior to the establishment of actual residence upon the land by the settler, he is prevented from establishing such residence by his own voluntary act, even though it be the commission of a crime which results in his enforced incarceration, an 'abandonment' follows as a matter of law; but if the settler had established an actual residence and made improvements upon the land, then his removal therefrom and enforced absence by reason of conviction for crime will not work an abandonment. The reason for this latter rule is doubtless twofold: First, that residence and abandonment are each determined in part by intention, and it cannot be said that the enforced absence of a settler by compulsion of the law from his established residence carries with it the intention to establish a home in the place of his confinement or the intention to abandon that from which he has been unwillingly removed; secondly, that abandonment is something more than the relinquishment of possession. It must be the voluntary relinquishment of possession united with an intention to abandon." Huffman v. Smyth, 84 Pac. 80-82, 47 Or. 573, 114 Am. St. Rep. 938, 8 Ann. Cas. 678.

That a man voted in a precinct different from that in which his homestead was located was not conclusive evidence of the abandonment of his homestead, but was merely a circumstance to be considered in connection with the other proof in determining the question of "abandonment." Farmers' & Traders' Bank v. Childers, 150 S. W. 840, 841, 150 Ky. 719.

Of husband or wife

Good cause for, see Good Cause.

"Abandonment," in divorce law, consists in the voluntary separation of one spouse from the other for the prescribed time, without the latter's consent, without justification, and without an intention to return. Luper v. Luper (Or.) 96 Pac. 1099, 1101; Heyman v. Heyman, 104 N. Y. Supp. 227, 228, 119 App. Div. 182.

"Abandonment," in the law of husband and wife, as used in P. L. 1902, p. 508, § 20, declaring that, if a husband without justifiable cause abandons and refuses or neglects to maintain his wife, the chancery court may decree such suitable maintenance as the nature of the case requires, means a "forsaking entirely" or "removing entirely" from the wife. Such "abandonment" occurs when the husband fails to perform the duties of a husband still incumbent on him, namely, to support his wife and to be true to her. Freund v. Freund (N. J.) 63 Atl. 756.

If a wife leaves her husband because of his adultery, even if it be committed elsewhere than at their dwelling, the separation thus created is constructive desertion by him for the purpose of enabling her to compel him to support her; that is, it amounts to the "abandonment" or separation (whatever the difference) by him from her without justifiable cause, within Divorce Act (P. L. 1907, p. 482) § 26. Suydam v. Suydam, 80 Atl. 1057, 1058, 79 N. J. Eq. 144.

An "abandonment" by a wife of her husband may be complete under the same shelter. Graves v. Graves, 41 South. 384, 88 Miss. 677 (citing 1 Bish. Mar. & Div. §§ 1672, 1676).

Where a husband fails and refuses to support his wife, she does not forfeit her right of action, under Rev. St. 1899, § 4327, for support, on the ground of abandonment and failure to support, by continuing to live in the same house with, but apart from, him, as a refusal to support his wife amounts to an "abandonment" of her, though they continue to live in the same house. Polster v. Polster, 123 S. W. 81, 82, 145 Mo. App. 606.

Continued refusal of sexual intercourse by a wife is not "abandonment" or desertion, justifying a divorce within Rev. St. 1899, § 2921, making the absence of either party without reasonable cause for one year a ground for divorce. Williams v. Williams, 99 S. W. 42, 44, 121 Mo. App. 349.

To constitute "abandonment" within Revised 1905, § 2117, providing that a woman whose husband abandons her may convey her property without his assent, he need not leave the state. Witty v. Barham, 61 S. E. 372, 373, 147 N. C. 479.

There can be no "abandonment" of the matrimonial relation except for such causes as would constitute grounds for divorce. Warfield v. Warfield, 133 S. W. 606, 607, 97 Ark. 125.

"Abandonment" or desertion by a husband of his wife under Pub. Acts 1907, No. 144, making one who deserts and abandons his wife guilty of a felony, means to separate from wrongfully without intention of again resuming marital relations, desertion of one by the other meaning more than going away, or more than separation, and negating the idea of a friendly separation or a separation for a just cause, an abandonment being the act of a husband or wife leaving his or her consort willfully, and with an intention of causing perpetual separation. People v. Stickle, 121 N. W. 497, 498, 156 Mich. 557.

In order to constitute "abandonment" under Greater New York Charter (Laws 1897, c. 378) § 685, as amended by Laws 1901, c. 466, making it an offense for one to abandon his wife without adequate support, willful desertion and voluntary separation by the husband from his wife without justification and with the intent of not returning are essential elements. People ex rel. Demos v. Demos, 100 N. Y. Supp. 968, 969, 115 App. Div. 410.

Where a husband and wife live separately by consent, and the wife becomes destitute, to the husband's knowledge, and he thereafter, though of sufficient ability, refuses to provide for her, he has "abandoned" her in a destitute condition, within the statute punishing a husband for willfully abandoning and neglecting to support his wife. Spencer v. State, 112 N. W. 462, 466, 132 Wis. 509, 122 Am. St. Rep. 989, 13 Ann. Cas. 969.

In a prosecution for abandonment of defendant's wife and a refusal to provide for her support, a requested instruction that there could be no conviction if it should appear that the husband, by reason of lack of property, money, or estate, was unable to support his wife, and that such a condition amounts to a good cause and constitutes a complete defense to the prosecution, is sufficiently covered by a charge that "abandonment" is an actual, willful desertion followed by a willful neglect or refusal to contribute to the support of the wife, and there can be no conviction even if there is an abandonment as above defined without good cause unless such actual, willful desertion, followed by willful neglect and refusal to contribute to the wife's support, is without good cause, and the state must prove these several facts, and also prove that at or about the time alleged the defendant was possessed of money, property, or other means available for the support of the wife, or had at least earning capacity and an opportunity to work. Graham v. State, 134 N. W. 249, 250, 90 Neb. 658.

Where a husband who has not provided a domicile for his wife takes her to the house of her parents, and without further notice to her leaves the state for an indefinite period, the wife has a right to a separation from bed and board on the ground of "abandonment." Wilcox v. Nixon, 38 South. 890, 115 La. 47, 112 Am. St. Rep. 266.

Where, in divorce on the ground of abandonment by the husband, it appeared that he left his wife because he was put out of the house by her father for drunkenness and failure to support the wife, and that at the time he asked how long it was to last; that he wrote her a number of letters; and that thereafter she visited him several times, and wrote him making engagements—there was no such "abandonment" as to authorize a final divorce. Wheeler v. Wheeler, 61 Atl. 216, 219, 220, 101 Md. 427.

"Abandonment" in the sense of the statute is not shown, where alleged as a ground for divorce, where it appears that the defendant left the house Saturday evening, taking his clothes; that he returned the following Sunday and left again, returning again the following Tuesday night, making the request, "Carrie, can I stay all night?" and receiving the reply, "Yes, but that is all the good it will do you;" and that soon thereafter, while still at the house, he was served with the papers in the present suit. Saillard v. Saillard, 2 Tenn. Ch. App. 396.

Plaintiff first abandoned defendant in May, 1896, after having transferred all his property to her, subject to his debts. He returned in the fall of the same year, and remained at home until the spring of 1898, when he went to Alaska, and again returned in 1900, but not to his home, after which he visited his home but once or twice for the next four years, and refused to live with his family, though requested to do so, and made no provision for their support until he brought suit for divorce in 1904. Held, that such facts justified the court in decreeing defendant a divorce for "abandonment," as prayed in a cross-bill. Clemans v. Western, 81 Pac. 824, 825, 39 Wash. 290.

Of insurance policy

Where an insured under a life policy refused to pay an assessment made against him solely on the ground that the amount of the assessments had been increased, but without any claim that the increase was illegal, and formally notified the company that he withdrew therefrom, such action constituted an "abandonment" of the contract, which precluded a recovery on his policy after his death, unless some other act super-vened to reinstate his claim. Roth v. Mutual Reserve Life Ins. Co., 162 Fed. 282, 286, 89 C. C. A. 262.

A failure to occupy land for an indefinite time does not constitute an "abandonment" of title or possession. Sowles v. Minot, 73 Atl. 1025, 1029, 82 Vt. 344, 137 Am. St. Rep. 1010 (citing 2 Wash. Real Prop. 453, 457; Perkins v. Blood, 36 Vt. 273, 283; Langdon v. Templeton, 28 Atl. 866, 66 Vt. 173, 180; Davenport v. Newton, 42 Atl. 1087, 71 Vt. 11, 17).

The "abandonment" of possessory rights upon the public domain is a question of fact as well as of intent. To find that real property has been abandoned, the evidence must show that the premises were left vacant without any intention of claiming possession, and with an intention to leave them open for the occupancy of any one who might choose to enter. Burr v. House, 3 Alaska, 641, 643.

Of logs

Where logs not marked with a recorded mark were delivered to a lumber company under an agreement whereby such company undertook to drive them to its hoist, where they were to be scaled and paid for, as between the owner of the logs and the company so undertaking to drive them, the logs were not, during the drive, "abandoned," within Rev. Laws 1905, § 2580; and the owner of such logs was not precluded from claiming a conversion thereof by such company at its hoist. Sheldon-Mather Timber Co. v. Itasca Lumber Co., 135 N. W. 1132, 1134, 117 Minn. 355.

Of mining claim

"Abandonment" of a mining claim is a matter of intention, and takes place whenever the claimant goes away with no intention of returning to it, and with the intention of leaving the claim open for the next applicant. Moffat v. Blue River Gold Excavating Co., 80 Pac. 139, 141, 33 Colo. 142.

"Abandonment" of a mining claim occurs where the locator goes away and leaves it without any intention of returning, having no regard to what becomes of the claim, or who may appropriate it, and the leaving of a claim with intent to return later is not abandonment. Davis v. Dennis, 85 Pac. 1079, 1080, 43 Wash. 54.

"Abandonment" is a matter of intention and operates instantly. The locator of a lode claim, by applying for and obtaining patent for only part of the location, including the discovery shaft, does not thereby abandon the portion not included in the patent; but, continuing to retain the possession thereof and to perform the requisite annual labor thereon, his right of possession thereof remains as before. Miller v. Hamley, 74

Pac. 980, 982, 31 Colo. 495 (adopting definition in Derry v. Ross, 5 Colo. 295).

"'Abandonment,' as applied to mining, is a voluntary act, and consists of the relinquishment of possession of the claim, with an intention not to return and occupy it. It is purely a question of intention. If there is no animus revertendi, the desertion of the claim determines the property at once, without regard to the duration of the locator's absence. To constitute an abandonment, there must be an absolute desertion of the premises. The burden of proving it is upon him who asserts it." The owner of mining locations stopped work thereon temporarily, except annual assessment work, on account of lack of transportation for ores, and another person entered the land as a homestead, but without the consent of the mine owner. Held, that there was no intention of abandonment. Buffalo Zinc & Copper Co. v. Crump, 69 S. W. 572, 576, 70 Ark. 525, 91 Am. St. Rep. 87 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Lindl. Mines, § 643).

Where the owners of a mining claim, after a ruling of the Commissioners of the General Land Office holding for cancellation a portion of their claim, attempted to avoid the effect of such ruling, and, on failing, abandoned their application for a patent, and elected to rely on their grant from the government under their location, and at the commencement of the suit had complied with the law as to annual labor and performed additional work on the claim for several years preceding a subsequent location, such conduct negated any intention to "abandon" or surrender their claim to the public domain, so as to subject it to relocation. Peoria & Colorado Mill. & Min. Co. v. Turner, 79 Pac. 915, 917, 20 Colo. App. 474.

Under Laws 1903, p. 364, § 18 (Rev. St. 1908, § 4297), which requires that abandoned mine shafts dangerous to life be securely covered or fenced, a mining shaft, though not shown to have been abandoned in the legal sense of that word, which is not used for working through from the surface, is such a shaft as was meant by the term "abandoned mine shaft." Richardson v. El Paso Consol. Gold Mining Co., 118 Pac. 982, 985, 51 Colo. 440.

Of office

To constitute an "abandonment" of an office, it must be total, and under such circumstances as to clearly indicate an absolute relinquishment. State ex rel. McGuyer v. Huff, 87 N. E. 141, 143, 172 Ind. 1, 139 Am. St. Rep. 355.

"Abandonment" of an office implies a volition on the part of the incumbent against whom it is charged, and such volition is essential to a cessation to discharge the duties of the office before the penalty can be invoked. Pol. Code, § 906, subd. 7, provides that an office becomes vacant by the ceasing of the incumbent to discharge the duties of the office for a period of three consecutive months, except when prevented by sickness or when absent from the state by permission of the Legislature. Held, that such section contemplated a voluntary abandonment or nonuse of the office for three consecutive months, and that an involuntary failure on the part of an incumbent to perform the duties of his office, caused by his incarceration for a felony during the statutory period, did not operate as an "abandonment" of the office within such section. — Bergerow v. Parker, 87 Pac. 248, 249, 4 Cal. App. 189 (citing People v. Hartwell, 6 Pac. 873, 67 Cal. 11; People ex rel. Tracy v. Brite, 55 Cal. 79, and distinguishing People ex rel. Flemming v. Shorb, 35 Pac. 163, 100 Cal. 537, 38 Am. St. Rep. 310).

Where a trustee in bankruptcy absconded after embezzling the funds of the estate, such conduct amounted to an "abandonment of his office," which was thereby vacated, and a new trustee may be appointed without notice to him or a hearing for his removal. — Scofield v. United States, 174 Fed. 1, 3, 98 C. C. A. 39.

Of railroad right of way

The word "abandoned," as used in Act 1890, p. 246, c. 220, providing that whenever on an unfinished railroad a right of way, or location on any part thereof, remains for 10 years unused for railroad purposes, the same shall be held to be abandoned, and shall be liable to be used and appropriated by another railroad company on purchase or condemnation in a manner provided by law, cannot import such an abandonment as would cause a reversion to the first owner, for the reason that such a construction would be to take from the railroad company property obtained by condemnation and paid for, without compensation, and therefore raise a constitutional question. Its more reasonable construction would be that it is to be applied to cases only where there has been no use of the property for railroad uses, and in such a case there has been such an abandonment that authority is granted to another railroad to take condemnation proceedings to secure it for its use without further special legislative permission so to do. Canton Co. of Baltimore v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 57 Atl. 637, 640, 98 Md. 202.

Of railroad station

Though Ky. St. § 772, prohibits abandonment, without the Railroad Commission's consent, of a passenger station maintained for five years, reasonable changes may be made to afford better service to the public, and the removal of an interurban railroad's stopping point 376 feet to better the service was not an "abandonment" of the station within the statute. Louisville & I. R. Co. v. Callahan, 136 S. W. 1018, 1019, 143 Ky. 517, 84 L. R. A. (N. S.) 412.

Of trade-mark

The loss of the right of property in trade-marks on the ground of "abandonment" is not to be viewed as a penalty, either for nonuser or for the creation and use of a new device. There must be found an intent to abandon, or the property is not lost. "Abandonment," in industrial property, is an act by which the public domain originally enters or re-enters into the possession of the thing (commercial name, mark, or sign) by the will of the legitimate owner. The essential condition to constitute "abandonment" is that the one having a right should consent to the dispossession. Outside of this there can be no dedication of the right, because there cannot be "abandonment" in the juridical sense of the word. Baglin v. Cusenier Co., 31 Sup. Ct. 669, 674, 221 U. S. 580, 55 L. Ed. 863.

Of water rights

The word "abandonment," as applied to an appropriation of water, is a matter of intent, as such intent may be evidenced by the declaration of the party or may be fairly inferred from his acts. Gould v. Maricopa Canal Co., 76 Pac. 598, 601, 8 Ariz. 429.

The mere intention to abandon the right to divert and use water, if not coupled with an actual yielding up of possession or a cessation of user, does not constitute "abandonment"; nor will nonuser alone, without an intention to abandon, amount to an abandonment. Wood v. Etiwanda Water Co., 81 Pac. 512, 514, 147 Cal. 228.

The term "abandonment," as applied to water rights, is applicable only to completed appropriations of water, and not to a case where the claimant never acquired a fixed right because of his failure to apply the appropriation to a beneficial use within a reasonable time. Conley v. Dyer, 95 Pac. 304, 306, 43 Colo. 22.

The mere temporary nonuse of water during one year subsequent to its appropriation, without intent to abandon the appropriator's right, is insufficient to establish an "abandonment." Land v. Johnston, 104 Pac. 449, 451, 156 Cal. 253.

In order to constitute an "abandonment," there must be an intent to abandon coupled with some external act or relinquishment by which the intent is carried out. On the question as to the abandonment of a water right, there being evidence that neither plaintiff nor its predecessor in interest ceased to use the water at any one time for a period of seven years, and no showing, except some evidence of nonuser, that it was at any time the intention of plaintiff or its predecessor in interest to abandon the use of the water, an "abandonment" was not shown. Promontory Ranch Co. v. Argile, 79 Pac. 47, 49, 28 Utah, 398.

ABATE—ABATEMENT

See Destruction by Abatement; Matter in Abatement; Plea in Abatement.

Of action

"Abatement" is defined as "a suspension of proceedings in a suit from the want of proper parties capable of proceeding therein." The Telegraph v. Lee, 98 N. W. 364, 365, 125 Iowa, 17 (quoting Bouv.).

An "abatement" of a suit, in the sense of the common law, is an entire overthrow or destruction of it, so that it is quashed or ended; but in the sense of a court of equity it signifies only a present suspension of all proceedings in the suit for the want of proper parties capable of proceeding therein. At common law a suit, when abated, is absolutely dead; but in equity it is merely in a state of suspended animation, and may be revived by a bill of revivor. The dissolution of a corporation pending a suit in equity against it did not abate the suit in the sense that it was destroyed, but it would be subject to revival. Kelly v. Rochelle (Tex.) 93 S. W. 164, 166.

A right of action "abating," as it does, on the death of a defendant, does not simply mean a discontinuance; it means an extinguishment of the very right of action itself. The right of prosecution is effectually wiped out, as if it had never existed. Baker v. Modern Woodmen of America, 121 S. W. 794, 797, 140 Mo. App. 619 (citing State v. Brown, 1 Mo. App. 449).

Of freehold

"Abatement or intrusion" consists in a wrongful entry on land when the possession is vacant, so as to constitute an ouster of a freehold in law. Dobbins v. Dobbins, 53 S. E. 870, 872, 141 N. C. 210, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 185 (citing 3 Bl. 167).

Of nuisance

Under St. 1899, p. 103, which authorizes suit by the district attorney of a county to "abate" a public nuisance existing therein, suit lies to enjoin maintenance of a public nuisance by permitting noxious vapors to escape from a smelter, though, strictly construed, the words "abate" and "enjoin" have technically different meanings. People v. Selby Smelting & Lead Co., 124 Pac. 692, 695, 163 Cal. 84.

Of taxes

Good cause for, see Good Cause.

ABATABLE NUISANCE

An "abatable nuisance" may be regarded as one which is practically susceptible of being suppressed, extinguished, or rendered harmless, and whose continued existence is not authorized under the law. Sanders v. Miller, 113 S. W. 996, 1000, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 372.

ABDUCTION

See Taking (In Abduction).
See, also, Kidnapping.

"Abduction" in its broadest legal sense signifies the act of taking and carrying away by force—which may be by fraud, persuasion, or open violence—a child, ward, wife, etc., and in its more restricted sense it is confined to the taking of females for the purpose of marriage, concubinage, or prostitution. Baumgartner v. Eigenbrot, 60 Atl. 601, 603, 100 Md. 508 (quoting and adopting the definition in 1 Cyc. p. 141).

Under Pen. Code, § 282, "abduction" for the purpose of marriage of a female under the age of 18 years, without the consent of the parent or guardian, relates simply to the offense of taking the female for the purpose of marriage without obtaining that consent. On a prosecution for such an offense, evidence to show that defendant was married to another woman at the time of the offense is inadmissible. People v. Cerami, 91 N. Y. Supp. 1027, 1028, 101 App. Div. 366.

Under Gen. St. 1894, § 6529, providing that "a person who takes a female under the age of 18 years * * * without the consent of her father, mother, guardian, or other person having legal charge of her person, for the purpose of marriage, * * * is guilty of 'abduction.'" The consent of the child is immaterial and irrelevant. She was capable, when of the age of 15 years or more, of consenting to marry; but she has not the power of consenting on the part of the guardian of her person, legal or natural, to the act of taking her away for the purpose of marriage. State v. Sager, 108 N. W. 812, 813, 99 Minn. 54.

The word "abduction," as used in Rev. Codes 1899, § 2718, providing that the rights of personal relation forbid the abduction of a husband from his wife or the abduction of a wife from her husband, means the taking away by either violence, fraud, or persuasion. A married woman may maintain an action against another woman to recover damages for the alienation of the affections of her husband and his consequent abandonment of her. King v. Hanson, 99 N. W. 1085, 1088, 13 N. D. 85.

The character of the place into which a female is inveigled is an essential element of the offense of "abduction," under Penal Law, § 70, subd. 2, providing that a person who inveigles an unmarried female of previous chaste character into a house of ill fame, or of assignation, or elsewhere, for purpose of sexual intercourse, is guilty of abduction, and the place must to some extent be a place for purposes of prostitution; and one who induced a female to take an automobile ride with him, and who on the return trip attempted to assault her on or near a public highway, is not guilty of "abduction." People ex rel. Howey v. Warden of City Prison, 137 N. Y. Supp. 268, 269.

ABET

In criminal law the word "abet" means to encourage, or set another on, to commit a crime. This word is always applied to aiding the commission of a crime. To "abet" another to commit a crime is to command, procure, or counsel him to do it; and presence and participation are necessary to constitute one an abettor. Even if one was present at the commission of a crime, and mentally approved or consented to the same, yet, if that consent was unknown to the person committing the crime, the one so mentally approving could not be held guilty as principal. Brooks v. State, 57 S. E. 483, 128 Ga. 261, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 889.

Aid and assist distinguished

The word "aid" does not imply guilty knowledge or felonious intent, while "abet" includes knowledge of the wrongful purpose of the perpetrator, and counsel and encouragement in the crime. State v. Allen, 87 Pac. 177, 182, 34 Mont. 403; People v. Bond, 109 Pac. 150, 155, 13 Cal. App. 175; Same v. Lewis, 98 Pac. 1078, 1079, 9 Cal. App. 279.

The word "abet" is not synonymous with "aid" and "assist." It may import presence, with instigation or encouragement towards the commission of the criminal offense, but without aid or assistance therein. The furnishing by the defendant of a machine that happened afterwards, without his privity, to be used for gambling, does not constitute either the aiding, abetting, or assisting in the keeping of a gambling resort. State v. Flynn, 72 Atl. 296, 297, 76 N. J. Law, 473.

ABIDE

"The rule [as to instantaneous seisin] as it appears in the older authorities is chiefly applied in cases where dower is sought. It is thus stated by Blackstone: 'The seisin of the husband for a transitory instant only, when the same act which gives him the estate conveys it also out of him again (as where by a fine land is granted to a man, and he immediately renders it back by the same fine), such a seisin will not entitle the wife to dower, for the land was merely in transitu, and never rested in the husband, the grant and render being one continued act. But, if the land abides in him but for a single moment, it seems that the wife shall be endowed thereof.' 2 Bl. Com. 182. There is much in this word 'abides.' A well-known English writer seems to have caught its meaning when he says it means when the husband holds the estate for an instant beneficially for his own use." Libbey v. Tidden, 78 N. E. 313, 816, 192 Mass. 175, 7 Ann. Cas. 617 (citing Prest. Est. tit. "Dower," as cited in Bac. Abr. "Dower," c. 2).

ABIDE BY

Where, by defendant's constitution, benefits were restricted to members in good standing who had paid all dues, and who faithfully observed the laws, rules, commands, and regulations then in force, or which might thereafter be added to the constitution, by-laws, and rules, and in taking his obligation of membership, without which admittance was impossible, decedent agreed in writing to abide by the constitution as it then was, or might thereafter be amended, the words "to observe" and "to abide by" meant to obey and to accept the consequences of, and, so far as amendments were concerned, were not restricted to amendments of those laws and rules as related entirely to disciplinary and social regulations, but extended as well to amendments affecting decedent's right to benefits. Order of United Commercial Travelers of America v. Smith, 192 F. 102, 104, 112 C. C. A. 442.

ABIDE THE EVENT

See Costs to Abide Event.

ABIDING CONVICTION

In a murder case, accused was not prejudiced by error in defining "reasonable doubt" as "the want of an 'abiding conviction' of guilt, a conviction which shall rest with you all the days of your life," though "abiding conviction" means no more than "settled conviction." State v. Silverio, 70 Atl. 1069, 1071, 79 N. J. Law, 482.

ABILITY

See Best of Ability; Impaired Ability; Inability; Pecuniary Ability; Sufficient Ability.

Inability, see Physical Inability.

A representation by defendant, charged with obtaining money by false pretenses, that he was the brother of one "V. V. Harris, a contractor at the city of V., and that he and the said contractor, as partners, had a certain contract," does not relate to defendant's ability to pay, within Rev. Laws 1905, § 5089, providing that a purchase of property by false pretenses is not criminal, where the pretenses relate to the purchaser's "ability to pay," unless such pretense shall be made in writing and signed by the party to be charged. State v. Harris, 133 N. W. 980, 981, 116 Minn. 401.

There is a marked distinction between the solvency of an individual and his "ability to purchase." "Solvency" means his ability to discharge his legal obligations, while his "ability to purchase property" means, as the authorities say, that he is "ready" to do so, which, according to Webster, is "equipped or supplied with what is needed for some act or event." Colburn v. Seymour, 76 Pac. 1058, 1060, 82 Colo. 480, 2 Ann. Cas. 182.

ABLE

See As Soon as Able; If Able; Unable.
Pecuniarily able, see Pecuniary Ability.

The word, as used in Civ. Code Ga. 1910, § 3587, providing that a broker has earned his commissions when he finds a purchaser "able," etc., to buy, means financially "able"; and this meaning does not make the broker an insurer of the ability of the purchaser, but is a codification of the common-law principle, recognized generally throughout the entire country, and a broker has not fulfilled his undertaking by presenting a person as a purchaser who is not financially "able" to make the purchase. Shaw v. Chiles, 71 S. E. 745, 746, 9 Ga. App. 460.

Ready distinguished

Under the rule that to entitle an agent to commission the purchaser produced by him must be ready, able, and willing to buy the property on the authorized terms, the words "able" and "ready" represent distinct ideas. A purchaser may be a millionaire, and therefore be "able" to buy; but if, when he meets the seller, he cannot make payment until he goes into the market and raises the necessary money, he is not "ready," and the production of such a purchaser is not sufficient to entitle the agent to recover a commission. To be "ready" is to be completely prepared, as for immediate use, or for present requirement. McDermott v. Mahoney, 115 N. W. 32, 40, 139 Iowa, 292 (quoting and adopting definition in Century Dictionary).

ABOLISH

The term "repeal," with reference to statutes, means the abrogation of a previously existing law by a subsequent statute, which either declares that the former shall be revoked, or which contains provisions so irreconcilable with those of the earlier law that only one of the two can remain in force; the former being an express repeal. The term "repeal" is synonymous with "abolish," so that a statute or ordinance is repealed when it is abolished. City of St. Louis v. Kellman, 189 S. W. 443, 445, 235 Mo. 687; Wilson v. People, 85 Pac. 187, 189, 36 Colo. 418.

ABORTION

The word "abortion," when used in judicial proceedings, necessarily implies that the crime was committed on a woman with child, and is synonymous with "miscarriage" in its primary meaning. Abortion is an offense at common law. Marmaduke v. People, 101 Pac. 337, 338, 45 Colo. 357.

Act March 20, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 230) provides that any person who, "with intent to produce or promote a miscarriage or abortion," advises, gives, sells, or administers to a woman whether pregnant or not, or who, with such intent, procures or causes her to take any drug, medicine, or article, or uses on her or advises to or for her the use of any instrument or other method or device to produce a miscarriage or abortion, not a medical necessity, shall be guilty of a felony, etc. Held, that the word "abortion" was not used in such section in its ordinary sense, to wit, the expulsion of a fetus at a period of utero-gestation so early that it has not acquired the power of sustaining an independent life, or the delivery or expulsion of a human fetus prematurely, or before it is yet capable of sustaining life, but rather, as the designation of a statutory offense, to distinguish it from other felonies, and that the gravamen of the offense was the intent to produce a miscarriage or abortion by administering drugs or using instruments; the actual production of a miscarriage being unnecessary to complete the offense. State ex rel. Gaston v. Shields, 130 S. W. 298, 301, 230 Mo. 91.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 1570, declaring it an offense to administer drugs to a woman with child, with intent to produce an abortion or premature delivery of any fetus before the period of quickening, the crime is complete when the drug is administered "before the period of quickening," for the purpose of causing an "abortion"; that is, with the intent of causing an expulsion of the fetus prematurely; so that it is immaterial that the result be not till after the period of quickening; and therefore the indictment charging the administering of the drug to a pregnant woman before the period of quickening, with intent to produce an abortion and premature delivery of the fetus, need not further charge it was administered for the purpose of causing a delivery of the fetus before the period of quickening. Davis v. State, 130 S. W. 547, 548, 96 Ark. 7.

Code, § 4759, defines the offense of "abortion" by saying that "if any person, with intent to produce the miscarriage on any pregnant woman, willfully administer to her any drugs, or substance whatever, or, with such intent, use any instrument or other means whatever, unless such miscarriage shall be necessary to save her life," he shall be punished, etc. Held, that this indicates a design to treat the woman on whom the act was perpetrated as the victim, and she could not be guilty of the crime as an accessory or an accomplice; but it does not follow that she may not engage in an unlawful conspiracy with another to perpetrate the offense on herself. State v. Croford, 110 N. W. 921, 922, 133 Iowa, 478.

Decedent, having applied for insurance in a mutual benefit society, answered that she had never had any local disease, personal injury, or illness of any kind, but in answer to the medical questions stated that her last confinement was in 1908, and that she had had two miscarriages from over-exertion. In an action on the certificate, it was shown that in 1908, about seven years prior to decedent's death, she suffered an abortion when she was about three months advanced in pregnancy, and that about three years later another occurred at about the same stage. Held, that since the words "abortion" and "miscarriage" are synonymous, both meaning premature parturition, there was no breach of warranty or misrepresentation. Royal Neighbors of America v. Bratcher (Tex.) 151 S. W. 885, 886.

ABOUT

See In and About; In, Upon or About; On or About.

See, also, More or Less.

The meaning of the adverb "about" is "nearly," "approximately," "with close correspondence in quality, * * * degree," etc. Nelms v. State, 51 S. E. 588, 123 Ga. 575 (quoting and adopting definition in Webster's Dictionary).

The word "about" is of somewhat flexible signification, which may vary with the circumstances and the connection in which it is used; but, when used in such a sense as to become part of a contract, it denotes approximation to exactness. It allows a play within somewhat narrow limits, the oscillation depending in some degree upon the subject to which it is applied. While it gives a margin for some excess or diminution, it cannot reasonably be intended to include a very large fraction of the whole touching which it is used. As to time in the immediate future, it would ordinarily be understood as indicating a near approach to definiteness. Freeman v. Hedrington, 90 N. E. 519, 204 Mass. 238, 17 Ann. Cas. 741.

Construction in courses and distances

The word "about," as used to define the location and beginning point in a description, should be construed, if possible, so as to carry out the meaning and intent of grantor. Co-operative Bldg. Bank v. Hawkins, 73 Atl. 617, 622, 30 R. I. 171.

As estimate of distance

The term "about" is a relative and frequently ambiguous term, and its precise meaning in a contract to sell property fronting on a street "about" 60 feet is affected by surrounding circumstances, which may be established by parol evidence. Harten v. Loffler, 29 Sup. Ct. 351, 354, 212 U. S. 397, 53 L. Ed. 568.

A mortgage described a lot as beginning at a point "about" 815 feet from D. street, and 363 feet from M. street, land running westerly, bounded northerly by land of the grantors, 160 feet to the land of C.; thence southerly, bounded westerly by C.'s land 50 feet to a corner; thence, turning at right angles, said land runs easterly, bounded southerly by the land of the grantors, 100 feet to a corner; thence, turning at right angles, said land runs northerly, bounded easterly by land of the grantors, 50 feet to the first-mentioned boundary, together with all buildings and improvements thereon, etc. Thereafter to prevent foreclosure proceedings, the land was conveyed to the mortgagee by the same description, and she took possession, including the whole of the dwelling house, part of which was not within the boundaries of the tract. Held, that the word "about," as so used, was not equivalent to "at," but indicated that only approximation of the distance of the beginning line from the street was intended; and, it appearing from the description that the lot conveyed was not to extend more than 100 feet east of C.'s land, extrinsic evidence and general expressions in the description were ineffective to override such definite calls and extend the lines of the lot to include the whole house within the boundaries. Co-operative Bldg. Bank v. Hawkins, 73 Atl. 617, 622, 30 R. I. 171.

The word "about," in an agreement fixing the boundary between adjoining mining claims, which stipulated that the boundary should be a vertical plane downward on a line commencing at the southeast corner of the surface ground of one of the claims, then running northerly along the easterly side line of the adjoining claim to the intersection with the westerly side line of the adjoining claim which was at a point south 19° 47' east and about 727.3 feet distant from the northeasterly corner stake of the adjoining claim, etc., entered into, with knowledge of the location of the corners marking the boundaries of the claims, and with knowledge that a monument had been established at the point of intersection, meant that the distance from the northwest corner stake of the adjoining claim to the point of intersection was not intended to be stated with exact precision, but the established corners and monument control. Bullion Beck & Champion Mining Co. v. Eureka Hill Mining Co., 103 Pac. 881, 884, 86 Utah, 329 (quoting 1 Words and Phrases, p. 22).

Though the preliminary report on which the construction of a ditch is ordered gives its length as "about" a certain number of feet, yet this being a mere estimate, not required to be definite, and in fact not so, and the points between which it is to be constructed being clearly shown, the drainage district is liable for the excavation between such points, though the drain is longer than estimated. Monaghan v. Vanatta, 122 N. W. 610, 613, 144 Iowa, 119.

As estimate of quantity

When there has been a levy, described as being upon certain barrels and half barrels, each "about half full," but with no statement as to the actual contents, the levy is to be treated as a levy upon the barrels and contents; and, upon the trial of a claim case arising under such a levy, it is not error to admit evidence showing what were the contents of such barrels. W. B. Parham & Co. v. Potts-Thompson Liquor Co., 56 S. E. 460, 461, 127 Ga. 303.

The terms "about" and "more or less," as used in a contract of sale of "about" 250 tons of grapes "more or less," do not create such an ambiguity in the contract as to let in extrinsic evidence of previous or contemporaneous conversations to show intent. Peterson v. Chaix, 90 Pac. 948, 951, 5 Cal. App. 525.

The degree of latitude made permissible by the use of the word "about," in a contract calling for shipment of sacks of walnuts of "about 100 pounds each," cannot be determined by any fixed rule, but must be decided by the jury according to the facts of each case, and, like the phrase "more or less" following a figure, the idea conveyed is one of estimate of probable distance or amount. Santa Paula Commercial Co. v. Parkhurst-Davis Mercantile Co., 120 Pac. 347, 348, 86 Kan. 328.

Where a charter party provided for shipment of a complete cargo of cast iron pipe, "say about 3,400 gross tons," it should be construed as contemplating a margin beyond 3,400 tons, and was not fulfilled by a shipment of 3,258 tons. Sewall v. Wood, 135 Fed. 12, 18, 67 C. C. A. 580.

As estimate of quantity of land

Where a vendor stated to the vendee that the tract conveyed contained "about 17,000 acres," such qualification did not defeat the vendee's right to recover damages in an action because of the false and fraudulent misrepresentation of the quantity, where the land did not amount to more than 15,300 acres. Boddy v. Henry, 101 N. W. 447, 452, 128 Iowa, 31.

As estimate as to time

Under a contract made on March 20th for the sale of potatoes, to be delivered on a car to be furnished by the buyer in "about five weeks," the phrase "about five weeks," considered with the nature of potatoes to decay at that season, was intended not to limit the time within which the buyer should furnish a car, but to limit the time within which the seller should complete delivery. James Higgins Co. v. Torvick, 106 Pac. 22, 23, 55 Or. 274.

The word "about," used in a time charter in designating the length of the term, is applicable to the term whether it be over or under the exact term stated, and, if the voyage terminates so near the end of the fixed time as to make another voyage unreasonable, the charterer may deliver or the owner may withdraw the vessel, or, if another voyage is reasonable, the charterer may require it at the charter rate of freight. The Rygia, 149 Fed. 896, 897; Id., 161 Fed. 106, 88 C. C. A. 270.

In an action to adjudicate the right to the waters of a creek, a finding that one defendant had appropriated a certain amount of water to run a grist mill about two weeks in June of each year, is sufficient, for the court evidently intended to fix a definite time during which the use of the water might continue, and the term "about," which, when used in connection with expressions of distance or number, signifies nearly or approximately, and when used in statements of courses or distances is discarded as without significance if there are no other words necessary to retain it, should be disregarded and the finding thus made specific as to length of time. Featherman v. Hennessy, 115 Pac. 983, 985, 43 Mont. 310 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 21).

As estimate of value

The word "about," as used in testimony that a particular article is worth "about" a particular amount stated, is not to be regarded as positive and unequivocal proof that the article has a value of that amount in the market, but merely as an expression of opinion, which is not altogether precise and definite. Atlantic & B. Ry. Co. v. Howard Supply Co., 54 S. E. 530, 532, 125 Ga. 478.

Indefiniteness in pleading and proof

The word "about" is frequently used as a synonym for the word "nearly" or "approximately"; and such use is sanctioned by definitions found in the various standard dictionaries. Understood in this sense, it cannot be said that a charge in an information that defendant stole "about $80 lawful money of the United States of America" rendered the information demurrable for uncertainty. People v. Peltin, 82 Pac. 980, 1 Cal. App. 612.

The words "or about," used in connection with an allegation of time in a pleading, renders the allegation indefinite and uncertain. Gordon v. Journal Pub. Co., 69 Atl. 742, 743, 81 Vt. 237.

Intent or purpose indicated

Chinese Exclusion Act May 6, 1882, c. 126, § 6, providing for the exclusion of Chinese laborers "about to come to the United States," means to "come with the intention of remaining at least for some period of time," and therefore did not include a seaman landing at a port in the United States for temporary purposes while his vessel was in port. United States v. Jamieson, 185 Fed. 165, 168.

Allegations of the complaint in an action for damages for fraud in selling plaintiff a barber business that representations that defendant would not re-engage in the business in the city, that defendant represented to induce plaintiff to purchase, that he "was about to and would abandon the barber business" in the city, sufficiently alleged a present intention by defendant not to engage in that business, so as to constitute actionable fraud if false; "about to" meaning "on the point of" or "in the act of," and signifying present action. Sallies v. Johnson, 81 Atl. 974, 975, 85 Conn. 77, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 386.

As upon

Act March 30, 1892 (P. L. p. 369) § 1, gives a lien on money due a contractor for the construction of a city building to subcontractors, materialmen, etc., on their compliance with section 2, which requires the service of a verified statement showing the amount of the claim, that the materials were furnished to the contractor, and that they were actually used in the erection and completion of the contract with the city. Held, that where a notice of a lien recited that there was due claimant from D., subcontractor for the mason work on public school No. 9, $6,630.49 for materials supplied in accordance with the contract between claimant and D., all of which had been fully completed, and the affidavit recited that there was due and owing claimant from D. $6,630.49 for materials supplied on and about the construction of public school No. 9 in the city of Hoboken, the statement sufficiently averred that the materials were actually used in the erection and completion of the school under the contract with the city; the word "supplied" being used there in the sense of "furnish" and the word "about" being taken to mean "upon." National Fire Proofing Co. v. Daly, 74 Atl. 152, 155, 76 N. J. Eq. 35.

ABOUT A MINUTE

The phrase "about a minute" is commonly used to denote a mere point of time, and not the lapse of any certain period, and is therefore devoid of any certainty. The testimony of a witness in a prosecution for homicide that the accused stepped toward deceased and after looking at him for "about a minute" fired the fatal shot, while implying that there was a halt as if for deliberation before the firing of the fatal shot, must be regarded as wholly uncertain for that purpose, especially where the transaction occurred in the darkness of night. State v. Clifford, 52 S. E. 981, 991, 59 W. Va. 1.

ABOUT THE PERSON

Under Acts 1908, c. 259, making it unlawful for "any person to carry about his person, hid from common observation, any pistol," the words "about the person" mean that it is so connected with the person as to be readily accessible for use or surprise if desired, and hence a pistol in a scabbard and in a pair of saddlebags with the lids down, though the bags be in the hand, does not fall within the language of the statute. Sutherland v. Commonwealth, 65 S. E. 15, 109 Va. 834, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 172, 132 Am. St. Rep. 949.

ABOUT TO SIGN

The expression "about to sign" in an entry in a house journal under the caption "Signing of Bills," reciting that the speaker announced that he was about to sign certain bills, denotes that the speaker was at that time engaged in the act of signing the several bills described in the entry. State ex rel. Hynds v. Cahill, 75 Pac. 433, 441, 12 Wyo. 225.

Where, before the fifth count of a complaint was filed, demurrers assigning three causes had been filed to the complaint, and thereafter a demurrer is filed assigning grounds of demurrer numbered from 4 to 10, some of them to the complaint generally and some of them to count 2 thereof, an eleventh assignment, on the same paper as the fourth to the tenth, with one signature to all, "Defendant reinterposes all of the 'above' demurrers to the fifth count of the complaint," does not reinterpose to such count the first three grounds of demurrer. Fulenwider v. Ridgeway, 41 South. 846, 847, 148 Ala. 675.

The charter of a railroad authorized it to construct a road from Raleigh, in an easterly direction, through Pitt county, running to or near the town of Greenville; thence on the south side of Tar river to some point on or near and across the river "above or near" the town of Washington, which was on the north side of the river. Held, that the railroad was authorized to cross the river on a

ABRASION TEST

The "abrasion test," as applied to bricks, is to test the bricks by putting them in a machine called a "rattler," which is revolved at a specified speed, and the result noted of the loss of weight by abrasion. City of Chicago v. Singer, 66 N. E. 874, 875, 202 Ill. 75.

ABROAD

Intestate is not shown to be more than a bare licensee, who has no right to be protected from dangers of the premises where he is permitted to go, by a declaration against a railroad company for death of intestate from dangerous premises maintained by defendant where intestate alighted from its train, alleging that intestate, being an officer of the watch and constable for criminal service, boarded the train for the purpose of "apprehending criminals" and "examining certain persons abroad whom he had reason to suspect of an unlawful design"; "criminals" including persons whom an officer has no right to arrest without a warrant, which intestate is not alleged to have had, and one who has become a passenger and placed himself in the car of the common carrier not being "abroad," within Rev. Laws, c. 81, § 2, authorizing officers of the watch to examine all persons "abroad" whom they have reason to suspect of an unlawful design. Creeden v. Boston & M. R. R., 79 N. E. 844, 846, 193 Mass. 280, 9 Ann. Cas. 1121.

ABROGATE—ABROGATION

The word "abrogation," as used in speaking of the abrogation of a statute, is that of laying the provisions of the former law aside. Jessee v. De Shong (Tex.) 105 S. W. 1011, 1014 (citing Horton's Law Dict.).

Concealment

Kirby's Dig. §§ 5077, 5088, providing that limitations do not apply to absconding debtors until the creditor becomes apprised of the residence of the "absconding debtor," etc., refer to absconding debtors and persons who fraudulently conceal themselves to prevent the commencement of an action against them, and in such case limitations do not begin until the residence of the absconder has been discovered, and the commencement of the action for that reason no longer prevented, and they do not apply to a foreign corporation doing business in the state without designating an agent, where the corporation claims the benefit of section 5057 by paying taxes on lands to which it has color of title. Rachels v. Stecher Cooperage Works, 128 S. W. 348, 351, 95 Ark. 6.

ABSENCE—ABSENT

See Voluntary Absence.

"Absent" is the state of being away from a place; withdrawal from a place; not existing. Carman's Adm'r v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. (Ky.) 92 S. W. 954, 956 (quoting and adopting definition in Webster's Dictionary).

"An 'absence from the state,' such as will, for a considerable period, render it impossible to obtain such a service of process as will support a general judgment, is such an absence as will interrupt the running of the statute of limitations." State ex rel. Shipman v. Allen (Mo.) 103 S. W. 1090, 1093 (citing Rhodes v. Farish, 16 Mo. App. 430).

Nonresidence distinguished

See Nonresident—Nonresidence.

Presumption of death created

The word "absence," in the rule that a presumption of death is raised at the "absence" of a person from his domicile when unheard of for seven years, means that a person is not at the place of his domicile, and that his actual residence is unknown, and it is for this reason that his existence is doubtful, and that, after seven years of such absence, his death is presumed. But removal alone is not enough. Gorham v. Settegast, 98 S. W. 665, 668, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 254.

Public officer

Hudson City Charter (Laws 1885, c. 197), providing for a president of the city council, who during the absence of the mayor from the city shall exercise all the powers of the mayor, empowered by Laws 1909, c. 187, to appoint between the last Monday of April and the first Monday of May following, a board of police and fire commissioners, does not authorize the president to appoint the board merely because of the absence of the mayor in a distant city on the first and second days of the week within which the appointments should be made; the "absence" meaning absence on an occasion demanding the immediate exercise of the powers of the mayor. State ex rel. Olson v. Lahiff, 131 N. W. 824, 825, 146 Wis. 490, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 350.

In Ky. St. 1903, § 4541, providing that the secretary of state may appoint an assistant secretary, who, in case of "absence" or indisposition of the principal, may do the business of his office, the word "indisposition" must be given force, as well as the word "absence." Its meaning is that, when the secretary of state is not on hand to carry on the business of the office, it may be transacted by the assistant secretary. In other words, it is not intended that the business of the office should stop when the secretary is sick at home or absent for other reasons. While a mere physical absence will not alone be sufficient in the matter not requiring immediate attention, when he left the office in charge of the assistant secretary with the intent of absenting himself from the seat of government on a stumping tour, the assistant secretary of state is authorized to act. Commonwealth v. Ginn & Co., 86 S. W. 688, 690, 120 Ky. 88.

ABSENT WITHOUT LEAVE

"Absence without leave," within Greater New York Charter (Laws 1901, c. 466) § 308, providing that absence without leave of any member of the police force for five consecutive days shall be held to be a resignation, and the member so absent shall, at the expiration of the period, cease to be a member of the police force, is voluntary and intentional absence, and the statute does not authorize the dismissal of a member absent because of illness. Elder v. Bingham, 103 N. Y. Supp. 617, 618, 118 App. Div. 25.

ABSENTEE

The word "absentee" has a broad meaning. One of the meanings is, according to Foulmer, Vol. 1, p. 247, No. 381, "Those of whom little or nothing may be known; they may be dead." Tell v. Senac, 48 South. 448, 449, 122 La. 1040.

A person who having resided in the state has permanently removed therefrom, and left no property, is an "absentee," as well as a person who has never been domiciled therein, against whom a personal judgment on substituted service cannot be rendered. Gouner v. Missouri Valley Bridge & Iron Co., 49 South. 657, 658, 123 La. 964.

ABSOLUTE

See Ultra Vires Absolute.

"Webster's International Dictionary defines 'absolute' (from 'absolvere,' to loose, or to set free) as 'loosed from any limitation or condition; uncontrolled; unrestricted; unconditional.'" Under Acts 1859-60, p. 348, incorporating the Medical College of Alabama, to be governed by trustees having power to acquire and dispose of real and personal property, and exclusively to hold the same for use of the college, etc., which trustees are given power to cause to be taught such sciences connected with medicine as they deem proper and fill such chairs as they see fit, the college was not under the "absolute" control of the state, and hence an appropriation act for its benefit, passed by less than two-thirds of all the members of the Legislature, was invalid, under Const. 1901, § 73, declaring that no appropriation shall be made to any educational institution not under the "absolute control of the state," etc., except by vote of two-thirds of all the members elected to each house. State ex rel. Medical College v. Sowell, 39 South. 246, 247, 143 Ala. 494.

Testatrix's will gave to her surviving husband entire control of a certain farm without power to sell or incumber, and provided that at her husband's death, and after debts were paid and a sum named paid to her daughter, an equal division of her property or its proceeds should be made among her five children, and, in the event of the death of any of them before the settlement of the estate, that their part should go to their children, and, if there were none, should be equally divided among the survivors, and that it was the testatrix's desire that her children should have their part of the estate "for their exclusive benefit or maintenance and at their death go to their children absolutely," but that, if any child marry and die without issue, the part of such child should revert to the surviving children. A codicil provided that testatrix desired "all of my children to have 'absolute' control of their portion of my estate," and that she did not desire the property to be forced into the market at a sacrifice, but that it should be held at least five years, as the children could all agree to dispose of it to advantage within that time. Held that, at the husband's death, the children took a fee-simple, and not merely a life, estate; the word "absolute," as used in the codicil, importing an exclusive control and title in the children. Barnett v. Barnett, 83 Atl. 160, 162, 117 Md. 265 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 38).

ABSOLUTE CLAIM

A contingent claim does not become "absolute," within the meaning of the decedent's act, until it becomes a claim proper to be presented to the county court for final adjudication as a claim against the estate. Hazlett v. Blakely's Estate, 97 N. W. 808, 811, 70 Neb. 613.

ABSOLUTE DIVORCE

Koffman*, 79 N. E. 780, 198 Mass. 593.

ABSOLUTE DOWER

The statutory provision for a widow is often called her "absolute dower." It partakes of the nature of dower in being free from the claims of creditors and not subject to disposition by the husband's will. Ellis v. Ellis, 96 S. W. 260, 261, 119 Mo. App. 63 (citing In re Klostermann, 6 Mo. App. 314).

ABSOLUTE DUTY

"An 'absolute duty' to provide a reasonably safe place, exercising reasonable and due care so to do, is not different from the duty to exercise reasonable care to provide a reasonably safe place." Firment v. Berwind-White Coal Mining Co., 162 Fed. 758, 762.

ABSOLUTE ESTATE

Civ. Code 1895, § 3081, defines an "absolute or fee-simple estate" as one in which the owner is entitled to the entire property, with unconditional power of disposition during his life, and descending to his heirs and legal representatives upon his death intestate. Gann v. Runyan, 67 S. E. 435, 134 Ga. 49.

ABSOLUTE GIFT

"An 'absolute gift' is one where not only the legal title, but the beneficial ownership as well, is vested in the donee. A gift in trust is one where the subject of the gift is transferred to the donee, not for the purpose of vesting both the legal title and beneficial ownership of the subject in the donee, but that it may be held and applied to certain uses for a third party, the beneficiary." A gift which vests both the legal title and the beneficial ownership of the subject of the gift in the donee is not one in trust, even if it be a conditional one. Such a gift is an absolute one. A gift by deed, devise, or bequest to an existing corporation, or to one to be thereafter organized within the time limited by law, with directions or conditions as to the use or management of the subject-matter of the gift, which are reasonably consistent with the purposes of the donee, is not a gift in trust, but an absolute one to the corporation, within the meaning of the statute of uses and trusts. Watkins v. Bigelow, 100 N. W. 1104, 1109, 93 Minn. 210.

A bequest to "my friend B., in the confidence that he will use it in the prosecution of his work against the encroachments" of a religious denomination "upon our common school system," was an "absolute gift," and not a "trust"; the relations of the legatee and testatrix having been those of confidence and deep interest in his work, and the expenses of the work having been in part met by public subscription, and he having never accounted to any one for the funds received. Poor v. Bradbury, 81 N. E. 882, 883, 196 Mass. 207.

ABSOLUTE GUARANTY

Where one guarantees the payment of a note, and not merely its collectibility, it is an "absolute guaranty." Walter A. Wood Reaping & Mowing Mach. Co. v. Ascher, 62 Atl. 1023, 1024, 103 Md. 133.

ABSOLUTE LIABILITY

The liability incurred by a corporation, transferring a note payable to it and guaranteeing payment thereof at maturity, or at any time thereafter, waiving demand, notice of nonpayment, and protest, is an "absolute," and not a "contingent," liability, created at the date of the making of the guaranty, though the right of the transferee to enforce it depends on the default of the maker; for a contingent liability is dependent on the happening of the event which creates the liability, while the right to enforce an "absolute liability" may be contingent on the happening of an event. First Nat. Bank of Redlands v. Consolidated Lumber Co., 116 Pac. 680, 16 Cal. App. 287.

ABSOLUTE POWER OF DISPOSITION

The life estate of the devisee was not enlarged by Code 1907, §§ 3424, 3425, 3426, respectively providing that when a power of disposition is given to any person to whom no particular estate is limited such person takes a fee, subject to any future estate; that in case an "absolute power of disposition" is given, not accompanied by any trust, and no remainder is limited on the estate of the donee, he has an absolute fee, and that an "absolute power of disposition" is one by means of which the donee is enabled in his lifetime to dispose of the entire fee for his own benefit; and that a general power to devise property to a life tenant is an absolute power, within the meaning of sections 3424 and 3425. Nabors v. Woolsey, 56 South. 533, 534, 174 Ala. 289.

ABSOLUTE PRIVILEGE

In order that defamatory words, published by parties, counsel, or witnesses in the due course of a judicial proceeding, may be "absolutely privileged," they must be connected with, or relevant or material to, the cause in hand or subject of inquiry. Such words published in due course of a judicial proceeding, and not relevant or pertinent to the subject of inquiry, are only conditionally or qualifiedly privileged; that is, prima facie privileged. Myers v. Hodges, 44 South. 357, 360, 53 Fla. 197.

ABSOLUTE PROPERTY

The word "absolute," as used in Rev. St. 1898, § 2829, providing for the setting apart of a homestead as the "absolute property" of the surviving husband or wife and minor children, means complete, final, perfect, unconditional, unrestricted, not relative, not limited, independent of anything extraneous; and in the sense of complete, and not limited, it distinguishes an estate in fee from an estate in remainder, and characterizes a pure estate, unmixed and unconnected with any peculiarities or qualifications; a naked estate, freed from any qualifications and restrictions in the donee. In re Bedford's Estate, 95 Pac. 518, 519, 34 Utah, 24, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 728, 16 Ann. Cas. 118.

ABSOLUTE REFUSAL TO PAY

Unless there is a bona fide attempt by an insurer to adjust a loss under a policy of fire insurance, by an offer to pay a sum approximating the loss sustained, there is an "absolute refusal to pay," within the meaning of section 2490 of the Civil Code of 1910. Great American Co-op. Fire Ass'n v. Jenkins, 76 S. E. 159, 160, 11 Ga. App. 784.

ABSOLUTE RULE FOR NEW TRIAL

See Rule Absolute for New Trial.

ABSOLUTE SALE

A sale is "absolute" which has been completed, while a "conditional sale" is one which takes effect on the performance of a condition, though an "absolute sale" may be subject to a condition subsequent, as where there is complete change of title subject to be defeated by the nonperformance of some annexed condition; the true criterion for determining whether a sale is absolute or conditional being the intent of the parties, to be discovered from their express declarations, and, where this is not possible, from all circumstances of the case, as well as from their declarations, if any. Whitsett v. Carney (Tex.) 124 S. W. 443, 445.

If a seller of goods parts with possession to the buyer, and invests him with the right to sell as his own and treat the proceeds as his own, the sale is "absolute," and not conditional, and title vests in the buyer, even though there is an agreement that it shall not pass until the price is paid. In re Priegle Paint Co., 175 Fed. 586, 588.

ABSOLUTELY

The word "absolutely" as defined by the Standard Dictionary, means: "In an absolute degree or manner; without limitation; completely." Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Mote, 62 S. E. 164, 170, 131 Ga. 166.

"The word 'absolutely' is an appropriate expression for the exclusion of the idea that an estate is either partial or conditional." "Absolute" is defined in Rapalje & Lawrence's Law Dictionary as "complete; final; perfect; unconditional; unrestricted; an estate without condition or qualification." A beneficial interest, to be taxable, under War Revenue Act June 13, 1898, c. 448, Schedule B, § 2930, as amended by Act March 2, 1901, c. 806, § 1011, must not only be vested in possession or enjoyment, but it must be absolutely so vested, and the word, "absolutely" as applied to property and property rights, means unqualified ownership. A bequest to a person when he reaches a certain age is contingent, and not taxable under the act; but, where the legatee is in the meantime to receive the interest therefrom, he has a beneficial interest, which is subject to the tax. Shanley v. Herold, 141 Fed. 423, 428.

As conveying a fee simple

"Absolutely" means without limitation or qualification. As used in a will, giving testatrix's niece both real and personal property absolutely, and providing that, if the niece die without issue, the property should go to the heirs of another, the niece took an absolute and not a defeasible fee, since that construction is the only one which would give force to the word "absolutely." Pritchett v. Corder (Ky.) 105 S. W. 910, 911.

Testator gave the residue of his property of all kinds "absolutely and in fee simple" to his wife "for life," and provided that after her death it was to be equally divided among three of his children named. Held, that his wife took only a life estate under the will. Wallace v. Bozarth, 123 Ill. App. 624, 625, 626.

ABSOLUTELY DEBARRED

As strict foreclosure, see Strict Foreclosure.

ABSOLUTELY FORFEIT

The term "absolutely forfeit," as used in St. 1898, § 1214, on failure of a railroad to pay the gross earnings tax, may reasonably be read as meaning that in case of penalty being incurred by a default not reasonably attributable to excusable mistake of law or fact, or both, or some controversy fairly warranting resort to judicial aid for its solution, the forfeiture should be absolute, as in case of a penalty in aid of an ordinary tax or stipulated damages in aid of an ordinary contract. State v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 108 N. W. 594, 613, 128 Wis. 449.

ABSOLUTELY NECESSARY

Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 2, subd. 3, provides for the appointment of receivers by courts of bankruptcy in case the court should find it "absolutely necessary" for the preservation of the assets, etc. Held, that the words "absolutely necessary," as so used, required clear, positive, and certain proof of necessity; and hence, where a bankrupt's property was in the hands of an assignee for the benefit of creditors, and it was not claimed that it was being dissipated or improvidently cared for, or that the assignee was not careful, prudent, or responsible, an ex parte order appointing a receiver was erroneous. In re Oakland Lumber Co., 174 Fed. 634, 636, 637, 98 C. C. A. 388.

ABSOLUTELY OWING

Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 63, permits debts of the bankrupt to be proved which are a fixed liability, as evidenced by a judgment or instrument in writing, "absolutely owing" at the time of the filing of the petition. Defendants agreed in 1894 to purchase from plaintiff on May 1, 1900, or earlier at their option, certain shares of stock, and pay therefor a certain sum and interest at 6 per cent. from April 1, 1894, to May 1, 1900, and plaintiff agreed to sell and deliver the stock on May 1, 1900, or such earlier date as defendants elected to purchase. Defendants never performed the agreement, and were adjudged bankrupt in 1899 and discharged in May, 1900. Held, that there was no liability "absolutely owing" by defendants when they were adjudged bankrupt, so that defendants' obligation under the contract was not affected by their discharge, even if the bankruptcy be treated as a breach of the contract, giving plaintiff a claim for damages if the trustee in bankruptcy did not elect to adopt the contract. Phenix Nat. Bank v. Waterbury, 90 N. E. 435, 436, 197 N. Y. 161.

ABSOLUTELY PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATION

Privileged communications fall into two classes, those "absolutely privileged," such as the opinions of judges, and others "qualifiedly privileged," such as publications made to protect the rights of the one publishing. Allen v. Earnest (Tex.) 145 S. W. 1101, 1104.

An "absolutely privileged communication" is confined to communications in judicial and legislative proceedings, and in matters involving military affairs, and to communications made in the discharge of a duty under express authority of law by or to heads of departments of the state. Tanner v. Stevenson, 128 S. W. 878, 881, 138 Ky. 578, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 200.

Words spoken upon an occasion "absolutely privileged," though spoken falsely, knowingly, and with express malice, impose no liability for damages in an action for slander or libel, while, on the other hand, words spoken upon an occasion only "conditionally privileged" impose such liability, if spoken maliciously, or not in good faith; the difference between the two being that in the former case the freedom from liability is absolute and without condition, while in the latter case it is made to depend upon the absence of express malice. Sebree v. Thompson, 103 S. W. 374, 375, 126 Ky. 223, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 723, 15 Ann. Cas. 770.

ABSORPTION

In the provision of Oleomargarine Act May 9, 1902, c. 784, § 4, defining adulterated butter as including "any butter in the manufacture or manipulation of which any process or material is used with intent or effect of causing the absorption of abnormal quantities of water, milk or cream," the word "absorption" is not used in the sense of chemical absorption, and any butter is within the definition which contains an abnormal quantity of water, whether by chemical absorption or by incorporation. Coopersville Co-operative Creamery Co. v. Lemon, 163 Fed. 145, 154, 89 C. C. A. 595.

ABSQUE INJURIA

ABSTRACT

See Complete Abstract.

An instruction is not "abstract," if there be any evidence from which the jury might infer the existence of the fact supposed. Arkadelphia Lumber Co. v. Asman, 107 S. W. 1171, 1174, 85 Ark. 563. Charges are "abstract" when they assert propositions of law not legitimately arising out of the testimony itself or the inferences deducible therefrom. Gilliam v. State, 50 Ala. 145, 146.

Code, § 1149, provides that the board of supervisors, at their first meeting on the Monday after the general election, shall open and canvass the returns and make abstracts, stating in words written at length the number of ballots cast in the county for each office, the name of each person voted for, and the number of votes given to each person for each different office; and section 441 provides that all proceedings of the board shall be published at the expense of the county during the ensuing year in the official newspapers, and that the county auditor shall furnish all such papers selected a copy of the proceedings for that purpose. Held, that the "abstracts" which the board is required to make are abstracts of the returns as canvassed and received from the various precincts, and that the auditor is required to furnish for publication a schedule showing the vote by precinct of each person voted for at the election. Clark v. Lake, 124 N. W. 866, 867, 146 Iowa, 109.

As a copy

Code Civ. Proc. § 710, provides that a transcript of a judgment may be filed with the auditor of any county from which money is owing to the judgment debtor, whereupon it shall be the auditor's duty to draw his warrant in favor of the court from the docket of which the transcript was taken for so much of the money as necessary to cancel the judgment. Section 897 provides a form for an abstract of a justice's judgment, showing the parties, date of rendition, amount, etc. Held, that the filing of an abstract prepared in accordance with section 897 in the office of a county auditor was insufficient to entitle plaintiff to the benefits of section 710, which contemplates a transcript or copy of the judgment. "A certified copy is not an 'abstract,' and the statute makes the distinction, and prescribes the exact form in which the abstract is to be prepared." Erkson v. Parker, 84 Pac. 437, 438, 3 Cal. App. 98 (quoting and adopting definition in Frazier v. Crowell, 52 Cal. 399).

ABSTRACT—ABSTRACTION

"To abstract" means to take from or to withdraw from, so that to abstract the moneys, funds, or credits of the bank, or a portion of them, is to take or withdraw from the possession and control of the bank such moneys, funds or credits. United States v. Breese, 131 Fed. 915, 921.

"Abstraction," under section 5209, Rev. St., is the act of one who, being an officer of a national banking association, wrongfully takes or withdraws from it any of its moneys, funds, or credits, with intent to injure or defraud it, or some other person or company, and without its knowledge and consent, or that of its board of directors, converts them to the use of himself, or of some person or company other than the bank. No previous lawful possession is necessary to constitute the crime, nor does it matter in what manner it is accomplished. It may be done by one act, or by a succession of acts. It may be done under color of loans, discounts, checks, and the like. The means used do not change the nature of the act. United States v. Breese, 131 Fed. 915, 921.

"As a noun the word 'abstract' denotes a less quantity containing the virtue and force of a greater quantity." 1 Cyc. p. 211. As applied to a record it would mean a complete history in short, abbreviated form of the case as found in the record. It would have to be complete enough to show that the questions presented for review have been properly preserved in the case. As to the record proper it would not mean that the whole pleadings should be set out, unless some question urged required it. It would mean, however, that there should be a showing to the effect that pleadings had been filed in some lower court at some particular times, and the character of such pleadings, so that the issue raised could be easily ascertained. It would likewise mean that there should be a concise statement of the judgment and the date of its rendition, and also of the fact that a motion for a new trial or in arrest of judgment had been filed, and the time thereof, so that this court can see that it is filed within the four days prescribed by the statute. By this we do not mean that a copy of the record entry showing the filing should be printed, but as an abstract, thereof it could be said: "And thereafter, at the same term of court, and within four days after the return of the verdict or rendition of said judgment, to wit, on ——— day of ———, 190—, the defendant [or plaintiff] filed his motion for a new trial, as shown by the record entry made at the time." Even this might be further abbreviated, so as to aver and show the same facts. So, also, should be the showing as to the overruling of such motion, the leave to file a bill of exceptions, the filing of the bill of exceptions, the affidavit for appeal, and the order granting the appeal. Later, by appropriate statement, should appear the filing of the case in this court. In all this it is not necessary to print in hæc verba the orders of the court, but enough to show the act, and that it is of record, as an order, decree, or judgment of court. In 3 Cyc. p. 78, the rule is thus announced: "With regard to the matters properly included in an abstract of the record, it may be stated, as a general rule, that such abstract should be literally an abstract or abridgment of the record, containing only so much thereof as is necessary to a full understanding of the questions presented for review. It should be as brief as possible, as long as all material matters are presented, and an abstract which does not comply with this rule to a sufficient extent to obviate the necessity of a resort to the record is insufficient. Whatever is relied upon as an error should be shown, and an appellant's abstract will, as against him, be deemed sufficiently full and accurate to present all the errors on which he relies. The abstract should not, however, contain matters wholly immaterial and unnecessary in aiding the reviewing court to determine the appeal." Harding v. Bedoll, 100 S. W. 638, 640, 202 Mo. 625.

The word "abstract," in Rev. St. 1909, § 2048, providing for filing an abstract when a cause is not brought up on a full transcript, and in court rule 15, prescribing what is necessary to an abstract, and providing that the evidence shall be stated in a narrative form, means an abbreviation or a summary; and an abstract stating in narrative form the evidence, so as to present the facts necessary to an understanding of the points in issue, is sufficient. McGrath v. Heman Const. Co., 145 S. W. 875, 878, 165 Mo. App. 184.

The "abstract of the record" must show the judgment, the orders of the filing of a motion for new trial, the rulings of the court thereon, and also that an appeal has been taken. Aultman & Taylor Machinery Co. v. Organ, 129 S. W. 1023, 1024, 149 Mo. App. 102.

A printed copy of the entire record without abridgment or condensation is not an "abstract" within Supreme Court rule 10a (92 Pac. viii). Hillis v. Allison, 100 Pac. 651, 653, 79 Kan. 617.

The "abstract" is the "record" on which the court on appeal determines a case, and it only refers to the original record when there is a conflict in the abstracts presented by the parties. State v. Harbour, 129 N. W. 565, 567, 27 S. D. 42.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE

An "abstract of title," as used in a contract for the sale of land, is a written or printed, short, methodical summary of the documents and facts which affect the title to the land in question. Smith v. Lander (Tex.) 106 S. W. 703, 704; McMillan v. First Nat. Bank of Bowie, 119 S. W. 709, 711, 56 Tex. Civ. App. 45.

The "abstract of title," which Code 1896 provides may be demanded in ejectment suits, should not be construed as meaning an abstract in the technical sense; but the purpose of the statute is met if, in response to the demand, an abstract is furnished which is sufficiently specific to inform the party making the demand of the title upon which his adversary will rely. Jackson v. Tribble, 47 South. 310, 312, 156 Ala. 480.

An "abstract of title," in the legal sense, is a summary of the facts relied on as evidence of title, and containing a note of all conveyances, transfers, or other facts relied on as evidence of title, together with all such facts appearing of record as may impair the title. Entries in an abstract of title showing warranty and quitclaim deeds by named grantors to named grantees, and a memorandum implying that the instruments were under seal, and a notation of an acknowledgment before a notary implying a complete acknowledgment, were sufficient to show title, for a summary of a deed or acknowledgment need not be a copy thereof, and an abstract need not contain a statement of anything further, unless there is an absence of a seal, or some other defect is shown affecting the validity of the instruments. Where a contract for sale of realty requires the grantor to convey the title free of incumbrances, and that abstracts showing such title should be furnished, the abstract need not show matters not of record or all the facts connected with the conveyance which might affect the title, such as possession, who were the heirs of a deceased owner where administration was not had within the jurisdiction. But the vendor must furnish an abstract of title containing a full summary of all grants, conveyances, wills, records, and judicial proceedings, whereby the title is in any way affected, and all incumbrances and liens of record, and show whether they have been released or not. Attebery v. Blair, 91 N. E. 475, 478, 244 Ill. 363, 135 Am. St. Rep. 342.

"The object of an abstract is to furnish the buyer and his counsel with a statement of every fact and abstract of the contents of every deed on record upon which the validity and the marketableness of the title depend, so full that no reasonable inquiry shall remain unanswered, so brief that the mind of the reader shall not be distracted by irrelevant details, so methodical that counsel may form an opinion on each conveyance as he proceeds in his reading, and so clear that no new arrangement or dissection of the evidence may be required. The buyer has a right to demand a marketable title. He has a right to demand that the 'abstract of title' shall disclose such evidence of that title as will enable him to defeat any action to recover or incumber the land." Fagan v. Hook, 105 N. W. 155-157, 134 Iowa, 381 (quoting Ourwin, Abstracts).

ABUSE

See Criminal Abuse.

A neglect by connecting railroads to afford track intersections is such an "abuse" as Rev. St. 1895, art. 4562, authorizes the Railroad Commission to correct. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission of Texas (Tex.) 86 S. W. 16, 17.

The term "abuse," as used in Rev. St. § 6908, which makes it an offense for one to resist, obstruct, or abuse any officer in the execution of his office, means to wrong in speech, reproach coarsely, disparage, revile, malign. Campf v. State, 88 N. E. 887, 898, 80 Ohio St. 321.

In an action against a railroad company, where the evidence showed that the plaintiff was cursed and kicked by the conductor of the train, a charge that it was admitted by the plaintiff that he was not injured or humiliated by reason of being cursed or abused, was properly refused, though the plaintiff admitted that it did not humiliate him when the conductor cursed him; the word "abuse" being broad enough to include personal violence. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Bates (Tex.) 95 S. W. 738, 739.

Within Code 1907, § 6218, making it an offense to send a threatening or abusive letter, which may tend to provoke a breach of the peace, a letter is "abusive" which is offensive, and charges the sendee with a degradation of character, or a moral obliquity; as is a letter calling the attention to an unpaid bill, stating that, if the sendee knew how contemptible he appeared in the matter, he would pay the bill at once, and that, if he did not pay it in a short time, the sender would have to proceed in some way to collect it, and concluding, "I know how worthless and contemptible you are, but this is news to you." Peters v. State, 51 South. 952, 953, 166 Ala. 35.

ABUSE OF DISCRETION

An error of judicial discretion is sometimes termed an "abuse of discretion." Alexander Smith & Sons Carpet Co. v. Ball, 122 N. Y. Supp. 187, 190, 137 App. Div. 100.

An accurate exhaustive definition of the phrase "abuse of discretion" would be difficult, each case being determined with reference to its own peculiar fact, and there are different kinds of discretion that may be exercised by the trial court, among them a discretion in the decision of what is just and proper under the circumstances, which will not be reviewed, unless there is an abuse of it. "Abuse of discretion," in granting a new trial does not necessarily imply intentional wrong, but in such a case discretion is abused, when in its exercise a court exceeds the bounds of reason; all circumstances before it being considered. Root v. Bingham, 128 N. W. 132, 133, 26 S. D. 118.

"Abuse of discretion" on denying a change of venue means a clearly erroneous conclusion and judgment, one contrary to the logic and effect of such facts as are presented in support of the application, or against the reasonable and probable deductions to be drawn from the facts disclosed on the hearing. Starr v. State, 115 Pac. 356, 363, 5 Okl. Cr. 440.

An "abuse of discretion," as that term is ordinarily used, implies not merely an error in judgment, but perversity of will, passion, or moral delinquency; discretion exercised to an end or purpose not justified by and clearly against reason and evidence. This term was used by the Supreme Court to characterize the denial of the rights of citizens clearly given by the Constitution and the laws which a just discretion will not permit, when the court characterized as an "abuse of discretion" an order of the board of education of the city requiring colored children to attend a school so located that access to it was beset with such dangers to life and limb that the colored children ought not to be required to attend it, and denying such children admission to any other school. Williams v. Board of Education of City of Parsons, 99 Pac. 216, 218, 79 Kan. 202, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 584.

ABUSE OF FEMALE CHILD

"Carnal knowledge" includes what is meant by "carnal abuse," if not synonymous therewith, as used in Gen. St. 1902, § 1148, directed against a person who shall carnally know and abuse a female under 16, and to "abuse," within the meaning of that section, is not to injure the genital organs of the female, and to an extent not naturally resulting from an act of normal intercourse with a fully developed female. State v. Sebastian, 69 Atl. 1054, 1057, 81 Conn. 1; State v. Ferris, 70 Atl. 587, 81 Conn. 97. But the word "abuse," as used in Code 1907, § 5447, punishing carnal knowledge, or abuse in attempting to have carnal knowledge, of any female under 14 years of age, is held to be limited in its meaning to injuries to the genital or sexual organs. Castleberry v. State, 33 South. 431, 433, 135 Ala. 24.

Under section 1 of the act for the prevention of cruelty to children (2 Gen. St.

1895, p. 1717, § 26, amended P. L. 1901, p. 276), a conviction of a defendant for the offense of abusing a female infant 8½ years of age, based upon a complaint and evidence tending to show carnal "abuse" of such infant by the defendant, cannot be sustained; the word "abuse" in that act being construed to mean only corporal "abuse," such as cruel and unnecessary punishment or failure to properly administer to its physical needs. State v. Hankins, 67 Atl. 1057, 75 N. J. Law, 318.

ABUSE OF LIBERTY

Under Const. art. 1, par. 15 (Civ. Code 1895, § 5712), providing that any person may speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty, it is not an "abuse of that liberty" for one having his property burned, who suspects another of setting it on fire, to institute a criminal proceeding against the latter, and, in connection therewith and in the preparation of the case, to make bona fide statements of his suspicions and grounds of suspicion to third persons, who would likely possess evidence as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, with a view of ascertaining how far their knowledge and information would corroborate or weaken the charge made. Taylor v. Chambers, 58 S. E. 369, 370, 2 Ga. App. 178.

Contempt of courts and slander and libel of individuals is an "abuse of the freedom of press or speech" and cannot be excused on the ground of the constitutional guaranties of such freedom. In re Fite, 76 S. E. 397, 410, 11 Ga. App. 665.

ABUSE OF PROCESS

See Malicious Abuse of Process.

"Abuse of process" is the willful and wrongful use of the process itself, and does not require a termination of the suit in which the process issued to be available as a cause of action. Ludwick v. Penny, 73 S. E. 228, 231, 158 N. C. 104.

An action for malicious prosecution is distinguished from one for "abuse of process," in that in the former malice, want of probable cause, and termination of the former proceedings must be shown, and in the latter none of these, but an ulterior purpose and an act in the use of the process not proper in the regular prosecution of the proceeding must be shown. Pittsburg, J. E. & E. R. Co. v. Wakefield Hardware Co., 55 S. E. 422, 423 (citing Pittsburg, J. E. & E. R. Co. v. Wakefield Hardware Co., 50 S. E. 571, 138 N. C. 174; 1 Cooley, Torts (3d Ed.) 354; 1 Jaggard, Torts, § 203; Hale, Torts, § 185; Mayer v. Walter, 64 Pa. 283; Jackson v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 51 S. E. 1015, 139 N. C. 347, 70 L. R. A. 738).

The "malicious suing out of an attachment" contemplates a wrongful motive in the securing of the issuance of the attachment from want of probable cause or other reason, while an "abuse of process" contemplates the use of it after its issue for a wrongful purpose, and a party cannot have damages for the latter offense unless the process issued was perverted to a purpose not intended or contemplated by the law. Wright v. Harris, 76 S. E. 489, 160 N. C. 542.

ABUTMENT

As part of bridge, see Bridge.

ABUTTING

The term "abutting property," as used in statutes providing for assessments against abutting property for street improvements, means that between which and the improvement there is no intervening land. Millan v. City of Chariton, 124 N. W. 766, 145 Iowa, 648.

While the word "abuts" literally means that the lines of the property owner's lot and the sidewalk shall meet or come together, an ordinance authorizing the city council to levy a special assessment on lots abutting on a sidewalk should not be construed literally. Where a sidewalk was constructed on the street space reserved therefor, which space abutted defendant's lots, and defendant also held title to the center of the street, subject to the public easement, his lots abutted the sidewalk, within an ordinance requiring the sidewalk to be constructed at the expense of "abutting owners," though there was a space between the edge of the sidewalk and the lot line. City of Joplin v. Freeman, 103 S. W. 130, 132, 125 Mo. App. 717.

Superior City Charter (Laws 1891, c. 124) § 119, provides that, before work shall be ordered done on a street in whole or in part at the expense of the "abutting" or adjacent realty, the board of public works shall determine the benefits and damages which will accrue to each parcel of such realty, the entire cost of the contemplated improvement, and the amount that should be assessed to each parcel as benefits accruing thereto by such contemplated improvements. Held, that such law contemplates improvements of streets beneficial to parcels of realty abutting on or adjacent thereto, such improvements being in front of such parcels, at the expense in whole or in part thereof, the words "abutting" and "adjacent" not being used synonymously, in the absence of anything appearing clearly to the contrary in the law, the word "abutting" meaning a parcel having a street and lot line in common, while the word "adjacent" is used to characterize a parcel not in part bounded by a street line. Northern Pac. Co. v. Douglas County, 130 N. W. 246, 247, 145 Wis. 288.

Even if an "abutting" owner is entitled to compensation for damages caused by closing streets, where only the corner of the property touched the corner of the part of the street closed, and no part of it was immediately opposite the property, it was not "abutting property," so as to entitle the owner to damages for closing it. Ables v. Southern Ry. Co., 51 South. 327, 329, 164 Ala. 356.

The owner of property at the end of a road is not an "abutting" property owner along the road who may sign a petition requesting a police jury to advertise and sell a franchise to construct an electric railway in the road under Act No. 48 of 1906, authorizing police juries to sell franchises for the operation of such railways on highways upon written petition of abutting property owners along the road. Friscoville Realty Co. v. Police Jury of St. Bernard Parish, 53 South. 578, 581, 582, 127 La. 318.

Under Code 1906, § 3336, conferring on municipalities power to vacate streets and alleys, and providing that no vacation shall be made, except on due compensation being first made to abutting owners for all damages sustained thereby, one owning property on a continuous street, which, though the north and south ends bore different names, formed a continuous way in front of such property, and across a railroad right of way, and into a town, was an "abutting owner," and the city could not vacate the street, and permit the erection of a railroad depot therein, without first making compensation. Alabama & V. Ry. Co. v. Turner, 52 South. 261, 262, 95 Miss. 594.

The words "abutting property," as used in statutes relating to assessments for public improvements, contemplate the res or subject of property between which and the street there is no intervening land. Kneeb v. Sioux City (Iowa) 137 N. W. 944, 945.

ACADEMY

See Public Dancing Academy.

ACCELERATOR

The word "accelerator," in its ordinary meaning, is harmless, and as defined by the dictionaries signifies only one who or that which accelerates or hastens; but in the new sense it has acquired a definite and settled signification, and as used in an article designating a man as an accelerator for a trust, it offensively designates him as an agent of certain interests, and one not sincere in his speech. The word as applied to plaintiff in a newspaper article, denoting dishonesty, hypocrisy, or double dealing, is libelous per se. Levey v. Brooklyn Union Pub. Co., 121 N. Y. Supp. 643, 644, 65 Misc. Rep. 373.

ACCEPT

The ordinary and accepted meaning of "accept" is synonymous with that of "receive." Standard Oil Co. of Indiana v. United States, 164 Fed. 376, 390, 90 C. C. A. 364.

The terms "accept" and "receive," within Kirby's Dig. § 1814, which makes it an offense to accept and receive deposits in an insolvent bank, are synonymous. Morris v. State (Ark.) 145 S. W. 213, 214.

A representation by a vendor that a third person had "accepted" a loan on the premises for a specified amount, while the third person had as a fact declined to "pass" a loan for that amount because of the construction of a wall on the premises, is a material representation as to value and the facility with which the purchaser may complete the purchase by mortgaging the property; the word "pass" being equivalent to "accept." Kreshover v. Berger, 119 N. Y. Supp. 737, 738, 185 App. Div. 27.

As retain

See Retain.

ACCEPT AND RECEIVE

See, also, Acceptance.

The words "accept and actually receive," as used in the law of sales, "are understood to mean a final and absolute appropriation by the purchaser" of the subject of the sale; the acts showing an acceptance and actual receipt being required to be "of such character as to unequivocally place the property within the power and under the exclusive dominion of the buyer." Sotham v. Weber, 92 S. W. 181, 182, 116 Mo. App. 104 (quoting and adopting definition in Story, Sales, § 276).

The acceptance and receipt, to satisfy Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 780, providing that a parol agreement for the sale of goods at a price not less than $50 shall be invalid, unless the buyer "accept or receive" part of such goods, need not be contemporaneous with the making of the agreement, but may take place at any time before the contract is sought to be enforced. The parol agreement stands for a mutual agreed proposition, and the subsequent acceptance and receipt while the proposition remains open will make the contract effective. Gabriel v. Kildare Elevator Co., 90 Pac. 10, 11, 18 Okl. 318, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 683, 11 Ann. Cas. 517 (citing 20 Cyc. p. 247).

ACCEPTANCE

See Conditional Acceptance; General Acceptance; Partial Acceptance; Voluntary Acceptance.

Presentment for acceptance, see Presentment.

"Acceptance," where no element of estoppel intervenes, is a question of intent.

Harrison v. Scott, 120 N. Y. Supp. 377, 379, 185 App. Div. 546.

Of bid

The council of defendant town recommended to the electors that they authorize the council to make certain improvements in the town building, and that plaintiff's bid of $2,250 for the work be accepted, and the work awarded to it. The financial town meeting, acting on the report, passed a resolution appropriating $2,250, or so much thereof as was necessary, for the improvement of the town building, to be expended under the supervision of the town council, as recommended in its report. At a subsequent meeting of the council, a resolution to award the contract to plaintiff was rejected, and plaintiff brought mandamus against the council to compel the execution of the contract. Held, that the acts did not constitute a contract, since the financial town meeting did not "accept" the bid, as it might have done. Putnam Foundry & Machine Co. v. Town Council of Barrington, 67 Atl. 733, 735, 28 R. I. 422 (citing State ex rel. Phelan v. Board of Education of Fond du Lac, 24 Wis. 683; distinguishing Boren v. Darke County Com'rs, 21 Ohio St. 311; Beaver v. Trustees of Institution for Blind, 19 Ohio St. 97; People ex rel. Putnam v. Commissioners of Buffalo County, 4 Neb. 150).

Of bill of exchange

An "acceptance" of a bill of exchange is an engagement to pay according to the tenor of the acceptance, and a general acceptance is an engagement to pay according to the tenor of a bill. Thomas v. Thomas, 7 Wis. 476, 481; Van Buskirk v. State Bank of Rocky Ford, 83 Pac. 778, 779, 35 Colo. 142, 117 Am. St. Rep. 182.

The "acceptance" of a bill is the signification by the drawee of his assent to the order of the drawer. It must be in writing and signed by the drawee. Wadhams v. Portland, V. & Y. Ry. Co., 79 Pac. 597, 598, 37 Wash. 86.

Failure to return a bill of exchange does not constitute an "acceptance" of the same, since it is expressly required by statute that an "acceptance" of a bill of exchange shall be in writing. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. v. James, 95 S. W. 804, 806, 78 Ark. 490, 8 Ann. Cas. 611 (citing Kirby's Dig. § 495; Overman v. Hoboken City Bank, 31 N. J. Law, 564; Colorado Nat. Bank of Denver v. Boettcher, 5 Colo. 190, 40 Am. Rep. 142; Hall v. Flanders, 22 Atl. 158, 83 Me. 242; Rousch v. Duff, 35 Mo. 312).

The effect of an "acceptance" of an order for the payment of money is to constitute the acceptor the principal debtor. It admits that the acceptor has funds of the drawer in his hands, since the drawing of the order or bill implies this. It also admits the genuineness of the signature, and imports an engagement upon the part of the acceptor, payee, or other lawful holder thereof to pay the bill according to the tenor of the acceptance when it becomes due, upon the presentment thereof. It is not a collateral promise to pay the debt of another within the statute of frauds, but as between the acceptor and the payee it is an original and direct undertaking. Ragsdale v. Gresham, 37 South. 367, 368, 141 Ala. 308 (quoting and adopting 1 Daniel, Neg. Inst. §§ 552, 554; Story, Bills of Exchange, § 113).

Where a drawee, on his acceptance of a draft payable to a bank, transmitted the draft to the bank by letter stating that the acceptance was on the terms indicated in a prior letter reciting that the acceptance was for accommodation only and without any intention to be bound to pay anything thereon, the letters showed that there was no acceptance within the negotiable instrument law (Rev. St. 1909, § 10,102), defining an "acceptance" of a bill of exchange as "the signification by the drawee of his assent to the order of the drawer. The acceptance must be in writing and signed by the drawer. It must not express that the drawee will perform his promise by any other means than the payment of money." Lehnhard v. Sidway, 141 S. W. 430, 431, 160 Mo. App. 83.

An "acceptance" is an engagement to pay according to the tenor of the acceptance, and, while the acceptance is usually evidenced by the word "accepted" written on the bill and signed by the drawee, it need not be in writing, since any act or word evidencing a promise to pay is sufficient, and a statement by a bank officer that checks drawn by a depositor are all right if the signatures are all right is not equivalent to a promise to accept or certify the checks. Home Nat. Bank of Baird v. First State Bank & Trust Co. of Abilene (Tex.) 138 S. W. 935.

The payment of a check by the drawee amounts to more than an acceptance, and has all the efficacy of an "acceptance," which is defined by L. O. L. § 5965, to be the signification by the drawee of his assent to the order of the drawer. First Nat. Bank of Cottage Grove v. Bank of Cottage Grove, 117 Pac. 293, 296, 59 Or. 388.

A telegram sent by a bank addressed to another bank stating that it would honor a person's draft for a specified sum is an "acceptance" of a draft for such sum from which the bank may not recede. Wells v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 123 N. W. 371, 377, 144 Iowa, 605, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1045, 138 Am. St. Rep. 317. But where a bank wrote another bank that it would "accept" drafts drawn on J. by B. for fruit not to exceed a certain amount per car, bill of lading attached, the bank not being the drawee, the word "accept" did not render the bank liable as an ordinary acceptor of a draft or bill of exchange, but the transaction amounted to an agreement of guaranty. National Bank of Brunswick v. Sixth Nat. Bank, 61 Atl. 889, 891, 212 Pa. 238.

Where a bank refuses to accept a renewal note, "acceptance" is not shown by the fact that, when it wanted to make a demand on the original note, it attached to it the renewal note, so that both could be restored to the maker on payment. Allentown Nat. Bank v. Clay Product Supply Co., 66 Atl. 252, 253, 217 Pa. 128.

In contracts

As contract, see Contract.

The "acceptance" of a contract must be as broad as the offer, and exactly meet its terms. Miller v. Sharp (Ind. App.) 100 N. E. 108, 110.

To "accept" a contract is to admit it and agree to it; to accede to it; to assent to it. The ordinary meaning embodies assent and agreement. State ex rel. Cleveland Trinidad Paving Co. v. Board of Public Service of Columbus, 90 N. E. 389, 391, 81 Ohio St. 218. An "acceptance" must be such as to conclude an agreement or contract between the parties. Where it modifies the terms of an original agreement, it must be unconditional and unqualified, and must be intended as an acceptance. Rapp v. Jennings State Bank, 87 Pac. 598, 600, 17 Okl. 449 (citing Bennecke v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 105 U. S. 355, 26 L. Ed. 990).

"Acceptance" of an offer, to result in a contract, must be absolute and unconditional, identical with the terms of the offer, in the mode, at the place, and within the time expressly or impliedly required by the offer." Baird Bros. v. Walter Pratt & Co., 89 S. W. 648, 653, 6 Ind. T. 38 (quoting and adopting the definition in Clark, Contracts, § 36).

An "acceptance" of a contract must conform exactly to the offer, and if it contains new conditions there is no contract. A contract is not accepted, although parties agree on terms, if they agree subject to the preparation and approval of a former contract, for the concurrence of their wills is suspended, and where nothing further is done there is no contract. The mere fact that the reduction of an informal agreement to a formal written one was contemplated or stipulated for does not prevent the former from taking immediate effect. The question whether it does or not depends upon what the parties intended. Scott v. Fowler, 81 N. E. 34, 36, 227 Ill. 104 (citing Maclay v. Harvey, 90 Ill. 525, 32 Am. Rep. 35; Gradle v. Warner, 29 N. E. 1118, 140 Ill. 123; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. People ex rel. Allen, 63 N. E. 262, 195 Ill. 423; Bishop, Contracts, § 318).

Where a proposal is made relating to some act to be performed by the person to whom the proposal is addressed, and not some promise to be made, the performance of the thing asked to be done is ordinarily sufficient notice of its acceptance. But to make performance of a thing proposed sufficient as an "acceptance" of the proposal, the performance must have been induced by the proposal. Schmitt v. Well, 92 N. E. 178, 180, 46 Ind. App. 284.

The "acceptance" of a distinct proposal must be put by the party accepting in a proper channel to be communicated to the party making the offer. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Shea, 91 N. E. 1081, 1083, 174 Ind. 303.

Where defendants wrote plaintiff, offering to pay him 10 per cent. commission for sales of land made for defendants, at a specified price, to persons obtained by plaintiff that defendants had no agreement with, and plaintiff immediately began to search for, purchasers, whom he succeeded in procuring, and he notified defendants of having the buyers, his acts constituted a sufficient "acceptance of the offer." Brown v. Smith, 87 S. W. 556, 558, 113 Mo. App. 59. And where plaintiff offered to take the agency for the sale of defendant's real estate, and defendant sent forward a power of attorney authorizing plaintiff to sell the same, such act was an "acceptance" of plaintiff's offer to take the agency. If further acceptance on plaintiff's part was necessary, a letter from him, stating that he had a buyer for the place, and that he would leave on a day named with him for the purpose of looking over the property, was sufficient. Luckett Land & Emigration Co. v. Brown, 48 South. 628, 631, 118 La. 943.

A letter acknowledging receipt of an order for goods and promising to give it prompt attention is either an "acceptance" of the order or is open to that interpretation in view of subsequent conduct of the parties. Bauman v. McManus, 89 Pac. 15, 17, 75 Kan. 106, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1138 (citing Rees v. Warwick, 2 Barn. & Ald. 113; Manier v. Appling, 20 South. 978, 112 Ala. 663).

Where the owners, as vendors, draw up a contract of sale containing a provision that no damages shall be recoverable "if the owner refuses to accept the sale," they are liable for damages for a breach of the contract; for, by entering into the contract as vendors, they "accept the sale," within the meaning of the contract. Western Land Securities Co. v. Daniels-Jones Co., 129 N. W. 587, 113 Minn. 317.

Of dedication

Where there had been a dedication of land as public streets, a resolution of a municipal board changing the grade of such streets and a map relating thereto were competent evidence to show an "acceptance" by the city of the land dedicated. Palmer v. East River Gas Co. of Long Island City, 101 N. Y. Supp. 347, 349, 115 App. Div. 877. And continuous possession and public user of ground dedicated to the public for a street is an "acceptance." Clarke v. Evansville Boat Club, 88 N. E. 100, 101, 44 Ind. App. 426.

The erection of a street light by a private corporation within the limits of a street dedicated to a village, the maintenance of which was paid for by the village, was not sufficient to show an "acceptance" by the village of the street dedicated. The construction of a public sewer by proper municipal authority at the expense of the municipality in a dedicated street connected with the municipality's general system of sewers was an "acceptance" of the dedication of the street through which the sewer was constructed. An agreement by a village with a city, granting the latter the right to lay water pipes through certain of the village streets for a valuable consideration, to which was attached a map showing the location and boundaries of a dedicated street included among those in which the pipes were to be laid, was an express recognition of the public character of the dedicated street, and sufficient to show an "acceptance" of the dedication. Arnold v. City of Orange, 66 Atl. 1052, 1053, 73 N. J. Eq. 280.

Where a city, in addition to its approval of a long and continuous use of dedicated streets by the public as highways, extended its sewer and lighting systems over such streets, its acts constituted an "acceptance" of the dedication. Twedell v. City of St. Joseph, 152 S. W. 432, 433, 167 Mo. App. 547.

Of deed

A grantor in a deed, who was the grantee's general agent as to all her financial concerns and as to all matters connected with the possession and care of her papers of value and her property, executed a deed and had it recorded, though he retained it in his own possession. The grantee executed and delivered a mortgage to the grantor on the property conveyed. Held, that there was an "acceptance" of the deed. Blackwell v. Blackwell, 81 N. E. 910, 911, 196 Mass. 186, 12 Ann. Cas. 1070.

Of freight

Proof that cars containing plaintiff's property were placed on defendant railroad's connecting track, the usual place of delivery of freight destined for it as connecting carrier, under an arrangement with other roads that freight so placed would be accepted for further transportation, did not amount to an "acceptance" until defendant took actual charge of the property, accepted the bill of lading, or performed some other acts amounting in law to an "acceptance." Gray v. Wabash R. Co., 95 S. W. 983, 984, 119 Mo. App. 144.

Approval at a railroad stockholders' meeting in November, 1901, of the directors' report suggesting improvements, the passage of a directors' resolution in January, 1902, directing double tracking, and similar resolutions in May and June, 1902, that it was deemed advisable to make changes in the location of the road, there being no showing of abandonment of the old line, cannot be regarded as an "acceptance" of Act April 2, 1902 (Laws 1901-02, c. 867), enlarging railroad corporations' powers, within Const. § 158 (Code 1904, p. cclviii), effective July 10, 1902, providing that a corporation's "acceptance of new powers" shall be deemed a surrender of exemption from taxation not enjoyed by other like corporations. Commonwealth v. Richmond, F. & P. R. Co., 69 S. E. 1070, 1073, 111 Va. 611.

Of option

An option contract for the sale of real estate required the purchaser, on his electing to purchase within a specified time, to pay one-half of the purchase money and secure the balance. He demanded the execution of a deed not called for by the contract, and did not pay or tender any part of the purchase price. Held that the purchaser did not "accept" the option, though he was willing and able to pay, authorizing the vendor to refuse to perform. Trogden v. Williams, 56 S. E. 865, 869, 144 N. C. 192, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 867.

A sale of leased land by the lessor to the lessee on different terms from those recited in an option contained in the lease did not constitute an "acceptance of the option," but a new contract, under the rule that a conditional acceptance of an offer is a new offer which requires acceptance to close the bargain. Millard v. Martin, 68 A. 420, 28 R. I. 494.

"Acceptance" is the receipt of goods with the intention of retaining them, indicated by some act manifesting an intent to accept unconditionally in full performance of the contract. Brown & Bigelow v. Bard, 118 N. Y. Supp. 371, 376, 64 Misc. Rep. 249.

One receiving goods sold him and using them as his own thereby "accepts" them. Noel & McGinnis v. Kauffman Buggy Co. (Ky.) 106 S. W. 237, 238.

On the completion of a portrait, the person ordering it expressed satisfaction, and gave the artist permission to temporarily keep it for exhibition. Held a constructive "acceptance" and delivery. Scott v. Miller, 99 N. Y. Supp. 609, 610, 114 App. Div. 6.

A provision in a contract for the sale of machinery for a manufacturing plant, which was to be delivered by a specified date, that "the acceptance of this machinery when delivered is understood to constitute a waiver of all claims for damages by reason of any delay," is valid, and, while it was optional with the purchaser to accept or refuse to accept the machinery if delivered after the time limited, his action in receiving, installing, and continuing to use the same when so delivered was an "acceptance," which rendered such provision operative and binding, and he cannot set off a claim for damages caused by the delay in delivery in an action for the purchase money. Victor Chemical Works v. Hill Clutch Co., 152 Fed. 393, 395, 81 C. C. A. 519, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 814.

A contract to furnish certain machinery, to be subject to tests after its shipment and installation to determine whether it met the warranties on which it was sold before it was to be fully paid for, which installation and tests would necessarily require a considerable time, provided that "the acceptance of the machinery upon arrival shall constitute a waiver of all damages for delays." Held that, construing the entire contract together, the word "acceptance" in such provision was used in the sense only of "receipt," meaning that the voluntary receipt of the machinery on its shipment, notwithstanding delays, should be a waiver of the same, although still subject to the tests as to its efficiency and final acceptance. Lancaster Electric Light, Heat & Power Co. v. Platt Iron Works Co., 172 Fed. 314, 319, 97 C. C. A. 148.

Where plaintiff's contract for the sale of goods shipped to the consignee by defendant carrier, and claimed to have been stolen, was unenforceable under the statute of frauds, and the goods were sent subject to inspection and approval before the buyer would be liable for the price, delivery to the carrier was not an "acceptance" by the buyer, and hence the seller was entitled to sue the carrier for the loss. Fein v. Weir, 114 N. Y. Supp. 426, 432, 129 App. Div. 299.

Where a bill of lading was received and held for several days, with the intention of receiving the goods when they arrived, and no objection was made until after learning of an injury to the goods, the conduct of the consignee constituted a ratification of the delivery to the carrier and an "acceptance" of the goods, even if a delivery to the carrier had not been authorized. Murphy & Hutt v. American Can Co., 67 Atl. 17, 18, 106 Md. 190.

An attempt on the part of a buyer of shoes to sell some of the shoes which were salable, and adjust the buyer's claim that the shoes were not equal to sample, did not constitute an "acceptance" by the buyer of the entire lot of shoes. Wolfe Bros. Shoe Co. v. Bishop, 84 Pac. 133, 72 Kan. 687.

That on the arrival of goods the purchaser paid the freight both ways and at once reshipped them to the seller does not show an "acceptance" thereof. Jarrell v. Young, Smyth, Field Co., 66 Atl. 50, 51, 105 Md. 280, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 367, 12 Ann. Cas. 1.

That a part of goods alleged by buyers not to conform to the contract of sale was, after delivery to the buyers, issued to their tenants after the discovery of the alleged deficiency, does not amount to an "acceptance," where the issuance happened against the positive orders of the buyers and was evidently a mere mistake. Plotner & Stoddard v. Markham Warehouse & Elevator Co. (Tex.) 122 S. W. 443, 446 (citing Dauphiny v. Red Poll Creamery Co., 56 Pac. 451, 123 Cal. 548).

A traveling salesman of a manufacturer, with authority to take orders subject to approval, sold a bill of goods to a buyer in April, which the manufacturer approved and filed. In September following the salesman sold other goods to the buyer, as evidenced by a written order signed by the salesman, which designated the goods and the price to be paid therefor. The manufacturer held the order until November following, without indicating to the buyer whether it would accept or reject the order. Held, that the silence on the part of the manufacturer did not constitute an "acceptance" of the order. Gould v. Cates Chair Co., 41 South. 675, 677, 147 Ala. 629.

In statute of frauds

The term "acceptance" covers more than "receipt," and a receipt of goods without an acceptance is not sufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds. Where a contract had been made to sell several articles of machinery, the receipt and acceptance of one of the articles took the whole contract out of the statute of frauds. Patterson & Holden v. Sargeant, Osgood & Roundy Co., 77 Atl. 338, 88 Vt. 516, 138 Am. St. Rep. 1102.

A salesman of a paper manufacturer took the order of a paper dealer for a quantity of paper. The order was indicated by a memorandum made by the salesman. The goods were shipped in a car consigned to a third person, who inquired of the dealer about the delivery, and the dealer replied that it had its own teams and wagons, and would do its own hauling. The paper arrived at the place of destination, and was unloaded, and the third person notified the dealer thereof. Held not to show an "acceptance" of any part of the goods sufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds (Rev. St. 1899, § 3419). Eichberg Co. v. Benedict Paper Co., 95 S. W. 963, 119 Mo. App. 262 (citing Sotham v. Weber, 92 S. W. 181, 116 Mo. App. 104).

Where one orally sells merchandise of a greater value than $50 for cash, and the seller weighs up the articles and puts them aside in his storeroom, where they are to be turned over to the purchaser's drays, and the purchaser refuses to pay for them or send for them, there is no such "acceptance and receipt" under Civ. Code 1895, § 2693, par. 7, as makes the transaction enforceable; the goods being still within the control of the vendor and not within that of the vendee. Blumenfeld v. Palmer Hardware Co., 68 S. E. 618, 619, 8 Ga. App. 79.

An allegation that defendant "selected" certain cattle sold did not constitute an allegation of a delivery and acceptance within the statute of frauds; the words "selected" and "accepted" not being synonymous. McMillan v. Heaps, 123 N. W. 1041, 85 Neb. 535.

A deed from father to son "granted, bargained, sold and conveyed and by these presents do grant, bargain, sell and convey unto the said (son) all that section, lot, tract or parcel of land," etc. The habendum clause recited, "to have and to hold all and singular the said premises unto the said [son] his heirs and assigns forever." The warranty clause read, "and I hereby bind myself, my heirs, executors and administrators to warrant and forever defend all and singular the said premises unto the said [son] his heirs and assigns. * * *" The deed also provided that "the land herein conveyed to be accepted by the said [son] as a portion of my estate at its estimated value whenever my estate shall be divided among my heirs after my death as one of my heirs." Held, that the clause "land herein conveyed to be 'accepted' by the said [son]," meant that the land was to be accepted by him at the delivery of the deed; it being the intent to vest a present estate in the son at its delivery as an advancement to be accounted for whenever the father's estate was distributed at the value of the land when it was given to the son. Burgess v. McCommas (Tex.) 129 S. W. 382, 384, 385.

Where a deed of land provided that all poplar, etc., 20 inches and upward in diameter, is "accepted" in this deed, and all the walnut timber 16 inches in diameter is "accepted," and all rights to remove same it reserved in the grant or the timber described; the word "accepted" being intended for the word "excepted." Baustic v. Phillips, 121 S. W. 629, 630, 134 Ky. 711.

ACCESS

See Safe and Decent Access.

The word "access" is defined as a way of approach, or entrance, passage, path, means of approach, way of entrance, or passage to anything. Dexter & N. R. Co. v. Foster, 119 N. Y. Supp. 731, 733, 64 Misc. Rep. 500.

The riparian owner's right of "access" from his land to the lake—in other words, the right to pass to and from the waters of the lake within the width of his premises as they border on the lake—has been expressly recognized by this court as a common-law right, which cannot be taken from him without just compensation. The owner of a lot abutting on the waters of Lake Michigan does not acquire the right to construct a wharf over submerged lands, not owned by him, immediately in front of his property, by obtaining a license to build such wharf from the Secretary of War under River and Harbor Act March 3, 1899, c. 425, § 10, 30 Stat. 1151. By Act June 15, 1895 (Laws 1895, p. 282), the land covered by the waters of Lake Michigan that lies immediately in front of appellant's lot was granted by the state to the commissioners of Lincoln Park for certain specific purposes. Held, that appellant had no right, by virtue of his shore ownership, to build a wharf on such submerged land, without obtaining the consent of the park commissioners. Cobb v. Commissioners of Lincoln Park, 67 N. E. 5, 6, 8, 202 Ill. 427, 63 L. R. A. 264, 95 Am. St. Rep. 258.

"Riparian proprietors on a cove in a river have each the important right of 'access'; that is, the right to go from their land to the river and from the river to their land through the waters of the cove. This right is distinct from the right of each as a member of the public to navigate the waters of the cove. It is a private right, belonging to each as the owner of land bordering upon waters forming part of a great water highway." Richards v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 60 Atl. 295, 297, 77 Conn. 501, 69 L. R. A. 929.

ACCESSIBLE

ACCESSION

Rev. Codes 1905, § 4752, provides that the owner of a thing owns all its products and accessions. Held, that the word "accession" as used applies to things added to the realty, and there may be a point of time when the products of a farm cease to be the property of the owner of the land, so that, where a crop has been raised by one in adverse possession, it may cease to be the property of the owner of the fee out of possession and become the property of the adverse possessor on its severance from the soil. Golden Valley Land & Cattle Co. v. Johnstone, 128 N. W. 691, 694, 21 N. D. 101, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 631.

ACCESSORY

One who persuades another to commit a crime is an "accessory," and where he testifies as a witness his testimony is to be weighed accordingly. Ackley v. United States, 200 Fed. 217, 222, 118 C. C. A. 403.

Under a statute providing that an "accessory" is one who, knowing that an offense has been committed, conceals the offender or gives him aid, that he may evade arrest, trial, or the execution of his sentence, in order that a person may be an accessory he must render to the principal some overt, active assistance. Chenault v. State, 81 S. W. 971, 972, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 351. An "accessory" is not connected with the crime, and is only connected with the offender after that offender has committed an offense and is seeking to avoid trial or arrest or the execution of his sentence. An accessory, therefore, cannot be connected with the offense, and could not be guilty of the commission of the main offense. Strong v. State, 105 S. W. 785, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 133.

Pen. Code, § 32, defining "accessories" as those who after knowledge of the commission of a felony conceal it from the magistrate or protect the person charged with the crime, states the common-law rule that a person must know that he is assisting a felon or else he cannot be charged as an accessory, and the mere neglect to inform the authorities that a felony has been committed is not sufficient. Ex parte Goldman (Cal. App.) 88 Pac. 819, 820 (citing Bishop, Crim. Law, vol. 1, § 694; Blackstone's Commentaries, p. 37, notes 25, 120; People v. Garrett, 61 Pac. 1115, 129 Cal. 366).

Kirby's Dig. § 1560, defines an "accessory" as one who stands by, aids, abets, or assists, or one who, not being present, has advised and encouraged a crime. A person who is one of the procuring causes of a violation of law is an "accessory," or principal in the second degree. Strong v. State, 114 S. W. 239, 240, 88 Ark. 240, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 560.

One who advises another to commit a burglary or larceny, but is at another place at the time of its commission, is not a principal, but an "accessory." Holmes v. State, 91 S. W. 588, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 348; Skidmore v. State, 115 N. W. 288, 289, 80 Neb. 698.

Where accused conspired with another to kill H., and deceased was shot by mistake for H., accused was guilty of murder, and this though accused was charged as an absent accessory before and after the fact, under Cr. Code 1902, § 635, making a party who has hired or counseled another to commit a crime which is committed out of his presence an "accessory." State v. Kennedy, 67 S. E. 152, 154, 85 S. C. 146.

Kirby's Dig. § 1560, defines an "accessory" as one "who stands by, aids, abets, or assists," etc. In a prosecution for assault and battery, the court instructed the jury to return a verdict of guilty if they found that defendant aided, "assented," abetted, etc. Held that, the words of the statute being clear and self-explanatory, the court should have refrained from changing or adding to them. Clerget v. State, 103 S. W. 381, 382, 83 Ark. 227.

Under Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 38, § 274, defining an "accessory" as one "who stands by and aids, abets, or assists, or who, not being present aiding, abetting or assisting, both advised, encouraged, aided or abetted the perpetration of the crime," an instruction following such language is not incorrect for failure to use the word "feloniously." People v. Everett, 90 N. E. 226, 227, 242 Ill. 628.

ACCESSORY AFTER THE FACT

An "accessory after the fact" is one who, knowing a felony to have been committed, assists the felon, and at common law such an accessory may also be an accessory before the fact. State v. Naughton, 120 S. W. 53, 64, 221 Mo. 398.

An "accessory after the fact" is one who, knowing a felony to have been committed, shelters, receives, relieves, comforts, or assists the felon. State v. Jones, 120 S. W. 154, 155, 91 Ark. 5, 18 Ann. Cas. 293.

An "accessory after the fact" is one who, knowing a felony has been committed, harbors the felon, or assists him to escape punishment; and mere neglect to inform as to the crime or arrest the criminal will not make one an accessory after the fact. Levelling v. Commonwealth, 117 S. W. 253, 257, 132 Ky. 666, 136 Am. St. Rep. 192, 19 Ann. Cas. 140.

Kirby's Dig. § 1562, defining an "accessory after the fact" as one who, after a full knowledge that a crime has been committed conceals it from the magistrate, implies some act or refusal to act by which it is intended to prevent or hinder the discovery of the crime; and for one to merely remain passively silent as to what was told him is not enough, and so does not make his testimony objectionable as that of an accomplice. Davis v. State, 130 S. W. 547, 549, 96 Ark. 7.

A wife does not become an "accessory after the fact" because after the arrest of her husband and defendant she told persons, who inquired, that she knew nothing of the offense charged against them, though she was cognizant of their criminal acts, for an accessory is one who conceals the offender or gives him aid. Pinckard v. State, 138 S. W. 601, 602, 62 Tex. Cr. R. 602.

ACCESSORY BEFORE THE FACT

To render one guilty as an "accessory before the fact," it is not necessary that he should have shared the criminal or mischievous design of the principal felony, and that that design should have been substantially effected through his incitement thereto. People ex rel. Perkins v. Moss, 99 N. Y. Supp. 138, 144, 113 App. Div. 329 (citing People v. Perkins, 47 N. E. 883, 153 N. Y. 576).

Under Kirby's Dig. §§ 1560, 1561, defining an "accessory before the fact" as one who stands by, aids, abets, or assists, or who, not being present, has advised and encouraged the perpetration of the crime, and providing that he shall be punished as a principal, one indicted as accessory before the fact to a murder cannot complain of his conviction as, accessory to murder in the second degree, where under the evidence it should have been for the higher grade of murder. Roberts v. State, 131 S. W. 60, 61, 96 Ark. 58.

There can be an "accessory before the fact" in the crime of murder in the third degree or in manslaughter. Mathis v. State, 34 South. 287, 293, 45 Fla. 46.

Aiders and abettors distinguished

"To constitute one an 'aider and abettor' in the commission of a crime, he must be present when it is committed, aiding, advising, or assisting therein. Upon the other hand, though he be not present when the crime is committed, if its commission nevertheless results from his advice or assistance or by his procurement, he is equally guilty with the perpetrator of the crime, but as an 'accessory before the fact.'" Wheeler v. Commonwealth, 87 S. W. 1106, 1109, 120 Ky. 697.

Those present assisting one who personally commits a felony are "aiders and abettors," and are guilty as principals, while those who are absent, but who counseled the commission of the crime, "are accessories before the fact." Vogel v. State, 119 N. W. 190, 197, 138 Wis. 815.

ACCESSORY TO THE CRIME OF BURGLARY

An instruction defining an "accessory to the crime of burglary" in the language of Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 38, § 274, viz., as one "who stands by, and aids, abets or assists, or who, not being present, aiding, abetting or assisting, hath advised, encouraged, aided or abetted the perpetration of the crime," is not incorrect for failure to use the word "feloniously" in the description. People v. Everett, 90 N. E. 226, 227, 242 Ill. 628.

The word "accident" per se means an unforeseen and unexpected event. Lehman, Stern & Co. v. Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S.

Co., 38 South. 873, 874, 115 La. 1, 70 L. R. A. 562, 112 Am. St. Rep. 259, 5 Ann. Cas. 818. An event resulting from an unknown cause, or an unusual and unexpected event from a known cause; chance; casualty. Simpson v. Southern Ry. Co., 69 S. E. 683, 154 N. C. 51. It "may be an unusual event attending the performance of a usual and necessary act, or an unusual effect of a known cause." Young v. Railway Mail Ass'n, 103 S. W. 557, 562, 126 Mo. App. 325.

An "accident" is "an undesigned contingency; a happening without intentional causation; that which exists or occurs abnormally; something unusual or phenomenal; an uncommon occurrence." Patterson v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 94 Pac. 138, 141, 77 Kan. 236, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 733 (quoting and adopting the definition in State v. Hansford, 92 Pac. 554, 76 Kan. 678, 14 L. R. A. [N. S.] 548).

An "accident" is such an unexpected casualty as occurs without any one being to blame for it; that is, without anybody being guilty of negligence in doing or permitting to be done, or omitting to do, the particular things that caused such casualty. Briscoe v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 120 S. W. 1162, 1165, 222 Mo. 104; Chicago Veneer Co. v. Jones, 135 S. W. 430, 432, 143 Ky. 21.

An "accident" may be defined as an event happening unexpectedly and without fault. Indiana Union Traction Co. v. Long, 96 N. E. 604, 608, 176 Ind. 532. Or as "an event happening without the concurrence of the will of the person by whose agency it was caused." State v. Matheson, 103 N. W. 137, 140, 130 Iowa, 440, 114 Am. St. Rep. 427, 8 Ann. Cas. 430.

Webster defines an "accident" to mean "literally, a befalling; an event that takes place without one's foresight or expectation; an undesigned, sudden, and unexpected event; chance; contingency; often an undesigned and unforeseen occurrence of an afflictive or unfortunate character; a casualty or mishap." Young v. Railway Mail Ass'n, 103 S. W. 557, 561, 126 Mo. App. 325; Harrod v. Hammond Packing Co., 102 S. W. 637, 638, 125 Mo. App. 357; Erickson v. Ladies of the Maccabees of the World, 126 N. W. 259, 261, 25 S. D. 183.

Death by "accident," within an accident benefit certificate, means death which is not the natural and probable consequence of the act causing it. Belle v. Travelers' Protective Ass'n of America, 135 S. W. 497, 500, 155 Mo. App. 629. An event which takes place without one's foresight or expectation, and which proceeds from an unknown cause, or an unusual effect of a known cause not within the expectation of the person injured. Phoenix Accident & Sick Ben. Ass'n v. Stiver, 84 N. E. 772, 773, 42 Ind. App. 636.

The word "accident," in accident policies, means an event which takes place without one's foresight or expectation. A result, though unexpected, is not an accident; the means or cause must be accidental. Death resulting from voluntary physical exertions or from intentional acts of insured is not accidental, nor is disease or death caused by the vicissitudes of climate or atmosphere the result of an accident; but where, in the act which precedes an injury, something unforeseen or unusual occurs which produces the injury, the injury results through accident. Schmid v. Indiana Travelers' Acc. Ass'n, 85 N. E. 1032, 1034, 42 Ind. App. 483; Ludwig v. Preferred Accident Ins. Co. of New York, 130 N. W. 5, 7, 113 Minn. 510; Young v. Railway Mail Ass'n, 103 S. W. 557, 562, 126 Mo. App. 325.

The term "accident," as used in accident insurance policies, should be construed most strongly against the companies, and be defined according to the ordinary and usual understanding of its signification. "Any unusual and unexpected event attending the performance of a usual and necessary act," whether the act be performed by the party injured or by another, is ordinarily and usually understood to be an event which happened by accident. Young v. Railway Mail Ass'n, 103 S. W. 557, 562, 126 Mo. App. 325.

Where a man is so afflicted that he will die from such affliction within a very short time, yet if, by some accidental means, his death is caused sooner, it will be a death from "accident," within the meaning of the terms of an accident insurance policy. Hooper v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 148 S. W. 116, 117, 166 Mo. App. 209.

"An 'accident' is something unexpected and unavoidable." In an action against a street railway for injuries received by plaintiff in a collision, an instruction that, if plaintiff received his injuries as the result of some occurrence which careful men in the situation of defendant's agents would not have reasonably anticipated, then such occurrence is what, in law, is termed an "accident," and defendant was not liable, was misleading; an accident being something unexpected and unavoidable. Hunt v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 103 S. W. 1088, 1089, 126 Mo. App. 79.

In an action on a policy of accident insurance, which provided for a reduction of the indemnity in case of any of the losses specified in certain parts of the policy, which included death where the "accidental injury" resulted from an intentional act, the word "injury" includes fatal injuries. Continental Casualty Co. v. Morris, 102 S. W. 773-775, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 394.

Where defendant negligently ordered decedent to work on the roof of a building immediately beneath an iron band on a smokestack, where he was likely to be struck by the band in case it should fall, and negligently directed a fellow servant to loosen the band without disconnecting guy wires attached to it, the fact that the bolt which held the band broke earlier than was anticipated by the servant ordered to loosen it did not make the prior negligence the less the proximate cause of decedent's death, since the intervening, premature breaking of the bolt was pure "accident," defined to be an unexpected event, or one occurring without expectation or foresight. Troll v. St. Louis Portland Cement Co., 140 S. W. 963, 965, 160 Mo. App. 501.

Where plaintiff had knowledge that its furnace was working badly, and that normal results could not be relied on, at the time it contracted to supply defendant's requirements of steel castings for the remainder of the year, the subsequent necessity to shut down its plant for repairs was not an "accident" or an unavoidable cause of delay, within a custom or usage among manufacturers of steel castings that all contracts are subject to the contingency of "accidents" and unavoidable delays. Lima Locomotive & Machine Co. v. National Steel Castings Co., 155 Fed. 77, 80, 83 C. C. A. 593, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 713.

The reciprocal demurrage law provides that the period during which the movement of freight is suspended by accident, or any cause not within the power of the railroad company to prevent, or during which the loading or unloading of freight by shipper or consignee is delayed by inclement weather, making loading or unloading impracticable, or by any cause not within the power of the shipper or consignee to prevent, shall be added to the free time allowed. Held, that the clause "any cause not within the power of the shipper or consignee to prevent," and the term "accident," are to be broadly construed, and include all causes not reasonably within the power of the carrier to prevent. Hardwick Farmers' Elevator Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 124 N. W. 819, 821, 110 Minn. 25, 19 Ann. Cas. 1088; Gray v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., 124 N. W. 1100, 110 Minn. 527.

The word "accident," used in Pen. Code 1901, §§ 24, 179, defining excusable homicide, is used in its general sense and meaning, and when used to express a result produced by human action is generally, if not universally, understood to mean a thing done or disaster caused or produced without design or intention; hence an instruction in a murder case that, if defendant shot the officer while unlawfully resisting arrest, then the shooting, though accidental, was murder in the second degree was erroneous as allowing conviction of murder in the absence of intent. Stokes v. Territory (Ariz.) 127 Pa. 742, 745.

If accused did not intend to shoot at decedent at all, and his pistol was discharged involuntarily by reason of his stumbling, the act would be an "accident." Lewis v. Commonwealth, 131 S. W. 517, 519, 140 Ky. 652.

Casualty synonyms

An instruction in an action for damages for negligently destroying plaintiff's wheat stacks by fire that if the jury believed that the fire which destroyed plaintiff's grain was the result of "mere 'accident' or casualty," and not of negligence by defendant, they should find for defendant was not erroneous; the word "casualty" being synonymous with "accident." Webb v. Baldwin, 147 S. W. 849, 851, 165 Mo. App. 240.

Absence of negligence

An "accident," as the term is used in personal injury actions against a railroad, means an injury which occurs without being caused by the negligence of either the railroad company or the injured person. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Brown, 75 S. E. 330, 331, 138 Ga. 328.

Where there is culpable negligence, the result cannot be legally an "accident"; and it was not error to instruct that a pure accident must be unmixed with a want of ordinary care by either party. Fisher Motor Car Co. v. Seymour & Allen, 71 S. E. 764, 9 Ga. App. 465.

An "accident," as defined by legal authorities, for which no liability exists, is one which is the result of an unknown cause, or is the result of an unusual and unexpected event happening in such an unusual manner from a known cause that it could not be reasonably expected or foreseen, and that it was not the result of any negligence. Cornwell v. Bloomington Business Men's Ass'n, 163 Ill. App. 461, 467.

The word "accident" is ordinarily used to define that which happens unexpectedly or without design, regardless of the fault of any person; but it is error to instruct to find for defendant if the injuries alleged in the petition were caused by an accident, unless they are further instructed that they must find that defendant's negligence was not a proximate cause of the injury. Hankins v. Relmers, 125 N. W. 516, 517, 86 Neb. 307.

A charge that plaintiff was not entitled to recover if the loss of his eye was the result of an accident, was abstractly correct, the term "accident" as used meaning "inevitable" in the sense that it could not have been prevented by the exercise of the care which the master was required to exercise. Pace v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 52 South. 52, 57, 166 Ala. 519.

The employer's liability act (Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7083) makes a corporation liable for injuries to a servant from the negligence of any person to whose order or direction the injured party was bound to and did conform. Held that, where a carpenter employed by a corporation was instructed by the superintendent to hold a block against the end of a piston rod while the superintendent hammered on the block in an endeavor to move the rod, and a glancing blow struck the carpenter, it was a mere "accident," for which the corporation was not liable. Rainbow Coal & Mining Co. v. Martin, 74 N. E. 902, 903, 35 Ind. App. 658.

The word "accident," in its most commonly accepted meaning, denotes an effect that takes place without one's foresight or expectation; an effect which proceeds from an unknown cause or an unusual effect of a common cause, and therefore not expected; chance; casualty; contingency. An occurrence resulting in personal injuries to a driver, caused by his team becoming frightened and caused to run away by reason of the negligence of an employé of a railroad, was not an "accident" within such definition. Southern Ry. Co. v. Hill, 54 S. E. 113, 116, 125 Ga. 354 (citing 1 Cyc. p. 227).

In an action for injuries in an automobile accident, an instruction that defendant was not liable if her automobile struck plaintiff by accident, and defining "accident" to be such an unexpected catastrophe as occurred without any one being to blame for it, viz., without any one being guilty of negligence in doing or permitting to be done or omitting to do the particular thing that caused the casualty, correctly defined accident. Vesper v. Lavender (Tex.) 149 S. W. 377, 380.

As negligence

The meaning of the word "accident" includes the result of human fault held to be actionable negligence. It is not used, ordinarily, as synonymous with "mere accident," or "purely accidental," or any similar term, but as the opposite thereof. Ullman v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 88 N. W. 41, 42, 46, 112 Wis. 150, 56 L. R. A. 246, 88 Am. St. Rep. 949.

An instruction that by the term "accident" is meant the infliction of the injury sued on is not objectionable as implying an actual wrong from the use of the word "infliction." Kortendick v. Town of Waterford, 125 N. W. 945, 946, 142 Wis. 413.

Transaction not synonymous

Affray or altercation

An "accident" is an event that takes place without one's foresight or expectation; an event that proceeds from an unknown cause, or is an unusual effect of a known cause, therefore not expected (Webster's Dict.). Therefore, where one strikes another and in so doing bruises his knuckles, or breaks the skin of his hand, it is not an "accident" within the meaning of that word as used in an accident insurance policy. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York v. Stacey's Ex'rs, 143 Fed. 271, 274, 74 C. C. A. 409, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 657, 6 Ann. Cas. 955.

Appendicitis

Where a policy of insurance provides that "loss of life by accident," as used in the policy, shall be deemed to mean death from bodily injuries, not intentionally inflicted by the assured, which independently of all other causes are effected solely and exclusively by external, violent, and accidental means, the question whether appendicitis, which caused the death of an insured, was caused by an accident, or was the result of a diseased condition existing prior to the accident, was properly submitted to the jury, where testimony of physicians testifying as experts was conflicting. New Amsterdam Casualty Co. v. Shields, 155 Fed. 54, 56, 85 C. C. A. 122.

Bite of dog

The bite of a dog is an "accident," and should be classed under the "accident provisions" of an accident insurance policy. Farner v. Massachusetts Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 67 Atl. 927, 928, 219 Pa. 71, 123 Am. St. Rep. 621.

Blood poisoning

A death resulting from a self-inflicted knife cut made by an insured while trimming a corn, which was followed by blood poisoning, is one from an "accidental, external, and violent" injury, within the meaning of an accident policy. Nax v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 130 Fed. 985.

Blood poisoning resulting from accident is a part of the "accident," within an accident policy providing that peritonitis, carbuncles, ulcers, and other denominated ills, not including blood poison, shall be deemed illnesses within the policy, no matter what may have brought them on. Continental Casualty Co. v. Mathis, 150 S. W. 507, 510, 150 Ky. 477.

Bodily injury or strain

The "injury" in an accident policy against loss by bodily injury effected by external violence and "accidental" means, is an injury to the person of the insured traceable exclusively to the "accident"; and every result traceable to the accident, no matter how remote in time, is potentially caused at the time of the accident. Hatch v. United States Casualty Co., 83 N. E. 398, 399, 197 Mass. 101, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 503, 125 Am. St. Rep. 332, 14 Ann. Cas. 290.

An accident policy, insuring against loss of business time resulting from bodily injuries through "external, violent, and accidental means," covered loss of business time by disease proximately caused by a bodily injury occurring through external, violent, and accidental means. The element of volition being wholly absent, the fact that during a period of unconsciousness there was a distinct and long-continued force applied, which compressed the tissues and blood vessels surrounding the bones, and thereby caused the inflammation, marks the case as one of "accident." Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 75 N. E. 262, 263, 165 Ind. 317, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 422, 112 Am. St. Rep. 232, 6 Ann. Cas. 551.

An accident policy provided indemnity for loss of time from the effect of "personal bodily injury caused solely by external, violent, and 'accidental' means." The insured while bowling strained his side, and his physician found a tenderness of the muscles of the front and back of the abdomen on the right side, which could be ascertained by the touch; and in a few days the insured developed appendicitis, caused directly by the irregular working of the muscles and parts of the body around the abdominal region, which resulted from the strain, and insured was disabled from work for four months. Held, in an action for disability benefits, that there was no "personal bodily injury caused solely by external, violent means," and that insured could not recover. Lehman v. Great Western Accident Ass'n (Iowa) 133 N. W. 752, 753, 754, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 562.

An accident policy insured one against "bodily injuries sustained through external, violent, and 'accidental' means, independently of all other causes." Insured received an accidental injury to his leg, causing an abrasion of the skin. An infection started at that place, and he died 15 days later from blood poisoning. Held, that the death was the result of bodily injuries, independently of all other causes. French v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 115 N. W. 869, 873, 135 Wis. 259, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1011.

A policy insuring against disability or death "resulting directly and independently of all other causes from bodily injuries sustained through external, violent, and 'accidental' means" does not render the insurer liable for the death of the insured from rupture of the heart, the walls of which had been weakened by what is known as "fatty degeneration"; the immediate inciting cause of the rupture being either overexertion in assisting to carry a burden or deep breathing following such exertion, neither of which was "accidental." Shanberg v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., of New York, 158 Fed. 1, 4, 85 C. C. A. 343, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1206.

The strain of the muscles of the back, caused by lifting heavy weights in the course of business, is an "injury by 'accident' or violence, occasioned by external or material causes operating on the person of the insured," within an accident policy. Horsfall v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 72 Pac. 1028, 1029, 32 Wash. 132, 63 L. R. A. 425, 98 Am. St. Rep. 846.

Chloroform

Death from chloroform, administered by physicians preparatory to a surgical operation, resulting from defects of the heart and other organs, is "accidental" within an accidental benefit certificate stipulating for the payment of a specified sum in case of the death of insured by accident. Belle v. Travelers' Protective Ass'n of America, 135 S. W. 497, 501, 502, 155 Mo. App. 629.

Disease

Kidney disease produced in a servant by handling infected rags in the discharge of her duties is within an employer's liability policy, insuring against loss from liability on account of bodily injuries "accidentally" suffered. Columbia Paper Stock Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 78 S. W. 320, 323, 104 Mo. App. 157.

Death resulting from disease which follows as a natural consequence, though not the necessary consequence, of physical injury which is accidental, is an "accidental death," within the terms of an accident insurance policy; the death being deemed the proximate result of the injury, and not of disease as an independent cause. Delaney v. Modern Accident Club, 97 N. W. 91, 95, 121 Iowa, 528, 63 L. R. A. 603.

Fish bone

A benefit certificate, limiting the right of recovery to cases of death by "external, violent, and accidental" means, is intended to avoid liability upon a fraudulent claim of indemnity for bodily injuries, based solely upon insured's testimony, and injuries caused by means coming from outside the body are "external," so that death caused by a fish bone lodging in the rectum was by "external, violent, and accidental" means, within the policy though death resulted directly from blood poisoning, which would not have resulted except for the bone; the lodging of the bone in the rectum being an "accident." Jenkins v. Hawkeye Commercial Men's Ass'n, 124 N. W. 199, 200, 147 Iowa, 113, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1181 (citing Healey v. Mutual Acc. Ass'n of the Northwest, 25 N. E. 52, 133 Ill. 556, 9 L. R. A. 371, 23 Am. St. Rep. 637; Paul v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 20 N. E. 347, 112 N. Y. 472, 3 L. R. A. 443, 8 Am. St. Rep. 758; American Accident Co. v. Reigart, 23 S. W. 191, 94 Ky. 547, 21 L. R. A. 651, 42 Am. St. Rep. 374; Maryland Casualty Co. v. Hudgins [Tex.] 72 S. W. 1047).

Inflammation of eye

An inflammation of the eye caused by the splashing of water from a tub in which the person was washing clothing, resulting in the loss of the eye, is "accidental" within an accident policy, insuring against the loss of the sight of an eye by "accident." Sullivan v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 133 N.

W. 486, 489, 167 Mich. 524, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 140, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1116.

Injuries or death caused by third persons

Where insured died from blood poisoning from infection received in an altercation with another, his death was the direct result of bodily injuries sustained through "external, violent, and accidental means," within the terms of an accident policy. Carroll v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 137 Fed. 1012, 1013, 1014.

A person who is unexpectedly shot by another without cause or provocation is injured by "external, violent, and accidental means," within a policy insuring against such injuries. American Accident Co. of Louisville v. Carson, 36 S. W. 169, 170, 99 Ky. 441, 34 L. R. A. 301, 59 Am. St. Rep. 473.

A beneficiary in an accident policy sought to recover the full amount of insurance for loss of life by "accident" after the insured had been shot by a burglar and had died. Under a title "Special Indemnities" the policy provided that it did not exclude indemnity for loss by accident produced by "shooting" and other enumerated causes. Some of those causes were sports involving conscious participation on the part of the assured. Others excluded such participation. The policy also provided under this title that, in case of loss covered by this title, the company should pay one-half of the ordinary accident indemnity for such loss. It is held that the policy, construed as a whole as favorably to the insured as reasonably may be without distorting the intended meaning of words, and with due reference to the rule of "hoscitur a sociis," entitled the beneficiary to recover only one-half, and not the whole amount, of ordinary accident indemnity. Bader v. New Amsterdam Casualty Co., 112 N. W. 1065, 1066, 102 Minn. 186, 120 Am. St. Rep. 613.

Medical treatment

When an injury is caused by means insured against, and medical treatment administered is rendered necessary by the nature of the injury, the death of the insured, if caused by the injury and the medical treatment, was "accidental," within a policy insuring against death caused by "external, violent, and accidental means." Gardner v. United Surety Co., 125 N. W. 264, 266, 110 Minn. 291, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1004.

Poison

Since the word "accidental" is descriptive of means which produce effects which are not their natural and probable consequences, where insured died as the result of his hand coming in contact with poison ivy while he was cutting a branch in the woods near a city, his death was "accidental" within the policy. Dent v. Railway Mail Ass'n, 183 Fed. 840, 843.

Rupture of the heart

A policy insuring against disability or death "resulting directly and independently of all other causes from bodily injuries sustained through 'external, violent, and accidental means,'" does not render the insurer liable for the death of the insured from rupture of the heart, the walls of which had been weakened by what is known as "fatty degeneration," the immediate inciting cause of the rupture being either overexertion in assisting to carry a burden, or deep breathing following such exertion, neither of which was "accidental." Shanberg v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 158 Fed. 1, 4, 5, 85 C. C. A. 343, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1206.

Scalding water

An allegation in a petition on an accident policy that the injury resulting in the death of insured was caused by the accidental falling of scalding water into his ear sufficiently showed that the death was produced by "external, violent, and accidental means," within the terms of the policy, without an express allegation to that effect. Driskell v. United States Health & Accident Ins. Co., 93 S. W. 880, 881, 117 Mo. App. 362.

Suicide

If one in a fit of delirium or other condition of irresponsibility, without intention to take his own life, does some act from which his death ensues, such death is by "accident," not by "suicide." Cady v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 113 N. W. 967, 970, 134 Wis. 322, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 260.

Sunstroke

The death of a person by sunstroke, caused by his exposure to the sun and humid atmosphere on a hot day while pursuing his usual avocation in his ordinary way, is not caused by sunstroke due to "external, violent, and accidental means," within an accident policy insuring against death by sunstroke due to external, violent, and accidental means. Bryant v. Continental Casualty Co. (Tex.) 145 S. W. 636, 637.

ACCIDENT (In Equity)

"Accident" is known in equity as an unforeseen occurrence affecting a person injuriously, and not due to his own negligence. Engler v. Knoblaugh, 110 S. W. 16, 20, 131 Mo. App. 481.

ACCIDENT (In Practice)

"Accident or surprise" embraces not only various forfeitures due to accidents in the popular sense, but such unforeseen events, misfortunes, losses, acts, or omissions as are not the result of negligence or

"'Accident' is an unforeseen and unexpected event, occurring external to the party affected by it, and of which his own agency is not the proximate cause, whereby, contrary to his own intention and wish, he loses some legal right or becomes subjected to some legal liability, and another person acquires a corresponding legal right, which it would be a violation of good conscience for the latter, under the circumstances, to retain. And the chief point is that, because of the unforeseen and unexpected character of the occurrence by which the legal relation of the parties has been unintentionally changed, the party injuriously affected thereby is in good conscience entitled to relief that will restore those relations to their original character and place him in his former position." The fact that petitioner resided in Italy and was prevented from attending trial by the sickness and death of his father were accidental causes of his absence, so as to entitle him to a new trial. Massucco v. Tomassi, 62 Atl. 57, 60, 78 Vt. 188; State ex rel. Hartley v. Innes, 118 S. W. 1168, 1170, 187 Mo. App. 420; Ludwig v. Walker, 111 N. Y. Supp. 1102, 1103, 59 Misc. Rep. 62.

Where a creditor, who attached the interest in land descending to the debtor on the ancestor dying intestate, knew of proceedings to probate the ancestor's will, which disinherited the debtor, but took no steps to become a party thereto, and the will was admitted to probate, the creditor's failure to contest the probate was not the result of "'accident," mistake, or unforeseen cause," within the statute authorizing the granting of a new trial, where, by reason of accident, mistake, or unforeseen cause, judgment was rendered against the applicant for a new trial. Seward v. Johnson, 62 Atl. 569, 570, 27 R. I. 396.

Where in a suit for divorce no subpoena was ever served on plaintiff's son, and, though it was discovered before the trial that he was absent and could not be found, the fact was not called to the court's attention, nor any application made for a continuance until after the court had disclosed its determination of the matter, plaintiff was not entitled to a new trial for "accident" or surprise, though the boy, who was a material witness for plaintiff, had been with him until within a few days of the trial, had disappeared, and was subsequently located in another state as a military recruit. Clemans v. Western, 81 Pac. 824, 826, 39 Wash. 290.

The discovery and disclosure by a juror, after the trial was begun, that he entertained a prejudice growing out of an accident that occurred in his father's family, revived in his mind by the testimony given in the case, and which unfitted him to sit as an impartial juror, something, too, which was not known and could not have been foreseen by the court, the parties, or the counsel, is an "accident," and justified the court in discharging the jury from rendering a verdict. State v. Hansford, 92 Pac. 551, 554, 76 Kan. 678, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 548.

ACCIDENT INSURANCE

See Life and Accident Insurance.

Employer's liability insurance may from its very nature appropriately be classified with and peculiarly belongs to what is commonly known and designated as "accident insurance," inasmuch as such insurance has for its primary purpose indemnification against the effects of accidents resulting in bodily injury or death. State v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 69 N. E. 608, 610, 69 Ohio St. 317.

ACCIDENT WHILE PERFORMING OPERATION

A rider attached to a physician's accident policy extended the same to cover injuries known as septic wounds, caused by "accident while performing operation pertaining to business of insured," etc. Held, that such clause did not limit the insurer's liability to accidents occurring while the physician was in the act of performing an operation or administering treatment to a patient, but extended as well to the preparation of medicine to be taken by the patient as a part of a continuous course of treatment. Central Accident Ins. Co. v. Rembe, 77 N. E. 123, 126, 220 Ill. 151, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 933, 110 Am. St. Rep. 235, 5 Ann Cas. 155.

ACCIDENTAL AND UNCONTROLLABLE EVENT

Rev. Civ. Code, art. 2754, makes carriers liable for loss of goods carried unless they can prove that such loss was occasioned by an "accidental and uncontrollable event." The court says that it seems these words were used in the same sense as "cas fortuit," "force majeure," or "fortuitous event," as defined in the Code of 1825, which was that which happens by a cause or force which we cannot resist, and the "force majeure," or "superior force," is an accident which human prudence can neither foresee nor prevent. These various phrases are held to be the equivalent of the common-law phrase, "the act of God," and the holding is that a carrier is liable unless he can show that the loss was occasioned by an "act of God," as used in that sense. The words are also the equivalent of "inevitable accident," by which, according to Story on Bailments, "is meant any accident produced by any physical cause which is irresistible, such as loss by lightning or storms, by perils of the seas, by an inundation or earthquake, or by sudden death or illness. By 'irresistible force' is meant such an interposition of human agency as is, from its nature and power, absolutely uncontrollable." The word "uncontrollable" qualifies the event as one which cannot be restrained or prevented. Lehman, Stern & Co. v. Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. Co., 38 South. 873, 874, 115 La. 1, 70 L. R. A. 562, 112 Am. St. Rep. 259, 5 Ann. Cas. 818.

ACCIDENTAL CAUSE

Other accidental causes, see Other.

An "accidental or unavoidable cause which cannot be anticipated or avoided by the exercise of due diligence and foresight," and which will legally excuse an interstate carrier of live stock for confining such stock in cars for a period longer than 28 consecutive hours without unloading for rest, water, and feeding, under the statute, is one which cannot be avoided by that degree of prudence, foresight, care, and caution which the law requires of every one under the circumstances of the particular case, and as would have been exercised by a man of ordinary prudence under such circumstances. An accident occurring to a train through the negligence of the transportation company is not such a cause; nor is mere press of business, or the sidetracking of the train to allow for the passing of other trains, the meeting or passing of which could have been anticipated when the transportation was begun, or the lack of facilities for unloading or feeding. United States v. Southern Pac. Co., 157 Fed. 459, 461; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. United States, 194 Fed. 342, 344, 114 U. C. A. 334.

ACCIDENTAL INJURY

See Accident—Accidental.

ACCIDENTAL MEANS

See External, Violent and Accidental Means.

See, also, Accident—Accidental.

"Accidental means" are those which produce effects which are not the natural and probable consequences of the act. "An effect which is not the natural or probable consequence of the means which produced it, an effect which does not ordinarily follow and cannot be reasonably anticipated from the use of such means, an effect which the actor did not intend to produce and which he cannot be charged with the design of producing, is produced by accidental means." In an action on an accident policy, proof that plaintiff suffered lesion of a blood vessel of the lungs while assisting to lift a heavy mail sack, and that such lesion subsequently entirely healed, held sufficient to establish a prima facie case that the injury was caused by external violence and accidental means, within the terms of the policy. Young v. Railway Mail Ass'n, 103 S. W. 557-562, 126 Mo. App. 325 (quoting 4 Cooley, Briefs Ins. pp. 8156, 8157).

Where insured, in an accident policy indemnifying only for injury or death arising from physical bodily injury through external, violent, and accidental means, died as a result of physical exertions in climbing steps at a hotel carrying heavy satchels, because of the rarefied condition of the atmosphere, he died from doing what he intended to do, though the result was not anticipated, and his death was not the result of accidental means. Schmid v. Indiana Travelers' Acc. Ass'n, 85 N. E. 1032, 1034, 42 Ind. App. 483.

ACCOMMODATE—ACCOMMODATION

See Equal Accommodations; Facilities and Accommodations; Place of Public Accommodation; Proper Accommodations; Reasonable Accommodations.

The word "accommodation," as used in an agreement permitting the construction of a switch necessary for the accommodation of a railroad company, means "convenience." Reeser v. Philadelphia & R. Ry. Co., 64 Atl. 376, 377, 215 Pa. 136.

ACCOMMODATION BILL OR NOTE

An "accommodation bill" or note is one to which the accommodating party has put his name, without consideration, to accommodate some other party, who is to issue it and is expected to pay it. Brown Carriage Co. v. Dowd, 71 S. E. 721, 724, 155 N. C. 307.

ACCOMMODATION INDORSEMENT

An "accommodation indorsement" is the execution of commercial paper, without consideration, to lend credit to the accommodated party. Waller v. Gorman Mercantile Co. (Tex.) 141 S. W. 833.

ACCOMMODATION INDORSER

An "accommodation indorser" is one who indorses a bill or note in order to enable another to obtain credit or money on it. Citizens' Commercial & Savings Bank of Flint v. Platt, 97 N. W. 694, 695, 135 Mich. 267.

An "accommodation indorser" is defined by Gen. St. 1902, § 4199, to be one who indorses without receiving value to lend his credit to some other person, he being exempt from suit at the hands of the accommodated person, but as to other persons his liability is the same as an indorser for value without reference to the question of notice of the accommodation character of his indorsement. Edward Knapp & Co. v. Tidewater Coal Co., 81 Atl. 1063, 1065, 85 Conn. 147.

The provision in Act April 11, 1848 (P. L. 536), authorizing a married woman to make any contract in furtherance of the general power granted in a preceding section, but declaring that she shall not become "accommodation indorser," maker, guarantor, or surety for another, applies only to technical contracts of indorsement, guaranty or suretyship included in the words of the act. Herr v. Reinhoehl, 58 Atl. 862, 863, 209 Pa. 483.

Under Negotiable Instrument Law (Laws 1904, c. 102) § 63, providing that "a person placing his signature on an instrument otherwise than as maker, drawer or acceptor, is deemed to be an 'indorser,' unless he clearly indicates by appropriate words his intention to be bound in some other capacity," one who became the payee of a note, and indorsed the same, to enable the maker to negotiate and discount it for his own benefit, is liable merely as an "accommodation indorser." Mechanics' & Farmers' Sav. Bank v. Katterjohn, 125 S. W. 1071, 1073, 137 Ky. 427, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 439.

ACCOMMODATION MAKER

Under L. O. L. § 5862, defining an "accommodation maker" as one who has signed a negotiable instrument without receiving value, but providing that such person is liable to a holder for value, notwithstanding the holder knew him to be only an accommodation party, and section 6023, defining a person "primarily liable" as one who is absolutely required to pay a negotiable instrument, and sections 5952, 5953, providing for the discharge of a negotiable instrument by payment, and that a person secondarily liable shall be discharged by indulgence of the maker, an accommodation maker is primarily liable, and is not discharged, notwithstanding an indulgence to parties secondarily liable. Murphy v. Panter, 125 Pac. 292, 293, 62 Or. 522.

ACCOMMODATION OF INDORSERS

A note executed by a corporation receiving the benefits thereof, and indorsed by stockholders before delivery to the payee, demanding their indorsement, is not made for the "accommodation of indorsers," within Negotiable Instrument Act (Laws 1904, c. 102) § 115, providing that notice of dishonor need not be given to an indorser, where the instrument was made for his accommodation, and notice of dishonor must be given to hold them liable. First Nat. Bank v. Bickel, 137 S. W. 790, 792, 143 Ky. 754.

ACCOMMODATION PAPER

Notes were executed to relieve the payee's financial embarrassment; the payee leaving automobiles with the maker as security, with the understanding that he could sell them and apply the proceeds on the notes. It was agreed that the notes might be renewed, if necessary, and that if the automobiles were redelivered to the payee, it would return the notes. Held, that the notes were "accommodation paper." Citizens' Bank v. Fredrickson, 120 N. W. 462, 463, 83 Neb. 755.

ACCOMMODATION PARTY

An "accommodation party," as defined by the Negotiable Instruments Law, "is one who has signed the instrument as maker, drawer, acceptor or indorser, without receiving value therefor and for the purpose of lending his name to some other person. Such a person is liable on the instrument to a holder for value, notwithstanding such holder at the time of taking the instrument knew him to be only an accommodation party." Bradley Engineering & Mfg. Co. v. Heyburn, 106 Pac. 171, 172, 56 Wash. 628, 134 Am. St. Rep. 1127 (quoting Negotiable Instruments Law [Laws 1899, pp. 346, 352, c. 149] § 29); Weant v. Southern Trust & Deposit Co., 77 Atl. 289, 293, 112 Md. 463 (quoting Negotiable Instruments Act [Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 13] § 48); Cellers v. Meachem, 89 Pac. 426, 428, 49 Or. 186, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 133, 13 Ann. Cas. 997 (quoting B. & C. Comp. § 4431); Morris County Brick Co. v. Austin, 75 Atl. 550, 551, 79 N. J. Law, 273 (quoting Negotiable Instruments Act [P. L. 1902, p. 589] § 29); English v. Schlesinger, 105 N. Y. Supp. 989, 990, 55 Misc. Rep. 584 (quoting Negotiable Instrument Law [Laws 1897, p. 728, c. 612] § 55). First Nat. Bank v. Bickel, 137 S. W. 790, 792, 143 Ky. 754.

ACCOMMODATION TRAIN

An "accommodation train" is a train equipped to carry passengers as well as freight. In its arrangements, the safety of passengers is as much looked to as the carriage of freight. It usually has two or more coaches for passengers, and separate compartments or coaches for the races, and a baggage compartment or car, etc., and runs on a regular schedule, and subordinates its freight business to the passenger business so far as necessary to make connections with other passenger trains on its own line and those on connecting roads, and it stops opposite stations for the convenient ingress and egress of passengers. White v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 55 South. 593, 595, 99 Miss. 651; Thacker v. Same (Miss.) 55 South. 595.

ACCOMPLICE

At common law, an "accomplice" includes all participes criminis, whether they be principals in the first or second degree, or mere accessories before or after the fact. People v. Coffey, 119 Pac. 901, 903, 161 Cal. 423, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 704.

To constitute an "accomplice," one must be so connected with a crime that at common law he might himself have been convicted, either as the principal or as an accessory before the fact. People v. Bright, 96 N. E. 362, 365, 203 N. Y. 73, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 771.

An "accomplice," in relation to his use as a witness, means any criminal connection of the witness with the matter in trial, either as a principal, accomplice, accessory, receiver of stolen property, etc. Newton v. State, 188 S. W. 708, 713, 62 Tex. Cr. R. 622.

The word "accomplice," as used in the statute providing that a person may not be convicted of a crime on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, means an accomplice in the commission of the offense charged and under investigation. People v. Ruef, 114 Pac. 54, 70, 14 Cal. App. 576.

One of several equally concerned in the commission of a felony or one connected in some way with the crime charged. Boyd v. Commonwealth, 132 S. W. 423, 424, 141 Ky. 247.

One who knowingly, voluntarily, and with common intent with the principal offender unites in the commission of a crime is an "accomplice." An accessory after the fact is not an accomplice. State v. Phillips, 98 N. W. 171, 173, 18 S. D. 1, 5 Ann. Cas. 760 (quoting Whart. Cr. Ev. 440). One may be an "accomplice" by being present and joining in the criminal act, by aiding and abetting another in its commission, or advising and encouraging its commission; but knowledge and voluntary action are essential in order to impute guilt, as one may unconsciously assist in forwarding the criminal scheme without being an accomplice. State ex rel. Webb v. District Court, 95 Pac. 593, 597, 37 Mont. 191, 15 Ann. Cas. 743.

An "accomplice" is one who, with criminal intent, acts with others, and participates in the commission of a crime. Knowledge that a crime has been committed, and concealment of such knowledge, does not make one an accomplice, unless he aided or participated in the offense. State v. Dalton, 118 Pac. 829, 65 Wash. 663; Davis v. State, 130 S. W. 547, 549, 96 Ark. 7; Martin v. State, 83 S. W. 390, 392, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 29.

The general test to determine whether a witness is or is not an "accomplice," whose testimony must by the express provisions of Rev. Laws 1905, § 4744, be corroborated to warrant a conviction, is: Could he himself have been indicted for the offense, either as principal or accessory? And, if he could not, then he is not an accomplice. State v. Gordon, 117 N. W. 483, 484, 105 Minn. 217, 15 Ann. Cas. 897.

The term "accomplice," while ordinarily designating a witness, and not accused, includes all who participate in committing a crime, whether as principal, aider and abettor, or accessory before the fact; the test for determining whether one is an accomplice being whether he could be convicted as a principal, aider or abettor, or accessory before the fact, and, if he could not, he is not an accomplice. Levering v. Commonwealth, 117 S. W. 253, 257, 132 Ky. 666, 136 Am. St. Rep. 192, 19 Ann. Cas. 140.

The word "accomplice" includes principals and accessories, and all persons connected with the crime by an unlawful act or omission on their part transpiring either before, at the time, or after the commission of the offense, and whether or not they were present and participated in the commission of the crime or not. McCue v. State (Tex.) 103 S. W. 883, 885; Jones v. State, 129 S. W. 1118, 1119, 59 Tex. Cr. App. 559; Pace v. State, 124 S. W. 949, 952, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 90; Johnson v. State, 125 S. W. 16, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 244.

A person present at the commission of a crime, but who took no part therein, and entreated and commanded the person who committed it not to do so, is not an accomplice. Brinegar v. State, 118 N. W. 475, 476, 82 Neb. 558. Nor is one coerced, by fear of danger to life or limb, to join with another in the commission of a crime. Henderson v. State, 63 S. E. 535, 5 Ga. App. 495.

The mere presence of one when a crime is committed does not make him an "accomplice"; but to do so he must have knowingly, voluntarily, and with common intent united with the principal in the commission of the crime. Hicks v. State (Tenn.) 149 S. W. 1055, 1056; Bush v. State (Tex.) 151 S. W. 554.

One who merely overheard a brief portion of the conversation of persons about taking some one out of jail, which they subsequently did, afterwards killing him, but who was not a party to their enterprise and had no portion or part in it, was not an "accomplice," though, over his protest and against his wishes, they took from the house where he was working the gun with which they did the killing. Chandler v. State, 131 S. W. 598, 603, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 329.

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 79, defining an "accomplice" as one who is not present at the commission of an offense, but who, before the act is done, advises or encourages another to commit the offense, etc., in order to be an accomplice one must be in some way connected with the crime charged, it not sufficing that he may have been connected with a defendant in a prior transaction, even though violative of law; and hence mere participants with accused in a gambling game, concerning which he was charged with falsely testifying, were not accomplices. Warren v. State, 132 S. W. 136, 137, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 468.

The word "accomplice," in Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 781, requiring a corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice in order to convict, means a person who, either as a principal, accomplice, or accessory, is connected with a crime by unlawful act or omission transpiring either before, at the time, or after the commission of the offense, whether he was present and participated in the crime or not; and while, in misdemeanor cases, all parties are principals, a witness in a misdemeanor case may be an accomplice. Williams v. State, 110 S. W. 63, 64, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 396.

Though, in a strictly legal sense, there can be no accomplice in a misdemeanor case, there can be no conviction in such a case on the testimony of a confessed actor and participant with defendant in the crime, equally guilty with him, without other testimony than that of one who had no personal knowledge concerning defendant's participation; "accomplice" as used in Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 781, as to corroboration of accomplice's testimony, having a distinct and different meaning from its technical definition as given in Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 79, and including principals, accessories, and all persons who are particeps criminis and connected with the crime by unlawful act or omission transpiring before, at the time of, or after, commission of the offense, and whether such person was present or participating in the crime or not. Huffman v. State, 123 S. W. 593, 57 Tex. Cr. R. 399.

One jointly indicted with accused, but not connected with the commission of the offense, is not an "accomplice," within Cr. Code Prac. § 241, providing that a conviction cannot be had on the testimony of an accomplice, unless corroborated. Ochsner v. Commonwealth, 109 S. W. 326, 328, 128 Ky. 761, 33 Ky. Law Rep. 119.

Accessory after the fact

An accessory after the fact is not an "accomplice." Bradley v. State, 58 S. E. 1064, 1065, 2 Ga. App. 622.

Accessory before the fact

In Texas, there are no accessories before the fact defined as such; they being termed "accomplices." Strong v. State, 105 S. W. 785, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 133.

Detectives and officers

The purchaser of whisky sold in violation of the local option act, which declares that he is not an "accomplice," does not become such because he was a detective employed to ferret out violations of the act. Martner v. State, 84 S. W. 830, 831, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 424 (citing Steele v. State, 19 Tex. App. 425; O'Brien v. State, 6 Tex. App. 665; White's Ann. Pen. Code 1901, arts. 74, 79; Chenault v. State, 81 S. W. 971, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 351); Terry v. State, 79 S. W. 320, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 75.

Officers engaged in ascertaining whether an unlawful business was being carried on were not rendered incompetent to testify, as having procured the violation of law by soliciting an illegal sale of beer. State v. Gibbs, 123 N. W. 810, 811, 109 Minn. 247, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 449.

An "accomplice" is one who knowingly and voluntarily, with a common intent with the principal offender, unites with him to commit the crime, and one who was furnished money by the police to play at a crap game in order to procure evidence for a prosecution was not an accomplice of one prosecuted for maintaining the gaming table. State v. Lee, 128 S. W. 987, 994, 228 Mo. 480.

One who feigned participation in a larceny of ore which he was employed to watch, in order to assist in the detection of accused, was not an "accomplice." State v. Smith, 117 Pac. 19, 20, 33 Nev. 438.

Principal distinguished

A principal must either be present when the crime is committed, or he must do some act during the time of its commission which connects him with it. Parties who act together in the commission of an offense are principals. Where parties agree to commit an offense together, but do not act together, the one who actually commits it is the "principal," while the other, not present at the commission, and not in any way aiding in its commission, as by keeping watch or securing the safety of the principal, is an "accomplice." O'Quinn v. State, 115 S. W. 39, 44, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 18.

In abortion

The woman on whom the abortion was attempted to be committed is not an "accomplice," and corroboration of her testimony is not essential. State v. Stafford, 123 N. W. 167, 168, 145 Iowa, 285.

A sister of a woman upon whom an abortion was performed was not an "accomplice" whose uncorroborated testimony would not support a conviction, solely because, through sisterly affection, she went with her to the doctor's office, where she did not consent to the abortion, but did all in her power to prevent it. Greenwood v. State, 105 Pac. 371, 373, 8 Okl. Cr. 247.

In adultery

In a prosecution for adultery, the female with whom defendant is charged to have committed the offense is an "accomplice," on whose testimony defendant cannot be convicted unless corroborated so as to connect defendant with the offense charged, as required by law. State v. Brown (Iowa) 121 N. W. 513; Jackson v. State, 101 S. W. 807, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 220.

In bribery

An "accomplice" is an associate in the commission of a crime; a participator in the offense, whether as principal or accessory. Consequently one who did not advise or encourage the accused to receive a bribe, but who merely assisted in securing the money which should be paid to him with a view to exposing him, and who did as a matter of fact voluntarily expose the transaction, is not an "accomplice" in the crime. People v. Bunkers, 84 Pac. 364, 367, 2 Cal. App. 197.

Mere silence in the presence of a crime, or the mere failure to inform the officers of the law when one has learned of the commission of a crime, does not make one an "accomplice." On a prosecution for bribery, the charge being that defendant, a state senator, paid another senator a sum of money to vote for a certain bill, a witness testified that during the early part of the session of the Legislature defendant and other senators were together, when one of them suggested that they combine to make money by receiving money for the defeat or passage of bills, and that defendant so far acted on the suggestion as to make a memorandum of senators whom he thought would join such an arrangement, and that witness, after the matter had been discussed by the others for a few moments, left the room and did not return. Held, the witness was not an accomplice. Butt v. State, 98 S. W. 723, 727, 81 Ark. 173, 118 Am. St. Rep. 42.

Rem. & Bal. Code, § 2320, provides that every person who shall give, offer, or promise a reward to any person executing any of the functions of a public officer with intent to influence him with respect to his acts, shall be punished, etc., and section 2321 provides that every executive officer who shall ask or receive any reward on an agreement or understanding that his official acts shall be influenced thereby shall be punished, etc. Held, that where defendant, a chief of police, was indicted, under section 2321, for asking, accepting, and receiving a bribe from two others to influence his official action so as to permit the bribe givers to operate certain disorderly houses, it being charged that the three conspired to conduct such houses in violation of law, the bribers, not having conspired to bribe defendant and not being punishable under section 2321, were not "accomplices" of the defendant within the rule as to corroboration of accomplice testimony. State v. Wappenstein, 121 Pac. 989, 999, 67 Wash. 502.

In a prosecution for bribing a prospective witness in a robbery prosecution, in which accused was counsel for the defendant, a witness, who testified that accused gave him money and told him to give it to the person claimed to have been robbed, and not to be quite so sure who robbed him when the case was tried, was accused's "accomplice" if a crime was committed, so that accused could not be convicted on the accomplice's testimony, unless corroborated by some other evidence tending to connect him with the crime. People v. Kathan, 120 N. Y. Supp. 1096, 1099, 1100, 136 App. Div. 303.

Relator went to S., and engaged him in a conversation concerning H., who was a juror, stating that relator wanted to see H. to ascertain if he could do something for him with reference to a case he had coming up for trial. S. replied that H. was a square sort of a fellow, whereupon relator stated that he was willing to make it right with any of the boys who stayed by him, and S. then stated that he would not say anything to any one except H., that he would have to tell him. Held, that such facts did not indicate that S. agreed to act as relator's agent to communicate with H., but rather that he refused to be a party to relator's purpose to influence H., and that S. was therefore not an "accomplice." State ex rel. Webb v. District Court, 95 Pac. 593, 597, 37 Mont. 191, 15 Ann. Cas. 743.

A witness did not become an "accomplice" in a burglary through knowledge that the goods had been stolen, and through going with one of the burglars to get goods stolen in the burglary where the latter had placed them. State v. Dalton, 118 Pac. 829, 65 Wash. 663.

The fact that the proprietor of a barber shop which was burglarized and the owner of the building agreed not to take any steps toward a prosecution because of payments of money made to them by accused did not render them "accomplices." Davis v. State, 107 S. W. 855, 856, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 332.

Defendant advised another and his wife to burglarize a house, and pursuant thereto the husband broke into the house, and thereafter made arrangements whereby he and his wife drove to the house and got the goods; the wife holding the horse while her husband put the goods in the wagon. This burglary had been planned between the husband and wife for some time prior to its consummation. A few nights afterward the husband went to the house again and selected more goods, and on the next night brought them home. The goods were wet, and the wife assisted him in drying them, and she also put away some of the goods. The wife knew that the goods had been stolen. Held, that the wife was an "accomplice" of her husband in the transaction, within Code Cr. Proc. § 399, providing that a conviction cannot be had on an accomplice's testimony, unless corroborated. People v. Holden, 111 N. Y. Supp. 1019, 1020, 127 App. Div. 758.

In conspiracy

In a prosecution of a president of a union for conspiracy, a witness who was a member, and attended two meetings, and heard what accused there said, but did not participate in unlawful acts shown, was not an "accomplice." People v. Yannicola, 117 N. Y. Supp. 381, 133 App. Div. 885.

In gambling

Under the rule that an accomplice must unite in the commission of the crime and must be an associate therein, one participating in a gambling game operated by another in violation of Rev. Codes, § 8416, punishing one operating gambling games, is not an "accomplice." State v. Wakely, 117 Pac. 95, 99, 43 Mont. 427.

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 79, defining an "accomplice" as one who is not present at the commission of an offense, but who, before the act is done, advises or encourages another to commit the offense, etc., in order to be an accomplice one must be in some way connected with the crime charged, it not sufficing that he may have been connected with a defendant in a prior transaction, even though violative of law; and hence mere participants with accused in a gambling game, concerning which he was charged with falsely testifying, were not accomplices. Warren v. State, 132 S. W. 136, 137, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 468.

In homicide

A witness saw accused put strychnia in capsules, which she knew he intended to give to his wife to kill her, and saw her take them, knowing that they would kill her, but did not inform her of their contents, or take steps to prevent her taking them. Held, that the witness was not an "accomplice," not having advised or assisted in its commission, and occupying no relation to her which would make her a participant in the crime because of failure to endeavor to save her life. Levering v. Commonwealth, 117 S. W. 253, 257, 132 Ky. 666, 136 Am. St. Rep. 192, 19 Ann. Cas. 140.

The statute provides that every person who abets, procures, commands, or counsels any other person or persons to commit any crime shall be deemed an "accomplice" and equally guilty with the principal offender. Held, that where one actually inflicted a mortal wound, but another was present, abetting, procuring, commanding, or counseling him, the latter was an accomplice, and equally guilty. State v. Adams, 65 Atl. 510, 511, 6 Pennewill (Del.) 178.

In incest

An "accomplice" is one who unites in the commission of a crime and who participates in the criminality of the act, and a female with whom the offense of incest is committed by force and against her will is not an "accomplice," and her testimony does not require corroboration as a matter of law. Gaston v. State, 128 S. W. 1033, 1034, 95 Ark. 233.

A girl less than 16 years of age, who, under physical and moral coercion, has maintained incestuous relations with her father, is not an "accomplice" in the crime. Bridges v. State, 113 N. W. 1048, 1050, 80 Neb. 91.

If accused's illegitimate daughter voluntarily had intercourse with him, she was an "accomplice" to the crime of incest. Wadkins v. State, 124 S. W. 959, 961, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 110, 137 Am. St. Rep. 922, 21 Ann. Cas. 556.

If prosecutrix consented to sexual intercourse with a relative within the prohibited degree, she was an "accomplice" to the crime of incest. Skidmore v. State, 123 S. W. 1129, 57 Tex. Cr. R. 497, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 466.

In liquor sales and disorderly houses

A purchaser of spirituous liquor from one who sells it in violation of law participates in the unlawful sale and is therefore an "accomplice." State v. Ryan, 75 Atl. 869, 872, 1 Boyce (Del.) 223. But one who purchases liquor sold without the seller being licensed is not an "accomplice," and his testimony for the state is not to be received as that of an accomplice. State v. Wright, 133 S. W. 664, 152 Mo. App. 510.

The keeper of a disorderly house who enters into a criminal agreement with a public officer to pay certain money at stipulated times as a consideration for carrying on his business and selling liquor without a license is an "accomplice" within the meaning of the law; and, on the trial of the officer for that offense, it is not error to so instruct. State v. Rutzahn, 115 N. W. 759, 760, 81 Neb. 133, 129 Am. St. Rep. 675.

On the trial of a defendant charged with perjury in giving false testimony in a proceeding for naturalization of an alien, the applicant for citizenship is not an "accomplice" in such sense as to require the jury to be cautioned in respect to his testimony, where it does not appear that defendant gave the false testimony at the instigation of such applicant. Holmgren v. United States, 156 Fed. 439, 444, 84 C. C. A. 301 (quoting and adopting the definition in People v. Bolanger, 11 Pac. 799, 71 Cal. 17).

In a proceeding under Laws 1905, p. 1849, c. 689, § 7, making it a felony to take a false oath before a deputy state superintendent of elections, certain electors swore that they did not reside where defendant testified they resided before the deputy, and where they were falsely registered. Held, that they were not "accomplices" as to defendant, so as to need corroboration. People v. Ellenbogen, 99 N. Y. Supp. 897, 901, 114 App. Div. 182.

In rape

In a prosecution for rape committed on defendant's daughter while under the age of consent, a letter from her husband to defendant was introduced, which demanded that defendant transfer all his property to the husband and leave the country. Held, that neither the daughter nor her husband was an "accomplice," within the rule as to testimony of accomplices. Smith v. State, 100 S. W. 924, 926, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 137.

In receiving stolen goods

"The thief who steals property, and the person who afterwards receives it from him, knowing it to be stolen, are guilty of separate and distinct offenses, and, unless more than this be shown, neither is an 'accomplice' in the offense of the other." State v. Scott, 113 N. W. 758, 759, 136 Iowa, 152. See State v. Feinberg, 124 N. W. 208, 145 Iowa, 329; State v. Shapiro, 115 S. W. 1022, 1025, 216 Mo. 359.

Where the facts, considered together, were such as of necessity to carry notice to a witness, on a trial for burglary in which larceny was committed, that the property offered for sale by accused had been stolen, the witness, buying the property, was chargeable with knowledge that it had been stolen, and the fact that he denied such knowledge did not prevent him from being an "accomplice." Johnson v. State, 125 S. W. 16, 18, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 244.

ACCOMPLISH

ACCOMPLISH BY MEANS OF FORCE AND FEAR

"A robbery 'accomplished by means of force and fear' must have been accomplished 'against the will' of the person robbed." Hence an indictment, having charged that the robbery was "from the person and immediate presence of one R., and by means of force and fear, and by threatening to shoot and kill him," and that defendants feloniously took a certain sum from the possession of said R., was sufficient, and the insertion of the words "and against his will" was unnecessary and not prejudicial. State v. La Chall, 77 Pac. 3, 5, 28 Utah, 90 (citing State v. Patterson, 42 La. Ann. 934, 8 South. 529; People v. Riley, 75 Cal. 98, 16 Pac. 544).

ACCORD

Payment distinguished, see Payment.

The amendment by Rev. Civ. Code 1903, § 1177, of Code 1877, § 859, and of Comp. Laws 1887, § 3483, defining an "accord" to be an agreement to accept in extinction of an obligation something different from "or less than" that to which the person agreeing to accept is entitled, by striking the quoted words, in effect restored the common-law rule that no agreement to accept less than the amount to which one is entitled, where the payment is to be made in money, is a defense to suit to recover the amount of the original claim, and hence an agreement to accept $80 in satisfaction of a $180 debt is no defense to an action for the larger sum, less credits. Eggland v. South, 118 N. W. 719, 720, 22 S. D. 467.

ACCORD AND SATISFACTION

"Accord and satisfaction" is a method of discharging a cause of action by substituting an agreement in satisfaction thereof, and an execution of that agreement, and an accord, to discharge a cause of action, must be executed, which is the satisfaction and consists in the actual performance of the agreement of accord and acceptance of performance in satisfaction of the original cause of action, though where the accord, and not the performance thereof, is accepted in satisfaction of the demand, and the agreement to accept is based on a sufficient consideration, the demand is extinguished, and cannot be the foundation of a new action. Carter v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 119 S. W. 35, 36, 136 Mo. App. 719.

"Accord and satisfaction" is a new contract founded on a new consideration, possessing all the elements of a contract, and finally closes the matter covered by it; and, unless there is a well-understood compromise of any and all demands arising out of the transaction between the parties, there is no valid accord and satisfaction. Barrett v. Kern, 121 S. W. 774, 780, 141 Mo. App. 5.

An agreement between two parties to give and accept something in satisfaction of a right of action which one has against the other, which when performed is a bar to all actions on this account, in an "accord and satisfaction." Houston Bros. v. Wagner, 114 Pac. 1106, 1107, 28 Okl. 367.

To constitute an "accord and satisfaction," there must be a good consideration for and execution of the agreement, intention to settle claims admitted or in dispute, and mutuality of binding force. An agreement does not operate as an "accord and satisfaction" if there was fraud or a mutual mistake as to indebtedness recited in the agreement. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. v. Brooklyn City R. Co., 135 N. Y. Supp. 990, 1003, 151 App. Div. 465. The agreement must have been entered into by the parties understandingly and with unity of purpose. Matheney v. City of El Dorado, 109 Pac. 166, 167, 82 Kan. 720, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 980.

To constitute an "accord and satisfaction" in law, dependent upon the offer of the payment of a less sum than that claimed, it is necessary that the money should be offered in full satisfaction of the demand, and be accompanied by such acts or declarations as amount to a condition that if the money is accepted it is to be in full satisfaction, and be of such a character that the creditor is bound to understand such offer. Rose v. American Paper Co., 85 Atl. 354, 355, 83 N. J. Law, 707.

An "accord and satisfaction" under Rev. St. c. 84, § 59, providing that "no action shall be maintained on a demand settled by a creditor * * * in full discharge thereof by the receipt of money or other valuable consideration, however small," is an executed agreement whereby one gives and another receives, in satisfaction of a demand, liquidated or unliquidated, money or other valuable consideration, however small. To constitute an "accord and satisfaction," it is necessary that the money should be offered in satisfaction of the claim, and the offer accompanied with such acts and declarations as amount to a condition that acceptance shall satisfy the particular claim, and that the party to whom it is offered is bound to understand therefrom that, if he takes it, he takes it subject to such condition. Fuller v. Smith, 77 Atl. 706, 708, 107 Me. 161.

An agreement between two persons, one of whom has a right of action against the other, that the latter shall do or give, and the former accept, something in satisfaction of the right of action different from, and usually less than, what may be legally enforced, when executed and satisfaction has been made, is an "accord and satisfaction." Miller v. Electrical Supply & Construction Co., 103 Pac. 290, 291, 46 Colo. 221.

The receipt of money by a creditor, accompanied by a letter from the debtor stating the amount of his liability and its application on the amount the creditor claims to be due, without assenting to the debtor's claim, is not an "accord and satisfaction." Sampson v. Northwestern Nat. Life Ins. Co., 123 N. W. 302, 304, 85 Neb. 319.

An "accord and satisfaction" may be established by circumstances and conduct, and it is not essential that the debtor declare in terms, in making a tender, that it is in full payment of the claim. The silence of a debtor after he is notified that the creditor will not accept a tender in full payment, but will only credit it on account, may be considered in determining whether there was an "accord and satisfaction." Bahrenburg v. Conrad Schopp Fruit Co., 107 S. W. 440, 442, 128 Mo. App. 526.

A debtor, in contemplation of bankruptcy, offered his creditor 30 per cent. in settlement, and the creditor accepted the same and closed the account. Held an "accord and satisfaction." Melroy v. Kemmerer, 67 Atl. 699, 700, 218 Pa. 381, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1018, 120 Am. St. Rep. 888 (citing Ebert v. Johns, 55 Atl. 1064, 206 Pa. 395; Cumber v. Wane, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. *357; Fuller v. Kemp, 33 N. E. 1034, 138 N. Y. 231, 20 L. R. A. 785; Dawson v. Beall, 68 Ga. 328; Curtiss v. Martin, 20 Ill. 557, 578; Engbretson v. Selberling, 98 N. W. 319, 122 Iowa, 522, 64 L. R. A. 75, 101 Am. St. Rep. 279; Rice v. London & Northwest American Mort. Co., 72 N. W. 826, 70 Minn. 77; Pettigrew Mach. Co. v. Harmon, 45 Ark. 290).

Where the business of a partnership was the cultivation of rice, and one of the partners died before the maturity of the crop, and after the crop was harvested on demand of the executors of the deceased partner there was an equal division of the rice, but no undertaking to construe the contract or make a final settlement, such transaction did not amount to an "accord and satisfaction" which would estop the executors from denying that the survivor was entitled to one-half of the crop. Huger v. Cunningham, 56 S. E. 64, 67, 126 Ga. 684.

The fact that a county received dividends from the receiver of an insolvent bank in which the county's funds were deposited and credited the amount received against the amount due from the bank did not constitute an "accord and satisfaction" which would be a defense to the liability of sureties on the bank's bond to the county to secure such deposits. Johnson County v. Chamberlain Banking House, 113 N. W. 1055, 1056, 80 Neb. 96.

An agreement under which a creditor foregoes one half of his claim in consideration of the debtor paying the other half out of his wages to be earned in future is not an "accord and satisfaction" where it appears that the assignment of the wages from the debtor to the creditor was never presented to or accepted by the debtor's employer, who continued to pay the wages to the debtor after the execution of the paper as before. Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Marks, 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 310, 314.

Where an employer discharged an employe hired for a fixed term before the termination thereof, an acceptance by the employe of payment for what was due him up to the time of his discharge was not an "accord and satisfaction." Stewart & Co. v. Stephens, 67 S. E. 199, 201, 7 Ga. App. 453.

Consideration

Acceptance by a creditor on a liquidated demand of less than the entire amount is not an "accord and satisfaction," unless paid as a compromise of a demand disputed in good faith; but if there be a bona fide dispute as to the amount due, the dispute may be the subject of a compromise, so that payment of a specified sum may operate as a "satisfaction" of the entire claim. Jackson v. Security Mut. Life Ins. Co., 84 N. E. 198, 199, 233 Ill. 161 (citing and adopting Ostrander v. Scott, 43 N. E. 1089, 161 Ill. 339; Davidson v. Burke, 32 N. E. 614, 143 Ill. 139, 36 Am. St. Rep. 367; Fire Ins. Ass'n v. Wickham, 12 Sup. Ct. 84, 141 U. S. 564, 35 L. Ed. 860).

An agreement by a creditor to receive less than the amount of his debt cannot be pleaded as an "accord and satisfaction," unless it be actually executed by the payment of the money, or the giving of additional security, or the substitution of another debtor, or some other new consideration. Phinizy v. Bush, 59 S. E. 259, 265, 129 Ga. 479; Bowen v. E. A. Waxelbaum & Bro., 58 S. E. 784, 786, 2 Ga. App. 521.

An agreement by the terms of which one party agrees to pay the other a sum of money and each agrees to release the other from all obligations on a breach of contract of marriage is not enforceable as an "accord and satisfaction" against the party promising to pay, when the plaintiff shows no right nor advantage yielded up by reason of the agreement. Conard v. Bare, 29 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 153, 154.

Where coal of a certain grade is sold and delivered to a purchaser, and a liquidated indebtedness arises for the contract price, a settlement between the parties, whereby a portion of the purchase price is discharged by reason of the inferior quality of the coal, is a valid "accord and satisfaction," and supported by sufficient consideration. Missouri & Illinois Coal Co. v. Consolidated Coal Co. of St. Louis, 105 S. W. 682, 684, 127 Mo. App. 320.

Rev. Codes 1905, § 5269, provides that an "accord" is an agreement to accept in extinguishment of an obligation something different from or less than that which the person agreeing to accept is entitled to. Section 5270 declares that, though the parties to an accord are bound to execute it, it does not extinguish the obligation until it is fully executed, and section 5271 declares that acceptance by the creditor of the consideration of an accord extinguishes the obligation and is called "satisfaction." Held, that a computation of the amounts mutually due between the parties and an agreement that they should offset each other, though one sum was less than the other, did not constitute an "accord and satisfaction," in the absence of a showing that there was any consideration for the agreement or that it was executed, or that there was any dispute as to the amount due. Webster v. McLaren, 123 N. W. 395, 396, 19 N. D. 751.

Insurance claims

Plaintiff, the holder of a benefit certificate for $1,000 in defendant order on the life of her husband, received a draft drawn on defendant's treasurer for $796.64, on the back of which she indorsed and signed a receipt for such amount "in full under this certificate," "but I accept the above amount under protest, $796.64." Held, that such receipt did not constitute an "accord and satisfaction" of plaintiff's claim under the certificate as a matter of law. Mitterwallner v. Supreme Lodge, Knights and Ladies of the Golden Star, 95 N. Y. Supp. 1090, 1094, 109 App. Div. 70.

A release not under seal, given by a beneficiary in a mutual benefit certificate in consideration of receiving a part of the amount of the certificate, is a mere receipt in full of the society's liability, and the acceptance by the beneficiary thereof is a discharge only of so much of the debt as is equal in amount to the sum received. Farmers' & Mechanics' Life Ass'n v. Caine, 79 N. E. 956, 959, 224 Ill. 599.

In employer's liability insurance policies, the premium was based on the compensation to employes, and it was provided that if the compensation exceeded the approximate estimate in the schedule thereafter given, the employer should pay the additional premium earned, and if less, the insurance company should return the unearned premium. The insurance company requested of the employer a statement of the wages paid to employes during the year covered by the policies, which was furnished, showing that the full premiums due according to the policies had not been paid. On demand therefor the employer paid the additional premiums without dispute, and thereafter the insurance company claimed that there was a balance still due, and that the statement of wages was erroneous. Held, that no controversy having arisen at the time of the payment of the additional premiums, such payment did not operate as an "accord and satisfaction." New Amsterdam Casualty Co. v. Mesker, 106 S. W. 561, 565, 128 Mo. App. 183.

Retention of check

Where there was an honest dispute as to the amount due under a contract, and the owner sent a check to the contractor in full payment, and the contractor retained the check for several months, and then used it, there was an "accord and satisfaction." Pollcastro v. Pitske, 120 N. Y. Supp. 743, 744, 65 Misc. Rep. 524.

Where a voucher and letter showed that a check sent to a broker in payment of his commissions, was in full payment of the account, the retention of the check, unaccompanied by any explanation, operated as an "accord and satisfaction." Goodloe v. Empson Packing Co., 122 S. W. 771, 772, 145 Mo. App. 574.

A debtor sent the creditor a check, accompanied by a letter stating that the check was in full of account. The creditor's bookkeeper made out a statement of the account as shown by the creditor's books, and credited the check, leaving a balance due. He then took the statement to the debtor, stating that it showed the amount due and that the check had been credited, and requested a check for the balance. The debtor then stated that he did not owe anything, and renewed the statement when the bookkeeper stated that the check had been merely credited on account. Held not to justify an inference that the condition on which the check was sent was waived by the debtor, so as to prevent a retention of the check from being an "accord and satisfaction." Canton Union Coal Co. v. Parlin & Orendorff Co., 74 N. E. 143-145, 215 Ill. 244, 106 Am. St. Rep. 162.

The cashing by a creditor of a check containing the words "paid in full," signed by the debtor, is not an "accord and satisfaction," where there is no genuine dispute between the parties as to the amount due. Caravia v. Levy, 119 N. Y. Supp. 160, 161.

Where a debtor remits by mail a sum less than the amount due, but which he in good faith believes to be all that is due or claimed by the creditor, the fact that he marks the check upon the margin "In full to date," or in the account which he renders describes it as "Check to balance in full," does not constitute it a payment made in settlement of a disputed claim; and the acceptance of such check by the creditor is not an "accord and satisfaction." Canadian Fish Co. v. McShane, 114 N. W. 594, 595, 80 Neb. 551, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 443, 127 Am. St. Rep. 791.

The remittance of a check accompanied by a statement to the effect that it was for the correct balance, and that no more would be paid, followed by acceptance of the check, does not constitute an "accord and satisfaction." American Forwarding & Mercantile Co. v. Lindsay Chair Co., 129 Ill. App. 548, 550, 551.

Where one has an unliquidated demand and the debtor sends a check to his attorney with a receipt to be signed by the creditor, and the latter receives the check, though protesting that a much larger sum is due him, and signs a receipt under seal containing the stipulation that in consideration of the amount of the check he releases the creditor from all claims and demands whatsoever, the receiving and retaining of the sum offered and the signing of the receipt constitute a good "accord and satisfaction" binding on the creditor, though he entered on the receipt the letters "E. & O. E.," meaning "errors and omissions excepted." T. B. Redmond & Co. v. Atlanta & Birmingham Air Line Ry., 58 S. E. 874, 876, 129 Ga. 133.

Defendants purchased goods from plaintiffs by sample, delivery to be made in three allotments. The first allotment was received and used; but defendants, claiming that the goods were defective, refused to receive the other allotments, and sent a check for the amount due on the first allotment, which was to be in full satisfaction and settlement of all claims by them and of all disputes and matters between plaintiffs and defendants, and returned the rest of the goods that had been delivered. Plaintiffs accepted the check and credited the amount on defendants' account as part payment. Held, that there was a genuine and unquestioned dispute between the parties, and hence the acceptance and retention of the check constituted a complete "accord and satisfaction," since the acceptance of the check involved the acceptance of the conditions imposed. Schwartz v. Hirsch, 107 N. Y. Supp. 796, 798, 56 Misc. Rep. 618.

Where the buyer of rubber sent the sellers a check "in settlement" of the invoice, stating that the balance was ascertained under the salesman's warranty that the rubber would not shrink more than 40 per cent., the sellers' retention of the check was not an "accord and satisfaction," where they credited the buyer's account with the amount of the check and in acknowledging receipt thereof stated that a specified sum remained due, and demanded payment thereof; they denying, before and after receiving the check, that such warranty was made. Windmuller v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 107 N. Y. Supp. 1095, 1096, 123 App. Div. 424.

Cases of goods purchased of plaintiff by defendant having been delivered February 14, 1906, two of the cases were returned on the succeeding day as not the goods ordered. On May 29th defendant sent plaintiff a check on which he indorsed the words: "The amount of this check, $481, in payment of all bills to date." Plaintiff, on receiving the check, struck out the indorsement without notice to defendant, deposited the check to his credit, and collected the money. He also wrote a note to defendant, saying that defendant still owed $1.60 for interest and that he had credited the amount of the check against defendant's account, but said nothing as to the cases returned. Held, that such check constituted an "accord and satisfaction," relieving defendant from any liability for the goods returned and of all claims, except as to the $1.60 interest. Smith v. Bronstein, 107 N. Y. Supp. 765, 766.

Plaintiffs shipped eggs to defendant, pursuant to a sale to defendant's agent at an agreed price. Defendant refused to accept all the eggs, contending that the sale related only to eggs shipped from a certain point. Several letters and telegrams were interchanged, in which plaintiffs insisted that the sale included all eggs, and defendant refused to admit this, and offered to sell the eggs in dispute for plaintiff. This he finally did, and remitted the proceeds by letter, stating that the remittance was in full for the eggs in dispute. Plaintiffs retained the remittance. Held, that there was a bona fide dispute, so that plaintiff's acceptance of the money constituted an "accord and satisfaction." D. N. Lightfoot & Son v. Edward Hurd & Co., 88 S. W. 128, 129, 113 Mo. App. 612.

Under Revisal 1905, §§ 2337, 2338, providing that the certification of a check at the instance of the holder is equivalent to an acceptance, and discharges the maker and indorsers from liability thereon, an acceptance by certification of a check for a less sum than the amount due, and containing the statement that it is in full, is binding on the creditor, in the absence of fraud or other misconduct of the debtor. Drewry-Hughes Co. v. Davis, 66 S. E. 139, 151 N. C. 295.

Where a check for less amount than the contract price of certain corn sold was sent to the creditor without any condition as to acceptance, with a statement of a set-off that would balance the account, acceptance of the check did not constitute an "accord and satisfaction." McKinnon v. Holden, 123 N. W. 439, 440, 85 Neb. 406.

One of the essential requirements of an "accord and satisfaction" is that there be a meeting of minds between the parties. A buyer of a motor at an agreed price received, pursuant to an independent transaction, an auto starter which was defective. He sent to the seller a check for a part of the agreed price, accompanied by a letter stating that the auto starter was so defective that a new one had to be purchased, and that he was compelled to deduct the price of a new one from the price of the motor. The seller used the check, and within two days notified the buyer that he must pay the balance of the agreed price. Held, that there was no "accord and satisfaction," precluding a recovery for the balance. Bowery Bay Bldg. & Imp. Co. v. Rossiter, MacGovern & Co., 99 N. Y. Supp. 922, 923, 113 App. Div. 652 (citing Nassoi v. Tomlinson, 42 N. E. 715, 148 N. Y. 326, 51 Am. St. Rep. 695, Eames Vacuum Brake Co. v. Prosser, 51 N. E. 986, 157 N. Y. 289).

There was no "accord and satisfaction" where plaintiff, having done work for defendants, and returned to them a check for less than the amount claimed therefor, which they had sent plaintiff, and which had written on it "Account in full to date," its attorney called on them, saying that he had come to effect a settlement, whereupon they handed him the same check, saying that it belonged to plaintiff, and he took it away with him, together with the voucher, on which was written, "Corrections on this voucher not recognized; if not acceptable, return check"—but on the same day wrote them that he had forwarded the check to plaintiff, with instructions to credit defendant's account therewith, and that he awaited plaintiff's further advice about proceeding to collect the balance. Federal Printing Co. v. Garrick Press, 99 N. Y. Supp. 809, 810, 51 Misc. Rep. 56.

An employé deposited with his employer $150 to secure the faithful performance of his duties, and, on the termination of his employment, demanded its return, but the employer claimed a misappropriation of $83.66, and paid $66.34 by check, reciting that it was in full, less the money misappropriated. The check was retained and suit brought for the difference. Held, that the retention of the check did not constitute an "accord and satisfaction," as the employer yielded no part of his claim and suffered no detriment by paying only what he admitted to be due. Demeules v. Jewel Tea Co., 114 N. W. 733, 734, 103 Minn. 150, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 954, 123 Am. St. Rep. 315.

Defendants owed a mortgage on which a balance of $78,000 was due, which also provided for payments in installments of $7,000 a year. Defendants, on or about the date the balance matured, sent plaintiffs a check for $7,000, "being installment of principal under terms of mortgage due June 27, 1907." Plaintiffs stated that they would apply it to the payment in full of balance of the mortgage, but insisted that the entire balance was due and should be paid. Held; that the payment was for an installment of the principal only, and did not, therefore, constitute an "accord and satisfaction." McDonald v. Potter, 107 N. Y. Supp. 915, 57 Misc. Rep. 206.

Satisfaction of entire debt

Payment of a part of a demand entirely liquidated is not a legal "satisfaction" of the whole debt, although the creditor receives the smaller sum in full discharge of the full demand, and gives a receipt accordingly. Gussow v. Beineson, 68 A. 907, 76 N. J. Law, 209; Snow v. Griesheimer, 77 N. E. 110, 111, 220 Ill. 106; Nixon v. Kiddy, 66 S. E. 500, 501, 66 W. Va. 355; Morrill v. Baggott, 57 Ill. App. 530, 533; Dorman v. Arkin, 120 N. Y. Supp. 757, 758.

Acceptance of an amount to which a party is clearly entitled does not constitute an "accord and satisfaction" where there is no claim of facts showing an accord and satisfaction under Civ. Code, § 1180, providing that part performance, when expressly accepted in writing in satisfaction, extinguishes the obligation. Chrystal v. Gerlach, 125 N. W. 633, 637, 25 S. D. 128.

Where a claim is unliquidated or in dispute, and the creditor has tendered a less sum than is claimed upon the condition that if it be accepted it must be in entire satisfaction of his claim, his acceptance of the claim is an "accord and satisfaction." Hillestad v. Lee, 97 N. W. 1055, 1056, 91 Minn. 335 (citing Marlon v. Heimbach, 64 N. W. 386, 62 Minn. 215); Freeman v. Tiffany Studios, 113 N. Y. Supp. 64, 65, 128 App. Div. 868; Frye v. Hubbell, 68 Atl. 325, 328, 74 N. H. 358, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1197; Canton Union Coal Co. v. Parlin & Orendorff Co., 74 N. E. 143-145, 215 Ill. 244, 106 Am. St. Rep. 162.

A contract for the sale of a tract of land bound the purchaser to pay a specified sum per acre, according to the amount of land found by a survey. The contract also provided that the deed of the land should be left at a certain bank to be delivered when possession was given and the residue of the purchase price paid. Upon the completion of the survey, the purchaser computed the amount due, and in payment thereof deposited with the bank certain notes which he held against the vendor computing interest up to the time of deposit, and also deposited the balance of the purchase price, and received from the bank the deed. Subsequently, on meeting the purchaser, and being informed of the amount deposited, the vendor disputed the purchaser's calculation, but shortly thereafter he drew from the bank the money to his credit and received the notes. Held, that the act of the purchaser in depositing the notes and the money was a tender in full of the amount due under the contract, and the acceptance by the vendor of such amount by receiving it from the bank was a settlement of the entire claim, and operated as a "satisfaction" thereof which he could not dispute, even though the amount so accepted was less than he was entitled to. Carter v. Carter, 107 S. W. 467, 468, 129 Mo. App. 467.

ACCORDING TO

ACCORDING TO THE COURSE OF COMMON LAW

The phrase "according to the course of the common law," as interpreted by text-writers and judges, means a judicial determination of a controversy after due notice to the interested parties and an opportunity given to be heard. State ex rel. Engelhard v. Weber, 105 N. W. 490, 492, 96 Minn. 422, 113 Am. St. Rep. 630 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1331).

ACCORDING TO THE ESTABLISHED GRADE

An ordinance providing for the curbing of a street "according to the established grade" refers to the grade previously established, and special tax bills issued for the work are not invalid on the ground that the matter of the grade is left to the city engineer. City of Excelsior Springs v. Ettenson, 96 S. W. 701, 704, 120 Mo. App. 215.

ACCORDING TO THE GRADE

Code, § 785, provides that when improvements have been made on a lot "according to the grade" of the street on which it abuts, and such grade is thereafter changed so as to damage such property, the city shall pay the owner the amount of such damage. Held, that the improvement of a lot "according to the grade" of the adjacent street did not require that the foundations of the building erected thereon should be exactly at grade, or at any invariable elevation above or below it, but that when the building was constructed with reference to the grade of the street, plaintiff was entitled to recover damages sustained to the property by a subsequent change of the grade. Stevens v. City of Cedar Rapids, 103 N. W. 363, 128 Iowa, 227.

ACCORDING TO LAW

An affidavit filed under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 8351, making any person, not being licensed under the laws of the state, who shall sell spirituous liquors, guilty of a misdemeanor, alleging that accused unlawfully sold beer, not then having a license to sell liquors "according to" the laws of the state, was not defective for using the words quoted, instead of the word "under," as used in the statute; the affidavit being sufficient to inform accused of the offense charged. The phrases "according to" the laws, and "under" the laws, may not be in every sense synonymous; but their meaning, as used in this connection, is so far identical as fully to meet the requirements of good criminal pleading. Skelton v. State, 89 N. E. 860, 861, 173 Ind. 462.

A claim is proved "according to law" when it is proven duly, regularly, lawfully, etc. A claim evidenced by a final decree in equity is a claim proved "according to law," within the statute providing that, if any personal representative refuses to pay over what he has in his hands to a creditor of decedent whose claims have been proved according to law, etc., he may be decreed guilty of unfaithful administration, so that suit may be brought on his bond. Williams v. Starkweather, 66 Atl. 67, 69, 28 R. I. 145.

Where, on appeal from the board of commissioners in drainage proceedings, the court refused to confirm the report and referred the case back to the commissioners to proceed "according to law," pending which the statute conferring jurisdiction was repealed without a saving clause, the order of the commissioners in dismissing the proceedings constituted proceeding "according to law" in accordance with the court's direction. Zintsmaster v. Aiken, 90 N. E. 82, 173 Ind. 269.

An order in favor of judgment creditors that the sheriff proceed to cause the lands to be appraised, advertised, and sold "according to law" would be construed to mean such a sale as the plaintiffs and the other judgment creditor defendants had the right to demand, and that means a sale of the interest their debtor had in the land. Jewett v. Feldheiser, 67 N. E. 1072, 1074, 68 Ohio St. 523.

Under Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 93, §§ 36, 341, declaring that all acts done by any executor "according to law," before any revocation of his letters, shall be valid, and providing that, on the court deciding against the probate of a will, the letters testamentary shall be revoked, and the power of the party under the letters shall cease, the power of an executor continues, notwithstanding the actual filing of a caveat to revoke the probate of the will, and a sale by an executor under a power in the will, made before the filing of the caveat, though not ratified until thereafter, is valid; such being an "act done according to law." Pacy v. Cosgrove's Ex'r, 77 Atl. 1114, 1117, 113 Md. 315.

ACCOUNT (In Commercial Law)

The word "account" has various meanings, and is used in a variety of ways and senses; an account arises out of contract or some fiduciary relation. Its ordinary commercial usage is to refer to a claim or demand growing out of the sale of goods, performance of services, and the like. When used alone, without words of limitation, extension, qualification, or explanation, it is sometimes equivalent to the word "claim" or "demand," when referring to an indebtedness arising out of contract or some fiduciary relation. Donley v. Bailey, 110 Pac. 65, 68, 48 Colo. 373.

The word "account" has no clearly defined meaning. In its primary meaning, an "account" is some matter of debt or credit, or of a demand in the nature of a debt or credit, between the parties, arising out of a contract or fiduciary relation, or from some duty imposed by law, and is not required to be in any particular form, or necessarily to contain detailed information. The word is flexible in meaning, depending somewhat on the surrounding circumstances and connection in which it is used. It may include no more than a list or catalogue of items, whether of debts or credits. State v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 92 N. E. 814, 832, 246 Ill. 188; Sharp v. Zeller, 38 South. 449, 451, 114 La. 549 (quoting and adopting definition in Bouv. Law Dict., Rawle's Revision).

"The word 'account' has no inflexible technical meaning, being defined by Webster to mean a registry of pecuniary transactions, a written or printed statement of business dealings of debits and credits, and also of other things subjected to a reckoning or review" (quoting and adopting Preston Nat. Bank of Detroit v. George T. Smith Middlings Purifier Co., 60 N. W. 981, 102 Mich. 462). "An 'account' is a list or statement of monetary transactions, such as payments, losses, sales, debits, credits, etc., in most cases showing a balance or result of comparison between items of an opposite nature; e. g., receipts and payments." Fruitig v. Trafion, 83 Pac. 70, 71, 2 Cal. App. 47 (quoting and adopting Purvis v. Kroner, 23 Pac. 260, 18 Or. 414, and citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 86).

"The primary idea of 'account'—'computatio'—whether we look to the proceedings of courts of law or equity, is some matter of debt and credit, or demands in the nature of debt and credit, between parties." By commercial metonymy, it may describe the business or dealings between parties which require the keeping of an "account" thereof. By the Century Dictionary it is defined as a course of business dealings or relations requiring the keeping of records. It has been said that it has no defined legal meaning; that it has various meanings and shades of meaning, and is used in various ways, having a wide and varied signification without inflexible technical meaning. Britton v. Marks, 93 N. Y. Supp. 828, 829, 105 App. Div. 85 (quoting and adopting definition in Whitwell v. Willard, 42 Mass. [1 Metc.] 216, 217, and citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 86).

A claim for money paid a physician for services to a decedent, and for money paid for an invalid chair for his use, is an "account" within the six-year statute as to accounts. Hildebrand v. Kinney, 87 N. E. 832, 834, 172 Ind. 447, 19 Ann. Cas. 788.

An "account" which may be referred under Code Civ. Proc. § 282, is an account in the ordinary acceptation of that term—that is, charges and credits between parties—and hence an action against a county for breach of a contract to share penalties recovered for listing property omitted from taxation is not referable. Pierson v. Minnehaha County, 134 N. W. 212, 217, 28 S. D. 534, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 261.

An assignment by a trustee in bankruptcy of all of the uncollected accounts and the books containing same belonging to said estate does not transfer a right of action against a carrier for injuries by a delay in a shipment as the word "account," as used, means a claim for goods sold or services rendered, and it will also be presumed from the fact that the trustee received but $35 for the property transferred, and the claim against the carrier amounted to $1,151, that it was not intended to transfer such claim. Blue Grass Canning Co.'s Assignee v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. (Ky.) 119 S. W. 769, 770.

As debt or demand

Under Rev. St. 1908, § 3162, providing that creditors shall be allowed to receive interest, when there is no agreement as to the rate thereof, at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum on money due on "account" from the date when the same became due, the claim of a broker of a contract sum for finding a lessee of property is within the term "account." Donley v. Bailey, 110 Pac. 65, 68, 48 Colo. 373.

The word "account," in Code Civ. Proc. § 454, providing that the items of an account need not be set forth in a pleading, but the party relying thereon must furnish the same to the other party on demand, includes a claim for work and materials for the construction of a vessel. Jensen v. Dorr, 116 Pac. 553, 555, 159 Cal. 742.

Storage accounts against whisky in bond are assessable as "accounts," under Ky. St. § 4058, requiring accounts to be listed for assessment; a taxable "account" being an existing enforceable demand not evidenced by a writing signed by the person to be charged, arising out of a contract, express or implied, or enforceable against property of value, and the fact that the account is not enforceable or matured when the tax is assessed being immaterial, if it has an existing value. Commonwealth v. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co., 136 S. W. 1032, 1039, 143 Ky. 314.

Manner of keeping

The law does not require an "account" to be kept in any particular language. Books of account, in order to be admissible in evidence, are not required to be in any particular language, or to conform to any particular system of bookkeeping, so long as they conform to the provisions of the statute regulating the reception of such books in evidence. Cather v. Damerell, 99 N. W. 35, 36, 4 Neb. (Unof.) 490.

An "account" by an agent of moneys coming into his hands belonging to the principal for disbursement, in order to satisfy the agent's duty to account, must consist of a detailed statement. Muir v. Kalamazoo Corset Co., 119 N. W. 589, 592, 155 Mich. 441.

An "account" has been defined as a written statement of pecuniary transactions; a detailed statement of demands in the nature of debit and credit between parties, arising out of contract or some fiduciary relation. 1 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law (2d Ed.) p. 434. Another text-book says an "account" is no more than a list of items, whether debits or credits; an exhibit of charges and credits growing out of mutual dealings presented in such form as to facilitate the determination of the balance due by simple calculation; that the term has no clearly defined legal meaning, but the primary idea is that of debit and credit. 1 Cyc. p. 362. The conclusion from these definitions is that giving the dates of various transactions is not indispensable to an account, though dates are usually affixed in stating a bill of debits and credits. Kneisley Lumber Co. v. Edward B. Stoddard Co., 88 S. W. 774, 779, 113 Mo. App. 306.

Number of items

The term "account" covers any item of indebtedness by contract, express or implied. Deas v. Self Bros., 51 South. 735, 736, 165 Ala. 225.

As paper containing statement

A monthly statement of account, showing charges, credits, and the balance due, constitutes an account," within the meaning of Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 368. Wills v. Mooney-Mueller Drug Co. (Ind. App.) 97 N. E. 449, 450.

An "account" is a statement of the receipts and payments of an executor, administrator, or other trustee of the estate confided to him. Mersereau v. Bennett, 115 N. Y. Supp. 20, 22, 62 Misc. Rep. 356.

Claims not founded on contract

A claim for damages resulting from personal injuries is in no sense an "account" made up of items, within Comp. Laws 1897, § 2754, providing that every account against a village shall exhibit in detail all the items making up the amount claimed and the true date of each. Hunter v. Village of Ithaca, 97 N. W. 712, 713, 135 Mich. 281.

As merchants' accounts

"Accounts," "claims," and "debts" belonging to a mercantile business are not ordinarily used to embrace money in bank, but to designate the accounts, claims, and debts against customers. Wyatt v. Norris, 66 S. E. 1016, 1017, 66 W. Va. 667.

ACCOUNT (Action Of)

An action to recover the amount of certain assessments made by a casualty association against a member is not an "action on account" between the parties, authorizing a bill of particulars. Stone v. Hudson Val. Ry. Co., 95 N. Y. Supp. 220, 221, 47 Misc. Rep. 5.

A suit before a justice to recover usurious interest on three separate loans is not a "suit on account" in which, under Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 4312, the correctness of the amount being duly verified and not denied on oath, the court could properly direct a verdict for plaintiff. American Nat. Bank of Tishomingo v. Roberts, 116 Pac. 774, 775, 29 Okl. 221.

ACCOUNT CURRENT

"An 'account current' is an open or running account between two or more parties, or an account which contains items between the parties from which the balance due to one of them is or can be ascertained, from which it follows that such an account comes under the terms of an open account in so far as it is running, unsettled, or unclosed." Where supplies of coal for a vessel were ordered and delivered at different times, a bill being rendered after each delivery, the several charges do not constitute a running account, but each constitutes a separate and distinct cause of action, and to entitle the seller to a lien for any item under the New York statute notice thereof must have been filed within 30 days after such item was furnished, or quit to enforce the lien must have been instituted within that time. The Golden Rod, 153 Fed. 171, 173, 82 C. C. A. 345 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Cyc. p. 363).

ACCOUNT FOR

Laws 1893, p. 136, entitled "An act to compel custodians of public funds to 'account for' interest on such funds under their control," and providing that such custodians shall be entitled to retain 25 per cent. of the interest on such funds as extra compensation for their duties in making the funds bear interest, which they are required to do, is invalid in so far as such provision in favor of the custodians is concerned, on the ground that it is not expressed in the title. The words "to account for" in the title, do not necessarily mean to pay over. City of Chicago v. Wolf, 77 N. E. 414-416, 221 Ill. 130.

ACCOUNT FOR SERVICES

The phrase "account for services," as used in the mechanic's lien law (Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 3339b), contemplates that the account to be filed should embrace some reference to the property on which labor and services were performed, and the amount due for the same. Merchants' & Planters' Bank v. Hollis, 84 S. W. 269, 270, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 479.

ACCOUNT OF

See On Account of.

ACCOUNT RENDERED

An account rendered is an "account stated" when its correctness is expressly or impliedly assented to. To constitute an "account stated," the debtor and creditor must mutually agree as to the allowance or disallowance of their respective claims, and there must be proof of their express or implied assent to the account rendered before one may not impeach it except for fraud or mistake. Carlisle v. Norris, 129 N. Y. Supp. 585, 587, 144 App. Div. 690.

An "account rendered" is one drawn up in form and delivered by the creditor to the debtor as an exhibition of the creditor's demand, and is not the less an account because it starts with a balance claimed, and does not consist of distinct items. Little v. McClain, 118 N. Y. Supp. 916, 918, 134 App. Div. 197.

ACCOUNT STATED

An "account stated" is, in effect, an admission of indebtedness. Staggs & Conrad v. St. Jean, 74 Pac. 740, 741, 29 Mont. 288.

An "account stated" is an acknowledgment of an existing condition of liability of the parties, from which the law implies a promise to pay the balance thus acknowledged to be due; the words "stated" and "settled," as applied to accounts, being sometimes used as synonymous. State v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 92 N. E. 814, 837, 246 Ill. 188.

An "account stated" is an agreement between persons who have had previous transactions, fixing the amount due in respect thereto, and a promise to pay the balance. Borders v. Gay, 65 S. E. 788, 6 Ga. App. 734; Allen-West Commission Co. v. Hudgins, 86 S. W. 289, 291, 74 Ark. 468.

"Open account" is used in opposition to "account stated," wherein the account is closed by the assent to its correctness by the party charged. An "account stated" is one consisting of many items based on agreements as to each item as to the price and time of payment. Wroton Grain & Lumber Co. v. Mineola Box Mfg. Co. (Tex.) 95 S. W. 744, 745 (citing McCamant v. Batsell, 59 Tex. 363; Abb. Law Dict.; Whittlesey v. Spofford, 47 Tex. 18).

To constitute an "account stated," there must be proof that there was an account, that either the account in full or a summary thereof, or the balance due, or claimed to be due, was actually rendered or came into the possession or knowledge of the party sought to be charged, and that such party, either expressly or by long acquiescence therein, admitted the amount claimed to be due and expressly or impliedly promised to pay the same. Joshua Hendy Iron Works v. Brenne-man, 185 Fed. 183, 188.

To make an "account stated," the indebtedness must refer to a subsisting debt, and there must be a mutual examination of the account, a balance struck, and an agreement that the balance is correct and will be paid; a party relying thereon being required to prove that the account was presented, and by mutual agreement it was accepted as correct, and that the debtor promised to pay the amount so stated. McAvelgh v. Pelham Park R. Co., 120 N. Y. Supp. 102, 103; Doubleday, Page & Co. v. Shumaker, 113 N. Y. Supp. 83, 87, 60 Misc. Rep. 227; Charlesworth v. Whitlow, Lake & Co., 85 S. W. 423, 74 Ark. 277 (citing Anderson, Law Dict. pp. 16, 17).

It is not necessary that an acknowledgment of the correctness of an account, to constitute an account stated, should be either in writing or made in express words, since an "account stated" is an account rendered by one to another showing a balance due and an acknowledgment of such indebtedness by the debtor either expressly or by failure to deny the account within a reasonable time. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Berkeley Springs & P. R. Co., 168 Fed. 770, 775; Alexander v. Scott, 129 S. W. 991, 994, 150 Mo. App. 213.

In an action upon the bond of a town treasurer to recover an amount shown as in his hands by reports made by him, interest is properly allowed upon the ground that such reports constituted an "account stated." Town of Cicero v. Grisko, 144 Ill. App. 562.

The presentation by a city officer of his accounts to an auditing board does not create an account stated between the city and the officer, since an "account stated" arises from an agreement of the parties, and an auditing board is without power to contract for the city. City of Syracuse v. Roscoe, 123 N. Y. Supp. 403, 410, 66 Misc. Rep. 317.

A stipulation that on a specified date there was an open account between plaintiff and defendant, showing credits to plaintiff for trucking done for defendant to the amount of $364.65, and that on that date defendant debited plaintiff's account with an equal sum, did not amount to an "account stated." Export Trucking Co. v. G. W. Sheldon & Co., 119 N. Y. Supp. 209, 210.

Acquiescence or silence as implying

An "account stated" is an account in writing examined and accepted by both parties, which acceptance need not be expressed, but may be implied from the circumstances. Leinbach v. Wolle, 61 Atl. 248, 211 Pa. 629 (quoting Story, Eq. Jur. § 526).

An "account stated" rests upon a promise to pay, expressed or implied, and where liability had been long and persistently denied on the ground that the indebtedness, whatever it was, had been satisfied by a subsequent transfer of property, the failure of the person charged to object to the correctness of a statement of account sent him, or to make any reply, does not imply a promise to pay, or convert the account into an "account stated." Columbia River Packing Co. v. Tallant, 133 Fed. 990, 994.

An "account stated" cannot be based on bills for goods sold, made out to defendant long after the sale of the goods to a third person, merely because defendant retained them without objection, especially where bills covering the same claims had been rendered to the purchaser at the time of the transactions. Brush & Stephens Co. v. Ross, 99 N. Y. Supp. 796, 797, 51 Misc. Rep. 44.

Where a customer of a broker protests against overcharges of interest whenever accounts are rendered to him, such "accounts rendered" will not be presumed to have become "accounts stated." Lowenstein v. Bache, 41 Pa. Super. Ct. 552, 556.

Where a repairer renders accounts for the work done and materials furnished, and the owner of the vessels accepts the accounts and uses them to obtain its pay from the government, to which they were chartered, upon assurances of correctness, and an examination of the accounts by the agents of the government follows, the "accounts" will be deemed "stated" between the parties, and a recovery for the full amount allowed without reduction for a commission claimed by the respondent. Morse Dry Dock & Repair Co. v. Munson S. S. Line, 155 Fed. 150, 160.

Balance

An "account stated" exists where an account is rendered by one person to another, showing a balance due from the one to the other, and the balance is acknowledged to be due by the person against whom it appears, or where persons who have previously transacted agree upon the balance due from one to the other. Johnson v. Gallatin Valley Milling Co., 98 Pac. 883, 884, 38 Mont. 83; Western Newspaper Union v. Segerstrom Piano Mfg. Co., 136 N. W. 752, 754, 118 Minn. 230.

Conclusiveness

An instrument which is the result of an agreement relating to past transactions, acknowledging an indebtedness and promising to pay it, is, in effect, an "account stated," on which an action may be based, and, in the absence of fraud, error, or mistake in its execution, is conclusive between the parties. Noyes v. Young, 79 Pac. 1063, 1065, 32 Mont. 226.

Mutual demands required

An "account stated" must be based upon previous dealings and transactions between the parties, and while it is not necessary, in order to support a count upon account stated, to show the nature of the original debt, or to prove the specific items constituting the account (Jacksonville, M. P. Ry. & Nav. Co. v. Warriner, 35 Fla. 197, 16 South. 898), it must appear that at the time of the accounting there had been previous transactions and dealings between the parties of and concerning which an account was stated. Daytona Bridge Co. v. Bond, 36 South. 445, 447, 47 Fla. 136.

An "account stated" is not created by the mere written demand by one person on another, who acknowledges his liability and agrees to pay the demand, which may have grown out of dealings with a third party, for which the party against which the demand is preferred may believe himself liable, but can be created only where the demand is based upon antecedent transactions between the parties, out of which the relation of debtor and creditor has arisen. Fisse v. Blähke, 105 S. W. 689, 692, 127 Mo. App. 422 (citing Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. B. F. Coombs & Bro. Commission Co., 71 Mo. App. 299; Lockwood v. Thorne, 11 N. Y. 170, 62 Am. Dec. 81; Bambrick v. Simms, 14 S. W. 935, 102 Mo. 158; Stenton v. Jerome, 54 N. Y. 480; Austin v. Wilson, 11 N. Y. Supp. 565; Vanbebbber v. Plunkett, 38 Pac. 707, 26 Or. 562, 27 L. R. A. 811).

An "account stated" will be sufficient if the accounts are all on one side, providing the amount is agreed to by the parties. W. F. Parker & Son v. Clemons, 68 Atl. 646, 647, 80 Vt. 521.

An "account stated" may consist of a single item. Stein v. Stein, 125 N. Y. Supp. 244, 245, 140 App. Div. 306.

To constitute an "account stated," it is not necessary that there should be mutual accounts; but if one party holds an account against the other showing the amount due, and the other party agrees to it and promises, either expressly or impliedly, to pay it, there is an account stated. Jasper Trust Co. v. Lampkin, 50 South. 337, 338, 162 Ala. 388, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1237, 136 Am. St. Rep. 33.

New promise or obligation implied

An "account stated" involves a promise, express or implied, to pay a real indebtedness agreed upon as due. The consideration which places such promise on the plane of a contract is the agreement of one party, for the agreement of the other, that a certain amount, and that only, is due on the matters embraced in the settlement, wherefrom the law raises a new obligation on the part of the one against whom the balance stands, to pay that balance. Ivy Coal & Coke Co. v. Long, 36 South. 722, 724, 139 Ala. 535.

"An 'account stated' is an account balanced and rendered, with an assent to the balance, express or implied; so that the demand is essentially the same as if a promissory note had been given for the balance." The cause of action upon an account stated is based entirely upon an agreement that the amount sought to be recovered was found to be due after a mutual adjustment of the accounts between the parties, and that there was then either an express or implied promise to pay it. The right to a recovery depends in no way upon the obligation originally created when the items of indebtedness arose, and for that reason it is unnecessary in such an action to set forth in the complaint or prove upon the trial the subject-matter of the original debt. Hall v. New York Brick & Paving Co., 88 N. Y. Supp. 582, 583, 95 App. Div. 371 (quoting Volkening v. De Graaf, 81 N. Y. 268); Fox v. Patachnikoff, 132 N. Y. Supp. 840, 841, 75 Misc. Rep. 113; Vernon v. English, 124 N. Y. Supp. 675, 676.

An "account stated" is an agreed balance of accounts, and implies an admission that the account is correct and that the balance is due, and it establishes prima facie the accuracy of the items without other proof, and is a new contract on which an action lies. Vance v. Supreme Lodge of Fraternal Brotherhood, 114 Pac. 83, 85, 15 Cal. App. 178.

Rendering as creating

An "account rendered" becomes an "account stated" only when it has been examined, and the balance admitted, without having been paid. McGraw v. Traders' Nat. Bank, 63 S. E. 398, 400, 64 W. Va. 509.

An "account rendered" becomes an "account stated" when its correctness is assented to, which assent may be either express or implied, and may exist when one party presents an account to another which the other retains without making objection within a reasonable time. Little v. McClain, 118 N. Y. S. 916, 919, 134 App. Div. 197. It then becomes subject to impeachment only for fraud or mistake. Gillett v. Chavez, 78 Pac. 68, 72, 12 N. M. 353.

Tort claim

An unliquidated claim for a tort is not provable as an "account stated" upon the theory that the defendant promised to settle the tort at a stipulated sum; the doctrine of account stated applying solely to mercantile transactions, where, if an account is rendered by one person to another, showing a balance due, the indebtedness thus expressed is acknowledged by the person against whom the balance appears. Pudas v. Mattola (Mich.) 138 N. W. 1052, 1053.

ACCOUNTING OFFICER

The board of public works of the city of Indianapolis was an "accounting officer," for the purpose of allowing claims against the city for repairing streets, within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 2586, imposing a penalty on one who knowingly makes or presents for payment to the treasurer or other accounting officer of a city any false claim, etc., for the purpose of procuring its allowance out of the city treasury, though the city comptroller could, in its discretion, refuse to approve warrants issued by the board; it being necessary for the claimant to first present his claim to the board for allowance, so that the willful presentation to it of a false claim for work done in repairing streets, for the purpose of procuring its allowance against the city, was an offense within the statute. Brunaugh v. State, 90 N. E. 1019, 1021, 173 Ind. 483.

ACCOUNTS RECEIVABLE

"Accounts receivable" of a debtor are amounts owing him on open account. National Bank of Newport, N. Y., v. National Herkimer County Bank of Little Falls, 32 Sup. Ct. 633, 635, 225 U. S. 178, 56 L. Ed. 1042.

ACCRETION

To land

"Accretion" is the gradual and imperceptible accumulation of land on the bank of a water course or body of water. McCoy v. Paxton (Iowa) 135 N. W. 1091, 1092.

"Accretion," generally speaking, is the product of gradual and imperceptible deposit on the shore of earth, sand, or sediment, brought by contiguous waters, whether resulting from natural or artificial causes, or both combined." Western Pac. Ry. Co. v. Southern Pac. Co., 151 Fed. 376, 896, 80 C. C. A. 606.

"Accretion" is the increase or growth of property by external accessions as by alluvium naturally added to land situated on the bank of a river, or on the seashore; "alluvium" is applied to the most recent sedimentary deposits, such as occur in the valleys of large rivers, an imperceptible deposit usually of mingled sand and mud resulting from the action of fluvial currents; and the term "reliction" is applied to land made by the gradual and imperceptible withdrawal of the water by which it was covered. Wilson v. Watson, 138 S. W. 283, 284, 144 Ky. 352, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 774.

"Accretion" is the process of gradual and imperceptible addition to riparian land, made by water to which the land is contiguous, and the addition is imperceptible if its progress is not perceptible, although the fact of the addition may be perceptible after a long lapse of time. In re Broadway in Borough of the Bronx, 122 N. Y. Supp. 281, 283, 137 App. Div. 652.

An "accretion" to land is the imperceptible increase thereto on the bank of a river by alluvion, occasioned by the washing up of sand or earth, or by dereliction, as when the river shrinks back below the usual water mark; and land so formed belongs to the owner of the land immediately behind it. Fowler v. Wood, 85 Pac. 763, 775, 73 Kan. 511, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 162, 117 Am. St. Rep. 534 (quoting and adopting the definition in Lammers v. Nissen, 4 Neb. 245).

"Accretion" is the imperceptible accumulation of land by natural causes, and the owner of the property to which the addition is made becomes the owner of such ground, as, where land is bounded by a stream of water which changes its course gradually by alluvial formation, the owner of the land holds the same boundary, including the accumulated soil. Sun Dial Ranch v. May Land Co., 119 Pac. 758, 762, 61 Or. 205; Stockley v. Cissna, 104 S. W. 792, 798, 119 Tenn. 135 (citing Missouri v. Nebraska, 196 U. S. 23, 25 Sup. Ct. 157, 49 L. Ed. 372; Nebraska v. Iowa, 143 U. S. 359, 12 Sup. Ct. 396, 38 L. Ed. 186).

"In order to constitute 'accretion,' it is not necessary that the formation be indiscernible by comparison at two distinct points of time. It is true that it is an addition to riparian land, gradually and imperceptibly made by the water to which the land is contiguous; but the true test as to what is gradual and imperceptible, in the sense of the rule, is that, though the witnesses may see from time to time that progress has been made, they could not perceive it while the process was going on." Under this rule, land is "accretion," in the legal sense, though it may have been rapidly formed, as where 124 acres were washed from one side of a stream and joined to the land on the other side within less than three years, perceived by no one while the process was going on. Nix v. Pfeifer, 83 S. W. 951, 953, 73 Ark. 199 (quoting and adopting definition in Wallace v. Driver, 33 S. W. 641, 61 Ark. 429, 31 L. R. A. 317).

Where land bordering on a body of water is lost by "erosion," which is the gradual and imperceptible wearing away of the land by the natural action of the elements, the state succeeds to the ownership thereof; where the land is added by "accretion," which is such a slow and gradual deposit of articles that its progress cannot be measured though its results may be discerned from time to time, the new land formed belongs to the owner of the upland to which it attaches; but where lost by "avulsion," which is the sudden or violent action of the elements, the effect and extent of which is perceptible while it is in progress, the boundaries do not change. In re City of Buffalo, 99 N. E. 850, 852, 206 N. Y. 319.

Where the change in the channel of a river is made insensibly, by gradual and imperceptible washing away of one shore and formation in like manner upon the other shore it is said to be by erosion and "accretion." State v. Muncie Pulp Co., 104 S. W. 437, 451, 119 Tenn. 47.

"Accretion" is the gradual accumulation by alluvial formation, and, where a boundary river changes its course gradually in such manner, the boundary remains the varying center of the channel. James v. State, 72 S. E. 600, 602, 10 Ga. App. 13 (citing Missouri v. Nebraska, 196 U. S. 23, 25 Sup. Ct. 155, 49 L. Ed. 372).

In determining whether a riparian proprietor has title to land in controversy by accretion, the length of time in which it is in course of formation is not important; for, if it is formed by gradual, imperceptible deposit of alluvion, it is "accretion," but, if the stream changes its course suddenly and in such manner as not to destroy the integrity of the land in controversy and so that the land can be identified, it is not "accretion," and the boundary line remains as before the change of the channel. McCormack v. Miller, 144 S. W. 101, 102, 239 Mo. 463.

"Accretion" is a doctrine to facilitate and authorize the right of front access to the sea by a riparian owner who would otherwise be cut off from his shore, and is not a right of one riparian owner to extend his land sideways beyond his boundaries. Town of Hempstead v. Lawrence, 127 N. Y. Supp. 949, 954, 70 Misc. Rep. 52.

ACCRUE

See Debt Accruing to Territory; Payable as It Accrues.

"Accrue," as defined by Webster, is something that accrues to or follows the property of another. When used as a verb, it is defined as meaning "to increase; to augment." It is given as synonymous with "result, proceed, arise, issue, follow, flow, and ensue; to be added; to be derived, be gained, accumulate." Black defines the word "accruing" as meaning "inchoate; in process of maturing; that which may or will at a future time ripen into a vested right, an available demand, or an existing cause of action." Ercanbrack v. Faris, 79 Pac. 817, 818, 10 Idaho, 584 (citing 1 Cyc. p. 503; 1 Words and Phrases, p. 101).

"Accrue" is not synonymous with the verb "contract," but is defined by Webster as "to increase; to augment; to come to by way of increase; to arise or spring as a growth or result; to be added as increase, profit, or damage, especially as the produce of money lent." Leman v. Chipman, 117 N. W. 885, 887, 82 Neb. 392.

Where the idea of planting a crop on a plantation under administration is conceived by the administrator long after the harvest of the crop growing when decedent died, and the crop is planted and harvested without authority from the court, the crop is not anything that "accrues" to the succession, within Rev. Civ. Code, art. 873. Maxwell-Yerger Co. v. Rogan, 51 South. 48, 50, 125 La. 1.

As arise or become enforceable

"A cause of action 'accrues' from the time the right to sue for the breach attaches." Walker v. Bowman, 111 Pac. 319, 320, 27 Okl. 172, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 642, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 839 (quoting 1 Words and Phrases, p. 101).

The "accrual of a cause" of action, within the statute of limitations, means the right to sue, and when one person may sue another a cause of action has "accrued." Port Arthur Rice Milling Co. v. Beaumont Rice Mills (Tex.) 143 S. W. 926, 928.

A cause of action does not "accrue" until the party owning it is entitled to begin and prosecute an action thereon. It accrues at the moment when he has a legal right to sue on it, and no earlier. In re Hanlin's Estate, 113 N. W. 411, 413, 133 Wis. 140, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1189, 126 Am. St. Rep. 938.

"According to Webster's and Bouvier's definitions of 'accrue,' it is sufficiently accurate to say that when the two elements constituting a cause of action, viz., a right possessed by the plaintiff on the one hand, and the infringement thereof or delict of the defendant on the other, both coexist—'arise, happen, or come to pass'—they are combined, and a cause of action accrues at that moment." Bennett v. Thorne, 78 Pac. 936, 940, 36 Wash. 253, 68 L. R. A. 113.

The word "accrues," as used in St. 1893, § 3893, providing that, when a cause of action accrues against a person and he is out of the territory, the period of limitations shall not begin to run until he comes into the territory, denotes the time when an action may be brought. Doughty v. Funk, 84 Pac. 484, 487, 15 Okl. 643, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1029.

A cause of action does not "accrue" until the party owning it is entitled to begin and prosecute an action thereon. It accrues at the moment when he has a legal right to sue on it, and no earlier. Thus where a check drawn September 17, 1896, was payable 90 days after date, the drawer had the whole of December 16, 1896, in which to pay the same, and limitations did not begin to run until the next day, and no suit could be brought thereon until such next day. Jocque v. McRae, 105 N. W. 874, 142 Mich. 370.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 1194, subd. 25, provides that a foreign corporation may be sued in an county where the cause of action "accrued." A contract between plaintiff and a foreign corporation was made in a certain county, and by its terms the corporation agreed to furnish machines to plaintiff, which he was to sell on commission in such county, and the machines were to be ordered and the freight on them paid by the plaintiff. Held, that an action to recover commissions was properly brought in such county. The word "accrued," as used in the statute, can have but one meaning, and that is "arose." Bay City Iron Works v. Reeves & Co., 95 S. W. 739, 740, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 254.

Code, § 3447, authorizes actions on notes within 10 years after the causes of action "accrue," and section 3452 provides that, when a cause of action has been barred by the laws of any country where the defendant has previously resided, such bar shall be the same in Iowa as if it had arisen under the provisions of the chapter, except that the sections shall not apply to a cause of action "arising within this state." Held, that a cause of action "accrues" when by maturity of the note and default in payment the holder may sue thereon, but it "arises" and has its origin in the transaction which brought the obligation into existence, the two words not being synonymous, so that where M., a resident of Michigan, executed a note which he sent to his father in Iowa by mail, on receipt of which the father mailed him a draft for the face of the note as a loan, the contract was made in Iowa, and the cause of action "arose" there within section 3452. Moran v. Moran, 123 N. W. 202, 205, 144 Iowa, 451, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 898.

A cause of action on a contract for the payment of money "accrues," within Code Civ. Proc. § 21, at the time of the maturity of the obligation, on default in payment and in the state and county where the obligor at the time resides and may be summoned. Hays Land & Investment Co. v. Bassett, 116 Pac. 475, 476, 477, 85 Kan. 48.

Under the provision of Interstate Commerce Act that claims for the recovery of damages shall be filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission "within two years from the time the cause of action 'accrues' and not after," as applied to the claim of a shipper to recover damages on the ground that the published and filed rate of a railroad company under which he made a shipment was unjust and unreasonable, the cause of action "accrued" when the shipment terminated and complainant became liable for the freight, and not when he actually paid it. Arkansas Fertilizer Co. v. United States, 193 Fed. 667, 671.

Where a fire policy, stipulating that insurer should be subrogated to the extent of any payment to all right of recovery by insured for loss resulting from fire caused by the act of another, was issued prior to Sess. Laws 1903, p. 404, providing that the liability imposed on railroad companies for damages by fire caused by the operation of their roads shall not pass by assignment or subrogation to any insurance company issuing a policy on the property, but not affecting any right which has "accrued," the mere fact that a fire occurred after the passage of the act did not prevent the insurance company paying a loss from insisting on its right to be subrogated to the rights of the owner against the railroad company causing the fire; the right accruing by virtue of the contract, and the word "accrued" meaning any right that has arisen. British American Assur. Co. v. Colorado & S. R. Co., 125 Pac. 508, 512, 52 Colo. 589, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1202.

As become due and payable

Under the statute requiring a mechanic's lien to be filed within four months after the indebtedness accrued, an indebtedness "accrued" when the work was completed. Rodefeld v. Winklemann, 136 S. W. 4, 5, 156 Mo. App. 130.

Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 3339c, providing that all wages, if service is by agreement performed by the day or week, shall be due and payable weekly, or if by the month shall be due and payable monthly, did not prevent day laborers from contracting that their wages should be due and payable the 10th of the succeeding month, so that, such contract having been made, the filing of a claim of lien therefor within 30 days after the due date was sufficient to fix the lien, within article 3339b, requiring such filing within 30 days after the indebtedness

An indebtedness for material "accrues," within Rev. St. 1899, § 4207, requiring an original contractor to file his lien account within six months after the indebtedness shall have accrued, when it becomes completed by the materialman furnishing the last material under the contract. E. R. Darlington Lumber Co. v. James T. Smith Bldg. Co., 114 S. W. 77, 78, 134 Mo. App. 316.

The word "accrued," as used in the mechanic's lien law, providing that a lien must be filed within a specified time after the indebtedness shall have accrued, refers to the time when the work is finished, or, in the case of a running account, the time when the last item is finished. Big Horn Lumber Co. v. Davis, 84 Pac. 900, 904, 14 Wyo. 455, 7 Ann. Cas. 940.

Within Civ. Code 1901, par. 989, requiring claims against counties to be presented within six months after the last item of the account accrues, the last item of the account "accrues" at the time such last item of service is performed, and the six months limitation runs from that time, and not from the time when a demand is made for allowance of such account. Cochise County v. Wilcox (Ariz.) 127 Pac. 758, 760.

As increase

The word "accrue" means "to grow," and in that sense rent accrues from day to day. Carley v. Liberty Hat Mfg. Co., 79 Atl. 447, 449, 81 N. J. Law, 502, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 545.

In a will which provides that on the death of any of the testatrix's children without leaving issue the income of a child so dying was to be divided equally among the surviving children of the testatrix, the issue of any of the children who might then be dead to take between them the part which their parents would have taken if living, "such accruing shares to be regarded in all respects as parts of their original shares, both as to the enjoyment and transmissions thereof," the word "accrue" means to come by way of increase; to be added as increase. In re Miffin's Estate, 81 Atl. 129, 131, 282 Pa. 25.

ACCURED RENT

Where a lease required payment of rent on the 1st of the month in advance, and also provided that in case of fire the landlord should on notice forthwith repair, unless the damage was such that the landlord should decide to rebuild, in which case the term should cease, and the "accrued rent" be paid up to the time of the fire, and, the premises having been destroyed on the 10th of the month, the landlord decided to rebuild, the lessee could not recover from the landlord the rent paid in advance for the part of the month after the fire. Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. of New York v. Wallace, 119 N. Y. Supp. 287, 288, 65 Misc. Rep. 27.

Where judgment was obtained and docketed for personal property taxes pursuant to the provisions of sections 57 and 58, c. 132, Laws 1890, and became a lien upon the property in question before the Revised Codes of 1895 took effect, such lien was a "right accrued," which by the express provisions of the statute was continued, notwithstanding the repeal of the law under which the lien was acquired. Hagler v. Kelly, 103 N. W. 629, 631, 14 N. D. 218 (overruling Gull River Lumber Co. v. Lee, 73 N. W. 430, 7 N. D. 135).

The right to redeem from a tax sale made under chapter 132, Laws 1890, was a "right accrued," and was perpetuated as it existed under that act, including the provisions for terminating and exercising the right, by the saving provisions contained in section 2686, Rev. Codes 1895, notwithstanding the repeal of the 1890 revenue laws by the Revised Codes of 1895. Blakemore v. Cooper, 106 N. W. 566, 571, 15 N. D. 5, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1074, 125 Am. St. Rep. 574.

ACCRUING TO MY ESTATE

Testamentary disposition of property "accruing to my estate" covers property added to the estate, such as a plantation purchased by the executor. Gully v. Neville (Miss.) 55 So. 289, 292.

ACCUMULATE—ACCUMULATION

Civ. Code, § 169, declares that the "accumulations" of a wife while she is living separate from her husband are her separate property. Held, that property of the husband by him put in possession of the wife and acquired by her by adverse possession during the marriage while living separate from her husband is an accumulation, and is not subject to execution for the husband's debts, accumulations of property generally meaning any property which a person acquires and retains without regard to the means by which it is obtained. Union Oil Co. v. Stewart, 110 Pac. 813, 316, 158 Cal. 149, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 567.

Of estates or funds

Where a will provided that shares of a corporation should be held in trust and the income paid to the beneficiaries, and the corporation went out of business, the carrying of that part of the price of the sale of the assets represented by the betterments and good will of the company to the corpus of the estate did not violate the provisions of Laws 1897, c. 417, § 4, against the "accumulation of income." In re Stevens, 95 N. Y. Supp. 297, 315, 46 Misc. Rep. 623.

Directions to testamentary trustees to transfer stock to remaindermen at the end of the trust period, with any "accumulations" thereon, do not operate and cannot be construed as directions to "accumulate." "The words may be considered as indicating that the company was expected to continue its policy of using from its earnings and betterments, and increasing its business capacity, and retain a portion of its surplus earnings to meet business emergencies. What the testatrix intended was that such 'accumulations and earnings' should pass to the remaindermen upon a transfer of the stock at the end of the trust period." In re Stevens, 95 N. Y. Supp. 297, 315, 46 Misc. Rep. 623.

In insurance

Defendant life insurance company having issued a policy to H. for the benefit of his wife while the policy was in force, in 1867 issued to the wife a dividend certificate, reciting that she was entitled to $12 in the accumulations of the insurance company, subject to its rights under the charter, and redeemable at the discretion of the trustees. Held, that the word "accumulation," as used in the certificate, implies a "rolling up" or adding of interest or income to the principal, and that the certificate was not necessarily a mere script dividend to be rebated on premium when called for, and not to draw interest. Hazelton v. New York Life Ins. Co., 124 N. W. 1014, 1016, 141 Wis. 639.

ACCUMULATED DAMAGES

A will provided for the payment of part or the whole of the accumulation of a trust to the beneficiary, in the discretion of the trustees. In other provisions of the will, the testator treated both the principal and income of this trust as a single fund, for purposes of investment and distribution upon the death of the beneficiary. Held, that by the use of the word "accumulation" the testator did not intend to limit the discretionary payments to the beneficiary to payments out of the income, but that, in their discretion, the trustees might make payments of principal. Shattuck v. Stickney, 97 N. E. 774, 776, 211 Mass. 327.

"Accumulated damages," also denominated "enhanced damages," are engrafted on a common-law recovery by the statute in the nature of a penalty, and statutes of this sort, which merely accumulate the measure of recovery in actions otherwise primarily existing at common law, are not regarded as penal in the sense that the rule of strict construction applies to them. Casey v. St. Louis Transit Co., 91 S. W. 419, 425, 116 Mo. App. 235.

ACCURATE

ACCURATE CROSS-SECTION

A contract for the excavation of a bulkhead, the inner line of which was about 9 feet inshore from an established bulkhead line, and the base of which was to be 15 feet below mean low-water mark with allowance to the contractor for whatever he might excavate within an extra foot in each direction, specified that no payment should be made for excavation beyond those limits, "except where known loose rock is shown in the cross-sections above the top grade of the indicated rock, at a line ten feet westerly of and parallel to the bulkhead line, allowance will be made and paid for to a positive line which is forty-five degrees to the horizontal," and specified, as to "typical sections," that they were given as a guide only and to show approximately what the contractor might expect to encounter in the prosecution of the "work," and represented the "typical sections" as information upon (1) "the existing rock bottom which was the top of the loose rock; (2) the corresponding theoretical sections to be obtained, meaning the so-called nine-foot and fifteen-foot lines; and (3) the corresponding limiting lines to which payment will be made when it is impossible to produce the theoretical sections; and that all material was to be measured by comparison of 'accurate cross-sections.'" The points at which the 45-degrees lines should commence could not be ascertained before the work commenced. Held, that the "corresponding theoretical sections" meant the 10-foot and 16-foot lines; that the "typical" cross-sections could not be regarded as the "accurate cross-sections"; that "work" had a double meaning, and, for the purpose of fixing the beginning points of the 45-degree lines, did not begin until the blasting began, when the junctions between the loose rock and the ledge rock became "known," so as to be "indicated" upon the cross-sections made by the city after the work was completed; and that work to such junctions was necessitated and contemplated by the contract. R. G. Packard Co. v. City of New York, 137 N. Y. Supp. 9, 13, 151 App. Div. 941.

ACCURATE RECORDS

The requirement of an Insurance policy that the insured shall keep "accurate records" will not be construed to accomplish a forfeiture for mere slight accidental omissions, or because the books kept do not come up to the highest standard of perfect or accurate book keeping. Aetna Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 56 S. E. 643, 645, 127 Ga. 491, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 667, 9 Ann. Cas. 461 (citing Everett-Ridley-Ragan Co. v. Traders' Ins. Co., 48 S. E. 918, 121 Ga. 228, 104 Am. St. Rep. 99; Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Ellington, 21 S. E. 1006, 94 Ga. 785; Pelican Ins. Co. v. Wilkerson, 13 S. W. 1103, 53 Ark. 353; Western Assur. Co. v. Altheimer Bros., 25 S. W. 1067, 58 Ark. 565).

ACCURATELY RUN

The words "accurately run," as used in an act providing for a commission to appoint a surveyor to run and mark the boundary line between certain counties, requires the surveyor to accurately run and thoroughly mark the line, are directory only, and a line so surveyed and marked constitutes the legal boundary between the county, though it did not in fact accurately coincide with the fortieth parallel of north latitude. Trinity County v. Mendocino County, 90 Pac. 685, 688, 151 Cal. 279.

ACCUSE—ACCUSED—ACCUSATION

Convicted as including accusation, see Convicted—Conviction.

Nature of accusation, see Nature.

The term "accusation," as used in reference to trials in courts having jurisdiction of misdemeanor cases, is but the equivalent of an information at common law. Wright v. Davis, 48 S. E. 170, 173, 120 Ga. 670 (quoting Gordon v. State, 29 S. E. 446, 102 Ga. 679).

There is a marked difference between an "accusation" in a city court and an "indictment," which would furnish reasons for allowing an accusation to be amended, while an indictment cannot be except by the grand jury itself. The indictment is found upon the oaths of a grand jury, whereas an accusation in a city or a county court is based upon the affidavit of the prosecutor. An "accusation" is the equivalent of the common-law "information." Goldsmith v. State, 58 S. E. 486, 487, 2 Ga. App. 283.

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 25, providing that the words "accused" and "defendant" therein refer to one who in a legal manner is held to answer for an offense at any stage of the proceedings, or against whom complaint in a lawful manner is made, charging an offense including all proceedings from the order of arrest to final execution, a defendant is not "accused" until charged with an offense. Brown v. State, 118 S. W. 139, 144, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 572.

Under the statute providing that, in cases where the punishment is necessarily at hard labor, the number of peremptory challenges shall be 12 for the "accused" and 6 for the state, the word "accused" is to be taken as intended to refer to one or more than one, so that 6 peremptory challenges are allowable to the state and 12 to each of the defendants, where there are several on trial. State v. Caron, 42 South, 960, 962, 118 La. 349.

To "accuse" is to charge with, or to declare to have committed, a crime or offense. Such charge may be made judicially or by public process. The filing of an affidavit before an officer having jurisdiction to receive it, and to issue process upon it, is a mode of accusation of the highest character. An information charging, in effect, that the defendants conspired together to commit the crime of blackmailing "by filing an affidavit" before a magistrate accusing a certain person of a certain crime punishable by law, with intent to extort money from him, is good under a statute providing that whoever accuses any person of any crime punishable by law with intent to extort money from such person is guilty of blackmailing. Utterback v. State, 55 N. E. 420, 421, 153 Ind. 548 (citing Stand. Dict.).

ACETIC ACID

The term "acetic acid," in paragraph 1, Schedule A, § 1, c. 11, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 151, is not limited to the article scientifically known by that name, but is intended as a general commercial designation of a class of articles which are commercially so known, and includes the substance known as "acetic acid anhydrid." George Lueders & Co. v. United States, 140 Fed. 970.

ACID

See Boracic Acid; Bromofluoresceic Acid; Carbonic Acid; Phthalic Acid; Stearic Acid; Tannin or Tannic Acid.

So-called red oil or oleic acid, which is not used otherwise than as soap stock, is held not to be within the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, of oils commonly used in soap making, fit only for such uses, but to be dutiable as an "acid not specially provided for," under section 1, Schedule A. par. 1. Edward Hill's Sons & Co. v. United States, 143 Fed. 361, 362.

ACKNOWLEDGE — ACKNOWLEDGMENT

See Public Acknowledgment; Signed and Acknowledged.

"'Acknowledge' means to own or admit the knowledge of; to recognize as a fact or truth; * * * to own or recognize in particular character or relationship. (Webster, Dict.) As the Psalmist said: 'I acknowledge my transgressions.' Job in his sorrow said: 'In all thy ways acknowledge Him.' Thus a man acknowledges a secret marriage; he admits it. One who has done wrong may 'acknowledge' his fault, and thus confess his error." Townsend v. Meneley, 74 N. E. 274, 275, 37 Ind. App. 127 (citing City of Evansville v. Summers, 9 N. E. 81, 108 Ind. 189; Bishop v. State ex rel. Griner, 48 N. E. 1038, 149 Ind. 223, 39 L. R. A. 278, 63 Am. St. Rep. 270).

See Judicial Act.

Of debt

See, also, New Promise.

Payment is regarded as an "acknowledgment" of an existing obligation, and from such acknowledgment a promise to pay may be implied. Whether payment be a part of the principal or the interest, it is an "acknowledgment" of an existing indebtedness, from which the promise to pay will be implied. A payment of interest on a note constitutes a sufficient "acknowledgment" to pay to toll the statute of limitations, and where a sufficient payment on a note secured by a mortgage was made to take the note out of the statute of limitations the payment was effective to prevent the mortgage securing the debt from being barred. MacMillan v. Clements, 70 N. E. 997, 998, 38 Ind. App. 120.

A recognition of the debt and an admission that the writer is the debtor of the person addressed is a sufficient "acknowledgment" of the debt to take the case out of the statute of limitations. Willis v. Wilman, 102 N. Y. Supp. 1004, 1005, 53 Misc. Rep. 462.

A statement by a debtor that to settle a claim of the creditor he will turn over to the creditor a claim, provided a receipt in full is given, is simply an offer to compromise, and is not such an express "acknowledgment of an existing debt" as will take the case out of the statute of limitations. Marcum's Adm'r v. Terry, 142 S. W. 209, 146 Ky. 145, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 885.

A letter written by an agent to his principal, stating, "I have used the money and I want to turn out my property to make you all right," constitutes a sufficient "acknowledgment" by the agent of the existence of a debt in favor of the principal to satisfy Comp. Laws 1897, § 9740, requiring acknowledgments of debts to be in writing in order to postpone the running of limitations. Jewell v. Jewell's Estate, 102 N. W. 1059, 1063, 139 Mich. 578.

A claim filed against decedent's estate, consisting of a statement of expenditures made by defendant for decedent, and a balance due after deducting a sum in favor of decedent, is not an "acknowledgment of indebtedness" to decedent, reviving a barred cause of action. Visher v. Wilbur, 90 Pac. 1065, 1067, 5 Cal. App. 562.

The inclusion by a bankrupt in his schedules of a debt barred by limitations constitutes an "acknowledgment of the debt" in writing, taking the claim out of the statute of limitations, under Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 395, as between the bankrupt and the creditor, precluding the bankrupt from subsequently objecting to allowance of the claim, no other creditor being interested; but the claim is entitled to share in the distribution only in case the estate proves sufficient to pay in full all the legitimate expenses of administration, and all the other proved and allowed claims. In re Currier, 192 Fed. 695, 696.

Where limitations have run as against an indorser of a note, his liability is not revived by a letter to the holder of the note, stating that he is unable to pay the note, but offering to buy it for some small sum that he can afford to pay, such offer is not an "acknowledgment" of an existing debt. Connecticut Trust & Safe Deposit Co. v. Wead, 85 N. E. 261, 172 N. Y. 497, 92 Am. St. Rep. 756.

Under Rev. Codes, § 4078, providing that no acknowledgment or promise is sufficient evidence of a new or continuing contract by which to take a case out of the statute of limitations unless in writing, signed by the person to be charged thereby, a clear and definite acknowledgment of the existence of a contract and liability which has not at the time been barred by limitations, whether coupled with a direct promise to pay or not, carries with it an implied promise to pay the debt, and fixes a new date from which the statute begins to run. Where one owed another a note and mortgage overdue but not barred by limitations, and wrote the other telling him of a prospective sale of mining property he had in view, saying, "Now, if I can make this deal, will try and get enough money down to liquidate the mortgage you hold against the property," the letter constituted an "acknowledgment of a continuing contract" within the statute and set a new date from which limitations began to run, the quoted words constituting a condition that the debtor proposed to place upon the sale of the property and demand from the purchaser, rather than a condition as to payment of the debt to the creditor, and did not negative an implied promise to pay at some time even if the sale should not be made. Dern v. Olsen, 110 Pac. 164, 167, 18 Idaho, 358, 21 Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1.

A letter from a debtor to creditor stating that, as soon as he could, the former would arrange a "proposition about this insurance," written in response to the creditor's letter reminding him that he had promised to insure his life for the creditor's benefit, a letter stating that the debtor was anxious to relieve himself of his indebtedness, and would "strive to do his best as early as possible," but that his prospects of making money were not "rosy," etc., are insufficient to constitute such an acknowledgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 395, as takes the debts out of the statute of limitations. Zinn v. Stamm, 136 N. Y. Supp. 737, 741, 152 App. Div. 76.

Of deed or mortgage

Rapalje defines an "acknowledgment" to be the act of one by whom a deed has been executed, in declaring before a competent court or officer that it is his act or deed. De Wolfskill v. Smith, 89 Pac. 1001, 1004, 5 Cal. App. 175.

"Acknowledgment" is a proceeding provided by statute whereby a person who has executed an instrument may, by going before a competent officer or court and declaring it to be his act and deed, entitle it to be recorded or received in evidence without further proof of execution, or both." When an "acknowledgment" is prescribed by statute, without declaring of what it shall consist, it is meant that the person executing the instrument must appear before a duly authorized officer and state that he executed it. Under Act Feb. 5, 1841, providing for the registration of deeds upon the "acknowledgment" of the party or parties before the chief justice of the county, a certificate attached to a deed, which merely shows that the officer saw the grantor in a deed sign it, is not an "acknowledgment" entitling the deed to record. Punchard v. Masterson, 101 S. W. 204, 205, 100 Tex. 479 (quoting and adopting the definition in 1 Cyc. p. 512).

Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 2312, provides for the introduction of every instrument which is permitted or required to be recorded, and which has been recorded after being "acknowledged in the manner provided by the laws" in force at the time of its registration." Held, that the certificate of acknowledgment itself must be formal and by an officer having authority. Bledsoe v. Haney, 122 S. W. 455, 457, 57 Tex. Civ. App. 285.

Tax Law (Laws 1896, p. 869, c. 908) § 221, exempts from the transfer tax property passing to a child to whom a decedent for not less than 10 years prior to such transfer stood in the "mutually acknowledged relation of a parent," provided such relationship began at or before the child's fifteenth birthday, and was continuous for 10 years thereafter. Legatees were nieces of testator, and had lived with him and his wife for a longer period than that required by the statute, had married from his house upon his consent, which was asked to the marriages, and had been supported and educated at his expense. Their mother was dead, but their father was still living, and, while their relationship with their uncle and aunt was affectionate, yet it was never characterized nor acknowledged as that of parent and child. The legatees always referred to testator and his wife as "uncle" and "aunt," and the latter referred to the former as nieces, and testator, in his will, designated the legatees as nieces, and not as children. Held, that there was no "mutually acknowledged relation of parent," such as to exempt the transfer from taxation. In re Deutsch's Estate, 95 N. Y. Supp. 65, 68, 107 App. Div. 192.

"Acknowledgment" by a putative father of his illegitimate offspring may be established by evidence the same as any other fact. Townsend v. Meneley, 74 N. E. 274, 275, 37 Ind. App. 127.

ACQUIESCE—ACQUIESCENCE

The term "acquiescence" may be defined as "quiescence" under such circumstances as that assent may be reasonably inferred therefrom. Grafton v. Patrick, 58 S. E. 1, 2, 77 S. C. 420, 122 Am. St. Rep. 586.

A charge that, if the jury believed that a boundary line, the location of which was involved in an action, was in dispute, and that the adjoining owners caused it to be established and acquiesced in the line as established, the plaintiff would be deemed the owner of all lands up to such line was a correct statement of the law; the word "acquiescence" not necessarily meaning only momentary acquiescence. Cooper v. Slaughter (Ala.) 57 South. 477, 481.

Where a traveling salesman took an order for his principals for flour, to be filled by shipment of one car each month for five months from date of order, and the sellers wrote the buyers on receipt of the order, thanking them for same and complaining of the length of time allowed to move the flour, but saying nothing as to a limitation on the salesman's authority, and stating that they would be willing to allow 45 days in which to order out the goods, but could not afford to have it understood that the buyers could have five months in which to order the goods out, the mere fact of the buyers' ordering the flour shipped after the receipt of the sellers' letter was not an "acquiescence" in the new terms suggested by the sellers. J. B. Brennan & Son v. Dansby & Dansby, 95 S. W. 700, 702, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 7.

As approval

In an action for divorce, the court found that plaintiff had persistently refused to have reasonable sexual intercourse with defendant, but that defendant at all times acquiesced in such refusal. Held, that the term "acquiesced" as so used did not mean approval, but rather "submission." Mayr v. Mayr, 118 Pac. 548, 549, 161 Cal. 134.

As assent or consent

The term "acquiescence" means "quiescence" under such circumstances that assent may be reasonably inferred therefrom. Grafton v. Patrick, 58 S. E. 1, 2, 77 S. C. 420, 122 Am. St. Rep. 586. "To rest apparently satisfied without objection; a silent or passive assent." Farr v. Semmler, 123 N. W. 835, 838, 24 S. D. 290.

"Acquiescence" is tantamount to assent, and may even cut off a defense. Edwards v. Cooper, 79 N. E. 1047, 1054, 168 Ind. 54.

The word "consent" is sometimes treated as synonymous with "assent," "acquiescence" and "concurrence." Bartle v. Bartle, 112 N. W. 471, 473, 132 Wis. 392 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1349).

The "acquiescence" by complainant in defendant's assertion of water rights, necessary to bar him from the discretionary remedy of injunction, must be such as proves his assent to the acts of the defendant and to the injuries to himself which have flowed from those acts. Verdugo Canon Water Co. v. Verdugo, 93 Pac. 1029, 1030, 152 Cal. 655 (citing Lux v. Haggin, 4 Pac. 919, 10 Pac. 674, 69 Cal. 271).

To establish a right to use an irrigation ditch by prescription, the right must have been asserted with the knowledge and acquiescence of the landowner, but "acquiescence," which commonly means an affirmative consent, in addition to knowledge of the hostile claim, need not be shown independently of knowledge; and, if the owner has knowledge which the law imputed to him, and takes no steps to prevent the adverse claimant from his continuous enjoyment of the right, he is deemed to have acquiesced in such use. Silva v. Hawn, 102 Pac. 952, 955, 10 Cal. App. 544.

Delay

By "acquiescence" complainant lost her right to enjoin defendant from running a bottling factory in violation of a covenant restricting the use of land, where for several years she did not seek to enforce it, but did not lose the right to enjoin an extension of the business. Leaver v. Gorman, 67 Atl. 111, 113, 73 N. J. Eq. 129.

Where defendant vendee returned to plaintiff vendor part of the goods purchased together with a check, informing plaintiff that such check was intended to balance the account in full, and plaintiff accepted the check, giving defendant all other credits claimed, except that for the goods returned, which were of a fixed value, but failed to inform defendant of its refusal to take back the returned goods until more than a month thereafter, such delay amounted to an "acquiescence" in the return of the goods, precluding recovery therefor. Chamberlain Medicine Co. v. Elk Drug Co., 99 N. Y. Supp. 850, 807, 114 App. Div. 255.

It may be stated as a general rule that, if a person having a right, and seeing another person about to commit, or in the course of committing, an act infringing upon that right, stands by in such a manner as really to induce the person committing the act, and who might otherwise have abstained from it to believe that he consents to its being committed, he cannot afterwards be heard to complain of the act. This, it has been said, is the proper sense of the term "acquiescence," which in that sense may be defined as "quiescence," under such circumstances as that assent may be reasonably inferred from, and is no more than an instance of the law of estoppel by words or conduct. After condition broken, a mortgagee is not estopped to enforce his mortgage on a horse against one who had traded for the horse from one other than the mortgagee, without notice of the mortgage, because he had seen the horse in possession of such other, and heard the horse had been traded several times, and had taken no steps to give notice of his mortgage other than to record it. Grafton v. Patrick, 58 S. E. 1, 2, 77 S. C. 420, 122 Am. St. Rep. 596.

When a party, with full knowledge, or at least with sufficient notice or means of knowledge, of his rights, and of all material facts, freely does what amounts to a recognition of the transaction as existing, or acts in a manner inconsistent with its repudiation, or lies by for considerable time and knowingly permits the other party to deal with the subject-matter under the belief that the transaction has been recognized, or freely abstains for a considerable length of time from impeaching it, so that the other party is thereby reasonably induced to suppose that it is recognized, there is acquiescence, and the transaction, although originally impeachable, becomes unimpeachable in equity. Wagg v. Herbert, 92 Pac. 250, 266, 19 Okl. 525.

"Acquiescence" in the wrongful act of another, such as will operate to preclude equitable relief, must be not only with knowledge of the wrongful acts, but also of their injurious consequences, and the same must last for such an unreasonable length of time as to make it inequitable to enforce the remedies of equity against the wrongdoer." Royce v. Carpenter, 66 Atl. 888, 892, 80 Vt. 37.

Knowledge implied

"'Acquiescence' and 'waiver' are always questions of fact; there can be neither without knowledge. The terms import this foundation for such action. One cannot waive or acquiesce in a wrong while ignorant that it has been committed. Current suspicion and rumor are not enough; there must be knowledge of facts which will enable the party to take effectual action. Nothing short of this will do. 'Acquiescence' exists where a person, who knows that he is entitled to impeach a transaction or enforce a right, neglects to do so for such a length of time that, under the circumstances of the case, the other party may fairly infer he has waived or abandoned his right." Where neither plaintiff nor those under whom she claimed had any knowledge that defendant's building extended onto plaintiff's lot until just prior to the commencement of plaintiff's action to recover the strip in controversy, complainant could not be held to have lost her right by acquiescence in defendant's occupation. Connell v. Clifford, 88 Pac. 850, 851, 39 Colo. 121 (quoting and adopting definitions in Pence v. Langdon, 99 U. S. 578, 581, 25 L. Ed. 420; Scott v. Jackson, 26 Pac. 898, 899, 89 Cal. 262, citing Brown v. Cockerell, 33 Ala. 38, 47); Dague v. Grand Lodge, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, 73 Atl. 735, 738, 111 Md. 95.

"Ratification" and "acquiescence" are not synonymous. The latter term is but evidence to be considered in determining the existence of the former. It is only when silence or acquiescence becomes the basis or authority on which another parts with something valuable or incurs a liability that the doctrine applies. The doctrine is that in such case the party is estopped to assert the truth because its assertion would work a fraud on him whose conduct has been influenced thereby. To "acquiesce" is to forbear opposition or complaint, while to "ratify" is to make valid or to confirm. We may acquiesce in an act without approving it. Austin v. Jones, 41 South. 408, 411, 148 Ala. 659.

"Acquiescence" of a principal in the unauthorized acts of his agent implies ratification. Technically, perhaps, there is this distinction between ratification by silence and estoppel arising therefrom. Ratification acts by conferring the necessary power on the agent, while estoppel acts by preventing the denial of the fact that the agent was originally clothed with the necessary power; but, by whatever name it may be called, its effect is the same. Hall v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 65 Atl. 278, 280, 27 R. I. 525.

ACQUIESCENCE IN JUDGMENT

On judgment for plaintiff, defendant did not, by paying the costs, "acquiesce in the judgment," within Code Prac. art. 567, providing that one against whom judgment has been rendered cannot appeal if he has acquiesced in the same by executing it voluntarily, where defendant did not intend to acquiesce in the judgment, and paid the costs under belief that it would not affect his right to appeal. Sims v. Jeter, 55 South. 877, 129 La. 262.

ACQUIESCENCE WITH KNOWLEDGE

"Acquiescence with knowledge" is not synonymous with "contributory negligence." An averment in a petition that the injury occurred without fault of the plaintiff is insufficient. Hesse v. Columbus, S. & H. R. Co., 50 N. E. 354, 355, 58 Ohio St. 167, 169.

ACQUIRE

The word "acquire," within a proposition to issue bonds to acquire electric works, has a broad meaning, including both purchase and construction. Clark v. City of Los Angeles, 116 Pac. 722, 729, 160 Cal. 30.

The word "acquire," as used in a statute providing that where a person transacts business as a trader without disclosing the name of his principal all the property, stock, money, and choses in action used or acquired in such business shall be liable for his debts, means obtain, procure, to get as one's own; and the proceeds of a policy of insurance on goods of the trader for an undisclosed principal is obtained and procured in such business and is applicable to the payment of his debts. Meridian Land & Industrial Co. v. Ormond, 35 South. 179, 180, 82 Miss. 758.

Under Rev. St. 1895, arts. 2967, 2968, declaring that all property of the husband "owned or claimed" by him before marriage, and that "acquired" afterwards by gift, devise, or descent, shall be his separate property, and all property "acquired" by the husband or wife during the marriage, except that "acquired" by gift, devise, or descent, shall be the common property of the husband and wife, ownership resting in adverse possession for 10 years, existing in part before marriage and in part after marriage, is community property; the word "acquired" denoting all property coming to husband or wife during coverture by title, other than by gift, devise, or descent. Sauvage v. Wanhop, 143 S. W. 259, 263.

ACQUISITION

See New Acquisition.

Where the general purpose of an irrigation act, as indicated by the caption, is to provide means for the "acquisition" and conveyance of water to be used for the several purposes mentioned in the act, a statement in the caption that one of the purposes of the act is to provide for the acquisition of the right to the use of water does not, when considered with the whole of the caption, prohibit an incorporation in the act of a provision conferring the right of eminent domain over land. The expression, "to provide for the acquisition of the right to the use of water," does not convey the idea that the right of eminent domain, or the power to condemn water owned exclusively as private property, as distinguishable from the riparian rights of the owner of land upon streams or water courses, was intended to be conferred, and no such right is given in the act. Borden v. Trespacios Rice & Irrigation Co. (Tex.) 82 S. W. 461, 465.

Act Feb. 20, 1908 (25 St. at Large, p. 1431), is entitled "An act to provide for free bridges across the Congaree and Broad rivers between Columbia township, in Richland county and the county of Lexington, the acquisition thereof by Columbia township, and the issue of bonds, if approved by the electors of Columbia township, for the purpose of such acquisition." Section 7 of the act declares that authority is given to build or purchase and to maintain such bridges, etc. Held, that the word "acquisition," as used in the title, meaning the act of getting or obtaining something already in existence or that may be brought into existence through the means employed to acquire it, included the acquiring of a bridge by construction as well as by purchase; and hence the act was not unconstitutional as containing matter not expressed in its title, in that it authorized the construction of new bridges as well as the purchase of those already in existence. Verner v. Muller, 71 S. E. 654, 656, 89 S. C. 117.

ACQUIT—ACQUITTAL

See Autrefois Acquit; Former Acquittal.

The arbitrary discharge of a jury before verdict without the consent of accused, and without the existence of circumstances, justifying the discharge, is not a judgment of "acquittal," within Code Cr. Proc. § 332, enumerating pleas that may be interposed to an indictment, and a former conviction or acquittal which may be pleaded in bar is a conviction or acquittal on the merits. People ex rel. Stabile v. Warden of City Prison of City of New York, 95 N. E. 729, 733, 202 N. Y. 138.

Where the jury are discharged in the absence of and without the consent of the defendant or his counsel, the discharge operates as an "acquittal," and bars further prosecution. Vela v. State, 95 S. W. 529, 530, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 588 (citing Jones v. State, 12 South. 274, 97 Ala. 77, 38 Am. St. Rep. 150); Allen v. State, 41 South. 593, 52 Fla. 1, 120 Am. St. Rep. 188, 10 Ann. Cas. 1035 (citing 12 Cyc. p. 270; People v. Grant [N. Y.] 4 Parker, Cr. R. 527; State v. Wamire, 16 Ind. 357; Teat v. State, 53 Miss. 439, 24 Am. Rep. 708; Helm v. State, 6 South. 322, 66 Miss. 537; State v. McKee [S. C.] 1 Bailey, 651, 21 Am. Dec. 499; Cooley's Const. Lim. [7th Ed.] p. 467; McCreary v. Jackson Lumber Co., 41 South. 822, 823, 148 Ala. 247; Bryant v. Cadle, 104 Pac. 23, 18 Wyo. 64; Bashore v. Mooney, 87 Pac. 553, 555, 4 Cal. App. 276; Horn v. Metzger, 84 N. E. 893, 234 Ill. 240; Van Horn v. Stuyvesant, 100 N. Y. Supp. 547, 551, 50 Misc. Rep. 482). But there was no "acquittal" where the jury, while the court was at recess, returned a verdict written upon the indictment, gave the indictment to the clerk, and then dispersed, if there had been no consent on the part of defendant or his counsel that the verdict might be so returned, though the verdict would not support a conviction. Cowart v. State, 41 South. 631, 632, 147 Ala. 137.

As discharge

"Acquit" means to discharge. Sherman v. Sherman, 122 N. W. 439, 443, 23 S. D. 486. The discharge of a person under indictment, when not brought to trial as provided in Code Cr. Proc. §§ 220, 221 (Gen. St. 1901, §§ 5665, 5666), amounts to an "acquittal" of the offense charged. State v. Dewey, 85 Pac. 796, 797, 73 Kan. 735.

The word "acquittal" is said to be an equivocal word. One is acquitted if, after he has been arraigned, and trial has been begun upon a valid indictment or information, he is discharged by a competent court before verdict. State v. Keerl, 85 Pac. 862, 865, 33 Mont. 501 (citing the definitions in 1 Words and Phrases, p. 114).

To say that one accused of crime was "discharged" is not equivalent to saying that he was "acquitted." The word "acquitted" in the legal sense means acquitted by a jury, but there are various ways by which a man may be "discharged" from his imprisonment, without putting an end to the suit. Graves v. Scott, 51 S. E. 821, 822, 104 Va. 372, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 927, 113 Am. St. Rep. 1043, 7 Ann. Cas. 480. A discharge by a United States commissioner is not equivalent to an "acquittal." Williams v. State, 82 N. E. 790, 791, 169 Ind. 384.

ACROSS

A city ordinance providing that trains shall not be allowed to stand or remain "across" any street longer than a certain time is not violated by allowing a train to stand so that the head end reaches slightly into the street, but not in such a way as to obstruct public travel. Crowley v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co., 99 N. W. 1016, 1017, 122 Wis. 287.

ACROSS THE SEAL

Rev. St. 1895, art. 2284, providing that the officer taking depositions shall seal them in an envelope "and shall write his name 'across the seal,'" was sufficiently complied with, where the notary's signature, while not extending literally across the edge of the lap or cover forming the seal, extended across and over that portion of the cover containing the mucilage forming the seal. Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Felker, 90 S. W. 530, 531, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 604.

An "act" denotes affirmative action or performance, and an expression of will or purpose, as distinguished from "omission," which denotes a negative and inaction. Randle v. Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co., 53 South. 918, 921, 169 Ala. 314.

A juror who was summoned, but who was excused without having been sworn, had not "acted," within Revisal 1905, § 1967, disqualifying a tales juror who has acted as a grand, petit, or tales juror within two years. Burnett v. Roanoke Mills Co., 67 S. E. 30, 33, 152 N. C. 35.

Failure to record a mortgage given to secure a note for the payment of which another is surety is an "act" which increases the surety's risk and discharges him from liability, though no actual loss is shown, under a statute which provides that a surety is discharged from liability by any "act" of the creditor increasing the surety's risk. Cloud v. Scarborough, 59 S. E. 202, 203, 3 Ga. App. 7.

The federal statute declaring that every receiver appointed by a federal court may be sued in respect to any "act" of his without leave of court, does not authorize the bringing of a suit to condemn a crossing over the right of way of a railroad company in the hands of a receiver without leave of the court. The receiver's refusal to agree on a crossing at a point and in the manner insisted upon by the petitioner, which the receiver considered as detrimental to the property in his custody, does not constitute an "act" by the receiver within the statute. Buckhannon & N. R. Co. v. Davis, 135 Fed. 707, 711, 68 C. C. A. 345.

Where a federal court granted a preliminary injunction restraining the officers of a state from enforcing a state statute fixing rates to be charged by railroads for the carriage of passengers within the state pending suits by the railroad companies to determine the constitutionality of such statute, and by its order required such companies to issue coupons to purchasers of tickets calling for the difference between the rates charged and the statutory rate, to be repaid in case the statute was sustained, the selling of tickets in conformity to such order was "an act done * * * in pursuance of * * * an order * * * of a court of the United States," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 753, and, where an agent is adjudged guilty of a crime and imprisoned for such act by the state authorities, the federal court is authorized by such section to discharge him on a writ of habeas corpus. Ex parte Wood, 155 F. 190, 195.

"Acts," as used in Rev. St. Mo. 1889, § 6606, declaring that all acts of a general nature, revised and amended and re-enacted at the session of the Legislature at which such statutes were adopted, should be construed as repealing all prior laws relating to the same subject, did not include parts of acts, so that Laws 1887, p. 281, §§ 2, 3, not being repugnant to the rest of the act as amended by Rev. St. 1889, § 8187, were not repealed either expressly or by necessary implication. State ex rel. Wagner v. Patterson, 105 S. W. 1048, 1051, 207 Mo. 129.

The word "act" as used in the general enacting clause of article 5, § 58, of the Constitution of Oklahoma, relating to the time when acts passed by the Legislature shall become effective, means a bill passed by the Legislature as to which all of the required formalities have been performed, and refers to the entire statute enacted. Norris v. Cross, 105 Pac. 1000, 1007, 25 Okl. 287.

Sess. Laws Colo. 1901, p. 116, § 1, imposes a fee on every domestic corporation, and declares: "But this act shall not apply to corporations not for pecuniary profit or corporations organized for * * * benevolent purposes." Sections 2-10, pp. 117-121, require the payment of various fees, and each section contains a proviso that nothing therein contained shall apply to corporations not for pecuniary profit. Section 11, p. 121, provides that all corporations shall file annual reports showing the amount of the capital stock actually paid and how paid, etc., and makes the officers and directors of the corporation liable for a failure to make annual reports. Held, that section 11, when considered in connection with previous legislation on the subject embodied in Laws 1897, p. 157, does not apply to a mutual fire insurance company engaged solely in the business of the mutual insurance of the property of its members, and the word "act" in the quoted clause in section 1 must be construed to refer to the whole act, and cannot be construed to mean "section," so as to refer only to section 1. Steck v. Prentice, 95 P. 552, 553, 43 Colo. 17.

ACT CHARGED

Though the time be stated in an information for incest, the prosecutor has the right to select, among all the acts of the kind which he could prove to have been committed between the parties within the period alluded to and within the jurisdiction, any one of those acts before evidence has been introduced as the "act charged" in the information. In other words, until evidence of some such act has been given the charge in the information is floating and contingent, aimed as much at one as at another, and at no one act in particular, and it remains for the evidence to point the charge to a particular act intended. But when evidence has been introduced tending directly to the proof of one act, and for the purpose of procuring a conviction upon it, from that moment that particular act becomes the "act charged." What has till then been floating and contingent has now become certain and fixed. People v. Jenness, 5 Mich. 305, 327.

ACT CONSTITUTING CRIME

The phrase "act constituting the crime," as used in Code Cr. Proc. § 275, requiring an indictment to contain a plain and concise statement of the act constituting the crime, means a statement of the manner in which it is alleged to have been committed. People v. Foster, 112 N. Y. Supp. 706, 709, 60 Misc. Rep. 3.

ACT OF BANKRUPTCY

Admission of insolvency

A resolution passed by the directors of a corporation and the stockholders, reciting that the corporation was unable to pay its debts and was willing to be adjudged a bankrupt on that ground, being properly made by the governing body of the corporation, was sufficient to constitute an "act of bankruptcy," under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 3a, providing that an act of bankruptcy may consist in the admission of the alleged bankrupt in writing of his inability to pay his debts and of his willingness to be adjudged a bankrupt on that ground. In re American Guarantee & Security Co. of California, 192 Fed. 405, 408.

Where a Circuit Court appointed receivers of the property of a corporation, and granted an injunction restraining its officers and agents from commencing or prosecuting any proceeding "involving in any way the property or property rights" of the corporation, or encumbering or embarrassing the same, the subsequent adoption by the directors of a resolution confessing its insolvency and stating its willingness to be adjudged a bankrupt was a violation of the injunction, and unauthorized, and did not constitute such an admission by the corporation as constitutes an "act of bankruptcy." In re Hudson River Electric Power Co., 173 Fed. 934, 943.

Assignment for benefit of creditors

The owner of a city lot which she had contracted to convey for $50,000 died, leaving the same to the bankrupt, subject to certain legacies. Prior to bankruptcy the bankrupt conveyed the lot to K. to secure a debt due to him, amounting to $17,500, and later assigned to K. "so much" of the bankrupt's interest in the property in excess of the amount due to K. as might be required to pay all the bankrupt's creditors in full, whose claims amounted to $11,000, authorizing K. to use so much of the bankrupt's interest in the property for the payment of the creditors as was necessary for that purpose. Held, that such assignment was not a "general assignment" for the benefit of creditors, under Bankr. Act 1898, § 3, c. 541, making a general assignment for the benefit of creditors an "act of bankruptcy" without any reference to the question of solvency or intent, and was therefore valid. Fidelity Trust Co. v. Kline, 70 Atl. 151, 152, 74 N. J. Eq. 445.

A general assignment for the benefit of creditors, is an "act of bankruptcy." Rogers v. Abbot, 92 N. E. 472, 473, 206 Mass. 270, 138 Am. St. Rep. 394. But to constitute such an act by a corporation, some corporate act purporting to transfer all the corporation's property must at least be shown. In re Federal Lumber Co., 185 Fed. 928, 929.

A "general assignment," constituting an "act of bankruptcy" under the bankrupt act, means the ordinary common-law general assignment made voluntarily by the grantor and those which in many states, being regulated by statute, are known as "statutory general assignments." In re Spalding, 139 Fed. 244, 245, 71 C. C. A. 370.

An assignment of all of a debtor's property to an assignee, to convert into money and apply to the discharge of debts owing to such creditors as assented thereto and agreed to accept the dividend thereunder in full of their claims, is a "general assignment for the benefit of creditors," such as constitutes an "act of bankruptcy" under the bankruptcy act. Courtenay Mercantile Co. v. Finch, Van Slyck & McConville, 194 Fed. 368, 371, 114 C. C. A. 328. An assignment of all of a debtor's property to an assignee to convert into money and apply to the discharge of debts owing to such creditors as assented thereto and agreed to accept the dividends thereunder in full of their claims, is a "general assignment for the benefit of creditors," constituting an "act of bankruptcy" under the bankrupt act; it being unnecessary that the assignment should be valid as to dissenting creditors. In re Courtenay Mercantile Co., 186 Fed. 352, 354.

A stockholders' resolution, authorizing the directors, through a committee, to advertise and sell the corporate property at auction at not less than a stated price, and to pay the corporate debts with proceeds, with power to declare such sale off in a certain contingency, was not a "general assignment," constituting an "act of bankruptcy." In re Hartwell Oil Mills, 165 Fed. 555, 556.

Concealment of property

Under the bankruptcy act, providing that acts of bankruptcy by any person shall consist of having conveyed, transferred, concealed, or removed, or permitted to be concealed or removed, any part of his property with intent to delay or defraud his creditors, or any of them, a petition alleging that the bankrupt did deny and conceal ownership of a particular bank, so that the creditors, by virtue of deposits carried by them in the bank, were, by the acts and declarations of the bankrupt, misled into the belief that the bank belonged to another, and that within four months the petitioner concealed the assets of the bank by turning the same over to the executrices of decedent, to be by them administered as his property, sufficiently alleged concealment of property with intent to defraud creditors, and constituted an "act of bankruptcy." In re Glazier, 195 Fed. 1020, 1021.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 3a (3), 30 Stat. 546 declares that an "act of bankruptcy" occurs when a person has suffered or permitted, while insolvent, any creditor to obtain a preference through legal proceedings, and has not, at least five days before sale or final disposition of any property affected by such preference, vacated or discharged the same. Held, that such provision includes all liens obtained by legal proceedings valid under state laws. In re Crafts-Riordon Shoe Co., 185 Fed. 931, 932. The consummation of an "act of bankruptcy" under the statute is not the date of an actual sale of the bankrupt's property under an execution; the act being completed five days before the day of such sale if at that time the bankrupt had failed to dissolve the levy. In re National Hotel & Café Co., 138 Fed. 947, 948. Failure of an insolvent to discharge a preference obtained by a creditor by the recovery of a judgment and the levy of an execution thereunder at least five days before the sale of the property levied on constitutes an "act of bankruptcy" within the above-cited statute, although no affirmative action was taken by the debtor to aid the creditor in securing such preference. In re Rung Furniture Co., 139 Fed. 526, 527, 71 C. C. A. 342. But merely suffering an attachment or execution to be levied is not an "act of bankruptcy"; failure to discharge the lien of the execution before it becomes an indissoluble preference and an imminent probability that the lien will ripen into such preference being essential. In re R. L. Radke Co., 193 Fed. 735, 738; In re Vetterman, 130 Fed. 443, 444.

An attachment having been levied on the property of an alleged bankrupt, petitioner's intestate executed an officer's receipt and obtained the property as the debtor's surety, which he then delivered to the debtor, taking a mortgage note as security. After waiting until four months from the date of attachment had almost expired, the surety filed a petition in bankruptcy against the debtor, because he had not removed the attachment. Held, that the debtor's failure did not constitute an "act of bankruptcy"; it not appearing that there had been any sale or final disposition of the property. In re Windt, 177 Fed. 584, 586. But by failing to file a voluntary petition in bankruptcy to vacate an attachment lien before expiration of four months after the attachment one does commit an "act of bankruptcy." In re Putman, 193 Fed. 464, 473.

Where a validly created and subsisting lien for more than four months before the filing of a petition in involuntary bankruptcy of the debtor is enforced within the statutory four months and while the debtor is insolvent, the mere failure of the debtor, while insolvent, to vacate or discharge the lien within the statutory period, and at least five days before a sale or final disposition of the property affected, does not constitute an "act of bankruptcy," within the bankruptcy act since priority obtained by reason of the lien is obtained when the lien attaches. Colston v. Austin Run Mining Co., 194 Fed. 929, 934, 114 C. C. A. 565.

Misappropriation of corporate assets

A petition in involuntary bankruptcy showed an "act of bankruptcy" under the bankruptcy act, by transferring assets to hinder or defraud creditors, where it alleged that, within four months before the petition was filed, the bankrupt permitted its sole stockholders to appropriate portions of its property to their own use. In re R. L. Radke Co., 193 Fed. 735, 738.

Preferences

The giving of a mortgage by an insolvent, subsequently and within four months adjudged a bankrupt, to secure money borrowed at the time for the purpose of preferring certain of his creditors, where the lender knew or had reason to believe that such was his purpose, was an "act of bankruptcy," under the bankruptcy act. In re P'ease, 129 Fed. 446, 447. A mortgage made by an insolvent, and recorded within four months prior to the filing of a petition in bankruptcy against him, if given with intent to prefer a creditor, constitutes an "act of bankruptcy." In re Edelman, 130 Fed. 700, 701, 65 C. C. A. 665.

Where an insolvent after the return of a verdict against him in legal action, but before the entry of judgment, executed a mortgage to a creditor to secure the debt, the preference thus given over the judgment creditor is presumed to have been intentional so as to be an "act of bankruptcy." In re Smith, 176 Fed. 426, 429.

The fact that an application by an insolvent corporation to a state court for the appointment of a receiver for its property was not authorized by the laws of the state does not prevent such application from constituting an "act of bankruptcy." To constitute an "act of bankruptcy" it is not essential that the application should be made on the ground of insolvency, at least where the application is by a corporation for the purpose of winding up its affairs and liquidating its indebtedness. Exploration Mercantile Co. v. Pacific Hardware & Steel Co., 177 Fed. 825, 834, 101 C. C. A. 39. But appointment of a receiver on the ground that defendant had conveyed property and was threatening to make further conveyances in fraud of the plaintiff's rights did not constitute an "act of bankruptcy" on the part of the defendant as one made under the laws of the state "because of insolvency," within the meaning of the bankruptcy act, there being in fact no statute of the state conferring power on a court to appoint a receiver for the property of an individual on the ground of insolvency. In re Spalding, 139 Fed. 244, 245, 71 C. C. A. 370.

While it is not an "act of bankruptcy," for which a firm may be adjudged a bankrupt, that one of its members, out of his individual estate, prefers one of his own, or one of the firm's, creditors, a member who applies his whole separate estate to the payment of a creditor of the firm commits an "act of bankruptcy," which may be made the basis of a petition by other firm creditors to have him individually adjudged a bankrupt. Mills v. J. H. Fisher & Co., 159 Fed. 897, 899, 87 C. C. A. 77, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 656.

Payments made by bankrupts to advertising agents to keep the bankrupts in business, not larger than payments which their firm had been previously making, could not be regarded as "acts of bankruptcy." A transfer of a partner's interest in an insolvent firm to the continuing partner for his note for $200, the transaction amounting merely to a formal way of retiring, the partner's interest, which was of no value, was not a fraud on the individual partner's creditors and did not constitute an individual "act of bankruptcy"; nor did the continuing partner's preference of firm creditors by the payment of firm assets, the firm being insolvent. In re Perlhefter, 177 Fed. 299, 302.

A preferential payment by a bankrupt while insolvent, first disclosed at the reference before the master some seven months after its occurrence, was unavailable as an "act of bankruptcy." In re Perlhefter, 177 Fed. 299, 302. And there must have been an actual fraudulent intention which impeaches the bona fides of the transaction. In re McLoon, 162 Fed. 575, 576.

Transfer of property by a debtor with intent to prefer creditors does not constitute an "act of bankruptcy," unless he is insolvent. In re Kassel, 195 Fed. 492, 115 C. A. 402. Two things are essential: First, that the alleged bankrupt has transferred a portion of his property to one or more creditors with intent to prefer such creditors; second, that such transfer was made while the alleged bankrupt was insolvent—and these two must concur. In re American Pub. Co., 79 Pac. 762, 763, 15 Okl. 177.

A solvent debtor who mortgages his stock in trade to secure a debt, and who permits his secured creditor to obtain a preference through legal proceedings, does not commit an "act of bankruptcy" within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 3, subds. 2, 3, 30 Stat. 546, making insolvency of the debtor at the time of the transfer with intent to prefer a creditor over others or at the time he permits a creditor to obtain a preference through legal proceedings essential to constitute acts of bankruptcy, and a petition to revise an order denying an involuntary petition in bankruptcy based on such acts is properly denied, where it shows the solvency of the alleged bankrupt at the time of the mortgage and preference. Johansen Bros. Shoe Co. v. Alles, 197 Fed. 274, 277, 116 C. C. A. 636.

A conveyance or transfer of property by a debtor with intent to hinder, delay or defraud his creditors, or any of them, constitutes an "act of bankruptcy," although he may have been solvent when the conveyance or transfer was made. In re Larkin, 168 Fed. 100, 101.

The payment by an insolvent saloon-keeper, at various times within four months prior to the filing of a petition in involuntary bankruptcy against him, of considerable sums of money to two creditors, in part on account of current expenses of his business and in part on account of antecedent debts, while another large creditor was paid nothing during such time, constituted an "act of bankruptcy." In re Foley, 140 Fed. 300, 302. Where a verbal agreement under which a bank held a debtor's deed was ineffective, the grantor, by permitting it to remain in the bank's possession with power to use it as an effective muniment of title, when in fact it had only the naked legal title, was attempting a constructive fraud on his other creditors, and the transaction constituted an "act of bankruptcy." In re Donnelly, 193 Fed. 755, 761.

Where a debtor, while solvent, made an equitable assignment of insurance policies to be issued as security for certain loans then made to him, but failed to make an actual delivery and assignment of the policies to the creditor until after loss, when he was insolvent, the assignment thereof at that time did not constitute an "act of bankruptcy," as a transfer of his property while insolvent with intent to prefer certain of his creditors. Wilder v. Watts, 138 Fed. 426, 433, 434.

The lending of money to a contractor by his surety to pay labor claims, and the taking of security therefor, at a time when the contractor was insolvent and within four months prior to his bankruptcy, constituted an "act of bankruptcy." United Surety Co. v. Iowa Mfg. Co., 179 Fed. 55, 58, 102 C. C. A. 623.

Receivership or Trusteeship

The provision in the bankruptcy act that an "act of bankruptcy" takes place when, because of insolvency, a receiver or trustee has been put in charge of a person's property under the laws of the state, is not limited to cases in which a receiver or trustee has been appointed under the laws of the state providing for administration of insolvents' estates. The appointment of a receiver in a judgment creditor's suit against an alleged bankrupt in a state court, because of the debtor's insolvency, among other things, constituted an "act of bankruptcy." In re Spalding, 134 Fed. 507, 508.

The last-mentioned provision of the bankruptcy act does not mean exclusively that a trustee must have been put in charge by order of a court, but embraces as well a case where liquidating trustees have been elected by an insolvent company or corporation, as provided by the statute under which it is organized. In re Hercules Atkin Co., 133 Fed. 813, 815. And a corporation organized under the laws of Connecticut commits an "act of bankruptcy," where, because of its insolvency, its stockholders sign an agreement for its dissolution, pursuant to Pub. Acts Conn. 1903, pp. 160, 161, c. 184, §§ 29-34, and transferring its property to its directors, as trustees, to wind up its affairs. In re C. H. Bennett Shoe Co., 140 Fed. 687, 688.

Proceedings in a state court wherein receivers for an alleged insolvent corporation were appointed by consent of both parties constituted an "act of bankruptcy." In re Pickens Mfg. Co., 158 Fed. 894, 895.

The appointment by a state court of a receiver for an insolvent domestic corporation at the suit of a stockholder is an "act of bankruptcy." Roberts Cotton Oil Co. v. F. E. Morse & Co., 135 S. W. 334, 337, 97 Ark. 513. But an appointment was held not to constitute an "act of bankruptcy" by a corporation, where winding up of the corporate affairs was not asked, and it did not appear that the appointment was made because of insolvency. In re Boston & Oaxaca Min. Co., 181 Fed. 422.

An order of a state court appointing a receiver for a corporation on a petition charging insolvency does not constitute an "act of bankruptcy," where by an amendment of the order of the state court made after the filing of the petition in bankruptcy it appears that it was not made on a finding of insolvency within the meaning of the bankruptcy act. In re Golden Malt Cream Co., 164 Fed. 326, 328, 90 C. C. A. 258.

Where a suit in equity was brought by creditors to wind up a corporation and for the appointment of a receiver, the bill alleging that it was unable to meet its obligations as they matured and that it would be to the advantage of creditors and stockholders that its affairs be wound up, but that it was solvent, the filing of an answer by the corporation, admitting such allegations and joining in the request for a receiver, did not constitute an "act of bankruptcy." In re Edward Ellsworth Co., 173 Fed. 699, 701.

A resolution adopted by the board of directors of a corporation authorizing an attorney to represent the corporation generally in any bankruptcy proceedings pending or that may be brought, and in his discretion to agree to the appointment of receivers, did not constitute an "act of bankruptcy" on the part of the corporation. In re Southern Steel Co., 169 Fed. 702, 705.

The superior court of Massachusetts is a court of general equity jurisdiction, and if it exceeded its jurisdiction in appointing a receiver on account of insolvency, the excess was of the kind remediable only by appeal, and would not render the proceedings void, so that the appointment of a receiver by such superior court for that reason was sufficient to constitute an "act of bankruptcy." Beatty v. Anderson Coal Min. Co., 150 Fed. 293, 295, 80 C. C. A. 181.

ACT OF GOD

See Vis Major.

An "act of God" is that which is occasioned exclusively by the violence of nature; by that kind of force of the elements which human ability could not have foreseen or prevented. It is an act of nature which implies entire exclusion of all human agency. It is called a disaster with which the agency of man has nothing to do. It is defined to be a natural necessity which could not have been occasioned by the interference of man, but proceeds from physical causes alone. Kuhn v. Lewis River Boom & Logging Co., 98 Pac. 655, 51 Wash. 196 (quoting 1 Words and Phrases, p. 118).

What is known in law as the "act of God" is an accident or unexpected occurrence, due directly and exclusively to natural causes, without human intervention; the resulting injury or damage not having been produced or contributed to by the hand of man. If a resulting injury is in part produced by the wrongful or negligent act of any person, such person will be held liable therefor. Amend v. Lincoln & N. W. R. Co., 135 N. W. 235, 236, 91 Neb. 1 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 118). "Extraordinary floods, storms of unusual violence, sudden tempests, severe frosts, great drought, lightning, earthquakes, sudden death, and illness have been held to be 'acts of God.'" American Locomotive Co. v. Hoffman, 54 S. E. 25, 27, 105 Va. 343, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 252, 8 Ann. Cas. 773; Southern Ry. Co. In Kentucky v. Smith, 102 S. W. 232, 233, 125 Ky. 656.

A carrier of live stock is not liable for injury thereto resulting from the "act of God," which term includes weather conditions. McCampbell, Figg & Burnett v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 150 S. W. 987, 988, 150 Ky. 723.

Inevitable or unavoidable accident

In Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Hall, 52 S. E. 679, 683, 684, 124 Ga. 322, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 898, 110 Am. St. Rep. 170, 4 Ann. Cas. 128, the court discusses at great length the definition of "act of God," and the distinction between an "act of God" and an "unavoidable accident," but without arriving at any conclusion of its own, except that, to relieve a carrier from liability on the ground that the injury was caused by an act of God, the carrier must itself be free from any fault contributing to the injury. In the course of the discussion the court makes the following citations: Forward v. Pittard, 1 Term. R. 27-33; Pandorf v. Hamilton, L. R. 17 Q. B. 670; Nugent v. Smith, L. R. 1 Com. Pl. Div. 423 et seq.; Hays v. Kennedy, 41 Pa. 378, 80 Am. Dec. 627; Coggs v. Bernard, 1 Smith's Lead. Cas. (8th Ed.) 422 et seq.; Stroud's Jud. Dict.; Bouv. Dec. 394; Broom's Legal Maxims (8th Ed.) 229, 230. The term comprehends inevitable accident, without the interference of man and public enemies. Cain v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 54 S. E. 244, 247, 74 S. C. 89; Lehman, Stern & Co. v. Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. Co., 38 South. 873, 874, 115 La. 1, 70 L. R. A. 562, 112 Am. St. Rep. 259, 5 Ann. Cas. 818.

An "act of God" within Act March 4, 1907, c. 2939, § 3, 34 Stat. 1415, exempting railway companies from penalty for permitting employes to work overtime in case of "act of God," etc., is something which occurs exclusively by the violence of nature, and is an act which implies entire exclusion of all human agencies. United States v. Kansas City Southern R. Co., 189 Fed. 471, 476 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, pp. 118-126).

Rev. Civ. Code 1870, art. 2754, makes carriers liable for loss of goods carried unless they can prove that such loss was occasioned by "accidental and uncontrollable events." The court says that it seems these words were used in the same sense as "cas fortuit," "force majeure," or "fortuitous event," as defined in Code 1825, which was that which happens by a cause or force which we cannot resist, and the "force majeure" or "superior force" is an accident which human prudence can neither foresee nor prevent. These various phrases are held to be the equivalent of the common-law phrase "the act of God," and the holding is that a carrier is liable unless he can show that the loss was occasioned by an "act of God," as used in that sense. The words are also the equivalent of "inevitable accident" by which, according to Story on Bailments, "is meant any accident produced by any physical cause which is irresistible, such as loss by lightning or storms, by perils of the seas, by an inundation or earthquake, or by sudden death or illness. By 'irresistible force' is meant such an interposition of human agency as is, from its nature and power, absolutely uncontrollable." The words "accident per se" mean an unforeseen and unexpected event, and the word "uncontrollable" further qualifies the event as one which cannot be restrained or prevented. Lehman, Stern & Co. v. Morgan's Louisiana & T. R. & S. S. Co., 38 South. 873, 874, 115 La. 1, 70 L. R. A. 562, 112 Am. St. Rep. 259, 5 Ann. Cas. 818.

As irresistible, superhuman cause

Loss by "act of God" is such irresistible disaster as results from natural causes, and is in no sense attributable to human agency. McKinley v. C. Jutte & Co., 79 Atl. 244, 245, 230 Pa. 122, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 452; Ohlen v. Atlanta & W. P. R. Co., 58 S. E. 511-515, 2 Ga. App. 323.

By the term "act of God" is meant those events and accidents which proceed from natural causes and cannot be anticipated and guarded against or resisted, such as unprecedented storms or freshets, lightning, earthquake, etc. City of McCook v. McCook Adams, 106 N. W. 988, 989, 76 Neb. 1.

An "act of God" is such inevitable accident as cannot be prevented by human care, skill, or foresight, and results from natural causes such as lightning, floods, etc. Klair v. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. (Del.) 78 Atl. 1085, 1096; Carpenter v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 64 Atl. 252, 253, 6 Pennewill (Del.) 15 (quoting and adopting definition in McHenry v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. [Del.] 4 Har. 448).

An "act of God" comprehends all misfortunes and accidents arising from unavoidable necessity and which human prudence cannot foresee and prevent. Illness, being beyond the power of man to control or prevent, is an "act of God," and where a person is afflicted with consumption he is warrant-

As without negligence

"Loss by the 'act of God' may be said to include all losses resulting immediately from natural causes, without the intervention of man, and which cannot be foreseen and prevented by the exercise of prudence, diligence, and care, and the use of those appliances which the situation of the party renders it reasonable that he should employ." Southern Ry. Co. in Kentucky v. Smith, 102 S. W. 232, 233, 125 Ky. 656 (quoting and adopting the definition in 5 Thomp. Neg. § 6456).

Where a carrier retained in its possession cotton received for transportation for a period of 11 days, without forwarding the same, and on the eleventh day the cotton was destroyed by a cyclone, which practically destroyed the town from which the cotton was to be shipped, the carrier was guilty of negligence in failing to transport the cotton within a reasonable time, and was therefore precluded from claiming that the cotton was destroyed by an "act of God" in defense of an action for loss thereof. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Quarles & Couturie, 40 South. 120, 121, 145 Ala. 436, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 867, 117 Am. St. Rep. 54, 8 Ann. Cas. 308.

Destruction by public authorities

Destruction of a building by municipal authorities on the ground that it was not safe did not constitute an "act of God," within a provision in a lease that, in case the building on the leased premises should be destroyed or rendered untenable by the "elements or act of God," the lessor should rebuild the same. Kirby v. Wylie, 70 Atl. 213, 215, 108 Me. 501, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 129, 129 Am. St. Rep. 451.

Fire

Fire is not "an act of God." Keeling v. Schastey & Vollmer, 124 Pac. 445, 446, 18 Cal. App. 764; McKinley v. C. Jutte & Co., 79 Atl. 244, 245, 230 Pa. 122, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 452.

Floods

The term "act of God," as applicable to floods, applies only to events in nature so extraordinary that the history of climatic variations and other conditions in the particular locality affords no reasonable warning of them. Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. v. Mitchell, 52 South. 69, 72, 167 Ala. 226.

Where the overflow of an artificial canal into which a city has diverted a natural stream is caused by a rainfall so unprecedented and extraordinary as to have been beyond reasonable anticipation and such as had not been known to occur for a long series of years, the damage is held in law to have been caused by the "act of God," and no liability attaches to any one therefor; but where the rainfall has irregularly and infrequently occurred several times in a particular locality within the memory of man, and each time has caused heavy freshets, it is a thing which can reasonably be expected to occur again, and hence is not to be classed as the "act of God," so as to discharge the city from liability for the insufficiency of the canal to carry the volume of water. Willson v. Boise City, 117 Pac. 115, 116, 20 Idaho, 133, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1158.

The threatened inundation of a carrier's tracks from an impending and unprecedented flood of water, which finally culminated in great disaster to railroads and shipments, and interrupted all kinds of transportations for several days, could properly be called an "act of God," and afforded sufficient excuse for a carrier's refusal to accept goods for shipment. Gray v. Wabash R. Co., 95 S. W. 983, 985, 119 Mo. App. 144.

Freezing

Cold weather in the month of December is not an "act of God" which will excuse a live stock carrier from performance of its contract. Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Cogglin & Dunaway, 99 S. W. 1052, 1053, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 423.

Hurricane

Under hire of a vessel to carry any lawful merchandise, including petroleum and its products, between specified ports, including Atlantic ports of North and South America and the West Indies, a hurricane in Jamaica, and the hirer's consequent inability to procure merchantable fruit for carriage, did not constitute an "act of God," excusing the hirer from liability for the charter hire. Monsen v. American Importing & Transportation Co., 97 N. E. 891, 211 Mass. 387.

Perils of the sea

"Perils of the sea" is sometimes construed as equivalent to an 'act of God'; but it has grown to have a wider signification and the expression is generally construed to denote those accidents at sea peculiar to navigation arising from irresistible forces or overwhelming power, which do not happen by the intervention of man, and cannot be guarded against by the ordinary exertions of human skill and prudence." Cook v. Southeastern Lime & Cement Co., 146 Fed. 101, 102.

Rain

"Nothing less than a fortuitous gathering of circumstances preventing the performance of a duty as could not have been foreseen or overcome by the exercise of reasonable prudence, care, and diligence constitutes an 'act of God' which will excuse the discharge of the duty." Rain overflowing the roadbed of a railroad, washing away part of its embankment from under the cross-ties, cannot be considered an "act of God," so as to relieve the railroad from liability for failure to furnish drainage to properly carry away the water, unless so far outside the range of human experience that the duty of exercising reasonable care did not require the railroad to anticipate and provide against it. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Boyce, 87 S. W. 395, 397, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 195.

Snow

"A snowstorm of such violence as to prevent the moving of trains is an 'act of God.'" Black v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 46 N. W. 423, 430, 30 Neb. 197; Ward v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co., 137 N. W. 995, 92 Neb. 183.

Snow fell in defendant's railroad yards to a level depth of almost a foot, and was blown by an unusually high wind into drifts three to five feet high, which became packed around the switch points, so that they could not be operated, and defendant, though it worked a large number of extra men in the yards throughout the night, was unable to clean out the switches so as to permit trains to move, and the train on which a passenger arrived that evening was stalled some 600 feet or more from the depot. The tracks and yards were in perfect condition and capable of being used if not obstructed by snow and ice. Held, that the obstruction by the snowstorm was an "act of God," so as to relieve defendant from liability to the passenger for nondelivery. Cormack v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 90 N. E. 56, 57, 196 N. Y. 442, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1209, 17 Ann. Cas. 949.

Storm

A storm which could not have been guarded against by any care reasonably to be expected is an "act of God." Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Texas Star Flour Mills (Tex.) 143 S. W. 1179, 1182.

ACT OF NEGLIGENCE

See Negligent.

ACT OF OWNERSHIP

See Fitful Acts of Ownership.

Exercise of "acts of ownership" of land means inclosure, cultivation, and the like. McLeod v. Lloyd, 71 Pac. 795, 799, 43 Or. 280 (citing Garner v. Marshall, 9 Cal. 268).

ACT OF SIMPLE TOLERATION

"Acts of simple toleration," within the law of adverse possession, "are those which a good neighbor tolerates, although infringing upon his rights as owner, because they are not sufficiently serious to amount to a usurpation in the proper sense of the term and not worth while putting a stop to." In determining title by prescription, it is important to observe the distinction between such acts and acts which are hostile in their character. John T. Moore Planting Co. v. Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co., 53 South. 22, 39, 126 La. 840 (quoting and adopting the definition in Dalloz, Codes Annotes, art. 2232).

ACT OF SUPERINTENDENCE

See Superintendence.

ACT TO BE DONE

The phrase "act to be done," as used in Rev. Codes Mont. § 5653, providing that one who indemnifies another against an act to be done by the latter is liable jointly with the person injured by such act, "implies upon the part of the indemnitee an agreement or obligation to do the act or make the omission constituting the tort, as if the phrase were an act required (or demanded or requested) to be done by the indemnitee; that is, the indemnitor gives a bond, in consideration of which the indemnitee agrees to or is induced to act or refrain from acting, to the injury of a third person." Northam v. Casualty Co. of America, 177 Fed. 981, 984.

ACTE DE NOTORIÉTÉ

An "acte de notoriété" is the deposition of witnesses taken before a notary, establishing the identity and genealogy of a person accompanied by official certificates from the registers of births, marriages, and deaths. Succession of Derigny, 55 South. 552, 553, 128 La. 853.

ACTING JUDGE

In a criminal case, the regular judge of the circuit disqualified himself, and called in another judge who tried the case. The other judge allowed accused until the first day of the next regular term in which to file his bill of exceptions. Previous to that time, his term as judge expired and a successor was elected. Held, that the regular judge who had disqualified himself from trying the case could sign the bill of exceptions already settled and agreed upon as the "acting judge" of the court where the case was heard, under Rev. St. 1899, § 731 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 726), providing that where the judge who heard the case has gone out of office before signing the bill of exceptions, and such bill is agreed to be true by the parties or their attorneys, or shown to the judge to be correct, it shall be signed by the succeeding or acting judge of the court where the case was heard. State v. Morris, 132 S. W. 590, 591, 230 Mo. 631.

A judge appointed to hold a term of court in the absence of the regular judge, who was disabled by sickness, was the "acting judge," with all the powers of the regular judge, and was the proper person to sign a bill of exceptions at the term over which he presided in a case tried before the regular judge at the prior term. Ranney v. Hammond Packing Co., 110 S. W. 613, 614, 132 Mo. App. 324.

ACTS IN AMENDMENT THEREOF

St. 1901, c. 205, which was a special act, entitled "An act relative to the grade crossings of" a railroad and street railway "at Chace's Crossing in the city of Taunton," allowed the street railway company to become a party to consolidated petitions regarding certain crossings, contained full provisions as to the abolition of Chace's Crossing, though none as to others, and concluded: "In all other respects the proceedings under said petitions and the rights of the parties in interest shall be as specified in said chapter 428 and in the acts in amendment thereof and in addition thereto." Held, that the statute meant that the provisions relative to Chace's Crossing should not affect the rights of the parties at other crossings, but that they should be left to be governed by general laws; the words "acts in amendment thereof and in addition thereto" including all general legislation affecting that chapter that had been or might afterwards be enacted, and hence such act did not preclude proceedings under subsequent general laws. In re Crossman, 92 N. E. 1016, 1017, 207 Mass. 58.

ACTS IN AN OFFICIAL FUNCTION

A person employed by the United States as an assistant statistician in the Department of Agriculture, in the performance of the duties with which he is charged by the rules of the department, "Acts for the United States in an official function," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 5451, making it a criminal offense to bribe any such person to induce him to do or to omit to do any act in violation of his lawful duty.—United States v. Haas, 163 Fed. 908, 910.

ACTIO

The Latin "actio," in the civil law, meant both the proceeding to enforce the right and the right itself. Wynn v. Tallapoosa County Bank, 53 South. 228, 237, 168 Ala. 469.

ACTION

Under a provision of the laws of a benefit insurance society that any person feeling aggrieved at the "action" of a council in failing to pay benefits may appeal, the failure of the council to pay a benefit constitutes an "action" from which an appeal may be taken, and does not prevent the beneficiary from appealing, so as to justify an action at law without exhausting this remedy. King v. Wynema Council, No. 10, Daughters of Pocahontas, Improved Order of Red Men of Delaware (Del.) 82 Atl. 1078, 1078.

An "action" is the means that the law has provided to put a cause of action into effect. McAndrews v. Chicago, L. S. & E. Ry. Co., 162 Fed. 856, 858, 89 C. C. A. 546.

An "action" is a means of redress of the legal wrong described by the words "cause of action." Scheuing v. State (Ala.) 59 South. 160, 161.

The word "action" is defined as "a civil proceeding taken in a court of law to enforce a right"; as "the form of a suit given by law for the recovery of that which is one's due; the lawful demand of one's right"; as "the means by which men litigate with each other"; as "the act of three parties, the plaintiff, the defendant, and the court"; as "a demand for or a presentation of one's rights in a court of justice"; and as "the judicial means of enforcing a right." Wynn v. Tallapoosa County Bank, 53 South. 228, 237, 168 Ala. 469.

An "action" is an ordinary proceeding by which one party prosecutes another for the enforcement or protection of a right, the redress of a wrong, or the punishment of a public offense, and there are two kinds of actions, civil and criminal. In re Burnette, 85 Pac. 575, 576, 73 Kan. 609; Maben v. Rosser, 103 Pac. 674, 678, 24 Okl. 588; In re Droege, 90 N. E. 340, 342, 197 N. Y. 44; Harris v. Weiss, 105 N. Y. Supp. 8 (quoting Code Civ. Proc. § 3333). The term includes all the formal proceedings in a court pertaining to the demand of a right made by one party of another. Cape v. Cape, 124 S. W. 869, 136 Ky. 625.

An "action" is a lawful demand of one's right in a court of justice. A "civil action" is a like demand by a person of a civil right. State v. One Bottle of Brandy, 43 Vt. 297; Giant Powder Co. v. Oregon Western Ry. Co., 103 Pac. 501, 502, 54 Or. 325 (quoting 1 Words and Phrases, p. 129); In re Oliver's Guardianship, 83 N. E. 795, 796, 77 Ohio St. 474.

The term "action," as defined by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 3471, 3479, means a proceeding instituted in a court by one or more parties against another or others to enforce or protect a right, to redress or prevent a wrong, or to punish a public offense. State ex rel. Carleton v. District Court of Lewis and Clarke County, 82 Pac. 789, 790, 33 Mont. 138, 8 Ann. Cas. 752.

The term "actions and proceedings," as used in Laws Wis. 1905, c. 295, conferring on the superior court of Lincoln county jurisdiction concurrent with the circuit court in all civil actions and proceedings at law and in equity, with certain exceptions, embraced all exercise of judicial or quasi judicial power of courts, whether conferred by statute, common law, or equitable rules. Wisconsin River Imp. Co. v. Pier, 118 N. W. 857, 859, 137 Wis. 325, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 538.

Rev. Codes 1899, § 5582, provides that when an action has been dismissed for want of jurisdiction, or because not regularly transferred, the costs must be adjudged against the party attempting to institute or bring up the action. Held, that the word "action" was not used in its technical sense, but means any form of proceeding instituted in court. Tracy v. Scott, 101 N. W. 905, 907, 13 N. D. 577.

In section 5623 of the statute (Comp. Laws 1909), which provides that several causes of action may be united in the same petition, where they arise out of the same transaction, or transactions connected with the same subject of action, the term "cause of action" means a redressible wrong. Its elements being the wrong and the relief provided. The "subject of action" is a primary right and its infringement. The term "transaction" is used in the first clause with reference to, and expressive of, all the acts, or groups of related acts, which go to make up one entire project, system, or deal, referred to as a "transaction," and in the latter clause it is used to include and encompass only such acts, or groups of acts, as in themselves constitute separate, redressible wrongs; and such wrongs (transactions) are connected with the same "subject of action" whenever they affect, grow out of, or constitute separate infringements of, the same primary right. Stone v. Case, 124 Pac. 960, 963-966, 34 Okl. 5, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1168.

Rev. St. c. 83, § 94, provides that when a writ fails of sufficient service, etc., or is abated, or the action is otherwise defeated for any matter of form, the plaintiff may commence a new action within six months after the abatement or determination of the original suit. As originally enacted as section 11, c. 62, Laws 1821, it provided that any action which should be actually declared on, and in which the writ purchased therefor should fail of a sufficient service, etc., or when such writ should be abated, or the action avoided by demurrer or otherwise, for informality of proceedings, the plaintiff might commence another action upon the same demand and thereby save the limitation thereof. Section 8 of that chapter provided that any action of the case or debt, etc., which should be actually declared upon in a proper writ, returnable according to law within six years after the cause accrued, should be deemed and taken to be duly commenced within the meaning of that act. Held, that chapter 83, § 94, does not apply to a case where an action was dismissed because the writ was made returnable at a term other than the first term after its issuance, contrary to law, since the word "action," as used in section 11, had the same meaning as in section 8, where it was defined as one declared upon in a proper writ returnable according to law, which meaning has not been changed by any subsequent provision; and while the words "proper writ" did not mean one that could not be abated or defeated for any matter of form, but merely meant one adapted to the cause of action, the words "returnable according to law" were definite and explicit and not subject to judicial construction, and hence the word "writ," as used in section 94, means a writ returnable according to law. Densmore v. Hall, 84 Atl. 983, 985, 100 Me. 438.

The term "action," as used in the rule that the circuit court can, especially by legislative authority, exercise at chambers any power not requiring the trial of an action, strictly so called, does not include proceedings, classed for some purposes with actions, commenced by common-law writs. In re Potter, 112 N. W. 1087, 1089, 133 Wis. 1.

"Actions at law" include those cases where the relief sought consists in the direct recovery of real or personal property, or some amount of money only. Van de Wiele v. Garbade, 120 Pac. 752, 753, 60 Or. 585.

A petition filed under the provisions of Tucker Act March 3, 1887, c. 359, against the United States on a construction contract, is not an "action at law." Connors v. United States, 141 Fed. 16, 18, 72 O. C. A. 272.

Accounting

Proceeding to compel a guardian to account is not an "action" within the statute of limitations, nor do the filing of exceptions to the account by the ward and the hearing thereon constitute an "action" within the statute. Whitfield v. Burrell, 118 S. W. 153, 156, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 567.

An action by persons, who subscribed a bonus to induce defendant to construct and operate a factory, to recover their subscriptions because of breach of defendant's contract, is an "action at law," not a "suit in equity," though an accounting is prayed. Akins v. Hicks, 83 S. W. 75, 109 Mo. App. 95.

Appeal or error

The words "action" and "cause of action" are not ordinarily applicable to writs of error. The right to prosecute a writ of error from a Circuit Court of Appeals without giving security for costs is not given by Act July 20, 1892, providing for the prosecution of suits or "actions" in forma pauperis, as that act does not apply to appellate proceedings. Bradford v. Southern Ry. Co., 25 Sup. Ct. 55, 57, 195 U. S. 243, 49 L. Ed. 178.

Application for writ of review

An application for a writ of review, as authorized by the act entitled "An act regulating special proceedings of a civil nature," is an "action," within Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4793, providing for one form of action for the enforcement of rights, etc., which shall be called a "civil action." State ex rel. Spokane Terminal Co. v. Superior Court for Spokane County, 82 Pac. 878, 879, 40 Wash. 453.

Bastardy proceeding

A prosecution under the Kansas bastardy act responds in all essential respects to the definition of an "action" as found in the statute providing that an action is an ordinary proceeding in a court of justice by which a party prosecutes another party for the enforcement or protection of a right, the redress or prevention of a wrong, or the punishment of a public offense. Poole v. French, 80 Pac. 997, 998, 71 Kan. 391.

Case synonyms

An affidavit of merits on a motion for change of venue read, "Deponent has fully and fairly stated his defense to said 'action' and all the facts relative 'thereto' to his counsel." Held, that "action" is synonymous to "case"; hence the clause should be construed to read, "and all the facts relative to the 'action,' i. e., 'case.'" Larocque

v. Conhaim, 92 N. Y. Supp. 99, 101, 45 Misc. Rep. 234 (citing Bouv. Law Dict. and Black's Law Dict. sub verba "Case").

As cause of action

Code 1907, § 2496, providing that all "actions" on contracts, expressed or implied, and all personal actions, except for injuries to the reputation, survive in favor of and against the personal representatives, does not include "causes of action" or "rights of action." Wynn v. Tallapoosa County Bank, 53 South. 228, 237, 168 Ala. 469.

Condemnation proceedings

Correction of judgment

Rev. St. 1895, art. 3358, provides that every action, other than for the recovery of real estate, for which no limitation is otherwise prescribed, shall be brought within four years after the right to bring the same shall have accrued. Held, that the word "action" meant the prosecution of some demand in a court of justice, including all proceedings taken in such a court to fix a right given either by statute or substantive law, and therefore included a proceeding to correct a clerical error in a judgment previously rendered in the same court. Rogers v. Waggoner (Tex.) 149 S. W. 561, 562.

Criminal prosecution

Local Option Law § 16, authorizes criminal prosecutions for violations thereof. Section 19 provides for a civil action for damages against violators. Section 13 provides that all actions brought and all right of actions accrued before a repeal of the law shall remain and continue to exist as if no repeal had taken place. Held, that "action" includes both civil and criminal actions, and hence that a sentence imposed after such repeal on a person previously convicted was not invalid. In re Adler, 136 N. W. 1120, 1121, 171 Mich. 263.

The word "actions," as used in Gen. St. 1901, § 1261, requiring a foreign corporation to file its consent that actions may be commenced against it by service of process on the Secretary of State, includes both civil and criminal actions as defined by sections 4431-4436. State v. International Harvester Co. of America, 99 Pac. 603, 604, 79 Kan. 371.

"Actions," as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 3237, authorizing fees to a prosecuting attorney for judgments upon any proceedings of a criminal nature otherwise than by indictment or information for his services in all actions which it shall be made a duty by law to prosecute or defend, means suits in court upon which judgment may be rendered, and does not authorize the payment of a fee for his attendance at the preliminary examination in felony cases. Hill v. Butler County, 94 S. W. 518, 519, 195 Mo. 511.

Disbarment proceedings

A proceeding in the circuit court to disbar an attorney is not an "action," within Pub. Acts 1905, p. 484, No. 318, providing that, whenever in any action at law in the circuit court the issue raised on a demurrer shall be decided adversely to the demurrant, the decision may be reviewed forthwith by certiorari. In re Radford, 123 N. W. 546, 547, 159 Mich. 91.

Election contest

A proceeding to contest an election is not an "action at law," but is a purely statutory proceeding unknown to the common law, and therefore one in which a writ of error is not a writ of right, and the only method of bringing the record to the Supreme Court for review is an appeal, as provided in the election law. Devous v. Gallatin County, 91 N. E. 102, 103, 244 Ill. 40, 18 Ann. Cas. 422.

Equity proceedings

B. & C. Comp. § 4946, authorizing the district attorney to maintain an "action" against a lessee of a county road to have the lease declared forfeited for failure to comply with its provisions, does not limit the attorney to an "action at law" but he may sue in equity to cancel the lease. In a legal sense "action," "suit," and "cause of action" are convertible terms. Tillamook County v. Wilson River Road Co., 89 Pac. 958, 959, 49 Or. 309 (citing Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall. 2, 18 L. Ed. 281; and Anderson's and Bouvier's Law Dictionaries).

An action to set aside a fraudulent deed as a cloud on plaintiff's title, is not an "action," within Ky. St. 1903, § 11, authorizing a person owning and in possession of land to institute an equitable action to quiet his title, though the object is the same and plaintiff's possession is not a prerequisite. Cawood v. Howard (Ky.) 113 S. W. 109, 110.

A decree of dismissal, without prejudice to any "action at law," rendered by a federal court on sustaining a demurrer to the complaint in equity on the ground that plaintiff was not entitled to the relief prayed for, is a bar to a subsequent suit in a state court setting up a like equitable cause of action; the quoted words meaning a cause of action at law, notwithstanding the Code abolishes different forms of action. Smith v. Cowell, 92 Pac. 20, 22, 41 Colo. 178.

The word "action," in Rev. Laws, c. 13, § 32, conferring on the tax collector authority to collect a tax by maintaining an "action" in his own name against the person assessed therefor in the same manner as for his own debt, is used in its comprehensive sense as meaning the pursuit of a right in the courts of justice, without regard to the form of legal proceedings, and not in the narrow signification in which it is sometimes employed to indicate a specific remedy at law, and a tax collector may sue in equity to enforce a trust for unpaid taxes created by a common-law assignment for the benefit of creditors in trust for preferred claims including taxes. City of Boston v. Turner, 87 N. E. 634, 637, 201 Mass. 190 (citing Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264-407, 5 L. Ed. 257; Valentine v. City of Boston, 37 Mass. [20 Pick.] 201; Inhabitants of Bridgton v. Bennett, 23 Me. 420-425). That Code 1906, § 4258, provides for a recovery of taxes by "action," does not confine the remedy to courts of law, in view of sections 4738, 4742, and 4743, giving the revenue agent authority to sue in either a court of law or equity. Delta & Pine Land Co. v. Adams, 48 South. 190, 194, 93 Miss. 340.

Forcible entry

The action of forcible entry is an "action at law," authorized by Ind. T. Ann. St. 1899, c. 28. Sharrock v. Krelger, 98 S. W. 161, 164, 6 Ind. T. 468.

Foreclosure of lien or contract

The attempt of a foreign corporation, assignee of a chattel mortgage, to foreclose it in this state by proceedings commenced under the agreement for sale contained in the mortgage, or by a proceeding not commenced in a court of justice, but under the statute, whereby the property is to be taken and sold at public auction by a public officer, who is to make return of his doings and dispose of the proceeds as required by statute and so end the proceedings, is not available to an individual under the statute preventing the corporation from maintaining an "action" in this state on a contract made here, since the proceeding to foreclose the mortgage is not an action, within the meaning of the statute; the word "action" meaning the demand of a right in a court of justice. Herald & Globe Ass'n v. Clere Clothing Co. (Vt.) 84 Atl. 23, 26.

The word "action," defined by Rev. Code Civ. Proc. § 12, as being an ordinary proceeding in a court of justice by which a party prosecutes another party for the enforcement or protection of a right, the redress or prevention of a wrong, or the punishment of a public offense, does not include a proceeding to foreclose a mortgage by advertisement, because no right is litigated between the parties, nor is the power of a court of law or equity invoked. Stevens v. Osgood, 100 N. W. 161, 18 S. D. 247 (citing Hall v. Bartlett [N. Y.] 9 Barb. 297).

Mandamus

"A mandamus proceeding is regarded as an 'action' respecting the right to costs; the relator for that purpose being treated as the party plaintiff." State ex rel. Wunderlich v. Kalkofen, 113 N. W. 1091, 1093, 134 Wis. 74.

An independent proceeding commenced by an original writ, such as mandamus, is an "action" under St. 1898, § 2595. State ex rel. Milwaukee Medical College v. Chittenden, 107 N. W. 500, 507, 127 Wis. 468. A proceeding by mandamus to compel public officers to perform an official act is an "action," within Rev. St. 1898, § 2918, which provides that costs shall be allowed of course to the plaintiff in an action in the circuit court on a recovery in certain specified cases, and section 2920, which declares that costs shall be allowed of course to the defendant in the actions mentioned in the two preceding sections, unless the plaintiff was entitled to costs therein. State ex rel. Risch v. Board of Trustees of Policemen's Pension Fund, 98 N. W. 954, 959, 121 Wis. 44.

A mandamus proceeding is a special proceeding, and not an "action," under Rev. Codes 1905, §§ 6741-6743, and is not triable de novo on appeal; section 7229 allowing a new trial only in actions. State v. Fabrick, 112 N. W. 74, 75, 16 N. D. 94.

Mandamus will not lie to reinstate a resident to membership in a foreign corporation doing no business in the state, though Code Civ. Proc. § 1780, allows him to maintain an "action" against it; a proceeding for mandamus being a special proceeding, and not an action. People ex rel. Ruman v. National Slavonic Society of United States of America, 129 N. Y. Supp. 603, 604, 144 App. Div. 574.

Motion for judgment

A motion by a lessor for a judgment for rent is an "action at law," within Code 1887, § 3299 (Va. Code 1904, p. 1740), authorizing defendant in an action on a contract to file a plea of set-off. Newport News & O. P. Ry. & Electric Co. v. Bickford, 52 S. E. 1011-1013, 105 Va. 182 (citing Reed & McCormick v. Gold, 45 S. E. 868, 102 Va. 37).

Objections to bankrupt's discharge

A creditor who objects to the discharge of a bankrupt may prosecute his objections in forma pauperis, by virtue of Act July 20, 1892, c. 209, which gives any citizen entitled to commence "any 'suit' or 'action' in any court of the United States" such right on making the required showing. Objections to a bankrupt's discharge are the beginning of a distinct and separate dispute, and fall within the accepted definition of a "suit" or an "action." In re Guilbert, 154 Fed. 676, 677 (citing Words and Phrases, ad verba).

Partition

A proceeding for leave to issue execution on a judgment charging land with owelty in partition is an "action," within the statute of limitations. Ex parte Smith, 47 S. E. 16, 18, 134 N. C. 495.

Probate and administration proceedings

A suit to contest a will is an "action at law" within the rule that the Supreme Court will not weigh conflicting evidence to determine whether the jury found against the weight of the evidence, but will only examine the record to show if there was any evidence to support the verdict. Sayre v. Trustees of Princeton University, 90 S. W. 787, 794, 192 Mo. 95.

Gen. St. 1901, § 4432, defines an "action" as an ordinary proceeding in a court of justice by which a party prosecutes another party for the enforcement or protection of a right, the redress or prevention of a wrong, or the punishment of a public offense. Section 4771 provides that a husband and wife shall be incompetent to testify for or against each other, except concerning transactions in which one acted as the agent of the other, or when they are joint parties and have joint interest in the action. Held, that section 4771 does not disqualify a husband from testifying before the probate court in a proceeding to establish a will in which his wife is named as a legatee; the proceedings before the probate court not being an "action." Lanning v. Gay, 78 Pac. 810, 70 Kan. 353.

An action under Code Civ. Proc. § 2653a, to set aside the probate of a will, is not an "action" within sections 3228, 3229, relating to costs, but is within section 3230, authorizing the court in its discretion to award costs to any party, and the court may award costs to any litigant, including the unsuccessful plaintiff. Senter v. Petheram, 118 N. Y. Supp. 347, 348, 64 Misc. Rep. 294.

Under Ky. St. § 469, declaring "action," as used in the statutes, to include all proceedings in any court of the commonwealth, and section 2522, providing that an action for relief not otherwise provided for can only be commenced within ten years from its accrual, a proceeding to probate a nonresident's will must be commenced within ten years after testator's death, regardless of whether the will was previously probated in the state of testator's domicile, in the absence of any statute expressly limiting the time within which wills may be probated, since the probating of a will, if not an "action," is at least a proceeding to obtain relief. Foster v. Jordan, 113 S. W. 490, 492, 130 Ky. 445.

Gen. St. 1902, § 705, providing that, in actions by or against the representatives of deceased persons, the entries, memoranda, and declarations of the deceased relevant to the matters in issue may be received in evidence, the word "actions" as so used should be construed to include a judicial settlement of executors' accounts, so that, on an objection that one of the executors had not charged in the account as an asset of the estate an indebtedness alleged to be owing by him to the testator, declarations of the testator in his lifetime with reference to the executor's indebtedness to him were admissible. Mulcahy v. Mulcahy, 81 Atl. 242, 243, 84 Conn. 659.

A proceeding by the sheriff in the county court to require the personal representatives of a deceased taxpayer to list property omitted from assessment, is not an "action" within the meaning of the statute prohibiting the bringing of any action, other than to settle the estate, against a decedent's estate within six months of the qualification of its personal representative; but the proceeding is merely a manner of assessing property, and is not in essence judicial. Commonwealth ex rel. Cummins v. Ryan's Ex'r, 104 S. W. 727, 728, 126 Ky. 649.

A petition filed in 1894 by a ward for the appointment of an auditor to state an account against a deceased guardian resulting in an adjudication against the guardian's estate, and a sale of realty by order of the orphans' court, entered in 1900, to pay the indebtedness, is not an "action" within Act Feb. 24, 1834 (P. L. 77) § 24, providing that no debts of a decedent, except those secured by mortgage or judgment, shall remain a lien on the realty longer than five years after his decease, unless an action therefor be commenced and duly prosecuted against his personal representatives within five years after his decease; and hence no title passed under the sale in question. Smith v. Ribblett, 82 Atl. 245, 246, 233 Pa. 300.

Proceeding distinguishable

A "proceeding" is not an "action," as the term is used in the Code of Civil Procedure, to which no such thing as a proceeding is known, so that a demurrer on the ground of another "proceeding" pending between the same parties for the same cause raises no question of law. Queens County Water Co. v. O'Brien, 115 N. Y. Supp. 495, 499, 131 App. Div. 91.

Provisional remedies

A proceeding to secure a temporary restraining order and for the appointment of a receiver is not an "action," within Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 4202, providing that "an action is an ordinary proceeding in a court of justice by which a party prosecutes another party for the enforcement or protection of a right, the redress or prevention of a wrong, or the punishment of a public offense." Martin v. Harnage, 110 Pac. 781, 782, 26 Okl. 790, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 228.

Scire facias

A proceeding by scire facias to correct a judgment, the entry of which omitted to show that it was against a certain party for a certain sum, is not an "action" to correct a judgment within Rev. St. 1895, art. 3358, providing that every action other than for the recovery of realty for which no limitations are otherwise prescribed shall be brought within four years next after the right to bring same shall have accrued. Coleman v. Zapp (Tex.) 151 S. W. 1040, 1042.

There can be no doubt that scire facias has been regarded in law as an "action" or suit. McLellan v. Lunt, 14 Me. 254, 258 (citing Co. Litt. 291, a; St. 4 and 5 Anne, c. 16, § 17; St. 53 Geo. III. c. 127, § 5).

A proceeding upon a writ of scire facias to revive a judgment is not an "action," but simply a continuance of a former suit. Bick v. Tanzey, 80 S. W. 902, 904, 181 Mo. 515.

Rev. St. 1899, § 3748, as amended by Laws 1907, p. 320, provides that any action or proceeding which the plaintiff in a judgment might have thereon may be maintained in the name of an assignee. Held that, though scire facias to revive a judgment is not an "action," it is a "proceeding," and may therefore be maintained in the name of an assignee. Reyburn v. Handlan, 147 S. W. 846, 847, 165 Mo. App. 412.

Special and statutory proceedings

See, also, Special Proceeding.

A suit in equity to restrain defendants from polluting a water course was an "action," and not a "special proceeding," within Code Civ. Proc. § 394, providing that whenever an action is brought by a county or a city against residents of another county or city, or a corporation doing business in the latter, the action must be, on motion of the defendant, transferred for trial; the term "special proceeding" being limited to a proceeding in a court which under the common law and equity practice was neither an action at law nor a suit in equity. Yuba County v. North American Consol. Gold Min. Co., 107 Pac. 139, 140, 12 Cal. App. 223.

The word "action," as used in a statute of limitations, includes a special proceeding like certiorari. People ex rel. McCabe v. Snedeker, 94 N. Y. Supp. 319, 321, 106 App. Div. 89. Certiorari is an "action" within a statute defining an "action" to be a proceeding to enforce a right, redress a wrong, etc. State ex rel. Milwaukee Medical College v. Chittenden, 107 N. W. 500, 507, 127 Wis. 468.

Under a statute providing that an appeal to the district court from an order of the board of county commissioners disallowing a claim shall be tried the same as appeals from justices' courts, an appeal from the disallowance of a claim is not a "special proceeding" in the district court, but is an "action," and its judgment is reviewable in the Supreme Court, within Const. art. 6, § 2, conferring on the Supreme Court jurisdiction to review final judgments in civil cases.

An appeal from a revocation by the State Board of Medical Examiners of a physician's license to a district court is a special proceeding within Rev. Codes, §§ 8079, 8080, defining an "action" as an ordinary proceeding by one party against another to enforce or protect a right, redress or prevent a wrong, or punish a public offense, and declaring every other remedy a "special proceeding." State ex rel. Gattan v. District Court of Second Judicial District, 101 Pac. 961, 39 Mont. 134.

A proceeding by a client against his attorney, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 66, authorizing the court on the petition of the client or attorney to determine and enforce the lien of the attorney, is not an "action," but a special proceeding. Cartier v. Spooner, 103 N. Y. Supp. 505, 507, 118 App. Div. 342.

Suit synonymous

The words "action" and "suit," as used in statutes of limitation, are generally synonymous. Whitfield v. Burrell, 118 S. W. 153, 156, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 567. See also Jellison v. Swan, 71 Atl. 920, 922, 105 Me. 356.

In a legal sense "action" and "suit" are convertible terms. Tillamook County v. Willson River Road Co., 89 Pac. 958, 959, 49 Or. 309 (citing Bouvier's Law Dict. and Anderson's Law Dict.); Messenger v. Board of Com'rs of Converse County, 117 Pac. 126, 130, 19 Wyo. 309.

Rev. St. 1874, c. 68, § 11, providing that notice of proceedings by an abandoned spouse to sell the property of the delinquent spouse for family support shall be given "as in ordinary actions," and that anything done under "the order or decree of the court" shall be valid, as if done by the party owning the property, authorizes service by publication as in chancery, notwithstanding the use of the word "action"; that word in a comprehensive sense being synonymous with "suit," and being used interchangeably therewith to mean any legal proceeding in a court for the enforcement of a right, so that the words "ordinary actions" did not contemplate personal service as in a strictly legal action. Brand v. Brand, 96 N. E. 918, 920, 252 Ill. 184.

ACTION AGAINST AN EXECUTOR AND LEGATEES

An action against one who had been discharged as executor, and the legatees to whom the estate had been distributed, wherein it was alleged that such executor took possession of the property, caused an inventory to be made, and that the inventory amounted to a designated sum, was an "action against an executor and legatees," within Rev. Code Civ. Proc. § 486, subd. 2, forbidding a party to such an action to testify as to a transaction with decedent. Jones v. Subera, 126 N. W. 253, 258, 25 S. D. 223.

ACTION AGAINST RAILROADS

The proviso of Revisal 1905, § 424, that "actions against railroads" shall be tried in the county where the cause arose or in a county where the plaintiff resided when the cause arose or an adjoining county, applies only to actions in which a railroad is the sole defendant, and not to actions in which it is joined with an individual defendant. Smith v. Patterson, 74 S. E. 923, 924, 159 N. C. 138.

ACTION AGAINST STATE

See Suit against the State.

ACTION ARISING UNDER THE PATENT LAWS

A suit for an injunction and accounting and for alleged infringement of a patent by the sale of the patented article without license is an "action arising under the patent laws," of which a Circuit Court of the United States has jurisdiction, though the determination of the question of infringement may also involve the construction or validity of a license under which defendant claims the right to sell. Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. The Fair, 123 Fed. 424, 426, 61 C. C. A. 58.

ACTION CONDUCTIO INDEBITI

Where a contractor for a public improvement substituted a cheaper material than that specified, and thereby made an improper profit, the public commission in charge of the improvement was entitled to recover such profit, under La. Civ. Code, art. 2301 (2279), providing that he who receives what is not due to him, whether through error or knowingly, obliges himself to restore it, and article 2302 (2280), declaring that he who has paid through mistake, believing himself a debtor, may reclaim what he has paid, in an "action condictio indebiti," and was not limited to the remedy of an "action quantum minoris." Drainage Commission of New Orleans v. National Contracting Co. of New York, 136 Fed. 780, 784 (citing Laurent, Droit Civil Français [Paris Ed. 1878] vol. 20, p. 371, § 348; Supplement to the Annotated Code Napoléon of Fuzier-Herman [Paris, 1903] p. 1616; note to article 1377 Code Napoléon [corresponding to article 2302 (2280) of the Louisiana Civil Code]; Dictionnaire du Digeste, vol. 1, p. 100.)

ACTION EX DELICTO

An action to recover damages for the negligent injury of a person while a passenger on a street car is an "action ex delicto," and not on the contract of carriage, and the plaintiff may join as defendants the street railroad company and an employé, where their joint negligence is alleged to have been the cause of the injury; and in such case the cause of action is not separable for the purpose of removal. Knuth v. Butte Electric Ry. Co., 148 Fed. 73, 74, 75 (citing Atlantic & P. R. R. v. Laird, 164 U. S. 383, 17 Sup. Ct. 120, 41 L. Ed. 485; Guardian Trust & D. Co. v. Fisher, 200 U. S. 57, 26 Sup. Ct. 186, 50 L. Ed. 367; Doremus v. Root, 94 Fed. 760; Little v. Giles, 118 U. S. 596, 608, 7 Sup. Ct. 32, 30 L. Ed. 269; Walker v. Collins, 167 U. S. 57, 60, 17 Sup. Ct. 738, 42 L. Ed. 76; Warax v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co., 72 Fed. 637.)

ACTION FOR DAMAGES

An action against a county for damages for the cutting by its road supervisor, acting under its commissioners, of an embankment built by plaintiff to impound water for his mill, is not an action for the taking of private property without compensation, though subsequent to the construction of the embankment the public road was so changed as to run across and along the embankment, but is an "action for damages," within Rev. St. 1895, art. 790, providing that no county shall be sued unless the claim on which the suit is founded shall have been first presented to the county commissioners' court for allowance, and it shall have neglected to allow the same, so that the presentation of a claim for the damages and the refusal of the commissioners' court to allow it are conditions precedent to a right to sue. Bogue v. Van Zandt County, 138 S. W. 1065, 1066.

ACTION FOR DECEIT OR FRAUD

See, also, Actionable Fraud; Judgment for Fraud.

An "action for deceit" is based on fraud, and to sustain it there must not only have been false representations, but, contrary to the rule in suits for rescission, they must have been made fraudulently and intentionally, or so recklessly and without concern as to their truthfulness as to be the equivalent of actual fraud. Pittsburg Life & Trust Co. v. Northern Cent. Life Ins. Co., 140 Fed. 888, 891, 892.

Under Rem. & Bal. Code, § 3697, prohibiting the reduction of the capital stock of a corporation, except as provided by sections 3704-3706, the impairment of the capital stock of a corporation in a manner not authorized is a fraud, and an action against the president of a corporation for selling capital stock to the corporation and receiving pay therefor from the funds of the corporation is an "action for fraud," within Rem. & Bal. Code, § 159, subd. 4, limiting the time for the commencement of such actions. Union Trust Co. v. Amery, 120 Pac. 539, 540, 67 Wash. 1.

In order to sustain an "action for fraud and deceit," it must be shown that the representations made were false and were known to be false by the party making them, or that they were representations of facts which the party claimed to know the truth about when in fact he had no knowledge whatever upon the subject. Ames v. Thren, 125 Ill. App. 312, 317.

The essential elements necessary to constitute a cause of "action for deceit" are (1) representations; (2) falsity; (3) scienter; (4) deception; and (5) injury—though to these elements should be added the qualifications that the representations should have been intended to influence the action of the person injured by them. Greene v. Mercantile Trust Co., 111 N. Y. Supp. 802, 805, 60 Misc. Rep. 189.

"To create a right of 'action for deceit' there must be a statement made by the defendant, or for which he is answerable as principal, and with regard to that statement all the following conditions must concur: (a) It is untrue in fact. (b) The person making the statement, or the person responsible for it, either knows it to be untrue, or is culpably ignorant (that is, recklessly and consciously ignorant) whether it be true or not. (c) It is made to the intent that the plaintiff shall act upon it, or in a manner apparently fitted to induce him to act upon it. (d) The plaintiff does act in reliance on the statement, in the manner contemplated or manifestly probable, and thereby suffers damage." Whitehurst v. Life Ins. Co. of Virginia, 62 S. E. 1067, 1068, 149 N. C. 273 (quoting Pollock, Torts).

"Deceit" which will afford a cause of "action in tort" does not require that the acts complained of shall have grown out of a contractual relation, and hence the action is cognizable in the superior court. Ashe v. Gray, 88 N. C. 190, 192.

The elements of an "action for fraud and deceit" are representation, falsity, scienter, deception, and injury. Foster v. Oberreich, 82 N. E. 858, 230 Ill. 525.

To support an "action for deceit," there must have been a statement untrue in fact, the person making it must have either known that it was untrue, or have been culpably ignorant, it must have been made with intent that the other party should act upon it, and he must have so acted to his damage. Whitehurst v. Life Ins. Co. of Virginia, 62 S. E. 1067, 1068, 149 N. C. 273.

Where a vendee of land was deceived by false representations of the vendor that the land was not incumbered, he could recover in an "action for deceit," although he had not removed the incumbrance, and although his title had not been swept away by it. Hahl v. Brooks, 72 N. E. 727, 728, 213 Ill. 134.

In order to maintain an "action for deceit" it must appear that false representations alleged were knowingly made with intent to deceive. American Educational Co. v. Taggart, 124 Ill. App. 567, 570.

ACTION FOR PERSONAL INJURY

See Personal Injury.

ACTION FOR RECOVERY OF MONEY

An action, brought by leave of court against a receiver for the allowance of a claim to be paid in due course of administration of the property in his hands, is not an "action for money only," as affecting the right to a jury trial. Webb v. Stasel, 88 N. E. 143, 144, 80 Ohio, 122.

The words "action for the recovery of money only," as used in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 4715, providing that defendant in an action for the recovery of money only may before trial serve on plaintiff an offer in writing to allow judgment against him for the sum specified therein, and if plaintiff fails to obtain judgment for more than was offered by defendant he shall pay defendant's costs from the time of the offer, do not include a proceeding by a railroad company to condemn land for its right of way and to assess the damages to the landowner; the condemnation proceeding being a special proceeding instituted in a particular and special manner, different from that in bringing an ordinary action for the recovery of money. Blackwell, B. & S. W. Ry. Co. v. Bebout, 91 Pac. 877, 882, 19 Okl. 877, 14 Ann. Cas. 1145.

An action by a trustee in bankruptcy to recover from a creditor of the bankrupt the value of property transferred as a preference contrary to the bankruptcy act, the trustee asking for a money judgment only, is an "action for money," within Code Civ. Proc. § 968, subd. 1, providing that an issue of fact must be tried by jury in all actions in which the complaint demands judgment for a sum of money only. Stern v. Mayer, 91 N. Y. Supp. 292, 293, 99 App. Div. 427.

In an action against a bank for money deposited by a third person under contract with plaintiff, the bank paid the money into court, and the third person, claiming the deposit, was substituted as defendant. Plaintiff recovered judgment, and the judgment recited that plaintiff was entitled to the fund in possession of the clerk and directed him to pay the same. Held, that the action was for the recovery of specific personal property, within Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 6506, providing that the bond, on appeal from a final "judgment for the recovery of money" shall be in a penalty double the amount of damages recovered, and in other cases the bond shall be in such penalty as the judge shall prescribe, and the third person, appealing from the judgment, need not execute a bond in double the amount of the judgment. Pierson v. Peirce, 84 Pac. 731, 732, 42 Wash. 164.

Municipal Court Act § 2, cl. 4, provides that the court shall have jurisdiction of causes of action designated as of the fourth class, which shall include all civil actions, quasi criminal actions excepted, "for the recovery of money only," when the amount claimed, exclusive of costs, does not exceed $1,000. Section 40 provides that in actions of the fourth class the statement of plaintiff's claim, if the suit be for a tort, shall consist of a brief statement of its nature, and such further information as will reasonably inform defendant of the nature of the case. Held, that the phrase "for the recovery of money only" included actions for personal injuries, in which money damages only were demanded. Maiss v. Metropolitan Amusement Ass'n, 89 N. E. 268, 269, 241 Ill. 177.

ACTION FOR THE RECOVERY OF REAL ESTATE

See, also, Suit for Land; Suit for the Recovery of Real Property.

A suit is not necessarily one for the "recovery of real estate" because such recovery will follow as an incident to the plaintiff's success. Tex. Rev. St. 1895, art. 3358, prescribing a limitation of four years for "actions other than for the recovery of real estate," for which no limitation is otherwise prescribed, applies to a suit for the cancellation of instruments purporting to surrender a coal mining lease, even though as a result of such cancellation complainant might recover possession of the land; and, while such statute does not govern in suits in equity in the federal courts, yet, where such a suit was brought more than four years after the execution of the instruments and the abandonment of work under the lease, the statute will be applied by analogy, and the suit held barred by laches. Mexican Nat. Coal, Timber & Iron Co. v. Frank, 154 Fed. 217, 235.

An action to quiet title is not an "action to recover possession of land; within the statute of limitations. Lowenstein v. Sexton, 90 Pac. 410, 412, 18 Okl. 322. B. & C. Comp. §§ 3128, 3146, providing that any "action for the recovery of land sold for taxes" shall be commenced within three years from the recording of the tax deed, do not apply to suits to quiet title or determine an adverse claim to land. Mount v. McAulay, 83 Pac. 529, 47 Or. 444.

A suit by which a county sought to subordinate the legal title to certain land held by the county judge and his vendee to the county's alleged superior equitable title thereon account of the judge's fiduciary relationship was an "action to recover land" within the general statute of limitations, and was not barred by the four-year statute applicable to a suit to cancel or remove the legal title as an impediment to plaintiff's right to recover. Bell County v. Felts (Tex.)

120 S. W. 1065, 1072. But an action to forfeit a land contract, and thereby remove a cloud from the title to the land, is not an "action to recover possession" of land. Smith v. Stiles, 123 Pac. 448, 450, 68 Wash. 345.

An action of trespass to try title is an "action to recover real estate," and the fact that a supplemental petition attacks a deed through which defendant claims, on the ground that it was executed for the purpose of defrauding creditors, does not change the character of the suit. Rutherford v. Carr, 87 S. W. 815, 816, 99 Tex. 101.

A suit for the specific performance of a contract to convey an interest in mining claims is not one "for the recovery of possession of, quieting title to, or for the enforcement of liens upon real estate," within the meaning of such words as used in a constitutional provision requiring such suits to be commenced in the county in which the real estate or any part thereof is situated, and the superior court of a county other than that in which the claims are situated has jurisdiction of such a suit. Wood v. Thompson, 90 Pac. 38, 89, 5 Cal. App. 247.

An action to recover royalties due for oil and gas is not an "action to recover real estate," within Civ. Code Prac. § 62, providing for venue of actions to recover real property, etc., though issues involve title to land, and the judgment that may be rendered may settle rights of parties by way of estoppel. Central Kentucky Natural Gas Co. v. Stevens, 120 S. W. 282, 283, 134 Ky. 306.

An "action" to reform a deed as to the description for mutual mistake is not within a statute providing a limitation of five years for actions for the recovery of real estate, but is within another statute authorizing an action to reform a contract, which because of mistake does not express the intent of the parties. Hart v. Walton, 99 Pac. 719, 721, 9 Cal. App. 502.

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 295, cl. 4, providing the time within which an "action" may be brought "for the recovery of real estate" sold by a guardian, applies to a suit to set aside a guardian's sale of real estate where the purchaser is in possession, and the relief asked cannot be granted without disturbing his possession and depriving him of the enjoyment of his property. Sell v. Keiser, 96 N. E. 812, 814, 815, 49 Ind. App. 101.

An action to establish trusts in land, which, would as a matter of law, entitle the plaintiff to be placed in possession, was, in part at least, an "action for the recovery of real property," and its possession, within Code Civ. Proc. § 318, providing that no action for the recovery of real property or the possession thereof can be maintained, unless the plaintiff, his ancestor, predecessor, or grantor, was possessed of the property within five years. Bradley Bros. v. Bradley (Cal.) 127 Pac. 1044, 1046.

Where one acting under erroneous legal advice, and believing that she was not entitled to hold certain real estate belonging to her deceased husband as her homestead, surrendered all homestead rights therein and subsequently brought a suit to set aside such surrender and have her homestead rights in the property declared, such suit was an "action to recover real property," within Code Civ. Proc. § 318, relating to limitations on such actions. Daniels v. Dean, 84 Pac. 332, 334, 2 Cal. App. 421.

ACTION FOR RECOVERY OF TAXES.

An action to recover interest on county deposits was not an "action to recover taxes," but to recover a mere county debt against the depository, as affecting the jurisdiction of the county court. Carroll County Bank v. State, 128 S. W. 1042, 1043, 95 Ark. 194.

ACTION FOR USE AND OCCUPATION

An "action for use and occupation" depends upon the existence or the implication of a contract whereby the relation of landlord and tenant may be created. Ettlinger v. Degnon-McLean Contracting Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 394, 42 Misc. Rep. 215.

ACTION FOR THE VIOLATION OF A LAW

Acts 1887, p. 225, No. 127, providing that in all "actions" against railway companies "for the violation of any law," regulating the transportation of freight or passengers, the plaintiff, if successful, shall recover a reasonable attorney's fee, to be taxed according to the costs, refers to actions against railroad companies for violation of statutory regulations of the state in regard to transportation of freight and passengers, for to hold it applicable to all actions against railroads in the carriage of freight or passengers, whether or not any statute was violated, would doubtless render it unconstitutional. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Marx, 80 S. W. 579, 580, 72 Ark. 357.

ACTION FOR WRONGS DONE TO THE PERSON.

A husband's action for loss of services of his wife through injuries not resulting in death is not for wrongs done to the person within Act Feb. 24, 1834 (P. L. 78) § 28, giving to personal representatives the right to prosecute actions in which their decedent was a party plaintiff, except "actions for * * * wrongs done to the person"; the quoted phrase not being used to describe a type of action, but referring to actions for injuries to the person of the plaintiff decedent. Smith v. Lehigh Val. R. Co., 81 Atl. 554, 555, 232 Pa. 456.

ACTION HEREAFTER BROUGHT

The provisions of Act April 22, 1908, c. 149, 35 Stat. pt. 1, p. 65, relating to the liability of common carriers by railroad to their employes, are prospective only in their operation, and the phrase "actions hereafter brought," as used in section 3, does not apply to an action by an employe for an injury received before the statute was enacted. Winfree v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 164 Fed. 698, 699.

ACTION INTER PARTES

The expression "action or suit inter partes," referring to the jurisdiction of the federal courts in regard to probate matters, means not mere controversies which arise on an application to probate a will, but an independent controversy between the parties. Miller v. Weston, 199 Fed. 104, 107.

The rule that where a state law, statutory or customary, gives to the citizen of a state, in an "action or suit inter partes," the right to question at law the probate of a will or to assail probate in a suit in equity, the courts of the United States, in administering the rights of citizens of other states or aliens, will enforce such remedies, includes only independent controversies inter partes, and not mere controversies which may arise on an application to probate a will, because the state law provides for notices, or to dispute the setting aside of a probate, when the remedy to set aside afforded by the state law is a mere continuation of the probate proceedings; that is, merely a method of procedure ancillary to the original probate, allowed by the state law for the purpose of giving to the probate its ultimate and final effect. O'Callaghan v. O'Brien, 199 U. S. 89, 25 Sup. Ct. 727, 734, 50 L. Ed. 101.

ACTION ON CONTRACT

See, also, Action Ex Delicto.

Breach of official duty

An action against a sheriff for damages for nonperformance of official duty and to recover a penalty imposed by law for its nonperformance is not an "action on contract," within a Code provision giving justice's courts civil jurisdiction in actions arising on contract for the recovery of money only if the sum claimed does not exceed $300. Oppenheimer v. Regan, 79 Pac. 695, 697, 32 Mont. 110.

Carriers

An action against a carrier for breach of contract to transport freight, evidenced by a bill of lading signed by the carrier and shipper and stipulating for the transportation of freight on terms specified, is an "action on contract in writing" within Rev. St. 1895, art. 3356, § 1, declaring that actions for debt founded on any contract in writing may be brought in four years. Davies v. Texas Cent. R. Co., 133 S. W. 295, 298.

Foreclosure of mortgage

The phrase "actions founded upon contracts," in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 1692, providing that actions founded upon contracts may be maintained by and against executors and administrators in all cases and in the same courts in which the same might have been maintained by and against their respective testators and intestates, includes an action to foreclose a mortgage, since the purpose of a foreclosure suit is to procure a legal determination of the existence of the lien; or ascertainment of its extent, and to subject to sale the property pledged for its payment, which lien arises out of contract. McClung v. Cullison, 82 Pac. 499, 500, 15 Okl. 402.

Insurance

An action against an insurance company to recover a premium paid, on the ground that the policy delivered did not conform to the oral contract of insurance made with the soliciting agent, is not an "action on a contract in writing" for the payment of money, within the statute of limitations. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Summers, 120 Pac. 185, 192, 19 Wyo. 441.

Judgment

An action on a judgment is an "action on a contract," so that a counterclaim may be interposed thereto, under Code Civ. Proc. § 501, subd. 2, permitting any cause of action on a contract to be interposed by way of counterclaim in a contract action. Knight v. Rothschild, 117 N. Y. Supp. 26, 29, 132 App. Div. 274.

Under How. Ann. St. 1882, § 8058, providing that in all personal actions arising upon contract, a writ of garnishment may issue an action on a foreign judgment is an "action on contract." Wattles v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 76 N. W. 115, 116, 117 Mich. 662, 72 Am. St. Rep. 590 (quoting and adopting definition in Story, Contracts, § 2).

Refusal to honor check

The wrongful refusal of a bank to honor a check, drawn by a depositor who has sufficient funds to his credit to meet the same, in consequence of which the depositor's credit is impaired and he is rendered insolvent, is not a positive personal wrong, such as slander, but is a breach by the bank of its contract with the depositor, and is consequently, as an "action arising out of contract," assignable, and passes to the depositor's assignee for the benefit of creditors under an assignment of all his property and choses in action. Robinson v. Wiley, 74 N. E. 923, 924, 188. Mass. 533.

Sale of real estate

An action for damages for fraud inducing a purchase of real estate is not an "action upon contract for the sale of real estate," within St. 1893, § 1562 (Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 1872), providing that the probate court shall not have jurisdiction of any action upon contract for the sale of real estate. Newell v. Long Bell Lumber Co., 78 Pac. 104, 14 Okl. 185.

Separation agreements

An action by a wife to enforce a contract made between her and her husband while they were living apart and a divorce suit instituted by her was pending, whereby, in consideration of the settlement of the divorce suit and for the purpose of adjusting the differences between the parties, the husband agreed that if the wife should at any time thereafter leave him, or be unable to live with him for any good cause, she should receive, on account of her contingent right of dower, and in full for the support of herself and all such minor children as during their minority remained with her, out of the estate of the husband a certain sum of money each month, is an "action on a contract," and not one for divorce or alimony, and attorney's fees under the statute are not recoverable by plaintiff. Woodruff v. Woodruff, 91 S. W. 265, 121 Ky. 784.

ACTION ON MORTGAGE

An action for a deficiency on a chattel mortgage, after foreclosure and sale, is not an "action on a mortgage," jurisdiction of which is denied to the Municipal Court by Laws 1902, p. 1533, c. 580, § 139, since the liability arises as a matter of law out of the foreclosure, and not out of the provision of the mortgage that the mortgagor shall be liable for a deficiency. Wilcox v. Perez, 101 N. Y. Supp. 391, 115 App. Div. 693.

ACTION ON A NOTE

A declaration contained two special counts, in effect declaring on a note, and also contained the consolidated common counts. The special pleas all began by stating that the causes of action in the several counts were the same as contained in the special counts, and the evidence all related to the special counts. Defendant, the guarantor of the note, pleaded failure of consideration, and contended that there was a contemporaneous written agreement with the note, and referring to it, which was specially pleaded by plaintiff. It was held that the suit was an "action on a note," within Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896, c. 98, § 9, declaring that in such actions defendant may plead failure of consideration. Ewen v. Wilbor, 70 N. E. 575, 578, 208 Ill. 492.

ACTION TRIED WITHOUT A JURY

ACTIONABLE FRAUD

See, also, Action for Deceit or Fraud; Fraud.

There was an "actionable fraud" where the agent of the seller of property obtained defendants' signatures to a subscription list and notes for the purchase of the property on a misrepresentation that three certain responsible persons who had signed the list would sign the notes, the agent knowing that such persons would not sign, and secretly intending to obtain the signatures of insolvent persons in their stead. City Deposit Bank v. Green, 115 N. W. 893, 896, 138 Iowa, 156.

One commits "actionable fraud" where, with a view to influence the conduct of another, he willfully leads him into a false belief, and the other acts accordingly, to his injury. Gewin v. Shields, 52 South. 887, 888, 167 Ala. 593.

The elements of "actionable fraud" are representations, falsity, knowledge, deception, and injury. Mussiller v. Rice, 116 N. Y. Supp. 1028-1030.

Where the owner of a house built from old lumber put together in a defective manner, and painted over so as to cover the defects, induced an old woman, with defective eyesight, to trade for the property in reliance upon his fraudulent representations as to the character of the house, he was guilty of "actionable fraud," though a careful inspection would have disclosed that it was composed in part of old material. Pope v. Florea, 152 S. W. 96, 97, 167 Mo. App. 595.

ACTIONABLE INJURY

ACTIONABLE MISREPRESENTATION

See Misrepresentation.

ACTIONABLE NEGLIGENCE

See, also, Negligence.

"Actionable negligence" is an act or omission of duty which is the proximate cause of an injury. J. S. Young Co. v. State, 83 Atl. 345, 347, 117 Md. 247. A failure of duty, the omission of something which ought to have been done, or the doing of something, which ought not to have been done. Toppl v. McDonald, 112 N. Y. Supp. 821, 825, 128 App. Div. 443. But it is not necessary that the result thereof be foreseen, if such result is the probable consequence of defendant's acts. Murphy v. Chicago Great Western Ry. Co., 118 N. W. 390, 392, 140 Iowa, 332. It is not a mere failure to act with ordinary prudence. Freeman v. Na- than (Tex.) 149 S. W. 248, 254. "Actionable negligence" consists in a breach of a duty owing from one to another, by reason of which the latter is injured. Indianapolis Traction Terminal Co. v. Pressell, 77 N. E. 357, 359, 39 Ind. App. 472 (citing Salem-Bedford Stone Co. v. O'Brien, 12 Ind. App. 217, 40 N. E. 430; Faris v. Hoberg, 33 N. E. 1028, 134 Ind. 269, 39 Am. St. Rep. 261; Thiele v. McManus, 28 N. E. 327, 3 Ind. App. 132); Creason v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 130 S. W. 445, 447, 149 Mo. App. 223. It is predicated on what reasonably prudent men would or should have been able to anticipate from a view of the situation before the accident. MacRae v. Chelsea Fibre Mills, 130 N. Y. Supp. 339, 343, 145 App. Div. 588. "Actionable negligence" is an omission to use that degree of care, diligence, and skill, which it is one's legal duty to use for another's protection, which omission, by a natural and continuous sequence, causes unintended damages to such other. Pullman Co. v. Caviness, 116 S. W. 410, 411, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 540; Birmingham Belt R. Co. v. Drake, 56 South. 53, 54, 1 Ala. App. 354; Leighton v. Wheeler, 76 Atl. 916, 918, 106 Me. 450; Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. Smith, 55 South. 170, 171, 171 Ala. 251; Wheeling & L. E. R. Co. v. Harvey, 83 N. E. 68, 71, 77 Ohio St. 235, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1136, 122 Am. St. Rep. 508, 11 Ann. Cas. 981 (quoting and adopting Buch v. Amory Mfg. Co., 44 Atl. 809, 99 N. H. 257, 76 Am. St. Rep. 163); Bahr v. National Safe Deposit Co., 84 N. E. 717, 718, 234 Ill. 101.

"Actionable negligence" is "the omission to do something which a reasonable man, guided upon those considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs, would do, or doing something which a provident and reasonable man would not do; and an action may be brought if thereby mischief is caused to a third party not intentionally" (quoting and adopting the definition in Blythe v. Waterworks, 25 L. J. Ex. 213). It is "the inadvertent failure of a legally responsible person to use ordinary care, under the circumstances, in observing or performing a noncontractual duty implied by law, which failure is the proximate cause of injury to a person to whom the duty is due." Whisenant v. Southern Ry. Co., 49 S. E. 559, 560, 137 N. C. 349.

There can be no "actionable negligence," in the absence of a duty owing from him who is charged with the wrong. Thayer v. Smoky Hollow Coal Co., 96 N. W. 718, 721, 121 Iowa, 121.

"Actionable negligence" is the neglect of a legal duty. To bring a case within the category of actionable negligence, some wrongful act must be shown, or a breach of some positive duty. The duty to do no wrong is a legal duty. The duty to protect against wrong is, generally speaking, and excepting certain intimate relations, in the nature of a trust, a moral obligation only, not recognized or enforced by law. Accordingly, where the only relation between the parties is contractual, the liability of one to the other in an action of tort for negligence must be based upon some positive duty which the law imposes because of the relationship, or because of the negligent manner in which some act which the contract provides for is done, and the mere violation of a contract, where there is no general duty, is not the basis of such an action. Glenn v. Hill, 109 S. W. 27, 30, 210 Mo. 291, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 699 (citing Dustin v. Curtis, 74 N. E. 266, 67 Atl. 220, 11 L. R. A. [N. S.] 504, 13 Ann. Cas. 169).

The test of "actionable negligence" is, not what might have prevented a particular accident, but what reasonably prudent and careful men would have done in the discharge of their duties under the circumstances. Davenport v. Oceanic Amusement Co., 116 N. Y. Supp. 609, 611, 132 App. Div. 368; Steinbrenner v. M. W. Forney Co., 127 N. Y. Supp. 620, 622, 143 App. Div. 73.

"Actionable negligence" involves the existence of a duty, the omission to exercise ordinary care in connection therewith, and injury resulting in consequence thereof. Linick v. A. J. Nutting & Co., 125 N. Y. Supp. 93, 96, 140 App. Div. 265; Sonsmith v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 138 N. W. 347, 353, 173 Mich. 57; Dustin v. Curtis, 67 Atl. 220, 221, 74 N. H. 266, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 504, 13 Ann. Cas. 169 (citing Buch v. Amory Mfg. Co., 44 Atl. 809, 69 N. H. 257, 260, 261, 76 Am. St. Rep. 163; Pittfield Cottonwear Mfg. Co. v. Pittsfield Shoe Co., 53 Atl. 807, 71 N. H. 522, 531, 60 L. R. A. 116); Booker v. Southwest Missouri R. Co., 128 S. W. 1012, 1017, 144 Mo. App. 273; Davison v. Royal Amusement Co., 129 S. W. 241, 243, 144 Mo. App. 564; Conway v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 119 S. W. 206, 208, 135 Ky. 229; Briscoe v. Henderson Lighting & Power Co., 62 S. E. 600, 604, 148 N. C. 396, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1116; Wabash R. Co. v. Reynolds, 84 N. E. 992, 995, 41 Ind. App. 678; McGhee v. Norfolk & S. Ry. Co., 60 S. E. 912, 913, 147 N. C. 142, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 119; Southern Ry. Co. v. Williams, 38 South. 1013, 1014, 143 Ala. 212 (quoting Akers v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. R. Co., 60 N. W. 669, 58 Minn. 540). "There can be no 'actionable negligence,' except where there is a failure to perform some legal or contractual duty." St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. of Texas v. Anderson (Tex.) 125 S. W. 628, 629; Cowles v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 66 Atl. 1020, 1021, 80 Conn. 48, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1067, 10 Ann. Cas. 481; United States Express Co. v. Everest, 83 Pac. 817, 819, 72 Kan. 517. Absence of distinct intention to produce the damage which follows is an essential element. Richmond v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 113 S. W. 708, 710, 133 Mo. App. 463 (citing Bindbeutel v. Street Ry. Co., 43 Mo. App.

463). An injury is not actionable which would not have resulted from the act of negligence except for the interposition of an independent cause. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Schriver, 141 Fed. 538, 550, 72 C. C. A. 596, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 678; Hauser v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 64 S. E. 503, 504, 150 N. C. 557 (citing Brewster v. Elizabeth City, 137 N. C. 392, 49 S. E. 885); Fenn v. Clark, 103 Pac. 944, 945, 11 Cal. App. 79. To constitute "actionable negligence" there must be a duty or obligation which defendant is under to protect plaintiff from injury, failure to discharge that duty, and injury resulting therefrom. Langenfeld v. Union Pac. R. Co., 123 N. W. 1086, 1088, 85 Neb. 527.

"'Actionable negligence,' or negligence, which constitutes a good cause of action, grows out of a want of ordinary care and skill in respect to a person to whom the defendant is under an obligation or duty to use ordinary care and skill. The owner of land and of buildings assumes no duty to one who is on his premises by permission only, and is a mere licensee, except that he will refrain from willful or affirmative acts which are injurious." Means v. Southern California Ry. Co. (Cal.) 77 Pac. 1001, 1003, 144 Cal. 473, 1 Ann. Cas. 206 (citing Gibson v. Leonard, 143 Ill. 182, 189, 32 N. E. 182, 183, 17 L. R. A. 588, 36 Am. St. Rep. 376).

"Actionable negligence" is a breach of duty owed by defendant to plaintiff, but the duty may be general and owing to everybody, or it may be particular and owing to a single individual by reason of his peculiar position, and a duty owing to everybody does not become the foundation of an action until an individual is placed in a position giving him the right to insist on its performance. Upp v. Darner, 130 N. W. 409, 410, 150 Iowa, 403, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 743, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 574.

"'Actionable negligence' is the failure to discharge a legal duty to the person injured. If there be no duty, there is no negligence. Even if defendant owed a duty to some one else, but did not owe it to the person injured, no action will lie." Wickenburg v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 102 N. W. 713, 714, 94 Minn. 276 (quoting and adopting definition in Akers v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co., 58 Minn. 540, 60 N. W. 669).

The legal conception of "actionable negligence," for which recovery may be had, is such an omission to use the degree of care for the protection of another from injury as should have been used under the circumstances, and which in a natural and continuous sequence causes damage to the latter. Cresswell v. Wainwright, 134 N. W. 594, 599, 154 Iowa, 167.

"Negligence" is not "actionable" unless some legal duty has been neglected, tending to the result in continuous and natural sequence, so that one of ordinary prudence would foresee that the result would naturally follow. Blevins v. Erwin Cotton Mills Co., 64 S. E. 428, 431, 150 N. C. 493. "To constitute 'actionable negligence' there must be not only causal connection between the negligence complained of and the injury suffered, but the injury suffered must be a natural and unbroken sequence—without intervening efficient cause—so that, but for the negligence of defendant, the injury would not have occurred. It must not only be a cause, but it must be the proximate—that is, the direct and immediate, efficient—cause of the injury." Crowley v. City of West End, 43 South. 359, 149 Ala. 613, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 801 (citing Western Railway of Alabama v. Mutch, 11 South. 894, 97 Ala. 194, 21 L. R. A. 316, 38 Am. St. Rep. 179; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Christian Moerlein Brewing Co., 41 South. 17, 146 Ala. 404; Decatur Car Wheel & Mfg. Co. v. Mehaffey, 29 South. 646, 128 Ala. 242; Cooley, Torts, § 69; Shearman & Red. Neg. § 26; Wharton, Neg. 26).

"Negligence" and "actionable negligence," even under the turntable doctrine, are distinguishable terms, since carelessness does not always involve liability, which attaches only when there has been a violation of duty by the party charged toward the party injured. Hight v. American Bakery Co., 151 S. W. 776, 782, 168 Mo. App. 431.

"Actionable negligence" is not a habit of mind, but action or inaction contrary to the practice of reasonable men under the circumstances. A receiver of a national bank may maintain a suit against the directors in behalf of creditors and stockholders to recover sums alleged to have been lost to the bank through the misconduct or negligence of defendants, and it is not a necessary condition precedent that violations of the banking act should have been previously adjudged in a suit brought by the comptroller. Allen v. Luke, 141 Fed. 694, 697.

A want of caution to avoid injury where the duty to exercise caution is incumbent, and a reckless or heedless use of a dangerous agency, in a location where the peril from its use is obvious, constitute breaches of duty, which in causing injury may become "actionable negligence." Tudor v. Bowen, 67 S. E. 1015, 1017, 152 N. C. 441, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 804, 136 Am. St. Rep. 836, 21 Ann. Cas. 646.

"Actionable negligence" by an employer consists in a failure to exercise that reasonable degree of care which he owes under the circumstances to his employes. Watson v. New York Contracting Co., 111 N. Y. Supp. 277, 279, 127 App. Div. 134; Black's Adm'r v. Virginia Portland Cement Co., 51 S. E. 831, 832, 104 Va. 450. It is nothing but a breach of the duty to exercise reasonable care. It is not a breach of a guaranty of the character of a place or of appliances.

To constitute "actionable negligence" there must be, not only causal connection between the negligence complained of and the injury suffered, but the connection must be a natural and unbroken sequence. A complaint alleging that defendant railroad violated an ordinance prohibiting a railroad from blocking any public street for more than five minutes at a time, whereby plaintiff's team, when near the crossing, became frightened and ran away, injuring plaintiff, was demurrable, as not showing any causal connection between the violation of the ordinance and the injuries. Wilson v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 40 South. 941, 942, 146 Ala. 285, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 987.

If the character of an act or omission is doubtful, the best test of "actionable negligence," where available, is the degree of care which persons of ordinary intelligence and prudence commonly exercise under the circumstances, and if the care exercised rises to or above that standard there is no negligence, but if it falls below it there is negligence. Chicago Great Western Ry. Co. v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 176 Fed. 237, 240, 100 C. C. A. 41, 20 Ann. Cas. 1200.

While the law imposes different degrees of care based on relations existing between the parties, an injury resulting from a failure to observe such degree of care constitutes "actionable negligence," regardless of the degree of such negligence; degrees of negligence being important only as fixing the character or quantum of damages to be awarded. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Catlett, 177 Fed. 71, 74, 100 C. C. A. 489.

Simple or slight "negligence" of defendant after knowledge of plaintiff's peril is "actionable," but defendant's knowledge of plaintiff's peril does not make wanton all subsequent negligence contributing to plaintiff's injury, as the subsequent negligence may be either slight, gross, reckless, or wanton. Southern Ry. Co. v. Hyde, 51 South. 368, 370, 164 Ala. 162.

Anticipation of danger is an element of "actionable negligence" only when the character of the act is doubtful, it being of no moment whether the negligent actor could have reasonably anticipated the presence of the person injured at the time and place if the conditions are such as to impose a duty in respect to the public which was not complied with. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Catlett, 177 Fed. 71, 74, 100 C. C. A. 489.

A carrier was not guilty of "actionable negligence" in permitting goods to be injured by the elements after arrival and pending removal by the consignees, where the latter had been notified of the arrival of the goods, had paid the freight, and had permitted a portion of the goods to remain on the carrier's uninclosed platform or shed, according to custom. Stone & Co. v. Clyde S. S. Co., 51 S. E. 894, 895, 139 N. C. 193.

"If ordinary care is exercised in the constructing and maintaining of bridges, there can be no liability. * * * The fact that a bridge gives way and a traveler is injured is not of itself sufficient to charge the county, for it must appear that the county trustees were guilty of 'actionable negligence.'" Board of Com'rs of Wabash County v. Pearson, 22 N. E. 134, 135, 120 Ind. 426, 16 Am. St. Rep. 325 (citing and adopting State ex rel. Winterburg v. Demaree, 80 Ind. 519; Patton v. Board of Com'rs of Montgomery County, 96 Ind. 131; Board of Com'rs of Howard County v. Legg, 11 N. E. 612, 110 Ind. 479; Board of Com'rs of Porter County v. Dombke, 94 Ind. 72).

ACTIONABLE NUISANCE

See, also, Nuisance.

An "actionable nuisance" is defined by Cooley on Torts, vol. 2, p. 1174, as "anything wrongfully done or permitted, which injures or annoys another in the enjoyment of his legal rights." To constitute a nuisance, it is not necessary that the annoyance should be of a character to endanger health, but it is sufficient if it occasions what is offensive to the senses and which renders the enjoyment of life and property uncomfortable. The mere construction of a large excavation for surface water on defendant's premises near plaintiff's residence does not create a nuisance because it may make plaintiff's place unhealthy, the unsanitary conditions not having arisen and no immediate danger appearing, there being no stagnant water, and no insect pests having been produced. Sanders v. Miller, 113 S. W. 996, 998, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 372.

ACTIONABLE PER SE

See, also, Libel.

Any language published of a person that tends to degrade him or bring him into ill repute or to destroy the confidence of his neighbors in his integrity or to cause other like injury is "actionable per se." Stewart v. Codrington, 45 South. 809, 812, 55 Fla. 327.

ACTIVE

The word "active," as used in a petition in an action for personal injuries alleging that before being injured plaintiff was a sound, healthy, and active woman, is a comparative term, and she was entitled to recover damages for such injury as aggravated a previously diseased physical condition. Green v. Houston Electric Co., 89 S. W. 442, 445, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 260.

ACTIVE MEMBER

The by-laws of a police relief association required $2 per annum as dues from active members, and $8 per annum from those who had honorably left the force, and also made a distinction as to sick benefits between active and retired members of the force. The rules of the board of police commissioners, which had authority to define plaintiff's status, required plaintiff, though on the pension roll, to be subject to call by day or night. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to pay dues and receive sick benefits as an "active member" of the force. Nickerson v. Providence Police Ass'n, 57 Atl. 1057, 1058, 26 R. I. 40.

ACTIVE SERVICE

The term "active service," as used in the Constitution and Military Code, means service in time of war or public danger. State v. Peake, 135 N. W. 197, 201, 22 N. D. 457, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 354.

"Active service," within Act No. 181, of 1904, § 21, providing that members of the militia ordered into "active service" of the state by any proper authority shall not be liable civilly or criminally for any act or acts done by them while on duty, but shall be liable only to court-martial or inquiry prescribed by military law, contemplates the ordering of the troops into active service by the Governor, and a member of the militia is not removed from the jurisdiction of the civil courts by the fact that he is a member in good standing and thus in a form of "active service." State v. Josephson, 45 South. 381, 382, 120 La. 433.

ACTIVE TRUST

See, also, Passive Trust.

An "active trust" is one requiring the performance by the trustee of active and substantial duties in respect to the management of the trust fund for the beneficiaries and vesting some powers of discretion in the trustee. Kimball v. Blanchard, 64 Atl. 645, 647, 648, 101 Me. 383.

Where a deed of trust gives in terms to a trustee the entire control and management of certain particularized assets, the trust created thereby is held to have been an "active trust." Bay State Gas Co. of Delaware v. Rogers, 147 Fed. 557, 566.

An "active" and not a "passive" trust is created by a deed of trust to sell and reinvest, and to pay to the grantor the income and such part of the principal as the trustee may deem proper, and after her death the principal over to her issue or such persons as she may designate by her will. Newton v. Jay, 95 N. Y. Supp. 413, 418, 107 App. Div. 457.

An "active trust" is said to exist when the trustee is not merely a passive depository of the estate, but is required to take active measures to carry into effect the general intention of the creator of the trust. A will devising improved city real estate to M. to hold in trust for 10 years, providing that he manage it, keep it in repair and insured, pay taxes and assessments against it, and lease such part thereof as he may not occupy himself, for such time and rental as he may deem best, and, in case of destruction of any of the improvements, use the proceeds of insurance and reconstruct the same, and that during such time he shall quarter-annually make certain payments to certain persons, and at the end of said 10 years, and when all the charges mentioned had been paid, should convey to himself the real estate, creates in him for 10 years an active trust. Matthern v. Rankin, 81 N. E. 1024, 1026, 228 Ill. 318 (citing Anderson's Law Dict. p. 1057).

An "active trust" was created where the property was devised to a trustee to sell and convey, and invest the proceeds as he deemed best, and he was further authorized to hold, manage, control, care for, lease, and reinvest during a period of five years, and to pay the income to the children of testatrix. Harris v. Ferguy, 69 N. E. 844, 845, 207 Ill. 534.

A conveyance of property in trust to pay the grantor such part of the income and of the body of the estate for his support as the trustee might deem proper, then to pay over to the grantor's devisees or heirs, after his death, such part of the trust estate as had not been consumed by him, reserving the right to dispose of the remainder by will, falling which, the property was to pass under the statutes of the descent and distribution, was not a "dry" but an "active trust." Coleman v. Fidelity Trust & Safety Vault Co. (Ky.) 91 S. W. 716.

The trust created by a will providing that the income and interest arising from testatrix's estate shall be held by her executors for the benefit of her son, to be expended by them for him as he may need from time to time, and, in case he marries and has issue, then to use and expend the income, and, if necessary, the principal, from time to time for his and their support and comfort, is an "active trust." Parker, Holmes & Co. v. Bushnell, 87 Atl. 479, 480, 80 Conn. 233.

Testatrix devised one-sixth of her estate in trust, the annual income of which was to be paid one-fifth to her son and four-fifths to his four children. On the death of the son, the portion then remaining was to go to the four children, share and share alike, or the survivor of them. Title and complete control of the trust estate was given to the trustees; they being authorized, not only to collect the rents and receive profits, but to execute deeds, leases, and other instruments, according to their discretion, and without orders of court. Held, that the trust was an "active trust," and could not be terminated by the children of the son before his death. Olsen v. Youngerman, 113 N. W. 938, 940, 130 Iowa, 404.

A will provided: "I direct my trustees to divide my estate into six equal shares, instead of into five shares, as in the sixth paragraph of my will provided. I direct that the first five shares be disposed of as in the sixth paragraph provided. I give and devise the six shares unto my executors in trust, nevertheless, to collect the rents and income thereof, and to apply the net income thereof to the use and benefit of my son, M., during his life, and at his death or at my death, if he shall die in my lifetime, I give the principal of said share to my other descendants in equal shares per stirpes." Held, that the will created an "active trust" under subdivision 3, § 76, Real Property Law (Laws 1896, c. 547). McNaboe v. Marks, 99 N. Y. Supp. 960, 961, 51 Misc. Rep. 207.

ACTIVELY EMPLOYED

Defendant was appointed by the Secretary of the Interior as the disbursing member of a board of three commissioners to negotiate Indian treaties at $8 per day and traveling expenses, exclusive of subsistence, to continue at the pleasure of the Secretary of the Interior for the time being. Defendant was directed to proceed from his home in Nebraska to the agency in Washington without unnecessary delay, his salary to begin on the day of his departure from home. The instructions given the board required a study of the special needs of the Indians in each case, and the formation of agreements which would best promote their welfare and weekly reports. Defendant paid himself and the other commissioners at the rate of $8 a day for the time that they were under instructions, or were holding themselves in readiness to obey instructions on vouchers reciting actual employment during such period. These vouchers were uniformly accepted without question, except for periods during which the commissioners were absent from their post on leave. Held that, under the rule of contemporaneous construction, the phrase "actually employed" should not be construed as equivalent to "actively employed," and hence the salary was not limited to days on which the commissioners were actually engaged in the performance of active duty. United States v. Hoyt, 158 Fed. 162, 167.

ACTOR

The rule that each party to a proceeding under Pol. Code, §§ 3414, 3415, to determine the right to purchase state lands, is an "actor" and must state in his pleading facts sufficient to show that he has some right to the land better than that of the adverse party, applies to one who is admitted as an intervenor as well as to the original parties. Moran v. Bonyne, 107 Pac. 312, 314, 157 Cal. 295.

ACTUAL

ACTUAL AGENCY

An "agency" is either actual or ostensible. It is actual when the agent is really employed by the principal, and it is ostensible when the principal intentionally or by want of ordinary care causes a third person to believe another to be his agent who is not really employed by him. Weidenaar v. New York Life Ins. Co., 94 Pac. 1, 6, 36 Mont. 592 (citing Civ. Code, §§ 3073, 3075 [Rev. Codes, §§ 5416, 5418]).

ACTUAL ATTENDANCE

Under a statute providing that criers and bailiffs "shall be deemed to be in actual attendance when they attend upon the order of the courts," "actual attendance" exists when an officer is actually present "upon the order of the court," but the issuing of a personal order directed to the officers requiring them to attend is unnecessary; the opening of court by the marshal under the written order of the judge pursuant to Rev. St. § 672, being sufficient. Kelly v. United States, 41 Ct. Cl. 246, 250.

ACTUAL AUTHORITY

"Actual authority" of an agent is such as the principal intentionally confers upon the agent, or intentionally, or by want of ordinary care, allows the agent to believe himself to possess. Weidenaar v. New York Life Ins. Co., 94 Pac. 1, 7, 36 Mont. 592 (citing Civ. Code, § 3092 [Rev. Codes, § 5431]).

ACTUAL BIAS

"Actual bias," defined by Pen. Code, § 1073, as a state of mind in reference to the case, or either of the parties, which will prevent him from acting with entire impartiality and without prejudice to the substantial rights of a party, may consist of an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of defendant, based on some knowledge or information of the facts embraced in the charge, or of the evidence to be produced, or, the juror having no such knowledge or information, may consist of a preconceived opinion concerning defendant or the prosecuting witness which would prevent a fair consideration by the juror of the evidence given or facts proven in the case. People v. Riggins, 112 Pac. 862, 864, 159 Cal. 113.

"Actual bias," as defined by the Oregon statute, is the existence of a state of mind on the part of the juror in reference to the action or to either party, which satisfies the trier, in the exercise of a sound discretion, that he cannot try the issue impartially and without prejudice to the substantial rights of the party challenging." State v. Miller, 81 Pac. 363, 364, 46 Or. 485.

ACTUAL BONA FIDE RESIDENT

See Actual Residence—Actual Resident.

The term "actual bona fide resident," within Const. art. 197, requiring that one offering to vote shall be an actual bona fide resident of the precinct for at least six months immediately preceding the election means more than the word "resident," and means a person who has an abode at which he actually lives; and where a person has had no habitual abode, but has lived and worked in different places, his actual residence in one of them cannot be extended by intentment. One who left Louisiana in October, 1910, moving to Arkansas, where he secured employment and has ever since lived and worked, intending to remain there for an indefinite time, is not an "actual bona fide resident" of Louisiana. State ex rel. Hodges v. Joyce, 54 So. 934, 128 La. 438. And a person moving with his wife and child from the state into Mississippi and there residing, and who have never moved back but had an intent to return, is not an "actual bona fide resident" of the precinct of the parish from which he removed. State ex rel. Fleming v. Joyce, 49 South. 219, 221, 123 La. 633.

"An actual bona fide resident," within Rev. St. 1901, par. 3114, providing that no suit for divorce shall be maintained unless the plaintiff has been an actual bona fide resident of the territory for one year, is a person who is in Arizona to reside permanently with no idea of having or seeking a permanent home elsewhere. Mere quarrels between spouses in which both were partly at fault, and after which they continued to reside under the same roof, there being no physical violence nor any serious mental distress, were not such cruelty as justified the wife in abandoning her home in Texas and establishing a separate domicile in Arizona; so that she did not, by remaining in Arizona more than one year, acquire an "actual bona fide residence." Sneed v. Sneed (Ariz.) 123 Pac. 312, 314, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 99.

ACTUAL CAPITAL STOCK

There is a wide distinction between authorized capital stock of a corporation and its "actual capital stock." Authorized capital may never become actual capital, while "actual capital" is the amount of its authorized capital that has been bona fide subscribed for and paid. Stemple v. Bruin, 49 South. 151, 153, 57 Fla. 173.

ACTUAL CASH VALUE

Rev. St. 1898, § 1943a, provides that no fire insurance company shall issue any policy limiting the amount to be paid in case of loss below "the actual cash value of the property if within the amount of the insurance for which premium is paid." Held, that such provision should be construed as referring to the "actual cash value" of the property "destroyed," and not to the property insured. Newton v. Theresa Village Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 104 N. W. 107, 109, 125 Wis. 289.

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 8269, regulating the liability of a township for the value of animals killed or injured by dogs, and providing that the stock must be valued at the "actual cash value" on the market when the damages were sustained, means the highest "actual cash price" which animals would bring in the market for any and all uses to which they were adapted, on the date of their injury. Wea Tp., Tippecanoe County v. Cloyd, 91 N. E. 959, 961, 46 Ind. App. 49.

ACTUAL AND CONTINUED CHANGE OF POSSESSION

In statute of frauds

Civ. Code, § 3440, provides that a sale of personal property shall be conclusively presumed to be fraudulent as against the seller's creditors, where there is no immediate delivery and actual and continued change of possession. Held that, where liquor stored in a barn was sold by a debtor to plaintiff, the delivery of a key to the barn was mere evidence of a constructive delivery and possession, and was not an actual change of possession required by such section, the word "actual" as so used, meaning "existing in act, and truly and absolutely so; really acted or acting; carried out; as opposed to potential, possible, visual or theoretical." Guthrie v. Carney, 124 Pac. 1045, 1048, 19 Cal. App. 144.

ACTUAL COST

The phrase "actual cost," as used in St. 1890, c. 428, §§ 3-7, providing for the abolition of grade crossings by a railroad company, declaring that commissioners were to decide what alterations were necessary, and providing that the company should pay a specified per cent. of the actual cost of the alterations, including in such cost the cost of the hearing and the compensation of the commissioners and auditors for their services, and all damages for the taking of the land necessary to carry out the alterations that have been ordered, means "cost of what is described, though, where damages are incurred in taking land to carry out the report of the commissioners, counsel fees and extra work done by selectmen paid by a town in defending or settling a claim for such damages for land taken for the purpose of abolishing grade crossings have been held to be included." Interest paid on money borrowed by the railroad company to make the alterations is not a part of the actual cost. In re Directors of Old Colony R. Co., 70 N. E. 62, 63, 185 Mass. 160.

ACTUAL DAMAGES

"Actual damages" are such as are recoverable at law from a wrongdoer by the injured party as a matter of right as compensation for the actual loss sustained by him by reason of the wrong. Birmingham Waterworks Co. v. Keiley, 56 South. 838, 841, 2 Ala. App. 629. The term means "substantial," as distinguished from "nominal," damages. Blow v. Joyner, 72 S. E. 819, 820, 156 N. C. 140.

The term "actual damages" is synonymous with "compensatory damages." Green v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 49 S. E. 165, 168, 136 N. C. 489, 67 L. R. A. 985, 103 Am. St. Rep. 955, 1 Ann. Cas. 649 (citing Newell, Defamation, Slander & Libel, 839).

"Actual damages" include not only pecuniary losses but physical pain and mental suffering. The wounding of a man's feelings is as much actual damage as physical injury to his person; the only difference being that one is internal and the other external, the one mental the other physical. Ammons v. Southern Ry. Co., 52 S. E. 731, 733, 140 N. C. 196 (citing Osborn v. Leach, 47 S. E. 811, 135 N. C. 628, 66 L. R. A. 648; McNeill v. Durham & C. R. Co., 47 S. E. 765, 135 N. C. 683, 67 L. R. A. 227; Head v. Georgia Pac. R. Co., 7 S. E. 217, 79 Ga. 358, 11 Am. St. Rep. 434; Hale, Damages, § 261).

The expression "actual damages" is not necessarily limited to pecuniary loss, or loss of ability to earn money. Some of the decisions treat it as including damages by reason of pain and suffering. Georgia S. & F. R. Co. v. Wright, 61 S. E. 718, 719, 130 Ga. 696 (citing Head v. Georgia Pac. Ry. Co., 7 S. E. 217, 79 Ga. 358, 360, 11 Am. St. Rep. 434; Mabry v. City Electric Ry. Co., 42 S. E. 1025, 116 Ga. 624, 625, 59 L. R. A. 590, 94 Am. St. Rep. 141; Central R. Co. v. Senn, 73 Ga. 712; Coleman v. Allen, 5 S. E. 204, 79 Ga. 647, 11 Am. St. Rep. 449; Macon Ry. & Light Co. v. Vining, 48 S. E. 232, 120 Ga. 515).

Sess. Laws 1901, c. 249, providing that only actual damages may be recovered for the publication of a libel in a newspaper in good faith and under a mistake or misapprehension of the facts where a full and fair retraction is published as therein required, defines "actual damages" as all damages which the plaintiff shall show he has suffered in respect to his property, business, trade, profession, or occupation, and no other damages whatever. This definition includes only such damages as at common law were known as special damages, and excludes those known as general damages, and thus violates Bill of Rights, § 18, providing that any person suffering injuries in person, reputation, or property shall have remedy by due course of law. Hanson v. Krehbiel, 75 Pac. 1041, 1042, 68 Kan. 670, 64 L. R. A. 790, 104 Am. St. Rep. 422.

"Actual damages" include all damages except that class of damages known as vindictive, punitive, or exemplary damages.

'Actual damages' is the synonym of 'compensatory damages.' Damages are said to be compensatory when they are such as measure the actual loss, while punitive or vindictive damages exceed the loss or injury actually sustained and are given as a kind of punishment to the defendant with a view of preventing similar wrongs in the future." Comer v. Age-Herald Pub. Co., 44 South. 673, 675, 151 Ala. 613, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 525 (citing Newell, Defamation, Slander & Libel, p. 842).

Assault

Where the evidence in an action for an assault shows rough treatment of plaintiff by defendant, his confinement in a cold jail, and consequent illness and loss of time, there is such a showing of "actual damage" as to entitle plaintiff to exemplary damages, though the money extent of the actual damage is not shown or found. McConathy v. Deck, 83 Pac. 135, 34 Colo. 461, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 358, 7 Ann. Cas. 896.

Libel

As used in a libel law providing that, before any proceedings shall be brought for the publication in a newspaper of a libel, plaintiff shall serve a written notice on defendant, specifying the article and the statements which he alleges to be false, and that, if it appears on trial that the article was published in good faith, that its falsity was due to an honest mistake in fact, and that there were reasonable grounds for believing that the article was true, and that within ten days after the service of notice a fair and full retraction was published, plaintiff shall recover only actual damages, the term "actual damages" means compensatory damages, and includes pecuniary loss, direct or indirect, or special damages, damages for physical pain and inconvenience, damages for mental suffering, and damages for injury to reputation. It does not include punitive damages. Osborn v. Leach, 47 S. E. 811, 813, 135 N. C. 628, 66 L. R. A. 648.

"Actual damages" being all damages other than punitive, Act Feb. 20, 1899 (Gen. Acts 1898-99, p. 32), amending Code 1896, § 1441, so as to require notice to the publisher of a newspaper before action for libel published in the paper, and providing that if it shall appear at the trial that the article was published in good faith, that its falsity was due to mistake or misapprehension, and that a retraction was published, plaintiff shall recover only actual damages, does not contravene Bill of Rights, § 13, guaranteeing every person a remedy for any injury done him. Comer v. Age-Herald Pub. Co., 44 South. 673, 675, 151 Ala. 613, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 525.

Wrongful Attachment

The term "actual damages," as applied to wrongful attachments, is not limited to such damages as can be definitely determined as the actual loss which the debtor would incur by reason of the attachment, and which loss could be determined or computed; but includes an undetermined loss and damage, which is no less actual by reason of its indeterminate character; such as damage to reputation, damage to pride and to feeling, and damages of that character, some of which, it is true, are more or less sentimental. As distinguished from punitive damages, there may be two classes of actual damages: (1) Where the actual loss is definitely determined and the other where it is indeterminable in character. While damages for mental pain and suffering may be and sometimes are recognized as actual and distinguished from punitive damages, still they are to a certain extent indefinite, and their value must in all cases be fixed by the jury, in view of all the facts and circumstances surrounding the case. Ott v. Press Pub. Co., 82 Pac. 403, 404, 40 Wash. 308 (citing Levy v. Fleischner, 40 Pac. 384, 12 Wash. 15).

ACTUAL DEFENDANTS

In a suit by a stockholder of a corporation against the corporation and others to recover profits secretly made by promoters, the defendants from whom a recovery is really sought are "actual defendants." Groel v. United Electric Co. of New Jersey, 61 Atl. 1061, 1064, 70 N. J. Eq. 616.

ACTUAL DELIVERY

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 4926, permitting minors owning cattle separate from their fathers or guardians to have a separate mark and brand, and section 4942, providing that title to cattle running on the range shall pass by sale of the mark and brand, where a father marks and brands cattle for his infant children, who are too young to be capable of accepting "actual delivery," and records the brands, there is an "actual delivery" within the meaning of article 2546, making "actual delivery" essential to a parol gift, notwithstanding the father still continues to manage and control the cattle. Coke & Reardon v. Ikard, 87 S. W. 869, 870, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 409.

Plaintiff's intestate, who held a note executed by his mother secured by mortgage, on the day of his death wrote a friend, requesting him to return the note to the mother, and to arrange to have the mortgage withdrawn so that the property would be clear. Indorsed on the face of the note in decedent's handwriting was the word "paid," followed by his signature and the date. Immediately after writing his friend, decedent suicided, and the note and mortgage were not returned to the mother until after decedent's death. Held, that "actual delivery" of the note and mortgage was not made by decedent to his friend so as to constitute a gift to the mother. Wittman v. Pickens, 81 Pac. 299, 300, 33 Colo. 484.

ACTUAL EARNINGS

See Based on Actual Earnings.

ACTUAL EVICTION

An "actual eviction" exists where a lessor wrongfully enters upon the leased premises, and by affirmative acts deprives the lessee of the beneficial use thereof, either in whole or in part. Dolph v. Barry, 148 S. W. 196, 198, 165 Mo. App. 659; Lawrence v. Edwin A. Denham Co., 114 N. Y. Supp. 859, 860.

"Actual eviction" arises where by act of a landlord or through a title paramount the tenant is actually deprived of the use of a material part of the premises. Lawrence v. Katcher, 117 N. Y. Supp. 876, 879.

An "actual eviction" exists where the physical expulsion of a tenant is effected. Jackson v. Paterno, 108 N. Y. Supp. 1073, 1076, 58 Misc. Rep. 201.

ACTUAL EXPENSE

"Actual expense," in Sess. Laws 1899, pp. 405, 406, § 1, providing that the sheriff shall be allowed, in addition to his salary, the actual and necessary expense for care of each prisoner, means the actual outlay or payment of money for benefits furnished the prisoners. Mombert v. Bannock County, 75 Pac. 239, 241, 9 Idaho, 470.

ACTUAL FORCE

As related to the commission of robbery, "actual force" is applied to the body, while "constructive force" is by threatening words or gestures and operates on the mind. Tones v. State, 88 S. W. 217, 220, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 363, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1024, 122 Am. St. Rep. 759, 13 Ann. Cas. 455.

ACTUAL FRAUD

As Fraud, see Fraud.

Civ. Code Cal. § 1572, defines "actual fraud" as "the suggestion as a fact of that which is not true by one who does not believe it to be true," or "the positive assertion in a manner not warranted by the information of the person making it of that which is not true, though he believes it to be true." Nash v. Rosesteel, 94 Pac. 850, 852, 7 Cal. App. 504; Muller v. Palmer, 77 Pac. 954, 957, 144 Cal. 305; Krasilnikoff v. Dundon, 97 Pac. 172, 174, 175, 8 Cal. App. 406.

A statement to plaintiff, to induce him to execute a release, while he was in a weak physical condition from personal injuries, by defendant railroad company's claim agent, to the effect that plaintiff would be able to work in two or three weeks, and would have no scars, if palpably false, was an act fitted to deceive, constituting "actual fraud," within this section. Edmunds v. Southern Pac. Co., 123 Pac. 811, 812, 18 Cal. App. 532.

"Actual fraud" is established by competent proof of corrupt purposes, wicked or unlawful intent to cheat another or others." Where certain of the stock of a corporation was issued to "dummy" directors who purchased for the corporation the property of a firm without ever seeing it at an amount equal to the whole capital stock of the corporation, which was issued in payment thereof, after which, under a secret oral agreement, the corporation paid to the firm in cash the actual value of the assets so transferred, the only thing acquired by the corporation being the good will of the firm, which was worth little or nothing, such facts were sufficient to establish "actual fraud" in the organization of the corporation. Hobgood v. Ehlen, 53 S. E. 857, 859, 141 N. C. 344.

The expression "actual fraud" includes any device by which the stock of a corporation passes to a stockholder without payment in full, either in cash or by property purchased "to the amount of the value thereof," and an intentional overvaluation of property on the understanding that a portion of the stock issued should be returned for distribution among the directors voting for the purchase, without payment by them, is such a device and falls within the definition of "actual fraud." Easton Nat. Bank v. American Brick & Tile Co., 60 Atl. 54, 55, 69 N. J. Eq. 326.

Rev. Codes 1905, § 5293 (part of the chapter on Contracts), reads as follows: "'Actual fraud' within the meaning of this chapter consists in any of the following acts committed by a party to the contract, or with his connivance, with intent to deceive another party thereto or to induce him to enter into the contract: (1) The suggestion as a fact of that which is not true by one who does not believe it to be true. (2) The suppression of that which is true by one having knowledge or belief of the fact. * * * (5) Any other act fitted to deceive." In view of this, it was held in an action to rescind a conveyance of real estate brought by the grantor against the grantee, where the consideration received was stock in a corporation the character, condition, and value of whose assets were known only to the grantee, and could not be ascertained by the grantor, that the suggestion as a fact that the stock was of a certain value, to induce the trade, and without which the transaction would not have been consummated, made by one who in the nature of things must have known it to be untrue, constituted fraud which might entitle the grantor to a rescission of the transfer. Liland v. Tweto, 125 N. W. 1032, 1037, 19 N. D. 551.

Where the applicant for a life insurance policy made untrue statements as to his age, knowingly, for the fraudulent purpose of obtaining membership in a lodge, it constituted a case of "actual fraud," not a mere innocent or unintentional breach of warranty or condition. Taylor v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U.

"Actual fraud" means fraud according to the common conscience and not according to the idea of the parties to the conveyance. Thus where decedent, the owner of a farm, being threatened with a suit on a claim for labor which he insisted had been paid, to make himself execution-proof conveyed the land, which was worth $1,800, to defendant without consideration except that defendant assumed a $600 mortgage, it being agreed between decedent and defendant at the time that on the settlement of the claim for labor the property should be reconveyed to decedent, the conveyance was fraudulent as against decedent's creditors, though decedent believed in good faith that he did not owe the claim against him. Lynch's Adm'r v. Murray (Vt.) 83 Atl. 746, 748.

It was "actual fraud" for a person to prevail upon plaintiff to deed his land to her without consideration, falsely pretending that suits were about to be brought which would result in plaintiff's liability for certain indebtedness as a stockholder in a company, and that his land might be taken for the debt, and that she would upon demand reconvey the land which she subsequently refused to do. Chamberlain v. Chamberlain, 95 P. 659, 660, 7 Cal. App. 634.

Under a statute defining "actual fraud" as existing where one party to a contract, with intent to deceive the other, or induce him to contract, positively asserts in a manner not warranted by the information of the person making it that which is not true, though he believes it to be true, a seller is guilty of "actual fraud" where he makes false representations as to the kind or quality of the goods sold which are relied on by the purchaser, though the seller believed the representations to be true. McCabe v. Desnoyers, 108 N. W. 341, 343, 20 S. D. 581.

A sale to a corporation by a promoter and director, for $18,250,000, payable in stock of the corporation, of stock in other corporations purchased by him for $8,250,000, was void because a director cannot sell property to his company for a price in excess of its real value, and also because it violated corporation act (P. L. 1896, p. 293) § 48, providing that nothing but money shall be considered as payment of any part of the capital stock, except that property necessary for the corporation's business may be taken in payment of stock to the amount of the value thereof, and that, in the absence of actual fraud in the transaction, the directors' judgment as to the property's value shall be conclusive, since the conscious and intentional overvaluation of the stock in the other corporations was "actual fraud." Tooker v. National Sugar Refining Co. of New Jersey, 84 Atl. 10, 15, 80 N. J. Eq. 305.

Under Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1908, § 14, c. 15, art. 1, par. 743, defining "actual fraud" by a party to a contract as the suggestion as a fact of that which is not true, by one who does not believe it to be true, or the positive assertion, in a manner not warranted by the information of the person making it, of that which is not true, though he believes it to be true, and defining deceit as the suggestion as a fact, of that which is not true, by one who does not believe it to be true, or the assertion as a fact, of that which is not true, by one who has no reasonable ground for believing it to be true, a party is guilty of fraud and deceit, where, with intent to induce another to enter into a contract, he makes a positive assertion which is material in a manner not warranted by his information, or where he is not shown to have had reasonable grounds for believing it to be true, where the assertion so made is not true, even though believed by the party making it. In such case the definite assertion as a fact of that which is untrue concerning that of which the party has no knowledge is tantamount to the assertion of something which the party knows to be untrue. Garvin v. Harrell, 113 Pac. 186, 188, 27 Okl. 373, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 862, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 744.

ACTUAL KNOWLEDGE

"Actual notice" and knowledge are not always synonymous, but upon proof of sufficient acts the law will presume that a person has information equivalent in its legal effects to actual knowledge. Dunlap v. Gibson, 112 Pac. 598, 83 Kan. 757, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1071.

The word "notice," as used in a provision in the bankruptcy act, that judgment of discharge does not bar such debts as have not been duly scheduled with the name of the creditor, if known, unless such creditor has notice or actual knowledge of the bankruptcy proceedings, etc., means the same as "actual knowledge." The terms are merely convertible. Fields v. Rust, 82 S. W. 331, 333, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 350. Knowledge of bankruptcy proceedings on the part of a creditor of the bankrupt, which is not acquired until after discharge, though in time to prove his claim and to move to revoke the discharge, is not the "actual knowledge" of the proceedings in bankruptcy. Birkett v. Columbia Bank, 25 Sup. Ct. 38-40, 195 U. S. 345, 49 L. Ed. 231.

Where, in an action by an indorsee of a note given by the maker for the purchase of a horse, the maker relied on the fraud, an instruction that if the note was obtained by fraud the burden was on the indorsee to show that he had no actual knowledge of the fraud at the time of the purchase, and that the words "actual knowledge" do not mean that the indorsee must have known the truth of the fraud, if any, but mean that if the indorsee had such knowledge of the fraud as showed a belief in the existence of the fraud there could be no recovery, was not erroneous, though the better practice is not to undertake to define the word "knowledge." Link v. Jackson, 147 S. W. 1114, 1115, 164 Mo. App. 195.

ACTUAL LOSS

The words "actual loss" in Rev. St. 1898, § 3490, providing that, where an "actual loss" has been produced to any party by one adjudged guilty of contempt, the court shall order a sufficient sum to be paid by him to such party to indemnify him, etc., means loss recoverable in an action and do not include costs and expenses of prosecuting the contempt proceedings. My Laundry Co. v. Schmeling, 109 N. W. 540, 549, 129 Wis. 597.

ACTUAL MARKET VALUE

The best test of "actual market value" is a sale on a market under circumstances calculated to elicit full and free bidding by intending purchasers. Opinions as to what a thing would bring are necessarily less convincing as to its value than the fact of what it did bring. Francis v. Million (Ky.) 80 S. W. 486, 487.

Customs Administrative Act, § 19, provides that the words "value" or "actual market value," whenever used in the act or in any law relating to the appraisement of imported merchandise, shall be construed to mean the actual market value, or wholesale price of such merchandise as bought and sold in usual wholesale quantities at the time of exportation to the United States in the principal markets of the country from whence imported and in the condition in which such merchandise is there bought and sold for exportation to the United States, or consigned to the United States for sale. United States v. Park & Tilford, 152 Fed. 142, 143, 81 C. C. A. 360.

ACTUAL MILITARY SERVICE

The terms "actual service" and "active service," as used in the Constitution and Military Code, mean service in time of war or public danger, and the words "when in actual service in time of war or public danger," in Const. § 8, apply to the militia only. State v. Peake, 135 N. W. 197, 201, 22 N. D. 457, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 354.

ACTUAL AND NECESSARY EXPENSES

A statute which provides for the payment of "actual and necessary expenses" of county officers, when absent from their residences in performance of their official duties, includes an allowance for board. Corker v. Pence, 85 Pac. 388, 392, 12 Idaho, 152.

ACTUAL NECESSITIES

An agreement between a legatee in a will, which gave her the income of testator's estate and such further sum as her necessities might require, and the executor, provided that the legatee should have a specified sum per year and the use of the dwelling house, and in case "her actual necessities" required it a further allowance. Held, that the quoted phrase referred to the necessities mentioned in the will, and the agreement was not invalid as depriving the legatee of rights given by the will. Hull v. Hull, 112 N. W. 1126, 1128, 149 Mich. 500.

ACTUAL NEGLIGENCE

Since degrees of negligence are not recognized in Colorado, the term "actual negligence," as used in a bill of lading exempting the carrier from loss caused by acts of its servants, not amounting to willful misconduct or actual negligence, should be construed as a stipulation for exemption from ordinary negligence, and invalid. Adams v. Colorado & S. R. Co., 113 Pac. 1010, 1011, 49 Colo. 475, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 412.

ACTUAL NOTICE

See, also, Actual Knowledge.

"Actual notice" is information concerning a fact directly and personally communicated to the party, and it may also be said to be that which consists of express information of a fact. Metcalf v. Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 112 N. W. 22, 24, 132 Wis. 67 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4840).

"Actual notice" is that which consists in express information of a fact, and a notice is regarded as actual when the party sought to be affected by it knows of the existence of the particular fact in question, or is conscious of having means of knowing it. Parker v. Maslin, 116 Pac. 227, 228, 85 Kan. 130.

"Actual notice" does not mean that which, in metaphysical strictness, is actual in its nature, because it is seldom that ultimate facts can be communicated in a manner so direct and unequivocal as to exclude doubts as to their existence or authenticity. Actual notice means, among other things, knowledge of facts and circumstances so pertinent in character as to enable reasonably cautious and prudent persons to investigate and ascertain as to the ultimate facts. Nordman v. Rau, 119 Pac. 351, 352, 86 Kan. 19, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 400, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1068; Creek Land & Improvement Co. v. Davis, 115 Pac. 468, 470, 28 Okl. 579.

"Actual notice," when proven, is as sufficient as constructive notice, and exists where the party to be affected by it is proved to have actual knowledge of the fact, where the knowledge is brought directly home to him, and whenever the party is put upon inquiry amounting to a duty which would, in the exercise of ordinary diligence and understanding, lead to the knowledge of the requisite fact. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Wood (Tex.) 152 S. W. 487, 493.

"Actual notice" is defined by Rev. Codes, § 5116, as consisting of express information of a fact. Patnode v. Deschenes, 106 N. W. 573, 576, 15 N. D. 100.

Constructive notice distinguished

"Constructive notice" is that which is imputed by law, while "actual notice" is that which consists in express information of a fact, and a notice is deemed actual when the party sought to be affected by it knows of the existence of the particular fact in question, or is conscious of having means of knowing it. Where on the hearing of a motion under Gen. St. 1909, § 6448, by a defendant to reopen a judgment by default on service of summons by publication, it appears that certain facts are communicated to defendant in time to enable him to come in and defend, but the facts communicated were indefinite and might reasonably have been understood by one unacquainted with business to refer to another proceeding pending in another state involving the same property, the question whether defendant had "actual notice," as distinguished from "constructive notice," was one of fact to be determined by the court on the evidence. Parker v. Maslin, 116 Pac. 227, 228, 85 Kan. 130.

Agency

"The term 'actual notice,' within the rule that the acts of a general agent are binding on the principal even after revocation of the agency where there has been no attempt to give notice of such revocation to persons who had dealt with him unless they are charged with actual notice of such revocation, is intended to be understood in its strictly legal, technical sense, and is not to be confounded with actual knowledge, which is by no means a synonym or interchangeable term. Notice is actual when one either has knowledge of a fact or is conscious of having the means of knowledge, although he may not use them. It may be either 'express notice,' or simply 'implied notice'; notice communicated by direct and positive information from persons cognizant of the fact, or notice such as arises when the party to be charged is shown to have had knowledge of such facts and circumstances as would lead him, by the exercise of due diligence, to a knowledge of the principal fact." Burch v. Americus Grocery Co., 53 S. E. 1008, 1009, 125 Ga. 153.

Conveyance or claim of title

One who purchases lands with knowledge of facts which would put a prudent man on inquiry which if prosecuted would be to notice of rights claimed adversely to his vendor is guilty of bad faith if he neglects to make such inquiry, and is chargeable with the actual notice he would have received. Cooper v. Flesner, 103 Pac. 1016, 1020, 24 Okl. 47, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1180, 20 Ann. Cas. 29.

"Notice is 'actual' when the purchaser knows of the existence of the adverse claim, or perhaps when he is conscious of having the means of knowledge, and yet does not use them; and it is immaterial whether his knowledge results from direct information, or is gathered from facts and circumstances." Clark v. Sayers & Lambert, 47 S. E. 312, 318, 55 W. Va. 512.

Under the laws of Massachusetts which provide that no unrecorded conveyance of real estate shall be valid and effectual except against the grantor and persons having "actual notice" thereof, it is not necessary, in order to render such conveyance valid against a subsequent purchaser, that he should have positive and certain knowledge of its existence, but the notice is sufficient if it is such as men usually act upon in ordinary affairs of life. McLaughlin v. Shepherd, 32 Me. 143, 146, 52 Am. Dec. 646 (citing Curtis v. Mundy, 44 Mass. [3 Metc.] 405; Pomroy v. Stevens, 52 Mass. [11 Metc.] 244; Jackson v. Sharp, 9 Johns. [N. Y.] 168, 6 Am. Dec. 267; Jackson v. Burgott, 10 Johns. [N. Y.] 471, 6 Am. Dec. 349; Day v. Dunham, 2 Johns. Ch. [N. Y.] 190; Le Neve v. Le Neve, 3 Atk. 654; Taylor v. Stibbert, 2 Ves. 440; Hiern v. Mill, 13 Ves. 120; 1 Story, Com. Eq. Jur. § 397; 4 Kent's Com. 169-174).

Under Gen. St. 1909, § 1672, providing that no conveyance of real estate shall be valid except as between the parties and as to those who have actual notice, until it is deposited for record, "actual notice" may be express, when it consists of knowledge actually brought personally home, or it may be implied, when it consists of knowledge of facts so informing that a reasonably cautious person would be led by them to the ultimate fact; and in the latter case the known fact must be sufficiently specific to impose the duty to investigate further and must furnish the natural clue to the ultimate facts. Faris v. Finnup, 113 Pac. 407, 408, 84 Kan. 122.

Defective condition of highway

Under the rule that to recover against a township for injuries caused by a defect in a highway the trustee must have had "actual notice" of the defect more than five days before the injury, it is not necessary that such notice should be in writing, or that any particular formality should attend the giving of it. Actual knowledge of the defect is the equivalent of actual notice. Erie Tp. v. Beamer, 79 Pac. 1070, 1071, 71 Kan. 182.

Retirement of partner

Within the rule of law that "actual notice" must be given to persons dealing with a partnership, of the retirement of a partner, so as to relieve the retiring partner of liability, one who sells his business, which he has conducted under a firm name, to another, such other continuing the business under the same name, must give actual notice of the sale to those who have dealt with him.

Publication of the sale in a newspaper, and changing the name of the proprietor on the sign at the place of business, is not actual notice. Werner Co. v. Calhoun, 46 S. E. 1024, 1026, 55 W. Va. 246.

ACTUAL OCCUPANCY

Laws 1885, p. 482, c. 283, § 9, declaring that the forest commission shall have the "care, control, and superintendence" of the forest preserve, and Laws 1900, p. 62, c. 20, § 220, subd. 1, declaring that it shall have the "care, control and supervision" thereof, do not place the commission in the "actual occupancy" of the wild and vacant lands within the preserve. People ex rel. Turner v. Kelsey, 89 N. Y. Supp. 416, 96 App. Div. 148.

ACTUAL OCCUPANT

Ordinarily the "occupant" or "actual occupant" of land is one in actual possession. "Actual occupancy" is defined as an open, visible occupancy, as distinguished from the constructive possession which follows the legal title. 'Actual possession' has practically the same meaning. It means possession in fact, effected by actual entry upon the premises and actual occupancy." Parsons v. Prudential Real Estate Co., 125 N. W. 521, 523, 86 Neb. 271 (quoting from Cutting v. Patterson, 85 N. W. 172, 82 Minn. 375).

A mere trespasser, claiming no title or interest in the property, and having no duty to pay taxes, is not an "actual occupant" within Laws 1903, c. 75, § 34, on whom personal service of notice must be had to vest the court with jurisdiction to confirm a tax sale. Parsons v. Prudential Real Estate Co., 125 N. W. 521, 523, 86 Neb. 271.

ACTUAL PAYMENT

The requirement in an insurance policy of "actual payment" of premium does not exclude all other methods of payment which are not made in cash. The premium may be paid by the credit of the insured if so accepted. Penn Mut. Life Ins. Co. of Philadelphia v. Norcross, 72 N. E. 182, 187, 163 Ind. 379.

ACTUAL POSSESSION

See, also, Pedis Possessio; Real Possession.

"'Actual possession' of land consists in subjecting it to the will and dominion of the occupant, and must be evidenced by those things which are essential to its beneficial use. * * * Justice * * * requires * * * that the extent of the claim should be clearly defined, and that the possession should be open, notorious, and continuous." Gordon v. Ross-Higgins Co., 162 Fed. 637, 641, 89 C. C. A. 429.

"Actual possession" means possession in fact, effected by actual entry upon the premises and actual occupancy. Parsons v. Prudential Real Estate Co., 125 N. W. 521, 523, 86 Neb. 271.

Within the rule that to constitute adverse possession it is necessary that the possession must be actual, etc., "actual" means real, visible. Bradbury Marble Co. v. Laclede Gaslight Co., 106 S. W. 594, 599, 128 Mo. App. 96.

"Actual possession" means the corporeal detention of the property, when used in relation to adverse possession. Wallace v. Sache, 118 N. W. 360, 361, 106 Minn. 123.

The term "actual possession," as used in Pen. Code 1895, art. 425, providing that any person leaving the dead carcass or body of any horse, etc., which died in the actual possession of such person in any public road, or within 50 yards thereof, shall be fined, etc., applies to cases where the animal dies while he was actually being used by the owner; that is, in his manual possession at the time of his death, which refers to cases where one is riding or driving a horse or other animal on some public highway, and such horse or other animal becomes sick and dies on or near such road or highway, and, where a horse turned into a pasture of about ten acres died within ten feet of the public road, the horse, though in the possession of the owner, was not within his "actual possession," as contemplated by the statute. Ogg v. State, 87 S. W. 348, 349, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 231.

As possession

See Possession.

Constructive possession distinguished

"'Actual possession,' as a legal phrase, is put in opposition to the other phrase, 'possession in law' or 'constructive possession.' Actual possession is the same as pedis possessio or pedis positio, and these mean a foothold on the land, an actual entry, a possession in fact, a standing upon it, an occupation of it, as a real, demonstrative act done. It is the contrary of a possession in law, which follows in the wake of title." People ex rel. Turner v. Kelsey, 89 N. Y. Supp. 416, 418, 96 App. Div. 148 (citing Churchill v. Onderdonk, 59 N. Y. 134).

A possessory right to enable a settler to segregate and hold a portion of the public land can only be acquired by "actual," as distinguished from "constructive," possession, by which is meant a subjection of the land to the will and dominion of the claimant; and this is usually evidenced by a substantial inclosure, by cultivation, occupation, or some other proper and appropriate use, according to the locality of the property. Hinchman v. Ripinsky, 3 Alaska, 543, 557.

"'Actual possession' exists where a thing is in the immediate occupancy of the party. 'Constructive possession' is that which exists in contemplation of law without actual personal occupation." Brown v. Volkening, 64 N. Y. 76, 80.

In a controversy between adjoining land-owners as to an intervening strip of land, an instruction that one cannot be in "constructive possession" and another in "actual possession" of the same piece of land at the same time was proper. Crouch v. Colbert, 84 S. W. 992, 111 Mo. App. 93.

"Constructive possession" is a fiction of law; 'actual possession' is a tangible fact. Actual possession means the corporeal detention of the property when used in relation to adverse possession." One who, through another, has cultivated and cropped land sold for taxes, is in "actual possession" within the statute as to service of the redemption notice. Wallace v. Sache, 118 N. W. 360, 361, 106 Minn. 123.

Acts of ownership

The occupation of pine land by annually making turpentine on it is such an "actual possession" as will oust a constructive possession by one claiming merely a superior paper title. Richbourg v. Rose, 44 South. 69, 75, 53 Fla. 173, 125 Am. St. Rep. 1061, 12 Ann. Cas. 274.

The mere cutting of timber and selling to others the right to do so and herding of cattle on land does not amount to "actual possession," though done under color and actual claim of title. Crain v. Peterman, 98 S. W. 600, 601, 200 Mo. 295.

By "actual possession" is meant a subjection to the will and dominion of the claimant. A purchaser of land at a mortgage sale who does not actually reside on it, but who exercises control, has possession within the meaning of the statute providing that every person in actual, open, and notorious possession of lands under color of title in good faith, who shall for seven years continue in possession, shall be held to be the legal owner. Olson v. Howard, 80 Pac. 170, 171, 38 Wash. 15 (quoting and adopting Coryell v. Cain, 16 Cal. 567).

Evidence of the collecting of money for a trespass, preventing other trespasses, and posting fire notices on a tract of 3,500 acres of wild forest land, where the amount of money collected, the circumstances of the several trespasses, and the extent of the notice posting do not appear is insufficient to establish "actual possession." The execution of two leases of five acres each for camping purposes out of a tract of 3,500 acres of forest lands to persons who had occupied the property prior to the leases apparently under the owner's grantors, and who only occupied it at intervals, and did not cultivate or fence it, where neither the plaintiff nor its predecessor in title appeared to have knowledge of any fact tending to establish adverse possession in another, even if constituting actual possession of the leased portions, was not "actual possession" of the rest of the tract. Saranac Land & Timber Co. v. Roberts, 109 N. Y. Supp. 547, 548, 558, 125 App. Div. 833, 844.

"Actual possession," to ripen into prescriptive title, consists in exercising domination over the land and exercising acts of ownership with sufficient continuity to acquaint the owner that an adverse title is being asserted, and so the filling in of the shore front of land bordering on the sea, and the cultivation of grass thereon, is sufficient "actual possession" to show an adverse holding. Dodge v. Lavin, 83 Atl. 1009, 1012, 34 R. I. 409.

Cultivation, inclosure or improvement

Neither actual occupation, cultivation, nor residence is necessary to constitute "actual possession" of property, where the property is so situated as not to admit of permanent useful improvement, and the continued claim of the party is evidenced by public acts of ownership, such as he would exercise over property which he claimed in his own right, and would not exercise over property which he did not claim. McCaughn v. Young, 37 South. 839, 842, 85 Miss. 277.

To constitute "actual possession" of land, it is only necessary to put it to such use or exercise such dominion over it as it is reasonably adapted to in its present state. Alabama State Land Co. v. Matthews, 53 South. 174, 175, 168 Ala. 200.

To constitute "actual possession" of land, there must be such an appropriation of the land by the claimant as will convey to the community where it is situated visible notice that the land is in his exclusive use and enjoyment, an appropriation manifested by either inclosing, cultivating, improving, or adapting it to such uses as it is capable of. Lofstad v. Murasky, 91 Pac. 1008, 1009, 152 Cal. 64.

As timbered swamp lands may be actually possessed by the construction of roads or canals, or by removing the trees, they are no exception to the rule, and a mere payment of taxes, tracing of boundary lines, marking of trees, and watching for trespassers do not constitute "actual possession" of the land and the timber thereon. Albert Hanson Lumber Co. v. Baldwin Lumber Co., 52 South. 537, 538, 126 La. 347.

Occupancy or residence

"Actual possession" exists when a thing is in the immediate occupancy of a party. Warner v. Johnson, 21 N. W. 483, 484, 65 Iowa, 126.

"Actual possession," or "possession in fact," as used in referring to the right to maintain an action to quiet title, exists when the thing is in the immediate occupancy of the party or his agent or tenant, and the terms are synonymous with "pedis possessio." Southern Ry. Co. v. Hall, 41 South. 135, 136, 145 Ala. 224.

In trespass quare clausum fregit, plaintiff testified that he made an arrangement with a third person to hold the premises, as tenant, without fixing the time of the year in which the arrangement was made or the time the third person took possession. There was no evidence of any trespass after March of that year. Held insufficient to show that the trespass was committed while plaintiff was in the "actual possession" of the property. Gordner v. Blades Lumber Co., 56 S. E. 695, 696, 144 N. C. 110 (citing Morris v. Hayes, 47 N. C. 93).

In Code Civ. Proc. § 2245, providing that petitioner in forcible entry and detainer must prove actual possession at the time of entry, etc., "actual possession" means a subjection to the will and dominion of the claimant. It "exists when a thing is in one's immediate occupancy," and it is evidenced by circumstances which vary according to the locality and character of the property. "Generally any overt acts, indicating dominion, and a purpose to occupy and not to abandon the premises, will satisfy the requirements as to possession." It is possession "required by the character and situation of the lands." It intends that the land is "in the immediate control or power of the party." Town of Oyster Bay v. Jacob, 96 N. Y. Supp. 620, 622, 109 App. Div. 613 (citing Anderson's Law Dict.; Allaire v. Ketcham, 35 Atl. 900, 55 N. J. Eq. 168; Omaha & Florence Land & Trust Co. v. Parker, 51 N. W. 139, 33 Neb. 775, 29 Am. St. Rep. 506).

Personal property

Where a heap of scrap iron on a railroad right of way was pledged by the owner and sold by the pledgee on default in payment by the pledgor, and the pledgor absconded, he had no such "actual possession" of the iron as entitled his creditors as against the purchaser to attach it, under Code, § 2906, providing that no sale or mortgage or personal property where the vendor or mortgagor retains actual possession thereof is valid against the existing creditors without notice, such "actual possession" being real possession, that which is true, positive, and certain, and not that which is theoretical or constructive only. Dysart Sav. Bank v. Weinstein, 132 N. W. 18, 19, 152 Iowa, 260.

Determination of what constitutes "actual possession" within Rev. St. 1887, § 3021, providing that a sale of personal property is fraudulent when not accompanied by an immediate delivery and followed by an actual and continued change of possession of the property transferred, is not governed by any fixed rule, but is purely a question of fact to be determined by the jury, or the court in case the jury is waived, from all the evidence in each particular case. Rapple v. Hughes, 77 Pac. 722, 725, 10 Idaho, 338.

ACTUAL PURCHASE OR SALE

Under Rev. Laws, c. 99, § 4, providing that whoever on credit or margin employs another to buy or sell securities for his account, intending that there shall be no actual purchase or sale, may recover from the person so employed any payment made, or the value of anything delivered, on account thereof, if the person employed had reasonable cause to believe that said intention existed; but he shall not have such right if, for his account, the person employed makes, in accordance with the terms of the employment, an "actual purchase or sale" of said securities, the meaning of which words is made somewhat more plain by section 6, providing that, in an action for such recovery, settlements without the completion of the purchase or sale of securities shall be prima facie evidence of an intention that there should be no actual purchase or sale, a defendant in such a case does not make out a defense by merely showing purchases and sales of stock on the stock exchange, and settlements by the adjustment of balances through the clearing house; but he must prove in addition that as a result of the purchases he or his agents had within his or their immediate control certificates of the particular stock to an amount equal to that purchased at all times ready to deliver to the plaintiff if called for by him, or in cases of sales similar certificates ready to deliver to the purchasers. Fiske v. Doucette, 92 N. E. 455, 457, 206 Mass. 275.

ACTUAL REBELLION

"Actual rebellion or insurrection," in its ordinary acceptation, means a resistance to the established order of things. State v. McDonald (Ala.) 4 Port. 449, 457.

ACTUAL RESIDENCE—ACTUAL RESIDENT

See, also, Actual Bona Fide Resident.

Whether a person is an "actual resident" of a particular school district, within the meaning of Gen. St. 1894, § 3697, must depend upon the special facts of each particular case. State ex rel. Crosland v. Board of Education of Independent School Dist., 97 N. W. 885, 886, 91 Minn. 268.

Rev. Laws 1905, § 3597, providing for limited divorce, in an action by a married woman, the phrase an "actual resident" of the state at the filing of her complaint applies to a married woman having a legal domicile or established residence in the state as distinguished from one having only a temporary abode therein. Bechtel v. Bechtel, 112 N. W. 883, 884, 101 Minn. 511, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1100.

Legal residence distinguished

Residence and domicile are not necessarily the same. The first is used to indicate the place of dwelling, whether permanent or temporary, the second to define the fixed and permanent residence to which, when absent, one has the intention of returning. This distinction is the same as is sometimes made between actual residence and legal residence or inhabitancy. "Actual residence" is not always the legal residence or inhabitancy of a man. A foreign minister actually resides and is personally present at the court to which he is accredited, but his legal residence, inhabitancy, or domicile is in his own country. When a man buys or rents a house and sets up housekeeping with his family with the design of remaining there until he has completed certain work, he becomes an actual resident there, although his domicile is in another county to which he intends to return upon the completion of the job. In re Brannock, 181 Fed. 819, 822 (quoting and adopting definition in Fitzgerald v. Arel, 16 N. W. 712, 18 N. W. 713, 63 Iowa, 104, 50 Am. Rep. 733).

There is a broad distinction between a "legal" and an "actual residence." A legal residence (domicile) cannot, in the nature of things, coexist in the same person in two states and countries. He must have a legal residence somewhere. The succession to movable property, whether testamentary or in case of intestacy, except as regulated by statute; the jurisdiction of the probate of wills; the right to vote; the liability to poll tax and to military duty; and other things all depend on the party's legal residence or domicile. For these purposes he must have a legal residence. The law will, from facts and circumstances, fix a legal residence for him, unless he voluntarily fixes it himself. His "legal residence" consists of fact and intention; both must concur; and, when his legal residence is once fixed, it requires both fact and intention to change it. As contradistinguished from his legal residence, he may have an "actual residence" in another state or country. He may abide in the latter without surrendering his legal residence in the former, provided he so intends. His legal residence, for the purposes above indicated, may be merely ideal, but his actual residence must be substantial. He may not actually abide at his legal residence at all, but his actual residence must be his abiding place. His legal residence subjects him to the duties, and confers upon him the rights and privileges, above mentioned. The residence required by Rev. St. 1895, art. 2978, which provides that no suit for divorce shall be maintained unless the petitioner at the time of suit is an actual bona fide inhabitant of the state, and shall have resided in the county where the suit is filed six months preceding the filing thereof, means the physical presence of the plaintiff within the state and county for the time required, and therefore an actual bona fide inhabitancy in the state, coupled with a constructive residence in the county, is insufficient, and while the domicile of a husband is the domicile of his wife, and so continues notwithstanding the wife's physical absence, so long as the husband is not guilty of an offense which is a cause of divorce, after his commission of such offense by abandoning her, her residence, for the purposes of divorce, depends on her actual residence. Michael v. Michael, 79 S. W. 74, 75, 84 Tex. Civ. App. 630 (quoting and adopting definition in Tipton v. Tipton, 8 S. W. 440, 87 Ky. 243).

ACTUAL SALE

"An 'actual sale' is a transfer of property from one person to another, and includes the actual and complete transfer of the title." Kramer v. Wilson, 90 Pac. 183, 185, 49 Or. 333.

The distinction between an "actual sale" and an executory agreement to sell personally is that in the former the subject of the contract becomes the property of the buyer the moment the contract is concluded, whether actually delivered, or remaining in the seller's possession, while in the latter it remains the property of the seller until the contract is executed. Idaho Implement Co. v. Lambach, 101 Pac. 951, 956, 16 Idaho, 497.

ACTUAL SEISIN

In Gen. Laws 1896, c. 201, § 14, declaring that a person actually seised of lands as tenant in tail may convey the lands in fee, "actual seisin" means corporal possession with legal title. Paine v. Sackett, 61 Atl. 753, 756, 27 R. I. 300.

ACTUAL SERVICE

The term "actual service," as used in the Constitution and Military Code, means service in time of war or public danger. State v. Peake, 185 N. W. 197, 201, 22 N. D. 457, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 354.

ACTUAL SETTLEMENT

"'Actual settlement' means actual residence." Smith v. Florence, 96 S. W. 1096, 1097, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 557 (quoting and adopting definition in Mosely v. Torrence, 12 Pac. 480, 71 Cal. 818).

ACTUAL SETTLER

An "actual settler," as involving title to school land, is one who actually occupies and settles upon the land intending to make it his home. Beaty v. Yell, 133 S. W. 911, 912; May v. Hollingsworth, 80 S. W. 841, 842, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 665.

One who makes his home on public lands is an "actual settler" thereon, within the meaning of the statute permitting such settlers to purchase additional school lands, though his habitation is of such a humble character that it can hardly be called a house. Corrigan v. Fitzsimmons, 111 S. W. 793, 795, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 444.

"An 'actual settler' upon land belonging to the state is one who establishes himself upon the land, or fixes his residence upon it, to take possession, for his exclusive occupancy and use, with a view to acquire title to it by purchase from the state." On an issue as to whether defendant was an actual settler on school land at the time of his application to purchase, it appeared that he drove onto the land with a wagon filled with household goods and provisions, the wagon having bows, and a sheet stretched over the bows; that that night he ate supper in the wagon and slept in it, and ate breakfast in the wagon next morning, though he did not make any fire; and that the next morning he left the wagon and household goods on the land, and made his application. Defendant was an unmarried man and had no family, and went upon the land for the purpose of making it his home. Held that the evidence was sufficient to show him an "actual settler." Smith v. Florence, 96 S. W. 1096, 1097, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 557 (quoting and adopting definition in Gavitt v. Mohr, 10 Pac. 337, 68 Cal. 506).

Under the proviso of Act Cong. Feb. 8, 1887, § 2, providing that actual settlers shall be excepted from the grant to the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company, mere occupation of land within the grant by "actual settlers" at the time is sufficient. Lisso v. Devillier, 43 South. 163, 164, 118 La. 559.

ACTUAL TAKING

An "actual taking" within a statute prohibiting a chattel mortgagee from selling the property or removing it from the county within five days from the time when the same was actually taken, means a corporal taking out of the possession and control of the mortgagor. Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. v. Haug, 117 N. W. 811, 812, 186 Wis. 350.

ACTUAL TRAVELING EXPENSES

Hotel bills incurred by the superintendent of public instruction while staying at a place for the purpose of visiting schools are not a part of the "actual traveling expenses," which, under Gen. St. § 1292, are to be allowed and paid to that officer. State ex rel. Cutting v. La Grave, 42 Pac. 797, 23 Nev. 88.

Laws 1907, c. 74, § 15, par. 14, allowing the court reporter his "actual traveling expenses" in attending the district court away from his official residence, authorizes, in view of a uniform practical construction to that effect of a prior similar statute, an allowance for his board and lodging at the place where the court was held. Van Veen v. Graham County, 108 Pac. 252, 253, 13 Ariz. 167.

ACTUAL VALUE

The terms "actual value," as used in section 29, and "clear value," in section 30, War Revenue Act June 13, 1898, c. 448, 30 Stat. 461, 465, conveys the idea of definite or certain value, something in no sense speculative. Lynch v. Union Trust Co. of San Francisco, 164 Fed. 161, 167, 90 C. C. A. 147.

As salable or cash value

Selling value as actual value, see Selling Value.

The "actual value" of insured property is its salable or cash value. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. v. Frosch (Tex.) 130 S. W. 600, 602.

ACTUAL WORKING DAYS

An agreement of apprenticeship bound the apprentice to serve for 1,200 "actual working days," which throughout the indenture were referred to as a "term." Held, that such phrase meant that the service should continue through a period within which there are 1,200 days, exclusive of Sundays and holidays, and not to mean 1,200 days on which the apprentice should actually perform work for his master. Robeson v. Whitney, 71 Atl. 255, 256, 76 N. J. Law, 778.

ACTUALLY DISCOVERED

In a parent's action for the death of a minor by being struck by a railroad train, the modification, by striking out the quoted word, of a requested instruction, that the duty of the engineer to make all reasonable effort to avoid striking the boy, did not arise till he "actually" discovered the boy in a position of peril, was not erroneous, since "actually discovered" does not mean more than "discovered." Haddox v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 127 Pac. 152, 46 Mont. 185.

ACTUALLY EMPLOYED

Defendant was appointed by the Secretary of the Interior as the disbursing member of a board of three commissioners to negotiate Indian treaties at $8 per day and traveling expenses, exclusive of subsistence, to continue at the pleasure of the Secretary of the Interior for the time being. Defendant was directed to proceed from his home in Nebraska to the agency in Washington without unnecessary delay, his salary to begin on the day of his departure from home. The instructions given the board required a study of the special needs of the Indians in each case, and the formation of agreements which would best promote their welfare and weekly reports. Defendant paid himself and the other commissioners at the rate of $8 a day for the time that they were under instructions, or were holding themselves in readiness to obey instructions on vouchers reciting actual employment during such period. These vouchers were uniformly accepted without question, except for periods during which the commissioners were absent from their post on leave. Held that, under the rule of contemporaneous construction, the phrase "actually employed" should not be construed as equivalent to "actively employed," and hence the salary was not limited to days on which the commissioners were actually engaged in the performance of active duty. United States v. Hoyt, 158 Fed. 162, 167.

ACTUALLY ENGAGED

An attorney was justified in stating, in an affidavit for a postponement of trial, that he was "actually engaged" in the trial of a case in another court, where it appeared that he was directed the day before to be ready on that morning to try the case in the other court immediately following a case then on trial, though that case was not actually tried because, when reached, the opposite attorney unexpectedly applied for a continuance because his client did not appear. Cebrelli v. Bradley, 119 N. Y. Supp. 255, 256, 65 Misc. Rep. 59.

The words "for each day he shall be actually engaged," as used in St. 1893, § 2454, as amended, limiting the compensation of the county judge to $5 per day for each day actually engaged in matters not appertaining to probate business, indicates a legislative intention only to allow for the time actually consumed, and this construction necessitates a splitting up of days and a charge by the hour. Hoffman v. Lincoln County, 118 N. W. 850, 852, 137 Wis. 353.

Under an appointment of defendant by the Secretary of the Interior as an Indian commissioner to study the needs of and negotiate treaties with certain Indian tribes as directed, at a salary of $8 per day and actual travelling expenses, the salary to begin when defendant left his home and to be paid while "actually engaged" in the performance of his duties, he was entitled to salary so long as he remained away from home at the places to which he was assigned, performing such duties as directed and reporting regularly, and not merely for the days on which he was actively engaged in the performance of some duty, and especially where that was the practical construction placed upon the contract by both parties. United States v. Hoyt, 167 Fed. 301, 305, 93 C. C. A. 53.

ACTUALLY EXPENDED

Sum of money actually expended, see Sum of Money.

ACTUALLY PAID

Under a contract of reinsurance, providing that in no event shall the reinsurer be liable for an amount in excess of a ratable proportion of the sum actually paid to the assured by the reinsured company, the expression "actually paid" will be construed to mean "actually payable." Insolvency of the reinsured company, and its inability to pay those it has insured, will not defeat a recovery by its receiver upon the contract of reinsurance. Allemannia Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburg v. Fireman's Ins. Co. of Baltimore, 28 App. D. C. 330, 338, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1049.

ACTUALLY RECEIVE

Where an individual, who conceived the idea of publishing a history of the Protestant

Episcopal Church in this country, obtained from bishops their promises to act as supervising editors of the history of their respective dioceses, and then organized a corporation to publish the history, and transferred to the corporation the agreements with the bishops, and received in consideration thereof stock of the corporation, the agreements, though valuable, were not property within Stock Corporation Law, § 55, prohibiting the issuance of stock except for money, labor done, or property "actually received." Stevens v. Episcopal Church History Co., 125 N. Y. Supp. 573, 582, 140 App. Div. 570.

Under Const. art. 12, § 6, providing that no corporation shall issue stock, except for "money paid" or "property actually received," a contract for the sale of stock, to be paid for in part in cash and in part by the purchaser's notes, payable on a future date, is ultra vires, though the notes are to be indorsed by a solvent indorser and secured by a pledge of the stock, since a note is not the equivalent of "money paid," and since, as between the parties, a note is mere evidence of indebtedness, and is not property "actually received." McCarthy v. Texas Loan & Guaranty Co. (Tex.) 142 S. W. 96, 99.

Under section 39 of article 9 of the Constitution (Williams' Constitution and Enabling Act, § 256), which provides that "no corporation shall issue stock except for money, labor done, or property actually received to the amount of the par value thereof, * * *" the right to use a party's name in organizing a corporation, and a method of refining gasoline, which was not patented, which was in use at a number of other places, and which was the result of a method of construction used by the plaintiff wherever he built refineries, is not property "actually received" to the amount of the par value thereof, for which capital stock of the corporation should be issued. Webster v. Webster Refining Co. of Okmulgee (Okla.) 128 Pac. 261, 262.

ACTUALLY RENDERED

See Services Actually Rendered.

ACTUALLY RIDING AS PASSENGER

Where a beneficiary in an accident policy was a United States railway mail clerk, and was killed while riding in a mail car in the performance of his duties, he was not "actually riding as a passenger in or on any regular passenger conveyance provided by a common carrier," within an accident policy insuring the person named as beneficiary under certain circumstances against loss by accident while actually riding as a passenger in or on any regular passenger conveyance. Wood v. General Acc. Ins. Co. of Philadelphia, 156 Fed. 982; Id., 160 Fed. 926, 927, 88 C. C. A. 108.

ACTUALLY USED

J. avenue was opened under Laws 1867, p. 953, c. 400, under which act the city acquired only an easement for street purposes, and thereafter proceedings were instituted to acquire land to widen the avenue, when a part of it then in use was abandoned under Laws 1895, p. 2037, c. 1006, § 2, providing that, when the public easement in a street was legally abandoned, the owner regained complete possession thereof, and, after the new street was opened, could occupy the abandoned part. The cemetery association owned the fee in land which was included within the abandoned portion of J. avenue. Held, that the new street was not "opened," within the statute, until there had been an actual physical opening, and hence the abandoned part of the avenue was not exempted from assessment as "land actually used for cemetery," by Laws 1879, c. 301, § 1. AD VALOREM

The phrase "ad valorem," in Const. art. 19, § 27, providing that local assessments shall be ad valorem and uniform, means simply according to value, and an assessment according to the value of the benefits to accrue is within this provision of the Constitution, as well as a statute directing an assessment according to the value of the property benefited. Kirst v. Street Imp. Dist. No. 120, 109 S. W. 526, 529, 86 Ark. 1.

ADAPT—ADAPTED

The verb "adapt" means: "To make suitable; make to correspond; fit or suit; proportion. (2) To fit by alteration; modify or remodel for a different purpose. * * * (3) To make by altering or fitting something else; produce by change of form or character." "Adapted" means "fit or suitable." Century Dictionary. The claims of a patent in issue read as follows: "A clock-controlled time-recorder having automatically-acting time printing means 'adapted' to print regular records in a certain color and irregular records in a certain other color. * * * A clock-controlled time-recorder having automatically-actuated time-printing means 'adapted' to print regular records with an impression of a certain color, and irregular records with an impression of a certain other color." The word "adapted," as used in these claims, evidently refers to the fact that prior clock-controlled time-recorders having automatically-acting time-printing means are not calculated, or so constructed as, to print the time or impress the characters indicating the time, when recording irregular time, on the card or paper in a color different from the imprint or impression thereon recording the regular time. In other words, such printing means are, by changes or additions, or both "adapted" to print "records" of the different classes, "regular time" or "irregular time," in different or distinctive colors; that is, in such colors as will distinguish the one class of recorded time from the other class of recorded time. Dey Time-Register Co. v. W. H. Bundy Recording Co., 169 Fed. 807-810.

ADD

Under the food and drugs act (Act June 30, 1906, c. 3915, §§ 7, 8, 34 Stat. 769, 771), an article of food other than confectionery is not deemed to be adulterated merely because it contains a poisonous or deleterious ingredient unless such ingredient has been "added"; that is, unless it is foreign to the natural or normal composition of the article. United States v. Forty Barrels and Twenty Kegs of Coca-Cola, 191 Fed. 431, 433.

A person may be convicted of violating Act May 13, 1909 (P. L. 520), in selling confectionery to which sulphur dioxide has been "added," although he may not know that his merchandise contained the prohibited substance. Commonwealth v. Pfau, 50 Pa. Super. Ct. 55, 53.

ADDED POISONOUS INGREDIENT

Macaroni, to which a coal tar dye known as "martius yellow" had been added solely as a coloring matter, held to contain an "added poisonous * * * ingredient which may render it injurious to health," within Food and Drugs Act June 30, 1906, c. 3915, § 7, par. 5, 34 Stat. 769, and, when shipped in interstate commerce, to be subject to condemnation and destruction under section 10 of the act; the evidence showing that such coloring matter is a poison which will kill. United States v. 1,950 Boxes of Macaroni, 181 Fed. 427.

ADDICTED

The word "addicted," as applied to the use of intoxicating liquors which would avoid a policy of life insurance for breach of warranty of the truth of statements in the application, means the habitual or customary use of liquors, and not an occasional or exceptional use. Des Moines Life Ins. Co. v. Clay, 116 S. W. 232, 89 Ark. 230.

ADDITION

See Dividend Additions; In Addition to; Simple Addition; Without Addition or Erasure.

Amendment of a complaint by addition of an averment at the end that the suit was brought on a verified account was not an "addition" to the statement of the cause of action on the account within Code 1907, § 5367, providing that the court must while the case is in progress amend all and every imperfection in form on motion of the party, and permit the addition of new statements of the cause of action which could have been included in the original complaint, etc. Western Newspaper Union v. Judson, 55 South. 1026, 1027, 1 Ala. App. 615.

Act May 29, 1889, § 7, provides that the trustees of a sanitary district shall have power to lay out one or more main channels for carrying off the drainage, together with such adjuncts and additions thereto as may be proper. Act May 14, 1903, enlarging the boundaries of the sanitary district of Chicago, gave the trustees power to provide for the additional territory by constructing one or more channels together with such adjuncts and additions thereto as may be necessary, and shall maintain the same proportion of dilution of sewage through such auxiliary channels. Held, that the words "adjuncts" and "additions" were used as synonymous with "auxiliary channel," and did not mean city sewers connecting with the sanitary district outlet so as to authorize the district authorities to take charge of the building of sewers of municipalities within the district. City of Chicago v. Green, 87 N. E. 417, 422, 238 Ill. 258.

Building

As dwelling, see Dwelling—Dwelling House.

Attached to buildings, see Attach.

The definitions given in dictionaries afford very little assistance in determining the application to a particular structure of the word "addition" as used in a fire insurance policy covering personal property contained in a frame building and addition. The meaning of the term must be extended or limited by reference to other words of description and by the use and purpose contemplated by the parties to contract not inconsistent with the language of the policy and by judicial definitions given in similar cases. A building destroyed by fire which was connected with the frame building mentioned in the policy by a platform 24 feet wide and 26 feet by the sides of the building supported by posts and reached by a runway and from which doors opened into each building, which was erected at the same time and constantly used in connection with the frame building mentioned, was an "addition" within the meaning of the policy. Bickford v. Aetna Ins. Co., 63 Atl. 552, 554, 101 Me. 124, 8 Ann. Cas. 92.

A fire policy described the property insured as a two-story basement and brick building with metal roof, and its "additions adjoining and communicating, including foundations, occupied as a steam laundry." The laundry was in process of construction at the time the policy was written, and consisted of a main building, and in the rear of it, about four feet distant, a boiler room was located. A 2½-inch steam pipe ran from the boiler house to an engine in the center of the main building, being the means by which the power was transmitted from the boiler to the other machinery employed in operating the laundry. The boiler house was joined with the main building by means of framework. The boiler house must be deemed as included in the policy, because of the use of the phrase "adjoining and communicating." Guthrie Laundry Co. v. Northern Assurance Co. of London, 87 Pac. 649, 650, 17 Okl. 571, 10 Ann. Cas. 936 (citing Pettit v. State Ins. Co., 43 N. W. 378, 41 Minn. 299; Marsh v. Concord Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 51 Atl. 898, 71 N. H. 253; Home Mut. Ins. Co. of California v. Roe, 36 N. W. 594, 71 Wis. 33; Cargill v. Millers' & Manufacturers' Mut. Ins. Co. of Minnesota, 22 N. W. 6, 33 Minn. 90; Gross v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co., 66 N. W. 712, 92 Wis. 656; Carpenter v. Allemannia Fire Ins. Co., 26 Atl. 731, 156 Pac. 37; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Martin [Miss.] 16 South. 417; Hannan v. Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co., 45 N. W. 1120, 81 Mich. 556, 9 L. R. A. 127; Maisel v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 69 N. Y. Supp. 181, 59 App. Div. 461; Liebenstein v. Baltic Fire Ins. Co., 45 Ill. 301).

Same—Distinct building.

A policy covering a building and its additions "adjoining and communicating" cannot be construed to include a servant's house 150 feet distant, though the buildings are connected by a system of call bells. North British & Mercantile Ins. Co. v. Tye, 58 S. E. 110, 111, 1 Ga. App. 380.

An insurance policy on a "sawmill and additions thereto" will cover a planing mill, which is an addition to the sawmill and a part thereof, even though there is a space of 18 inches between them, where they communicate directly with each other, and lumber is passed from the sawmill directly into the planing mill, and a short stepladder extends from the floor of the sawmill to the second floor of the planing mill, and a large belt, covered by a box, communicates power from one mill to the other. Ferguson v. Lumbermen's Ins. Co., 88 Pac. 128, 130, 45 Wash. 209.

A building detached from the main dwelling, but used as a part of it, is an "addition" within a fire policy on "dwelling and addition." Tate v. Jasper County Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co., 113 S. W. 659, 660, 133 Mo. App. 584.

Where a policy covered building material stacked in a millyard 100 feet from the mill building and its "additions," material burned while piled in an open shed within such radius was covered. Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Mayfield Planing Mills (Ky.) 119 S. W. 1190.

Where a fire policy described the risk as a "frame building with additions," the word "additions" does not necessarily mean something attached to the building, and, where extraneous evidence showed that it was meant to include outhouses, the policy will be given the broader meaning. Ideal Pump & Mfg. Co. v. American Cent. Ins. Co., 152 S. W. 406, 409, 167 Mo. App. 566.

City or town

Any additions thereto, see Any.

Fixtures

A lease, reserving to the lessor at the end of the term all "alterations, additions and improvements" except movable fixtures, entitles him to such additions as electric light apparatus, gallery, vestibules, dumb-waiters, and toilet rooms. Isman v. Hanscom, 66 Atl. 329, 830, 217 Pa. 133.

ADDITIONAL

"Additional" means "added; supplemental; coming by way of addition." Collier v. Smaltz, 128 N. W. 396, 399, 149 Iowa, 230, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1007.

"Additional" means given with or joined to some other, and embraces the idea of joining or uniting one thing to another, so as to form an aggregate. Kadderly v. City of Portland, 74 Pac. 710, 717, 44 Or. 118 (citing Anderson's Law Dict.; State, to Use of Baird, v. Hull, 53 Miss. 626, 645; Brooks v. Whitmore, 31 N. E. 731, 139 Mass. 356).

ADDITIONAL AMENDMENT

An amendment, though not on the same subject or article, is an "additional amendment" within Const. art. 17, § 2, prohibiting the proposal of any additional amendment or amendments of the Constitution while one is awaiting action of a second Legislature or of the electors. Kadderly v. City of Portland, 74 Pac. 710, 717, 44 Or. 118.

ADDITIONAL BURDEN

See, also, Additional Servitude.

Poles and wires which permanently and exclusively occupy portions of a public street or highway constitute an "additional burden" for which the abutting owner is entitled to compensation in case he is damaged thereby. Bronson v. Albion Telephone Co., 93 N. W. 201, 202, 67 Neb. 111, 60 L. R. A. 426, 2 Ann. Cas. 639 (citing and adopting Jaynes v. Omaha St. Ry. Co., 74 N. W. 67, 53 Neb. 631, 89 L. R. A. 751; Eels v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 38 N. E. 202, 143 N. Y. 133, 25 L. R. A. 640; Halsey v. Rapid Transit St. Ry. Co., 20 Atl. 859, 47 N. J. Eq. 380; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Williams, 11 S. E. 106, 86 Va. 696, 8 L. R. A. 429, 19 Am. St. Rep. 908; Stowers v. Postal Telegraph Cable Co., 9 South. 356, 68 Miss. 539, 12 L. R. A. 864, 24 Am. St. Rep. 290; City of Spokane v. Colby, 48 Pac. 248, 16 Wash. 610; Kester v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 108 Fed. 926).

A telephone line along the margin of a highway is not an "additional burden," entitling the abutting owner to compensation. As stated in Keasly, Electric Wires, p. 153, § 124: "When the property is taken for a public road or street, although technically the fee remains in the abutting owner, yet he cannot interfere with the surface, and it would seem that practically an additional burden, such as would justify an action on his part, should be something which either interfered with or made inconvenient his enjoyment of what remained to him in the land. As to obstructing the road, that would be a matter in which he had no greater right than the public generally, but if the new use impaired his proper use of his own property, in any manner, then, if it could be said to be a use not included within the original grant, it would be a matter for which he would be entitled to compensation." Hobbs v. Long Distance Telephone & Telegraph Co., 41 South. 1003, 1004, 147 Ala. 893, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 87, 11 Ann. Cas. 461 (citing Taggart v. Newport St. Ry. Co., 19 Atl. 326, 16 R. I. 668, 7 L. R. A. 205; Nellis, Surface Railroads, pp. 134, 135; Elliott, Roads & Streets [2d Ed.] pp. 754, 757, §§ 698, 699; Joyce, Electric Law, §§ 306, 336, 341; Keasly, Electric Wires, §§ 103, 112, 113, 124, 145, conclusion on p. 178; Halsey v. Rapid Transit St. Ry. Co., 20 Atl. 860, 47 N. J. Eq. 380; Detroit City Ry. v. Mills, 48 N. W. 1007, 85 Mich. 634; 3 Cook, Corp. [4th Ed.] § 933; Pierce v. Drew, 136 Mass. 75, 49 Am. Rep. 7; Frazier v. East Tennessee Telephone Co., 90 S. W. 620, 115 Tenn. 416, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 323, 112 Am. St. Rep. 856, 5 Ann. Cas. 838.

ADDITIONAL CHARGE

On trial of misdemeanor, the judge on request reduced his charge to writing, the jury returned into court and asked if they were authorized on conviction to recommend mercy, and the judge informed them orally that they could do so, but that their recommendation was not binding. Held not an "additional charge," within Pen. Code 1895, § 1030, as amended by Acts 1897, p. 41, making it error to give any other or additional charge than that written and read to the jury as provided by the section. Dowling v. State, 67 S. E. 697, 698, 7 Ga. App. 613.

ADDITIONAL COURTS

Const. 1902, § 98, declaring that in a city having a certain population or more the General Assembly may provide such additional courts as the public interests may require, does not authorize Code 1904, § 2639a, in so far as it confers jurisdiction on clerks of corporation courts to admit wills to probate, appoint personal representatives, etc., since, applying the doctrine of ejusdem generis, the "additional courts" which the General Assembly may establish must be similar in grade, dignity, and jurisdiction to existing courts, and that cannot be predicated of a court clothed with the special and limited jurisdiction conferred on the clerks. McCurdy v. Smith, 60 S. E. 78, 80, 107 Va. 757.

ADDITIONAL DUTY

Under Customs Administrative Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, § 19, 26 Stat. 139, the "additional duty" provided therein for unusual coverings used "otherwise than in the bona fide transportation" of their contents to the United States, is not a substitute for the usual duty on coverings which accrues by including their cost in the dutiable value of their contents, as also provided in said section; but both duties should be imposed, the latter because the coverings subserve a use in transportation, and the former because they subserve an additional use after transportation. United States v. Park & Tilford, 152 Fed. 142, 143, 81 C. C. A. 360.

ADDITIONAL INSURANCE

In order that other insurance shall constitute "additional insurance" within the meaning of a policy, the property covered by both policies must be the same. Norwich Union Fire Ins. Society v. Cheaney Bros. (Tex.) 128 S. W. 1168.

ADDITIONAL PROOF

The words "additional proof," as used in Code Cr. Proc. § 395, providing that a confession is insufficient to warrant a conviction, without additional proof that the crime has been committed, mean merely any evidence in addition to the confession reasonably tending to prove the crime and thus corroborate the crime, and do not require evidence which is sufficient to convict independent of the confession. People v. Brasch, 85 N. E. 809, 813, 193 N. Y. 46.

ADDITIONAL SCHOOL FACILITIES

The words "additional school facilities," as used in Laws 1897, p. 134, § 1940b, providing that the trustees of any school district may, when advisable, submit to the electors the question whether a tax shall be raised to purchase lots and furnish "additional school facilities," means facilities in addition to or beyond those already possessed by the district, and a tax raised under the statute may be used to pay salaries of teachers where the regular fund is exhausted. State ex rel. Knight v. Cave, 52 Pac. 200, 202, 20 Mont. 468.

ADDITIONAL SERVITUDE

See, also, Additional Burden.

A company proposed to lay water mains along a road where for over a mile there were only 15 houses; the object not being to furnish the houses thereon with water, but to use that road for over a mile to connect with pipes at other points. Held, that the laying of pipes therein was an "additional servitude," since the road was not so improved as would justify the application of the rule which governs streets in cities and towns, though it was within the corporate limits. Baltimore County Water & Electric Co. v. Dubreuil, 66 Atl. 439, 442, 105 Md. 424, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 684.

The construction, maintenance, and operation of a telephone system on the streets of a city in such a manner as not to cause unnecessary injury or inconvenience to property owners is not an "additional servitude" for which an abutting owner is entitled to compensation. Kirby v. Citizens' Telephone Co. of Sioux Falls, 97 N. W. 3, 4, 17 S. D. 362, 2 Ann. Cas. 152.

The lines and poles of a telephone system upon a street of a city constitute an "additional servitude," where the fee is in the owner of the abutting property, notwithstanding the city uses the poles for its fire alarm and police signal service while they are still being used by the telephone company, and the same is true of telegraph lines and poles. De Kalb County Telephone Co. v. Dutton, 81 N. E. 838, 839, 840, 841, 228 Ill. 178, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1057, 10 Ann. Cas. 464 (citing Board of Trade Telegraph Co. v. Barnett, 107 Ill. 507, 516, 47 Am. Rep. 453; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. West Chicago St. R. Co., 40 N. E. 1008, 1012, 156 Ill. 255, 269, 29 L. R. A. 485; Carpenter v. Capital Electric Co., 52 N. E. 973, 178 Ill. 29, 43 L. R. A. 645, 69 Am. S.] 1091; Elliott, Roads & Streets [2d Ed.] §§ 705, 706; Lewis, Eminent Domain [2d Ed.] § 131; Jones, Tel- graph & Telephone Companies, §§ 107, 109; Crowell, Electricity, § 110; Randolph, Eminent Domain, § 407; Dillon, Mun. Corp. [4th Ed.] § 698a; Nicoll v. New York & New Jersey Tel. Co., 42 Atl. 583, 62 N. J. Law, 735, 72 Am. St. Rep. 686; Krueger v. Wisconsin Telephone Co., 81 N. W. 1041, 106 Wis. 96, 50 L. R. A. 298; Bronson v. Albion Tel. Co., 93 N. W. 201, 67 Neb. 111, 60 L. R. A. 426, 2 Ann. Cas. 639).

The establishment by a railway company of a system of wires and posts over its right of way is not the imposition of an "additional servitude," within the meaning of that term, authorizing an abutting owner to claim additional compensation. Railroad companies may devote the right of way which they have acquired to any use indispensable to or which will facilitate the fulfillment of the objects of their corporate existence, whether these uses be by grading, constructing of telegraph lines, or other incidental uses requisite for the convenient, safe, and successful conducting of their business and regular running of their trains. City of Canton v. Canton Cotton Warehouse Co., 36 South. 266, 271, 84 Miss. 268, 65 L. R. A. 561, 105 Am. St. Rep. 428.

The operation by a corporation organized for the incorporation of street railway companies of interurban cars on streets of a city with its permission, for carriage of passengers, express, and light freight, is not an "additional servitude" on the streets, and abutting owners are not entitled to compensation therefor; but a street railway company operating on a city's street for the carriage of freight and passengers, interurban trains of three cars each 60 feet in length at a rate of 20 to 30 miles an hour, thereby rendering the use of the street dangerous and causing the house of an abutting owner 60 feet from the track to shake so as to cause the plastering and ceilings and the pictures on the walls to fall, is liable to the abutting owner for the special damages sustained, the operation of cars in such a manner constituting an "additional servitude." A steam railroad when run and operated over and along the public streets of a town or city is an "additional servitude" upon such streets; but a street railway does not constitute an "additional servitude" on the public streets. Kinsey v. Union Traction Co., 81 N. E. 922, 927, 169 Ind. 563 (citing Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Scott, 74 Ind. 29; Elchels v. Evansville St. Ry. Co., 78 Ind. 261, 41 Am. Rep. 561; Terre Haute & S. E. R. Co. v. Rodel, 89 Ind. 128, 46 Am. Rep. 164; Chicago & C. Terminal Ry. Co. v. Whiting, H. & E. C. St. R. Co., 38 N. E. 604, 139 Ind. 297, 26 L. R. A. 337, 47 Am. St. Rep. 264).

ADDITIONAL TIME

Code Civ. Proc. § 1173 (Rev. Codes, § 6796), allows 10 days after notice of motion for a new trial in which to prepare, serve, and file the evidence, statement, etc. A finding and decision having been filed August 30, 1905, on September 6th a written stipulation was made that either party might have 30 days "additional" time in which to give notice of intention to move for a new trial, and 90 days "additional" time in which to prepare, serve, and file affidavits, bills of exception, or statements in support of the motion. Appellant gave notice of motion for a new trial October 7th, and all the affidavits were filed January 3, 1906. Held, that appellant was entitled to 30 days in addition to the 4 days of the 10-day period not yet expired when the stipulation was made in which to serve notice of motion for a new trial, and that the 90 days stipulated for in which to file affidavits, bills of exception, or statements, etc., in support of the motion, began to run on the expiration of 10 days after the service of notice, and hence the affidavits were filed in time. Hill v. Ellinghouse, 93 Pac. 345, 347, 36 Mont. 440.

ADDRESS

See Last Known Address; Post Office Address; Residence Address.

To "address" means: "To direct, as words (to any one or any thing); to make, as a speech, petition, etc. (to any one, an audience). To direct speech to; to make a communication to, whether spoken or written; to apply to by words, as by a speech, petition, etc.; to speak to; to accost. To direct in writing, as a letter; to superscribe, or to direct and transmit; as, he addressed a letter." Code 1904, § 3768, subd. 3, provides that courts and judges may issue attachments for contempt and punish them summarily where obscene, contemptuous, or insulting language is "addressed" to a judge for or in respect of any act, or proceeding had, or to be had, in such court, or like language used in his presence and intended for his hearing for or in respect of such act or proceeding. Held that, to render one liable for contempt, the language, whether spoken or written, must be specifically addressed to the judge. Yoder v. Commonwealth, 57 S. E. 581, 584, 107 Va. 823 (quoting and adopting the definition in Webster's Dict.).

"Ademption" is the extinction or satisfaction of a legacy by some act of the testator which is equivalent to a revocation of the bequest or which indicates an intention to revoke. It may be accomplished by a gift to the legatee, or by such disposition of the subject of the bequest as to make the will impossible of the operation. The doctrine does not apply to a devise of realty.

In re Brown's Estate, 117 N. W. 260, 262, 139 Iowa, 219.

"Ademption" has to do with the subject-matter of bequests and is entirely distinct from an implied revocation of the terms of a will. "Ademption" involves action upon the part of the testator; the doing of some act with regard to the subject-matter which interferes with the operation of the will; that is, he anticipates the gift there made by bestowing it during his lifetime upon the legatee or disposes of the subject-matter in some way which puts it out of the question to follow his directions as set forth in the will. While "implied revocation" is founded upon a presumed and neglected duty upon the part of the testator, or upon a change in his family relations. The reason which lies behind the doctrine as defined both in the common law and in the statutes is that some obvious injustice may be prevented; that some moral duty, which has been overlooked, it is presumed, by the testator may be discharged. In re Jones' Estate, 60 Atl. 915, 923, 211 Pa. 364, 69 L. R. A. 940, 107 Am. St. Rep. 581, 3 Ann. Cas. 221.

Advancement

A person, who had executed an instrument binding his heirs and representatives to pay $60,000 to a seminary on specified conditions, executed a will reciting that he had promised to give $60,000 to the seminary, and declaring that if the same was not paid before his death it should be paid by his executors in cash or mortgage bonds. Thereafter he delivered $60,000 in bonds to the seminary, under the agreement that it would turn over to him for life the coupons thereon. This arrangement was made, at the suggestion of the seminary, to avoid possible litigation involving the validity of the will. Held, that the transaction was an "ademption" of the legacy to the seminary, within Ky. St. § 4840, providing that an advancement to any person shall be deemed a satisfaction of a bequest contained in a prior will. Louisville Trust Co. v. Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, 147 S. W. 431, 433, 148 Ky. 711.

Satisfaction distinguished

A general legacy may be satisfied, though not strictly adeemed. It is this which distinguishes "ademption" from "satisfaction," one depending on the intention of the testator as inferred from his acts, and the other on the extinction of the thing or fund granted. A general legacy will be deemed satisfied where testator advances to the legatee even a small sum with intent to discharge the legacy or to substitute the advancement for the bequest. In re Brown's Estate, 117 N. W. 260, 262, 139 Iowa, 219.

Of specific legacy

"Ademption of a specific legacy" arises by the alienation or destruction of the object." In re Black's Estate, 72 Atl. 631, 632, 223 Pa. 382.

The term "ademption" describes the act by which testator pays to his legatee in his lifetime a legacy which by his will he had proposed to give him at his death, or denotes the act by which a specific legacy has become inoperative on account of testator having parted with the subject of it. The alteration in the character of the subject-matter of a specific legacy must be made or authorized by the testator himself after making his will, or it will not operate as an "ademption," and the intention of the testator, if reasonably clear, will largely govern. Rue v. Connell, 62 S. E. 303, 307, 148 N. C. 302.

A particular bequest, although unrevoked, may become practically inoperative, if the testator, in his lifetime, gives to his legatee the specific thing which the will directs to be given after his death, or if the testator so deals with property which is specifically bequeathed to a legatee that, upon his death, execution of his intention in respect to this legatee is impossible. In such case he is said to adeem his bequest, and the practical result necessarily involved in his act is spoken of as an "ademption" of the legacy. Where the law recognizes a power of implied revocation by acts of the testator similar to those which must result in ademption, there may be in some cases, no distinction between ademption and revocation; but in Connecticut, where such implied revocation is forbidden by statute, the clauses of a will containing a bequest are not revoked by acts which may operate as an ademption, but remains as the legal declaration of the testator's intention to be carried out unless the execution after his death is impossible; and so, a present gift or part only of a testamentary bequest or a sale or conveyance to a third party of a part only of property specifically bequeathed does not prevent the execution of the testator's intention as to the remainder, and the ademption is not total but pro tanto. Jacobs v. Button, 65 Atl. 150, 152, 79 Conn. 360.

ADEPS LANÆ ANHYDROUS

As medicinal preparation, see Medicinal Preparation.

ADEQUACY—ADEQUATE

See Inadequacy.

"Adequate" means fully equal to requirements or occasions, commensurate; it does not mean average or graduation. Commonwealth v. Mathues, 59 Atl. 961, 981, 210 Pa. 372.

ADEQUATE CAUSE

"Adequate cause" for the provocation of passion resulting in homicide is such a cause as would commonly produce a degree of anger, rage, resentment, or terror in a person of ordinary temper, sufficient to render the mind incapable of cool reflection. An illegal arrest coupled with an assault is adequate cause for the provocation of passion reducing a killing to the grade of manslaughter. Earles v. State (Tex.) 94 S. W. 464, 467. It is not necessary that the anger or passion should be sudden. Gillespie v. State, 109 S. W. 158, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 167.

"Adequate cause," as an element of manslaughter, is constituted by any fact, circumstance, or combination of facts and circumstances which actually produce in one's mind sudden passion, such as anger, rage, sudden resentment, or terror, rendering him incapable of cool reflection. Burns v. State (Tex.) 145 S. W. 356, 362. An assault and battery causing pain or bloodshed constitutes "adequate cause." Bagley v. State (Tex.) 103 S. W. 874, 875.

Where accused killed another under the immediate influence of passion arising in his mind from information given him by his wife to the effect that deceased had used insulting language to her, defendant believing and in good faith acting on the information, such information was to him an "adequate cause" reducing the crime to manslaughter, whether the insults had been in fact offered or not. Melton v. State, 83 S. W. 822, 824, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 451 (citing Jones v. State, 26 S. W. 1082, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 492, 47 Am. St. Rep. 46).

ADEQUATE COMPENSATION

See Just and Adequate Compensation.

ADEQUATE CONSIDERATION

See Valuable Consideration.

An "adequate consideration" is one which must not be so disproportionate as to shock our sense of that morality and fair dealing that should always characterize transactions between man and man. Eaton v. Patterson (Ala.) 2 Stew. & P. 9, 19.

The word "adequacy," as used in an instruction that the adequacy of the consideration was for the parties to consider at the time of making an agreement, and not for the court when it was sought to be enforced, evidently does not refer to the legal sufficiency of the consideration, but to the inducements which operated on the minds of the parties in making the contract. Rousseau v. Rouss, 86 N. Y. Supp. 497, 502, 91 App. Div. 230.

A complaint, in an action for specific performance of a contract to sell real estate, need not allege in hæc verba that the contract is supported by "adequate consideration," but an allegation that the value of the real estate at the time of the contract did not exceed $500, the consideration mentioned in the contract with interest, and that $440 with interest had been paid, and the remainder deposited in court for the vendor, alleges adequate consideration within Civ. Code, § 8391, prohibiting specific performance against a party who has not received an adequate consideration for the contract. Boyd v. Warden, 124 Pac. 841, 843, 163 Cal. 155.

Where a life insurance company, having foreclosed its lien as pledgee of a policy, and applied part of its surrender value to the payment of the debt for which the policy stood as security, sent the residue of such surrender value to the beneficiary and the insured by its check, which was never received by either, the policy was not surrendered to the company by the transaction "for a consideration adequate in the judgment of the holder," within Rev. St. 1899, § 7900, providing that where a policy shall be surrendered to the company for a consideration adequate in the judgment of the holder, the article of which that section is a part shall not be applicable. Burridge v. New York Life Ins. Co., 109 S. W. 560, 566, 211 Mo. 158.

ADEQUATE CROSSING

"By the term 'adequate crossing' is meant one equal to what is required; suitable to the case or occasion; fully sufficient; proportionate to the reasonable requirements. But an adequate crossing does not necessarily mean either an over or an under crossing; it may be either, and the landowner may designate the place."—Guinn v. Iowa & St. L. R. Co., 101 N. W. 94, 95, 125 Iowa, 301.

ADEQUATE OR REASONABLE FACILITIES

"The term 'adequate or reasonable facilities' is not in its nature capable of exact definition. It is a relative expression, and has to be considered as calling for such facilities as might be fairly demanded, regard being had, among other things, to the size of the place, the extent of the demand for transportation, the cost of furnishing the additional accommodations asked for, and to all other facts which would have a bearing upon the question of convenience and cost." Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Wharton, 28 Sup. Ct. 121, 123, 207 U. S. 328, 52 L. Ed. 230; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Town of Witcher, 106 Pac. 852, 25 Okl. 586; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Town of Norfolk, 107 Pac. 172, 176, 25 Okl. 325, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 159; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Reynolds, 110 Pac. 668, 26 Okl. 804, 138 Am. St. Rep. 1003; St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. State, 111 Pac. 396, 399, 28 Okl. 872.

ADEQUATE PROVOCATION

See, also, Provocation.

"Legal," "lawful," "adequate," and "reasonable," when used as adjectives qualifying "provocation," are synonymous, and, as a general rule, with few exceptions, it takes an assault or personal violence to constitute this provocation." State v. McKenzie, 76 S. W. 1015, 1019, 177 Mo. 699 (quoting with approval from State v. Bulling, 15 S. W. 367, 16 S. W. 880, 105 Mo. 204).

ADEQUATE REMEDY

See Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy; Speedy and Adequate Remedy.

The adequate remedy at law which will deprive a court of equity jurisdiction must be one as certain, complete, prompt, and efficient to attain the ends of justice as that in equity. Monmouth Inv. Co. v. Means, 151 Fed. 159, 165, 80 C. C. A. 527; Keplinger v. Woolsey, 93 N. W. 1008, 1009, 4 Neb. (Unof.) 282 (citing and adopting Welton v. Dickson, 57 N. W. 559, 38 Neb. 767, 22 L. R. Co.*, 81 Fed. 261, 265, 26 C. C. A. 389, 393; McMullen Lumber Co. v. Strother, 136 Fed. 295, 305, 69 C. C. A. 433; Hayois v. Salt River Valley Canal Co., 71 Pac. 944, 946, 8 Ariz. 285).

Under Comp. Laws 1907, § 294, providing for the disorganization of municipalities, and directing that a court shall "adjudicate" claims against the municipality, which shall be treated as denied, and that any citizen of the municipality at the time of dissolution may defend against any claim filed, or the court may in its discretion appoint some person for this purpose, it is the duty of the court to give notice affording the citizen a hearing before allowing such claims, for while the statute may not in terms require notice, the word "adjudicate" means a solemn and deliberate determination by judicial power of the rights of the parties, and so implies a notice and hearing, and an order allowing such claims on an ex parte hearing without notice is irregular and should be set aside. Nielsen v. Utah Nat. Bank of Ogden (Utah) 120 Pac. 211, 214.

An "adequate remedy" is a full and complete one, accommodated to the wrong to be redressed, and it is not enough that there is some remedy at law, as that remedy must be as practical, efficient, and prompt as a remedy in equity. Sumner v. Staton, 65 S. E. 902, 905, 151 N. C. 198, 18 Ann. Cas. 802. The remedy by appeal or certiorari as to a void judgment is not "adequate" in the sense required to exclude relief by injunction. Worrall v. H. S. Chase & Co., 123 N. W. 338, 340, 144 Iowa, 665.

A remedy hardly seems to be entitled to be termed "adequate" if at the time that it is applied the rights of the complainant have so suffered that there may be nothing of value left to him in the remedy. A suit for damages affords an "adequate remedy," in case of the failure of a railroad company to maintain a station at a certain point at which an individual has a right to have it maintained. Jacquelin v. Erie R. Co., 61 Atl. 18, 24, 69 N. J. Eq. 432. In case of the illegal undervaluation of other taxable property, the payment of the illegal portion of a tax assessed and the prosecution of an action at law to recover it back is neither as prompt nor complete a remedy as a suit to enjoin its collection. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Sullivan, 173 Fed. 456, 469, 97 C. C. A. 1.

An action at law against the vendor of the stock of a corporation for damages is not as adequate, nor is it as complete or efficient, as a suit in equity against the vendor and the corporation to rescind the sale, to recover the purchase price, and to relieve the complainant from liability to the corporation on account of the stock. Farwell v. Colonial Trust Co., 147 Fed. 480, 482, 78 C. C. A. 22 (citing Boyce's Ex'rs v. Grundy, 28 U. S. [3 Pet.] 210, 215, 7 L. Ed. 655; Williams v. Neely, 134 Fed. 1, 10, 67 C. C. A. 171, 180, 69 L. R. A. 232; Brown v. Arnold, 131 Fed. 723, 727, 67 C. C. A. 125, 129; Wiemer v. Louisville Water Co., 130 Fed. 246, 250; Springfield Milling Co. v. Barnard & Leas Mfg. Co., 81 Fed. 261, 26 C. C. A. 389).

The privilege, of one whose real property is levied upon under an execution against another, to make a motion in the case in which the execution was issued to release the property from such levy, does not afford him such an "adequate remedy at law" as to cut off any right he would otherwise have to maintain injunction against the sale of the property. Gale Mfg. Co. v. Sleeper, 79 Pac. 648, 70 Kan. 806.

The remedy at law by motion to quash or recall an execution is not necessarily exclusive of a suit to restrain the enforcement of an execution, and to compel the satisfaction of a judgment, as the term "adequate remedy at law" does not mean that injunction shall be denied where there is a remedy at law, but that it will be granted if it appears to be a more speedy and efficacious remedy; the remedies by injunction and motion to recall and quash being concurrent. Cline Plano Co. v. Sherwood, 106 Pac. 742, 743, 57 Wash. 239.

ADJACENT

Under a marine policy insuring a dredge, and providing that it was warranted confined to the use and navigation of the waters of New Haven Harbor and "adjacent inland waters," and declaring that any deviation beyond the limits shall avoid the policy, the use of the dredge in an inland water adjacent to Bridgeport Harbor, 17 miles from New Haven Harbor, was a deviation. Kirk v. Home Ins. Co., 86 N. Y. Supp. 980, 981, 92 App. Div. 28.

Code, § 810, provides that the resolution of necessity of a public improvement shall state "whether abutting property will be assessed and what adjacent property is proposed to be assessed therefor." Section 823 gives the owner opportunity to oppose the assessment proceedings. A resolution of necessity provided that "the cost of constructing said sewer to be assessed against property abutting thereon and against adjacent property in accordance with the law governing the same." Held, that the word "adjacent," as used in section 810, was indefinite, the word ordinarily meaning to lie near, close, or contiguous, and even in its strictest meaning no more than lying near, close, or contiguous, but not actually touching, that it did not mean "adjoining" or "abutting," and hence that the resolution failed to sufficiently inform property owners of the lands that would be included in the district for assessment; the other code provisions being merely supplemental to that section, and in no way conflicting with its requirements. Dunker v. City of Des Moines (Iowa) 136 N. W. 536, 537.

As abutting or contiguous

In Rev. St. c. 20, § 8, as amended by Pub. Laws 1907, c. 60, granting authority for the taking of "adjacent" land to enlarge a private cemetery, the word "adjacent" should be construed in its primary meaning of "adjoining" or "contiguous," and not extended to land nearby, but not adjoining. Clark v. Coburn, 78 Atl. 1107, 106 Me. 26, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 167.

The word "adjacent" means contiguous, adjoining, lying close at hand, near. As used in Act March 3, 1875, granting to certain railroad companies the right of way through the public lands to the extent of 100 feet on each side of the central line of the road, with the right to take materials for its construction from the public lands adjacent to the line of the road, it does not include lands which are 20 miles distant from the right of way, but it does include lands

Superior City Charter (Laws 1891, c. 124) § 119, provides that, before work shall be ordered done on a street in whole or in part at the expense of the abutting or adjacent realty, the board of public works shall determine the benefits and damages which will accrue to each parcel of such realty, the entire cost of the contemplated improvement, and the amount that should be assessed to each parcel as benefits accruing thereto by such contemplated improvements. Held, that such law contemplates improvements of streets beneficial to parcels of realty abutting on or adjacent thereto, such improvements being in front of such parcels, at the expense in whole or in part thereof, the word "abutting" and "adjacent" not being used synonymously, in the absence of anything appearing clearly to the contrary in the law, the word "abutting" meaning a parcel having a street and lot line in common, while the word "adjacent" is used to characterize a parcel not in part bounded by a street line. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Douglas County, 130 N. W. 246, 248, 145 Wis. 288.

The expression "adjacent" does not at all times mean abutting, but it is usually synonymous with abutting, adjoining, and bordering. In re Bridge Bonds, Ratliff Tp., Johnston County, 128 Pac. 681, 682, 35 Okl. 192 (citing Wormley v. Board of Sup'rs of Wright County, 78 N. W. 824, 108 Iowa, 232).

Adjoining and contiguous distinguished

That which is "adjacent" may be separated by some intervening object; that which is "adjoining" must touch in some part, while that which is "contiguous" must touch entirely on one side. Baxter v. York Realty Co., 112 N. Y. Supp. 455, 456, 128 App. Div. 79 (quoting and adopting the definition in Crabb's English Synonyms).

Sp. Laws 1907, p. 564, § 7, authorizing the acquisition by purchase or condemnation proceedings of such additional lands as may be deemed necessary, "adjoining or adjacent" to the capitol building site, located between designated streets, contemplates that it may be necessary to require various parcels of land within the boundaries, and the purchase or taking of one parcel within the boundaries does not exhaust the power, but other parcels may be acquired, though the word "adjoining," in its etymological sense, means touching or contiguous, as distinguished from lying near or adjacent, and though the word "adjacent" means lying near, neighboring. State v. Angus, 75 Atl. 623, 624, 83 Conn. 137.

As in neighborhood of

The word "adjacent" does not include a town 300 miles away; such word being used in connection with a vaudeville service contract. Gath v. Interstate Amusement Co., 170 Ill. App. 614, 616.

Where petitioner had acquired and paid for all lands lying between its original railroad right of way and the property in question, the title being held by a trust company for the sake of convenience only, defendant's lots were "adjacent" to petitioner's main line of railroad, within the statute providing for condemnation thereof. Michigan Cent. Ry. Co. v. Miller, 137 N. W. 555, 557, 172 Mich. 201.

It is not essential that property, to be adjacent to a river, should be in actual contact therewith. A thing is "adjacent" to another when it lies near or close to it, although it is not in actual contact therewith. Yuba County v. Kate Hayes Mining Co., 74 Pac. 1049, 1050, 141 Cal. 360.

Where a railroad had power to condemn adjacent land for the enlargement of its station and terminal facilities, the term "adjacent" should be construed to mean "lying near," "neighboring," but not necessarily in contact. The word is sometimes said to be synonymous with "adjoining," "near," "contiguous." It has no arbitrary meaning or definition, but its meaning must be determined by the object sought to be accomplished by the provision in which it is used. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Chicago Mechanics' Institute, 87 N. E. 933, 939, 239 Ill. 197.

Where the Public Service Commission required the construction of a baggage room and platform "adjacent" to a team track at a junction point, the order did not require that the baggage room and platform be constructed "along and adjoining" the team track; the word "adjacent" being used in the sense of "near to," or "neighboring," so that the order would be complied with, though the baggage room and platform were so constructed as to be some distance from the track, leaving a driveway between them. Bacon v. Boston & M. R. R., 77 Atl. 858, 861, 83 Vt. 528.

Burns' Ann. St. 1894, § 4290, provides that, where land liable to assessment for street improvement is subdivided or platted, "the land lying immediately upon and adjacent to the line of the improvement and extending back fifty feet shall be primarily liable to and for the whole cost of the improvement, and, should that prove insufficient to pay such cost, then the second parcel and other parcels in their order to the rear parcel of said one hundred and fifty feet shall be liable in their order." The first and second 50-foot lots adjacent to a street that had been improved were not of sufficient value to pay for the improvement, and next to those lots was an alley 14 feet wide. Held, the property all being platted, that 36 feet of the lot on the other side of the alley was assessable for the improvement, as the term "adjacent" as ordinarily used means that the property is near the improvement so as to be affected thereby and so as to enjoy the use thereof, but not necessarily touching such improvement. Close v. Twibell, 92 N. E. 377, 379, 47 Ind. App. 290.

The term "lands adjacent thereto," as used in Gen. St. 1894, § 1200, providing for the incorporation of any district, sections or parts of sections not in any incorporated village platted into lots and blocks, also the "lands adjacent thereto," etc., includes only those lands lying so near to the platted portion as to be suburban in their character, and to have some unity of interest with the platted portion in the maintenance of a village government. State ex rel. Young v. Village of Gilbert, 120 N. W. 528, 530, 107 Minn. 364.

Gen. St. 1909, § 7594, provides that territory outside the city limits of a second-class city, but adjacent thereto, may be attached to the city for school purposes upon certain application. Held, that the word "adjacent" means "lying near," and territory which does not touch the city limits, but which adjoins the city school district and is so close to the city that the pupils residing therein may conveniently attend the city schools, may be attached if the board deems the annexation to be for the best interest of the city schools and of the residents of the territory seeking to be attached. Board of Education of City of Ottawa v. Jacobus, 112 Pac. 612, 83 Kan. 778.

The words "within the county adjacent," in the act of March 30, 1903, were intended to define a suitable place within a reasonable distance from the city which was especially adapted for hospital purposes. The fact that both city and township may be within one county is not material. The authority is to locate the necessary hospital within the city, or without the city and within the county adjacent thereto, in the convenient neighborhood of and reasonably assessable to the city. The word "adjacent" implies nearness to, but not necessarily actual contact. City of Allentown v. Wagner, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 485, 493.

A patent granted to a riparian owner on the north shore of Staten Island in 1880, in so far as it includes lands under water to the north of the uplands of an adjoining owner, upon which lands a portion of defendant's erections and fillings is, overlaps to that extent a patent granted to the adjoining owner in 1887, impairs her right of access, and contravenes Public Lands Law, § 75, subd. 5, prohibiting a grant of lands under water to any person other than the owner of "adjacent lands"; the quoted phrase, as used in the statute, including the uplands of the adjoining owner. Dooley v. Proctor & Gamble Mfg. Co., 137 N. Y. Supp. 737, 741, 14 Misc. Rep. 398.

To railroad in grants of timber

Under a grant to a railroad company of the right to cut timber for construction purposes from the public lands "adjacent" to its line, lands more than three miles from the line of the right of way, measured at right angles thereto, are not adjacent, while those within that limit are adjacent. United States v. Denver & R. G. R. Co., 190 Fed. 825, 849-853.

ADJECTIVE LAW

"Substantive" law is that part of the law which creates, defines, and regulates rights, as opposed to "adjective" or "remedial" law, which prescribes the method of enforcing rights or obtaining redress for their invasion. Mix v. Board of Com'rs of Nez Perce County, 112 Pac. 215, 220, 18 Idaho, 695, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 534.

ADJOINING

See Basement Adjoining the Corner; Ground Outside of or Adjoining.
Additions adjoining and communicating, see Addition.

As adjacent

A statute allowed the commissioners of a land office to grant to "adjacent" owners land under the water surrounding Staten Island, which grant was not to extend more than 500 feet from low-water mark. A riparian landowner applied for a grant of land opposite to and "adjoining" his, and extending to a point 500 feet from low-water mark, and an affidavit appended to his application described his land as being bound by the low-water mark. The Attorney General recommended that applicant be granted the land "opposite to" that now held by him, and the commissioners passed a resolution that letters patent be issued to him for the land under water applied for. A patent was issued, describing the land granted as beginning at low-water mark and extending to a point 500 feet out. Held, that the words "adjoining" and "opposite to" must be understood to be equivalent to "adjacent" as used in the statute, and the application must be taken to apply to land immediately contiguous to that of the applicant, and as declaring that he owned the land to low-water mark, and hence was broad enough to include any land lying between his actual boundary and low-water mark, so that the patent must be construed as granting to applicant all the land lying between his land and a line 500 feet out from low-water mark, as any other construction would not be in accord with the commissioners' resolution, and would render the patent void under the statute. Bardes v. Herman, 129 N. Y. Supp. 723, 726, 144 App. Div. 772; Warth v. Same, 129 N. Y. Supp. 730, 144 App. Div. 943.

Adjacent and contiguous distinguished while that which is "contiguous" must touch entirely on one side. Baxter v. York Realty Co., 112 N. Y. Supp. 455, 456, 128 App. Div. 79 (quoting and adopting the definition in Crabb's English Synonyms).

Sp. Laws 1907, p. 564, § 7, authorizing the acquisition by purchase or condemnation proceedings of such additional lands as may be deemed necessary, "adjoining or adjacent" to the capitol building site, located between designated streets, contemplates that it may be necessary to require various parcels of land within the boundaries, and the purchase or taking of one parcel within the boundaries does not exhaust the power, but other parcels may be acquired, though the word "adjoining," in its etymological sense, means touching or contiguous, as distinguished from lying near or adjacent, and though the word "adjacent" means lying near, neighboring. State v. Angus, 75 Atl. 623, 624, 83 Conn. 137.

As contiguous or touching

What is "adjoining" must touch in some part. Baxter v. York Realty Co., 112 N. Y. Supp. 455, 456, 128 App. Div. 79 (quoting and adopting the definition in Crabb's English Synonyms).

The word "adjoining" is a proper term to signify in contact with, though it, as well as the words "adjacent" and "abutting," are occasionally used in a different way. Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. Douglas County, 130 N. W. 246-248, 145 Wis. 288.

The word "adjoining" with reference to municipal corporations indicates contiguity of territory. Rehill v. Borough of East Newark, 63 Atl. 81, 83, 73 N. J. Law, 220.

ADJOINING MUNICIPALITY

The phrases "any adjoining municipal corporation," and "any adjoining municipality," as used in P. L. 1897, p. 232, and in P. L. 1897, p. 323, § 76, as amended, P. L. 1899, p. 159, authorizing contracts for water supply between adjoining municipal corporations, refers only to municipalities whose corporate territory are contiguous. Rehill v. Borough of East Newark, 63 Atl. 81, 83, 73 N. J. Law, 220.

Borough Act, § 76, as amended by P. L. 1899, p. 159, authorizes a borough to contract with the governing body of "any adjoining municipality," or with any water company in the state, etc. P. L. 1897, p. 232, authorizes the governing body of a municipal corporation owning or controlling waterworks to contract with "any adjoining municipal corporation," or with any private corporation therein, to furnish a supply of water. Held, that the phrases "any adjoining municipality" and "any adjoining municipal corporation" refer only to municipalities whose corporate territories are contiguous, and a city and borough situated about five miles apart and touching each other at no point cannot contract thereunder. Bay-

Hiss v. Borough of North Arlington, 76 Atl. 1024, 80 N. J. Law, 124.

ADJOINING PROPERTY OWNERS

The Baltimore City Charter provides that the board of estimates may grant minor privileges, such as the erection on alleys of bay windows, steps, etc., on the service of a copy of the application therefor on the "adjoining property owners" before filing the application with the board. Held, that service need not be made on an owner of property on the opposite side of the alley, since the quoted words referred to property owners on the same side of the alley, whether the fee be in the city or in the property owners. Fralinger v. Cooke, 71 Atl. 529, 530, 108 Md. 682.

ADJOURN—ADJOURNMENT

Adjournment from day to day, see From Day to Day.

Entries made from day to day by the county auditor in the minutes of the county board of supervisors, sitting in drainage proceedings, "Board adjourned," may be reasonably construed to mean an adjournment or recess for the day, and not an adjournment sine die; to "adjourn" being to close or suspend for the day; to suspend, take a recess; to suspend business from one day to another, or for a long period, or indefinitely. Hoyt v. Brown, 133 N. W. 905, 908, 153 Iowa, 324.

An "adjournment" may mean merely a temporary suspension of business, or the postponement thereof until some future day. Where the record of the board of supervisors showed that the board adjourned to a specified time, an amendment of the record showing that it took a recess until that time was unimportant; the words "recess" and "adjourn" both meaning that the meeting was postponed until the time specified. Beattie v. Roberts (Iowa) 187 N. W. 1006, 1008.

Convention

Under Primary Election Law, § 10, requiring that within 48 hours after the adjournment of a convention its permanent officers shall certify and file the record of the convention in the office of the custodian of primary records, "adjournment" means the final adjournment, because the act contemplated by the statute could only be performed after the convention has completed its work. In re Greene, 106 N. Y. Supp. 425, 427, 121 App. Div. 693.

Of court

Blackstone states that an "adjournment" is "no more than a continuation of the session from one day to another as the word itself signifies." Held, that a statement by a county judge in regard to a certain matter, as to which he had been enjoined from further proceeding, that he "held it open," was not an "adjournment," within Code Civ.

Proc. § 2471a, authorizing the judge to proceed at the time to which the matter had been adjourned, and that he had lost jurisdiction. People ex rel. Stryker v. Van Bergen, 81 N. Y. Supp. 274, 276, 40 Misc. Rep. 139.

A "court" is defined as "the persons officially assembled under authority of law at the appropriate time and place for the administration of justice," while the word "term," when used with reference to a court, signifies the space of time during which the court holds a session. A "session" signifies the time during the term when the court sits for the transaction of business. Therefore there is a clear distinction between the "adjournment of court" and the "adjournment of the term." Parrott v. Wolcott, 106 N. W. 607, 608, 75 Neb. 530 (citing Webster's Dict.; Black's Law Dict.).

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2959, 2960, prescribing when "adjournments" may be granted by a justice, where a case was adjourned by consent of the parties and a proper adjournment granted at defendant's request and both parties appeared on the adjourned day, the justice cannot, over the objection of defendant, hold the case open for six hours to enable plaintiff's attorney to appear, since such action constitutes a definite adjournment, and is cause for reversal of a judgment against defendant who did not appear at the adjourned hour. Blowers v. Malone, 135 N. Y. Supp. 535, 537, 75 Misc. Rep. 396.

Of legislature

The constitutional provision that, if any bill shall not be returned by the Governor within six days after it shall be presented to him, it shall become a law as if he had signed it, unless the Legislature by its adjournment prevents its return, contemplates a final "adjournment," and not a mere recess. State v. Joseph (Ala.) 57 South. 942, 944.

ADJOURNED MEETING

An "adjourned meeting" is not a new meeting, but a mere continuance of an original meeting. Green v. Town of Irvington, 73 Atl. 602, 81 N. J. Law, 723.

"The only difference between adjourned and special meetings [of a board of county commissioners] is: An 'adjourned meeting' is a meeting to be provided for while the board is in session, by a proper order, said meeting to be held after the close of the regular session. A 'special meeting' is a meeting called upon order of a majority of the board after the close of the regular session to be held at such time as the order may fix." Gilbert v. Canyon County, 94 Pac. 1027, 1031, 14 Idaho, 429.

ADJOURNED TERM

The "adjourned term" mentioned in Rev. St. 1899, § 1605, which provides that special or adjourned sessions of any court may be held in pursuance of the proclamation of the sheriff, or in continuation of the regular term, when so ordered by the court in term time, the order being entered on its record, although it is a continuation of a regular term, is not the uninterrupted or unbroken session held in pursuance of an adjournment from day to day, but is a session held after lapse of a longer period, and is commonly called an "adjourned term." Rev. St. 1899, § 7033, providing that an election contest shall be determined at the first term of the circuit court held 15 days after the official counting of the votes and service of the notice of contest, unless the same should be continued by consent or good cause shown, is not limited to the next regular term of court, but authorized the service of notice of contest to be held at an adjourned term. Montgomery v. Dormer, 79 S. W. 913, 915, 181 Mo. 5.

Under an order of a county court at a regular term adjourning the court to chambers, the "adjourned term" is in full force until the actual convening of the next term of court. In re Wood, 95 N. Y. Supp. 260, 261, 107 App. Div. 514.

There can be no "adjourned term" of a regular term of the same court, and the expression should be an "adjourned session" of the term. The courts, however, are not always governed by such niceties of language, and when they use the words "adjourned term" they mean an "adjourned session" of the same term. Though an "adjourned special term" may be said to be a continuance of the regular term because its object is to complete the business of the regular term, it is a distinct and separate term, and so it is the practice to note it in the record kept by the clerk. Continuance to an adjourned term of a regular term is within Rev. St. 1899, § 2599, providing for continuance of a criminal case at the cost of the moving party. State v. Butler, 95 S. W. 810, 118 Mo. App. 587 (citing State v. Harris, 59 Mo. 550; Dulle v. Deimler, 28 Mo. 583).

ADJUDICATION OF BANKRUPTCY

"Adjudication of bankruptcy" is not the equivalent of a discharge in bankruptcy. The dismissal of an action as to a joint maker of a note in a suit, on a suggestion of his "adjudication of bankruptcy," did not render him competent to testify, as the adjudication did not remove his disqualifying interest. Anthony v. Sturdivant, 50 South. 1023, 163 Ala. 590.

ADJUNCTS

Act May 29, 1889, § 7, provides that the trustees of a sanitary district shall have power to lay out one or more main channels for carrying off the drainage, together with such adjuncts and additions thereto as may be proper. Act May 14, 1903, enlarging the boundaries of the sanitary district of Chicago, gave the trustees power to provide for the additional territory by constructing one or more channels together with such adjuncts and additions thereto as may be necessary, and shall maintain the same proportion of dilution of sewage through such auxiliary channels. Held, that the words "adjuncts" and "additions" were used as synonymous with "auxiliary channel," and did not mean city sewers connecting with the sanitary district outlet so as to authorize the district authorities to take charge of the building of sewers of municipalities within the district. City of Chicago v. Green, 87 N. E. 417, 422, 238 Ill. 258.

ADJUST

See Power to Audit, Adjust and Settle.

"To 'adjust' is to 'place in order.'" Anderson v. Seropian, 81 Pac. 521, 527, 147 Cal. 201.

To "adjust" an unliquidated claim is to determine what is due; to settle; to ascertain; or, according to Webster, "to settle or bring to a satisfactory state, so that parties are agreed in the result." Staats v. Pioneer Ins. Ass'n, 104 Pac. 185, 187, 55 Wash. 51; City of Longview v. Capps (Tex.) 123 S. W. 160, 162.

The word "adjust" means fitted or made accurate, and that is its meaning in Comp. Laws 1909, § 7620, making it the duty of the state board of equalization to equalize, correct, and adjust assessments. In re McNeal's Appeal, 128 Pac. 285, 289, 35 Okl. 17.

A constitutional provision requiring the state board of equalization to "adjust" and "equalize" the valuation of property among the counties creates a board which must exercise its judgment so that a suit against its members is a suit against the state. United States v. Hadley, 171 Fed. 118, 121.

The medical representative of a foreign company who comes into the state clothed with full authority to adjust a claim is one who "adjusts" or settles a loss within Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 7992 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 3801), providing for service of process on local agents, although in fact such loss is not actually settled. Commercial Mut. Acc. Co. v. Davis, 29 Sup. Ct. 445, 447, 218 U. S. 245, 53 L. Ed. 782.

ADJUSTABLE SCREENS

Signs 8 by 12 inches in size, having painted thereon the words "White" and "Colored," respectively, and supported on the backs of seats in street cars, are not "adjustable screens" within the meaning of Laws 1904, p. 140, c. 99, requiring the separation of the white and colored races on street cars, but permitting the use for that purpose of adjustable screens, to be moved about as the needs of the traffic may require. Southern Light & Traction Co. v. Compton, 38 South. 629, 86 Miss. 269.

ADJUSTED VALUATION

See Last Adjusted Valuation.

ADJUSTER

As the business of an insurance "adjuster" is to ascertain the amount of loss and agree with the assured on a settlement between him and insurer, it is reasonable to hold that he has authority to waive all matters of form or detail connected with the business. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Mountain Park Stock Farm Co., 99 Pac. 647, 649, 23 Okl. 79.

ADJUSTMENT

See Audit.

ADJUSTMENT OF DISPUTE

A judicial decree, requiring a trustee to make good an impairment of the trust estate notwithstanding the assent of a beneficiary to such impairment, is not an "adjustment of a dispute" between the trustee and beneficiary, within the meaning of Rev. Laws, c. 150, § 17, providing that, on the settlement of an account of a trustee, a matter in dispute which has been previously heard and determined shall not be again questioned, without leave of court, by any party to the dispute. Bennett v. Pierce, 74 N. E. 360, 361, 188 Mass. 186.

ADMINISTER

See Fully Administered; To Be Administered.

To "administer is to control or regulate in behalf of others." (Quoting and adopting definition Cent. Dict.) The word is appropriately applied to a receiver in bankruptcy's control over property of the estate. In re Fleischer, 151 Fed. 81.

Drug, liquor or poison

The primary definition of "administer" is to give; the word is not a word having a strict legal or technical import. It is a word in general use, with a common and accepted meaning; and, where a person is charged with administering medicine, it is the same as charging him with giving medicine. Chandler v. State, 105 Pac. 375, 378, 3 Okl. Cr. 254 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 195).

That one procured and delivered to a woman any drug or substance to procure an abortion was sufficient proof that he "administered" it. State v. Stafford, 123 N. W. 167, 145 Iowa, 285.

Where, in a prosecution for "administering" or prescribing medicine to a pregnant woman to produce an abortion, it was proved that defendant furnished medicine to her, and gave her directions with reference to taking it, he was properly convicted of "administering or prescribing" medicine or drugs to prosecutrix, etc., prohibited by Sand. & H. Dig. § 1459, though he was not present when the medicine was delivered to prosecutrix or taken. "The word 'administer,' in said section, does not signify merely the manual administering of the drug, medicine, or substance, but it has a much wider meaning. Among the definitions of said word are the following: To 'furnish,' to 'give,' to 'administer' medicine; to 'direct' and cause it to be taken. Webster Dict. To 'supply,' 'furnish,' or 'provide with.' Stand. Dict. As used in said section, the word 'administer' was clearly intended to cover the whole ground named, making it an offense to give, furnish, supply, provide with, or cause to be given, furnished, supplied, or provided with, or taken, any such drug, medicine, or substance, with the intent named in said section. And said word embraced and was intended to embrace every mode of giving, furnishing, supplying, providing with, or causing to be taken any such drug, medicine, or substance. This is both the letter and spirit of the section." Burris v. State, 84 S. W. 723, 724, 73 Ark. 453 (quoting and adopting McCaughy v. State, 156 Ind. 41, 59 N. E. 169).

In defining the word "administer" as used in the statute permitting physicians to "administer" intoxicating liquors to patients, it is not necessary for the court to use all the synonyms of the word. An instruction that the legal definition of the word "administer" is to give, supply, dispense, is sufficient without adding the word "furnish." State v. Wilson, 80 Pac. 565, 71 Kan. 263.

Evidence that accused delivered pills to a pregnant woman with instructions to take them the following day, without any evidence that she ever swallowed any of them, was insufficient to support a conviction for administering a drug with intent to produce an abortion, since to "administer" a poison or other thing is to cause it to be taken by compelling a person by violence to swallow it, or by delivering it to one receiving it voluntarily into her system. State v. Stapp, 151 S. W. 971, 973, 246 Mo. 338.

ADMINISTERED ASSETS

An administrator de bonis non takes the unadministered assets only, and those which do not remain in specie but which have been changed in form, mixed with those of the former executor, are "administered assets." Michigan Trust Co. v. Ferry, 175 Fed. 667, 675, 99 C. C. A. 221; Id., 175 Fed. 681, 99 C. C. A. 235.

ADMINISTRATION

See Costs of Administration; Due Administration of Justice; Maladministration; Matter of Administration; Without Administration.

Ancillary letters of administration, see Ancillary Letters.

Expenses of administration, see Expenses.

The word "administration" as applied to decedents' estates comprehends an executorship. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Hendrie, 112 S. W. 967, 968, 87 Ark. 443.

"Administration" of estates implies such a complete disposition of them as not only to collect assets from the debtors, but to place them in the hands of the creditor, legatee, or distributee to whom, after undergoing the process of administration, they finally belong. Mefford v. Lamkin, 77 N. E. 960, 38 Ind. App. 33 (citing Bouv. Dict., title "Administrator"); Walton v. Walton [N. Y.] 4 Abb. Dec. 512, 518; Martin v. Ellerbe's Adm'r, 70 Ala. 338).

"The term 'administration,' involving the general administration of an estate, is of comprehensive meaning. It includes more than the mere collection of the assets, the payment of debts and legacies, and distribution to the next of kin. It involves all which may be done rightfully in the preservation of estates, and all which may be done legally by the administrator in his dealings with creditors, distributees, or legatees, or which may be done by them in securing their rights; and it includes all which may be rightfully done in relation to adverse claims to assets which have come to the possession of the administrator, as the property of the testator or intestate." The United States Circuit Court, sitting in equity in a suit where it has jurisdiction of the parties, has power in the general "administration" of an estate to appoint a receiver of the estate pending the probate of a will, in the absence of the appointment of a custodian by the probate court, although proceedings for probate and the appointment of a manager are pending in such court which have been delayed by litigation between parties in interest. Underground Electric Rys. Co. of London v. Owesley, 176 Fed. 26, 30, 99 C. C. A. 500 (quoting and adopting Martin v. Ellerbe's Adm'r, 70 Ala. 339); Rucker v. Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. (Ala.) 58 South. 465, 468; In re Acken's Estate, 123 N. W. 187, 191, 192, 144 Iowa, 519, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1166.

"Administration" of an estate is a term applied to denote the management of an estate by a person appointed by authority of law to take charge thereof in place of the legal owner. In a bankruptcy court the legal owner of the estate is the bankrupt, who is required to turn over his entire estate to some one to be designated by the creditors and approved by the court, for the purpose of administering the same for the benefit of all the bankrupt's creditors. All acts necessary to be done to accomplish the purpose of converting the assets of the estate and distributing the same to and amongst the creditors legally entitled thereto, as well as any act tending to increase the value of the estate, or in some material manner benefit the estate of the bankrupt, whereby the general interests of all the creditors may be advanced, constitute "administration" of the estate. In re Kyte, 189 Fed. 531, 532.

ADMINISTRATION OF THE LAW

Under Acts 27th Leg. c. 26, § 3, providing that the publication by a newspaper of a fair account of judicial proceedings, unless prohibited by the court, etc., or of any other official proceedings authorized by law in the administration of the law, shall be deemed privileged, and not libelous, unless actual malice is proved, the phrase "in the administration of the law" is general, and includes the performance of acts or duties required by the law of officers in discharging their duty, and all the steps taken and things done, wherein legal procedure is required or authorized by law. A. H. Belo & Co. v. Lacy (Tex.) 111 S. W. 215, 217.

ADMINISTRATIVE DUTIES

Executive and "administrative" duties are such as concern the execution of existing laws. Brazell v. Zeigler, 110 Pac. 1052, 1055, 26 Okl. 826.

Laws 1907, p. 374, c. 232, requiring a district court judge to act as jury commissioner, and authorizing him to appoint a jury clerk to assist, does not prescribe duties "administrative" in character, but such as fall within the scope of the office of district court judge, and such duties do not appertain to another office within Const. art. 3, § 13, forbidding a district court judge to hold any other office. Moore v. Nation, 108 Pac. 107, 109, 110, 80 Kan. 672, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1115, 18 Ann. Cas. 397.

The fixing of water rates by a city, when not a matter of contract, is an "administrative" function rather than a judicial function. City of Pocatello v. Murray, 173 Fed. 382, 385 (citing Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 14 Sup. Ct. 1062, 154 U. S. 420, 38 L. Ed. 1031; Southern Pac. Co. v. Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., 101 Fed. 779, 42 C. C. An "administrator" is a person appointed to manage and distribute the estate of an intestate or of a decedent who has no executor. Mefford v. Lamkin, 77 N. E. 960, 38 Ind. App. 33 (citing Bouv. Dict.).

An "administrator," under the law of Missouri, "is a statutory trustee to the end that the property of the estate may be collected, preserved, and disposed of according to law." Matson & May v. Pearson, 97 S. W. 983, 986, 121 Mo. App. 120 (quoting Smarr v. McMaster, 35 Mo. 849; Nichols v. Reyburn, 55 Mo. App. 1-7).

An administrator appointed by a state court is an officer of that court. His possession of the decedent's property is the possession of the court, and such possession cannot be disturbed by any court. Blythe Co. v. Bankers' Investment Co., 81 Pac. 281, 283, 147 Cal. 82; Byers v. McAuley, 13 Sup. Ct. 906, 149 U. S. 608, 37 L. Ed. 867.

"Administrators" are creatures of the statutes, and have no powers except those conferred therein. The only direct and specific power conferred on the administrator in connection with the repairs and improvements of an estate is that he is authorized to keep the buildings in tenantable repair, extraordinary casualties excepted, unless not directed to do so by an order of the court. Rice v. Conwill, 80 S. W. 893, 894, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 341.

The word "administrator," in a deed conveying lands to an administrator and describing him as such, is simply descriptive, and of no greater significance. Love v. Love, 83 Pac. 201, 202, 72 Kan. 658.

Where the defeated party to a judgment was a party thereto in his representative capacity as "administrator," and the assignment of errors on his appeal described him by name followed by the word "administrator," the appeal must be dismissed for failure to describe him in his representative capacity. Bender v. State, 95 N. E. 305, 176 Ind. 70.

ADMINISTRATOR AD COLLIGENDUM

An "administrator ad colligendum" is the mere agent or officer of the court to collect and preserve the goods of the deceased until some one is clothed with authority to administer them, and cannot complain that another is appointed administrator in chief. Flora v. Mennice, 12 Ala. 836, 837.

"An administrator ad colligendum" is not such a representative of the estate as to require claims to be presented to him in order to avoid the statute of nonclaim. Erwin v. Branch Bank at Mobile, 14 Ala. 307, 314.

ADMINISTRATOR DE BONIS NON

"The term 'administrator de bonis non' is frequently used by the courts and by attorneys with reference to an administrator appointed in place of a former administrator or executor. Such an appointee receives his authority from the statutes and looks to the same to ascertain his duties. His power is greater than that implied by the term 'administrator de bonis non' at common law. The petition herein refers to the subsequently appointed administrator as an administrator de bonis non. We must construe this to mean the appointment of an administrator having all the powers and duties which our statutes vest in an administrator appointed to succeed the executrix, and such includes the power and duty to take up the administration and settlement of the estate and prosecute the same to the same extent as the executrix would in law have been required to do had she lived and continued in office." Prusa v. Everett, 113 N. W. 571, 572, 78 Neb. 251.

ADMINISTRATOR'S SALE

As judicial sale, see Judicial Sale.

The sale of land by an administrator, though irregularly appointed, under the license of the probate court, was an administrator's sale and governed by Rev. Laws 1905, § 8776, barring an action for the recovery of real estate sold by an administrator, unless brought within five years of the sale.

Hanson v. Nygaard, 117 N. W. 235, 238, 105 Minn. 30, 127 Am. St. Rep. 523.

ADMISSIBILITY

The word "admissibility," in an instruction to the effect that the court would leave the admissibility of the testimony to the consideration of the jury under the following instructions, etc., was held to be used in the sense of leaving it to their consideration and to be considered by them under the following rules, etc., and did not leave the question of the legal admissibility of the evidence to the jury. Carbough v. State, 93 S. W. 738, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 452.

ADMISSION

ADMISSION (In Evidence)

See Implied Admission; Judicial Admission; Solemn Admission.

Admission for purposes of suit, see Purposes of Suit.

"An 'admission' is defined as 'a statement, oral or written, suggesting any inference as to any fact in issue, or relevant fact unfavorable to the conclusion contended for by the person by whom or on whose behalf the statement is made.'" Ogden v. Sovereign Camp, Woodmen of the World, 113 N. W. 524, 525, 78 Neb. 806 (quoting and adopting definition in Stephen's Digest, Evidence, art. 15, c. 4, pt. 1).

"An 'admission' * * * is nothing but a piece of evidence discrediting the party's present claim, and tending to prove the fact of its incorrectness. It is therefore to be distinguished from those statements of the party which become in themselves the foundation of independent rights for other persons by virtue of some doctrine of substantive law; in other words, from binding estoppels, warranties, and representations." Binewicz v. Haglin, 115 N. W. 271, 273, 103 Minn. 297, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1096, 14 Ann. Cas. 225 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Wigmore, Evidence, pp. 1222, 1224, §§ 1053, 1056). "Anything said by the party may be used as against him as an 'admission' provided it exhibits the quality of inconsistency with the facts now asserted by him in the pleadings or in testimony." Castner v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 102 N. W. 499, 501, 126 Iowa, 581 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Wigmore, Evidence, §§ 1048, 1050).

An "admission" is an acknowledgment of the existence of a fact, of which it is evidence only in the sense that it dispenses with the proof of it. To be binding, it must necessarily be made by the party himself against whom it is introduced, or by some one having authority at the time, to speak for him in the premises. The admissions of an agent, therefore, to bind his principal, must be made in the course of his agency, and be concerned with the furtherance of it; and a statement by an agent with respect to a completed transaction, as to which his agency has ceased, however close in point of time, is a mere declaration or narration, which is not competent evidence to affect his principal. Goehrig v. Stryker, 174 Fed. 897, 899.

An "admission," as applied to a criminal case, is the statement by defendant of a fact or facts pertinent to the issues and tending, in connection with proof of other facts or circumstances, to prove the guilt of accused, but which is, of itself, insufficient to authorize conviction. It is a circumstance which requires the aid of further testimony to generate a reasonable conclusion of guilt. Ransom v. State, 59 S. E. 101, 102, 2 Ga. App. 826.

Admissions in writing

A self-charging "admission" does not lose all of its evidential force because it is not transmitted or delivered to another. On the trial of an indictment for conspiracy, letters shown to be in the handwriting of defendant addressed to an alleged co-conspirator and containing self-charging admissions, are admissible in evidence, though it is not proved that they were transmitted to the alleged co-conspirator. Chadwick v. United States, 141 Fed. 225, 238, 72 C. C. A. 343.

Where, in an action for injuries to an employé, H. testified for defendant that he was an independent contractor, and that the employé was in his service and not defendant's, a letter written by defendant's attorneys to the clerk of the court, directing the subpoena of certain witnesses, and stating that the witnesses whose addresses were not given worked for defendant at the plant where the accident occurred, and containing H.'s name, but not giving his address, was not admissible as an "admission" on defendant's part that H. was an employé of defendant at the time of the accident. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. v. Knight, 56 S. E. 725, 727, 106 Va. 674.

Confession distinguished

A "confession" is a voluntary admission of guilt, and an "admission," as applied to criminal cases, is an avowal of a fact or circumstance only tending to prove the offense charged, and not amounting to a confession. Riley v. State, 57 S. E. 1031, 1032, 1 Ga. App. 651.

A "confession" is one species of admission, namely, an admission consisting of a direct assertion by the accused of the main fact charged against him. "Admissions" are statements, assertions in words, and conduct cannot of itself be treated as an admission. Admissions are acts, and not assertions, and their use in evidence is a circumstantial one by way of inference from the conduct to the mental state beneath it, and from that to some ulterior fact. Burnett v. State, 124 N. W. 927, 928, 86 Neb. 11.

What are called "confessions" in civil actions in criminal law are called "admissions." The terms are synonymous under the rule of evidence that silence, when accused is under no restraint and at full liberty to speak, may sometimes be regarded as a tacit "admission." Merriweather v. Commonwealth, 82 S. W. 592, 596, 118 Ky. 870, 4 Ann. Cas. 1039.

A "confession" is a voluntary admission of guilt, as distinguished from an "admission," which as applied to criminal cases is the statement by a defendant of a fact pertinent to the issues and tending in connection with proof of other facts to prove the guilt of accused, but which is of itself insufficient to authorize conviction. The nearer an admission approaches the completeness of a plenary confession of guilt without attaining thereto, the more likely is any reference in the charge to the subject of confession to confuse the jury and harm the defendant. Ransom v. State, 59 S. E. 101, 102, 2 Ga. App. 826.

A "confession" is a voluntary acknowledgment of a person charged with a commission of crime that he is guilty of the offense. It is a voluntary declaration by a person charged with a crime of his agency or participation in the crime. It is not equivalent to statements, declarations, or admissions of facts criminating in their nature or tending to prove guilt. It is limited in its meaning to the criminal act, and is an acknowledgment or "admission" of participation in it. Offers by a person arrested for forging a check to settle the matter by paying the amount of the check, or a greater sum, were not confessions, so as to authorize an instruction on the subject of confessions, in a prosecution for the crime. Michaels v. People, 70 N. E. 747, 748, 208 Ill. 603 (citing 8 Cyc. p. 562; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 170; Johnson v. People, 64 N. E. 286, 197 Ill. 48).

"A 'confession' is a voluntary 'admission' or declaration by a person of his agency or participation in a crime." When a person only admits certain facts from which the jury may or may not infer guilt, there is no confession, and where in a prosecution for murder there was evidence that defendant, when informed that he had been arrested, stated that if deceased had treated his informant as he had treated defendant informant would have wanted to kill him, it was prejudicial error to instruct that confessions are satisfactory and effectual proofs of guilt, as the evidence did not show a confession, but merely an inculpatory statement. Shelton v. State, 42 South. 80, 82, 144 Ala. 106 (citing People v. Parton, 49 Cal. 638).

"A confession in a legal sense is restricted to an acknowledgment of guilt made by a person after an offense has been committed, and does not apply to a mere statement or declaration of an independent fact from which such guilt can be inferred. Statements and declarations by a defendant in a criminal action, in denial of guilt, while a witness before a grand jury, are not confessions within the rule requiring them first to be shown to have been made voluntarily before they are competent evidence against him. State v. Campbell, 85 Pac. 784, 788, 73 Kan. 688, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 533, 9 Ann. Cas. 1203 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. Reinhart, 38 Pac. 822, 26 Or. 466).

A "confession" is a voluntary statement made by a person charged with the commission of a crime or misdemeanor, communicated to another person, wherein he acknowledges himself to be guilty of the offense charged, and discloses the circumstances of the act or the share and participation which he had in it. In a prosecution for burglary, statements made by defendant to police officers with reference to his possession of certain of the stolen property before he had been charged with any offense, and without any threats or inducements on the part of the officers, were admissible as "admissions." State v. Royce, 80 Pac. 268, 270, 38 Wash. 111, 3 Ann. Cas. 351 (quoting and adopting 8 Cyc. p. 562).

Where accused after his arrest was questioned in the presence of the sheriff and constable and others, and admitted his implication in an affray in which he shot and wounded complainant, but claimed that he acted only in self-defense and used his revolver as a club only, the discharge being accidental, and that after complainant had knocked him off a chair into a bedroom complainant's wife joined in the assault, it was error for the court to refer to such "admissions" as a confession of guilt. People v. Cismadija, 132 N. W. 489, 491, 167 Mich. 210.

Pen. Code, § 647, subd. 4, provides that every person known to be a confidence operator, either by his own confession, or having been convicted of such offense, and having no visible means of support when found loitering around certain public places, shall be deemed a vagrant. Held, that the word "confession" as so used had reference to an "admission" or declaration as to the party's status, as distinguished from his confession of guilt of a particular crime, and was not the equivalent of a "statement" or "declaration," and hence the section does not justify a conviction, or declare the offense established by the confession of the party, but only provides that his admission of the truth of one of the elements of the offense, to wit, his calling, is sufficient to establish such element. Ex parte Hayden, 106 Pac. 893, 894, 12 Cal. App. 145.

Offer of compromise or settlement distinguished

The "admissions" which are to be rejected because "made with a view to compromise" within Civ. Code 1895, § 5194, are those made as a concession to bring about a compromise or settlement, but independent statements of facts by a party, though made while they are trying to settle, are not necessarily inadmissible. Austin v. Long, 63 S. E. 640, 641, 5 Ga. App. 551.

In an action for injuries to a servant, it was proper to exclude a portion of a letter written by plaintiff to defendant's claim agent, to the effect that plaintiff assessed his damages at $500; the letter being one in which plaintiff stated that, expecting the presence of the claim agent, he had delayed making claim, etc., and hoped that defendant would call upon him and save the trouble of litigation, as the import of the letter was an "offer of settlement." St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Kern (Tex.) 100 S. W. 971, 972.

ADMISSION (In Pleading)

Admissions in pleading or otherwise, see Otherwise.

Where a trustee was garnished by creditors of the beneficiary, and answered that the income which it had collected had been assigned to a creditor other than the attachment creditor and before the service of the attachment by an instrument in writing, but that the beneficiary had revoked the assignment, there was no "admission" of assets in the trustee's hands liable to attachment. Egbert v. De Solms, 67 Atl. 212, 213, 218 Pa. 207.

ADMISSION OR REJECTION OF TESTIMONY

The criminal procedure act provides that, if it appear from the record that plaintiff in error on the trial below suffered manifest wrong or injury either in the admission or rejection of testimony, whether objection was made thereto or not, the appellate court shall order a new trial. Held, that the phrase "admission or rejection of testimony" imports judicial action, and a judgment will not be reversed for refusal of the trial court to strike out testimony elicited by a question to which no objection was made. State v. Hummer, 67 Atl. 294, 81 N. J. Law, 430.

ADMISSION TO BAIL

A discharge on a prisoner's own recognition is nothing more than "admission to bail without surety." Where the record on appeal showed that when defendant was arraigned before the court of Special Sessions he was discharged on his own recognition, and that thereafter the order was revoked, and trial and conviction had, and it did not appear that before trial there was any investigation of the charge, no irregularity appeared, since, even if there was no authority to discharge, the order had not the effect of an acquittal, and, if the revocation of the order was unauthorized, nevertheless, defendant being before the court, it had jurisdiction. People v. Harber, 91 N. Y. Supp. 571, 572, 100 App. Div. 817.

The words "not admitted to bail," as used in Rev. Codes 1899, § 8679, relating to release on habeas corpus, mean that the accused has not been discharged on bail, but is in custody under commitment because unable or unwilling to furnish the bail required. State ex rel. Adams v. Larson, 97 N. W. 587, 538, 12 N. D. 474.

ADMITTED

See Regularly Admit to Practice.

In a rule of court, declaring that a rehearing shall not be "granted" after the lapse of the term at which the final decree is entered, and providing that in nonappealable cases a petition for a rehearing may be "admitted" before the end of the next term after final decree, the word "admitted" is synonymous with the word "granted," and the effect of the rule is to deprive the court of the power to grant a rehearing in any case after the lapse of the term next succeeding entry of the final decree. Glenn v. Dimmock, 43 Fed. 550, 551.

Though petitioner passed the legal examination for admission to the bar, and was permitted to take an attorney's oath and to sign the roll of attorneys, his certificate of admission being withheld until proof of his general educational qualifications, he was not "admitted," and his name is properly stricken from the roll, on failure to make such proof. In re Alexander, 133 N. W. 491, 492, 167 Mich. 495.

ADMITTED TO RECORD

See Duly Admitted to Record.

ADOPT—ADOPTION

Unanimously adopted, see Unanimous—Unanimously.

One may approve and at the same time fail to adopt a thing, and therefore an indictment, alleging that the local option law had been legally "approved," did not allege that it had been legally "adopted." State v. Campbell, 119 S. W. 494, 495, 137 Mo. App. 105.

An order of a county court "approving" the report of viewers appointed on proceedings for the establishment of a county road was a compliance with Laws 1903, p. 262, § 11, requiring the report to be "adopted." Miller v. Union County, 86 Pac. 3, 48 Or. 266; Pierce v. Same, 86 Pac. 5, 48 Or. 622.

The word "adopted," in a stipulation to the effect that the report of a referee shall be accepted and adopted, has the same meaning as "accepted," and the effect of the stipulation is merely to waive the right to question the authenticity of the report on the settlement of the bill of exceptions. Babcock v. Ormsby, 100 N. W. 759, 18 S. D. 358.

See Roman Adoption.

"Adoption," properly considered, refers to the taking of minor children by persons who are strangers in blood, in contradistinction to "legitimation," where the blood relationship must exist. Allison v. Bryan, 97 Pac. 282, 283, 21 Okl. 557, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 931, 17 Ann. Cas. 468 (citing Bouvier, Black, Anderson, and Rapalje).

"Adoption" is the taking of a stranger in the blood as one's own child. The proceeding of adoption and the relation established is personal to the foster parent and child, and though the statute gives to them all of the rights to be derived from the legal relation of parent and child, including the "right of inheritance through each other," an adopted child may not inherit through the foster parents from his collateral kin. Kettle v. Baxter, 100 N. Y. Supp. 529-531, 50 Misc. Rep. 428. Adoption was unknown to the common law. Long v. Dufur, 113 P. 59, 62, 58 Or. 162. But it was an incident of the civil law, and incorporated in the Code Napoleon. Hockaday v. Lynn, 98 S. W. 585, 200 Mo. 456, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 117, 118 Am. St. Rep. 672, 9 Ann. Cas. 775.

The word "adoption," as used in Civ. Code 1895, §§ 2372-2387, regulating benevolent institutions and relating to the placing of children at service, is to be construed in the sense in which it is used in those provisions of the law where one person adopts the child of another. In the case of a legal adoption there is a complete surrender for all time of the parental control to the adoptive parents. The word "adoption" in this act is to be construed so as to confer upon the person receiving the child no greater power over the child than the benevolent institution itself had in the first instance, and that is, to retain the custody of the child until the time arrives when it shall be returned to its parents or to the court from which it was received. Kennedy v. Meara, 56 S. E. 243, 248, 127 Ga. 68, 9 Ann. Cas. 396.

Rev. Laws 1880, §§ 2536-2541, provide that, on an "adoption," the same rights, duties, and obligations and the same rights of inheritance shall exist "between the parties" as though the person adopted had been the legitimate child of the adoptive parent, except that the person so adopted shall not be capable of taking property expressly limited to the heirs of the body of the adoptive parent. The word "adoption" by common acceptance establishes the relationship of parent and child with all the consequences of that relationship, including the right of inheritance from the adoptive parents, and such right extends to the issue of the adopted child, and where intestate, who died with out issue of his body, before marriage adopted complainant's mother as his daughter, and she died leaving complainant surviving her, complainant was entitled to share in intestate's estate by representation to the same extent as if he had been the son of intestate's natural daughter. Batchelder v. Walworth, 82 Atl. 7, 9, 85 Vt. 822, 87 L. R. A. (N. S.) 849.

The Domestic Relations Law defines "adoption" as the legal act whereby any adult takes a minor into the relation of child and thereby acquires the rights and incurs the responsibilities of parent. A "voluntary adoption" is declared to be any other than that of an indigent child or one who is a public charge from an asylum or from a charitable institution, and, after providing the proceedings for voluntary adoption, declares that "thereafter" the parents of the minor are relieved from all parental duties, responsibilities for, and rights over such child, or his property by descent or succession, but the foster parent and the minor sustain the legal relation of parent and child with all the rights and duties of that relation, including the right of inheritance, and such right of inheritance extends to the heirs and next of kin of the minor, and such heirs and next of kin shall be the same as if the minor were the legitimate child of the adopting person, but as respects the passing and limitation over of real and personal property, dependent, by the provisions of any instrument, on the foster parent dying without heirs, the minor is not deemed the child of the foster parent so as to defeat the rights of remaindermen. The statute then proceeds to provide a procedure for the adoption of children from charitable institutions without containing any further provision as to the rights of children so adopted. Held, that a child previously adopted from a charitable institution, who under the saving clause in the Domestic Relations Law was entitled to all the rights of children similarly adopted thereunder, her adopted parents having no other children, was the sole next of kin of her foster father under the statute of distributions, and therefore was entitled to take under a deed of trust for the benefit of her foster father, remainder on his death to his children. United States Trust Co. of New York v. Hoyt, 135 N. Y. Supp. 849, 852, 150 App. Div. 621.

An indenture of apprenticeship, providing that it was the intent of the party of the first part to place, and of the second part to receive, the apprentice as an adopted child of the party of the second part, to be maintained and treated with like care as if he were the child of such party, did not constitute the child an "adopted" son of the master. In re Wallace's Estate, 66 Atl. 1098, 1099, 218 Pa. 39.

Same—As legitimation

Under Civ. Code, arts. 200, 214, authorizing a natural father to legitimize his children by an act passed before a notary and witnesses, and declaring that any person may adopt another as his child, except those illegitimate children whom the law prohibits him from acknowledging, a man may "adopt" children with a colored woman, where at the time of the birth of the children he and the colored woman could have contracted marriage, though subsequently marriage between them was prohibited and the adoption occurred after such prohibition. Hodges' Heirs v. Kell, 51 South. 77, 81, 125 La. 87.

ADULT

As children, see Child—Children (In Statutes).

"Full age in male or female is 21 years, which age is completed on the day preceding the anniversary of a person's birth, who till that time is an infant, and so styled in law." Under the express provisions of Code, § 3188, a male person remains a minor until the age of 21 years, but the common law is modified by the statute to the extent of declaring a female an "adult" at 18 years of age, and all persons such upon marriage. Banco De Sonora v. Bankers' Mut. Casualty Co., 100 N. W. 532, 535, 124 Iowa, 576, 104 Am. St. Rep. 367 (quoting Blackstone).

ADULT OWNER

A corporation owning lands within a proposed drainage district is an "adult owner," within drainage district statute (St. 1898, § 1379-11 et seq.), which authorizes a proceeding to organize a drainage district on petition of a majority of the adult owners of lands within the district, etc., though the word "adult," or an equivalent phrase, referring to one who has "arrived at lawful age," is commonly used to designate only persons who have arrived at full age, or the years of manhood. Jordan Land Co. v. Freeborn, 135 N. W. 751, 752, 149 Wis. 159.

ADULTERATE—ADULTERATION

The word "adulteration," means to corrupt, debase, or make impure by an admixture of a foreign or a baser substance. United States v. St. Louis Coffee & Spice Mills, 189 Fed. 191, 198. Articles are deemed to be adulterated when foreign matter is added to improve or change their appearance or flavor, in imitation of an article of higher grade or different kind. Adulteration is a treatment to simulate a better article; an artificial concealment of defects. City of St. Louis v. Jud, 139 S. W. 441, 442, 236 Mo. 1.

Illuminating oil colored red is not an adulteration as a matter of law within Laws 1909, p. 630, c. 502, prohibiting sale of adulterated oils. Bartles Oil Co. v. Lynch (Minn.) 124 N. W. 1, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1234.

The manufacture of buchu gin by pouring pure gin on a bed or mat of buchu leaves and allowing it to percolate through; then adding distilled water and syrup, the gin comprising some 50 per cent. or more of the compound which is 46 per cent. alcohol and designed for use as a beverage, constitutes a "compounding" or "adulterating," within Ky. St., imposing a license tax of 1½ cents a wine gallon on the business of compounding, rectifying, "adulterating," or blending distilled spirits. Bouvier Specialty Co. v. James, 118 S. W. 381, 133 Ky. 580.

Butter or oleomargarine

Proof of the presence of an abnormal quantity of moisture in butter and of a removal of the butter without a compliance with federal regulations concerning the taxing and branding of "adulterated butter" is insufficient to bring such butter within the class of adulterated butter or to sustain its forfeiture as such. United States v. 11,150 Pounds of Butter, 195 Fed. 657, 660, 115 C. C. A. 463.

Oleomargarine Act May 9, 1902, c. 784, § 4, 32 Stat. 194, imposes an internal revenue tax of 10 cents per pound on adulterated butter, and provides that "any butter in the manufacture or manipulation of which any process or material is used with intent or effect of causing the absorption of abnormal quantities of water, milk, or cream" shall be deemed "adulterated butter," and authorizes the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to decide what substances are taxable thereunder, and, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to make all needful regulations for carrying the act into effect. Held, that a regulation that butter containing 16 per cent. or more of water, milk, or cream should be classified as "adulterated butter" was valid, not being an exercise of judicial power, but merely a determination as a question of fact of what constitutes an "abnormal" quantity of water, etc. Coopersville Co-operative Creamery Co. v. Lemon, 163 Fed. 145, 146, 89 C. C. A. 595; United States v. 11,150 Pounds of Butter, 195 Fed. 657, 660, 115 C. C. A. 463.

Drug

Pure Food and Drug Act, § 7, provides that drugs shall be deemed "adulterated" when they differ from the standard of strength, quality, or purity as determined by the test prescribed in the United States Pharmacopoeia or National Formulary official at the time of investigation, and that no drug shall be deemed adulterated if the standard of strength, quality, or purity be plainly stated on the container, although the standard may differ from the test. Section 10 declares that any drug that is adulterated or misbranded and is being transported from one state to another for sale, or having been transported remains unsold, or in the original or unbroken packages, shall be liable to condemnation in any District Court of the United States and condemned. Held, that a drug is not "adulterated" so as to be subject to condemnation unless adulterated at the time of seizure. United States v. Five Boxes of Asafetida, 181 Fed. 561, 562; Same v. Nine Boxes of Asafetida, 181 Fed. 568.

Food

The word "adulteration," in Comp. Laws, § 5007, declaring it unlawful to manufacture and sell maple syrup that is in any wise adulterated with common sugar or any other foreign substance, without labeling it in a certain way, means the mixture of any foreign substance, wholesome or unwholesome, with maple syrup. Pierre Vlaus Maple Co. v. Dairy & Food Com'r, 117 N. W. 553, 554, 154 Mich. 73.

Sess. Laws 1903, p. 103, c. 82, § 6, prohibits the sale of adulterated food, and provides that food shall be deemed "adulterated" (4) if any substance has been mixed with it so as to lower or depreciate its quality or purity, or (5) if any inferior substance is wholly or partly substituted, or (7) if it is an imitation; but that an article shall not be deemed adulterated if it is a mixture of recognized food products and not an imitation, provided each package sold as a mixture is labeled with the name and percentages of the components. Article 1, § 13, provides that maple syrup shall be the unadulterated product of the pure sap from the maple tree, and the mixing of other substances with maple syrup or their substitution therefor shall be deemed adulteration. An information alleged that accused offered for sale a can of recognized food products, to wit, maple syrup and cane sugar mixed in certain proportions, the can being labeled "W. syrup, a blend of pure maple and rock candy syrup," but was not labeled as a mixture with the name and percentage of each ingredient. Held, that the information did not charge an "adulteration" within section 13, or within section 6, and since the sale of unlabeled mixtures was not made unlawful by any statute unless they were adulterations, forbidden by section 6, which did not include unlabeled mixtures, the information did not allege an offense under the proviso of section 6. State v. Weeden, 100 Pac. 114, 115, 17 Wyo. 418.

Rev. Laws, c. 75, § 16, provides that no person shall sell any article of food which is "adulterated." Section 17 defines the term "food" to include all articles, simple, mixed, or compound, used in food or drink by man, and section 18 declares that food shall be deemed adulterated if any substance has been mixed with it, so as to reduce, depreciate, or injuriously affect its quality, strength, or purity, or if an inferior or cheaper substance has been substituted for it wholly or in part, or if it is an imitation of or sold under the name of another article, but that such provisions shall not apply to mixtures or compounds not injurious to health and which are recognized as ordinary articles or ingredients of articles of food, if every package sold or offered for sale is distinctly labeled as a mixture or compound with the distinct name of each ingredient therein. Held, that blended maple sugar "part maple and part granulated," itself a well-known article in the trade as a commercial unit of food bought and sold as such, was neither an "adulterated food" nor an "imitation" within the statute. Adams v. New England Maple Syrup Co., 97 N. E. 85, 87, 210 Mass. 475.

Sausage meat made from the meat of hams and select young pork prepared with spices and 2 to 10 per cent. cereals, to which water had been added, is not an adulterated food within Comp. Laws, § 5012, declaring that an article shall be deemed adulterated if it is an (subdivision 4) imitation of, or is sold under the name of, another article, or (subdivision 7) if it contains any added substance or ingredient which is poisonous or injurious to health. Armour & Co. v. State Dairy and Food Com'r, 123 N. W. 580, 581, 159 Mich. 1.

Under Federal Food and Drugs Act, § 7, an article of food is "adulterated": First. If any substance has been mixed and packed with it so as to reduce or lower or injuriously affect its quality or strength. Second. If any substance has been substituted wholly or in part for the article. Third. If any valuable constituent of the article has been wholly or in part abstracted. Fourth. If it be mixed, colored, powdered, coated, or stained in a manner whereby damage or inferiority is concealed. Fifth. If it contain any added poisonous or other added deleterious ingredient which may render such article injurious to health: Provided, that when in the preparation of food products for shipment, they are preserved by any external application applied in such manner that the preservative is necessarily removed mechanically, or by maceration in water, or otherwise, and directions for the removal of such preservative shall be printed on the covering or the package, the provisions of this act shall be construed as applying only when said products are ready for consumption. Sixth. If it consists in whole or in part of a filthy, decomposed, or putrid animal or vegetable substance, or any portion of an animal unfit for food, whether manufactured or not, or if it is the product of a diseased animal or one that has died otherwise than by slaughter." Savage v. Jones, 32 Sup. Ct. 715, 724, 225 U. S. 501, 56 L. Ed. 1182. Section 8 contains a proviso that food which does not contain any added or deleterious ingredients shall not be deemed "adulterated," and if in the case of mixtures or compounds, known as articles of food by their own distinctive name, such name shall be accompanied on the same label or brand with a statement of the place where the article has been manufactured or produced, and in the case of articles labeled, branded, or tagged so as to plainly indicate that they are compounds and the word "compound," "imitation," or "blend," as the case may be, is plainly stated on the package in which it is offered for sale. Held, that where a substance sold under the name "Corno Horse and Mule Feed" was contained in a package branded: "Corno Horse and Mule Feed. Mixture of ground alfalfa, oats, corn, flax bran, oat and hominy feeds, made by the Corno Mills Company, East St. Louis, Illinois"—followed by a guaranteed analysis, such substance, being a compound and so described on the package, was not adulterated, because it contained a quantity of oat hulls mixed and packed therewith in excess of the amount normally present in oat feed consisting of whole ground oats. United States v. One Car Load of Corno Horse and Mule Feed, 188 Fed. 453, 455.

Milk

One charged with selling "adulterated milk," defined by the Agricultural Law, cannot defend by showing that he sold the milk as given by cows. People v. Bosch, 114 N. Y. Supp. 65, 66, 129 App. Div. 660.

A dealer, who sold milk in cans after having taken from them about two quarts of cream and then filling the same with milk from other cans from which the same quantity of cream had been taken, sold "adulterated milk," within Agricultural Law (Laws 1893, c. 338) §§ 20, 22, defining "adulterated milk" as milk from which any part of the cream has been removed; and where he sold it as milk from which the cream had not been taken he was liable to the penalty imposed, though the milk in other respects complied with the requirements of the law and was in fact wholesome. People v. Koster, 106 N. Y. Supp. 793, 794, 121 App. Div. 852; People v. Abramson, 122 N. Y. Supp. 115, 117, 137 App. Div. 549.

Under Consol. Laws, c. 1, § 32, making it unlawful to sell or offer for sale "adulterated milk," which is defined by section 80 as "milk containing more than 88 per cent. of water or fluids, and containing less than 12 per cent. of milk solids," the state, in an action for the penalties for a sale of adulterated milk, makes out a prima facie case by the uncontradicted testimony of two of its agents that defendant delivered at a lunch-room milk containing 88.63 per cent. water and 11.87 per cent. solids. People v. McDermott Dairy Co., 122 N. Y. Supp. 294, 295.

Rev. St. 1909, § 640, provides that whoever shall sell or offer for sale any milk containing any foreign substance or preservative injurious to health, or shall sell or offer for sale any unclean, adulterated, or unwholesome milk, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Held, that the word "adulterated" was used in the sense ordinarily given by lexicographers, to wit, the addition of foreign matter to change or improve the appearance or flavor of an article; and hence St. Louis City Ordinance No. 24,297, prohibiting the having in possession adulterated milk, with intent to sell, and providing that it shall be deemed adulterated if any substance is mixed with it, so as to lower or depreciate or injuriously affect its strength, quality, or purity, or if it is mixed or colored, so that inferiority is concealed, or if it is made to appear better than it really is, was not in conflict with section 640, on the theory that such section permitted the addition of coloring matter which was not harmful; and hence a conviction could properly be sustained under the ordinance for having in possession skim milk to which annatto had been added to make it appear richer in fat than it really was. City of St. Louis v. Jud, 139 S. W. 441, 442, 236 Mo. 1.

Rev. St. 1909, § 6595, provides that milk shall be deemed adulterated if it does not conform to the standard of strength, quality, and purity now or hereafter to be established by the United States Department of Agriculture. Held, that such section could not be construed to authorize the lowering of the quality of skimmed milk by the addition of water, provided that the proper per cent. of milk solids remained, so as to comply with the percentage required by the regulations of the federal agricultural department. St. Louis City Ordinance No. 24,297, providing that no person shall have in possession, with intent to sell, any adulterated milk, and that milk shall be deemed adulterated if any substance has been added to lower or depreciate or injuriously affect its strength, quality, and purity, or if it has been mixed or colored in any manner to conceal damage or inferiority, etc., was not void for uncertainty, in that it failed to fix any standard or measure of strength, quality, or purity. City of St. Louis v. Kruempeler, 139 S. W. 446, 448, 235 Mo. 710.

Wheat

The H. Company, at Kansas City, Mo., on April 8, 1909, contracted to sell to the W. Company at Ft. Worth, Tex., 5,000 bushels of No. 2 red wheat, according to the Missouri official state grades. On April 29, 1909, the H. Company ordered the operator of a public elevator where it stored its grain to ship to the W. Company in fulfillment of this contract No. 2 red wheat. The operator loaded and sent to the W. Company a car of wheat. After this wheat was loaded, the official inspector of the state of Missouri at Kansas City inspected, adjudged, and certified this wheat to be No. 2 red wheat. An invoice of it was forwarded to the W. Company dated May 3, 1909, showing that it was shipped under the contract of April 8, 1909, and subject to Kansas City weights and grades. The wheat arrived in Texas without change. The Texas inspector, the federal inspector, and other witnesses there found it to be, and it was, wheat of another and less valuable grade. None of the officers or employees of the H. Company had any knowledge of this fact, or anything to do with the grading or shipping, except to order the operator of the public elevator to ship No. 2 red wheat. Held, the H. Company was not guilty of misbranding or of "adulterating" within the meaning of Pure Food Act, §§ 7, 8 (Act June 30, 1906, c. 3915, 34 Stat. 768, 769. Hall-Baker Grain Co. v. United States, 198 Fed. 614, 615, 117 C. C. A. 318.

"Adultery" is sexual intercourse of one spouse with any other than the other spouse." People v. Salmon, 83 Pac. 42, 43, 148 Cal. 303, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1186, 113 Am. St. Rep. 268.

"Adultery" is voluntary sexual intercourse by a married person with a person other than the offender's husband or wife. Cartier v. United States, 148 Fed. 804, 807, 78 C. C. A. 494; People v. Silva, 97 Pac. 202, 203, 8 Cal. App. 349; Ex parte Cooper, 121 Pac. 318, 319, 162 Cal. 81; Ex parte Sullivan, 119 Pac. 526, 17 Cal. App. 278.

Sexual intercourse by a married man with a woman other than his wife is "adultery" within the meaning of the statute making it a misdemeanor. Bashford v. Wells, 96 Pac. 663, 664, 78 Kan. 295, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 580, 16 Ann. Cas. 310.

Marriage of one party sufficient

"Adultery," as defined by the common law at the time of the colonization of the United States, is sexual connection between a man and a woman, one of whom is lawfully married to a third person; and the offense is the same whether the married person in the adulterous connection is a man or a woman. State v. Holland, 145 S. W. 522, 523, 162 Mo. App. 678.

The term "adultery" as used in the statutes means illicit intercourse between two persons of different sex, one of whom is married to another person. Rich v. State, 55 South. 1022, 1023, 1 Ala. App. 243. Sexual intercourse between two persons not husband and wife, either or both of whom are married, constitutes statutory "adultery." State v. Anderson, 118 N. W. 772, 774, 140 Iowa, 445. But under a statute defining "adultery" as the voluntary intercourse of a married person with a person other than accused's husband or wife, an unmarried man is incapable of committing the offense of living in a state of cohabitation and adultery. Ex parte Sullivan, 119 Pac. 526, 17 Cal. App. 278.

To constitute "adultery" under Act March 3, 1887, c. 397, § 31, 24 Stat. 635 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3636), by a married man, it is immaterial whether the woman was married or not. United States v. Meyers, 99 Pac. 836, 837, 14 N. M. 522.

Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 7230, defines "adultery" as "the sexual intercourse between a married person and one who is not such married person's husband or wife." Section 7231 provides that every person convicted of adultery shall be imprisoned not exceeding five years. Section 7238 provides that every man or woman, not being married to each other, lewdly and viciously associating and cohabiting together, shall be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding six months. Defendant, an unmarried man, was living with the wife of another. Held, that defendant, though unmarried, was guilty of "adultery," and not only of the misdemeanor under section 7238, since it is clear from section 7230 that the Legislature intended to hold each of the offending parties under section 7231 equally guilty. State v. Keith, 92 Pac. 893, 894, 48 Wash. 77.

Other sexual offenses distinguished

In the absence of statute sexual intercourse on the part of an unmarried woman does not constitute "adultery" on her part, but amounts simply to fornication; and hence an unmarried woman cannot be guilty of an offense under a statute providing that every person who lives in adultery is guilty of a misdemeanor; Civ. Code, § 93, defining "adultery" as the voluntary sexual intercourse of a married person with a person other than the offender's husband or wife. Ex parte Cooper, 121 Pac. 318, 319, 162 Cal. 81.

In the law of divorce "adultery" is the voluntary sexual intercourse of a married person with one not the husband or wife of that person; therefore, if a rape be committed by a husband, his wife may have a divorce from him on the ground of adultery. Johnson v. Johnson, 80 Atl. 119, 120, 78 N. J. Eq. 507.

Under Pen. Code, § 338, defining "adultery" as the voluntary sexual intercourse by a married person with one other than his or her spouse, and Pen. Code, § 325, as amended by Gen. Laws 1907, c. 11, § 1, defining "rape" as sexual intercourse with a female, not the wife of the ravisher, under the age of 18 years, a complaint which charged that the defendant, a male over 14 years, feloniously assaulted and ravished a female, not his wife, who was under the age of 18 years, did not charge adultery, but only rape; the intercourse charged being with a female incapable of consent. State v. Rash, 130 N. W. 91, 93, 27 S. D. 185.

"Rape" is an act of sexual intercourse accomplished forcibly, and without the consent of the female. If it be with her consent, though some coercion is used to procure consent, and the intercourse is illegal, the crime is "adultery" or "fornication," as the case may be. The law recognizes no intermediate degree of force in the accomplishment of an illegal act of sexual intercourse which is sufficient to accomplish the act contrary to the consent of the female, and yet not constitute the crime of rape. Whidby v. State, 49 S. E. 811, 121 Ga. 588 (citing Mathews v. State, 29 S. E. 424, 101 Ga. 547; Taylor v. State, 35 S. E. 161, 110 Ga. 151 [6]).

ADULTERY BY LIVING TOGETHER

To constitute the crime of "adultery by living together," it is not necessary that the parties live together as man and wife, but only that they live together and have intercourse. Shaw v. State, 91 S. W. 1087, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 379.

While under Ky. St. to entitle a wife to divorce for the husband's adulterous conduct there must be more than a single act to constitute living together in "adultery," there need not be a living together continuously or for a given time, nor is it necessary for the man to abide in the same house with the woman; but, if he at stated periods or frequently spend the day or night with the woman, having carnal knowledge of her at will, it constitutes adultery. Baker v. Baker, 124 S. W. 866, 867, 136 Ky. 617.

A married man who visits and remains with his paramour one night in every week for seven months at her residence, a half mile from his own house, is guilty of the offense of living in "adultery," within Pen. Code, c. 6, § 8, declaring it a misdemeanor for any man and woman to live together in adultery or fornication. Collins v. State, 14 Ala. 608, 609.

ADVANCE—ADVANCES

The word "advance" or "advances" does not necessarily imply a promise to pay. Assets Realization Co. v. Howard, 127 N. Y. Supp. 793, 821, 70 Misc. Rep. 651.

The word "advance" is defined by Webster as a "furnishing of something before an equivalent is received, or on loan. In case of an 'advance' as distinguished from an 'advancement' there arises the relation of debtor and creditor, or else the advance is in the nature of an absolute gift." Paine v. Copper Belle Mining Co. of Arizona, 114 Pac. 964, 966, 13 Ariz. 406.

The various expressions "pay," or "furnish," or "advance," used interchangeably in defining a resulting trust, all imply that the payor does something and that he has the intention, in so doing, to acquire at least an equitable interest in the land. Merrill v. Hussey, 64 Atl. 819, 821, 101 Me. 439.

The phrase in a memorandum of sale of beans, "he to have advance for two weeks," cannot, without extrinsic testimony, be construed to refer to the market price at the end of two weeks, but it either refers to the highest price during the two weeks, or requires extrinsic evidence to explain it, in which event its construction on conflicting testimony was properly submitted to the jury. Chase v. Ainsworth, 97 N. W. 404, 135 Mich. 119.

To make a payment by a mortgagee on the mortgagor's account an "advancement" within a clause of the mortgage securing "further advances" by the mortgagee, such payment must involve a contract relation, express or implied, and a payment made without the knowledge of the mortgagor cannot constitute such an advancement. Provident Mut. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Shaffer, 83 Pac. 274, 275, 2 Cal. App. 216.

Advancement distinguished

A husband purchasing real estate and causing the conveyance to be made to his wife presumptively makes a gift to her, and not an "advancement," which is a transfer of property from one standing in loco parentis toward another, and which applies only in cases of intestacy; and hence the court, in distributing the estate of a testator, must award to his wife, electing to take under the statute, dower without reference to real estate so conveyed to her, in the absence of any evidence creating a resulting trust in favor of the husband. In re Kennedy's Estate, 135 N. W. 53, 56, 154 Iowa, 460.

Loan equivalent

One of the meanings of "advance" is a loan; the word, when used in that sense, naturally importing a reimbursement, so as to imply the relation of debtor and creditor. Grone v. Economic Life Ins. Co. (Del.) 80 Atl. 809, 816. But it is said by another court that an "advance" of money does imply a loan. Schlesinger v. Burland, 85 N. Y. Supp. 350, 351, 42 Misc. Rep. 206.

The word "advance" could not be construed as meaning "loan" under the following state of facts: Stockholders of a mining corporation, which, though supposed to own valuable properties, was in financial trouble and had been declared bankrupt, entered into an agreement with one M., another stockholder, whereby M. was to provide sufficient money to discharge all corporate debts and to enable the company to operate its mines, as soon as the corporation should ratify the agreement, which further provided that the corporation should issue to M. treasury shares equal to 50 per cent. of the authorized capital stock in consideration of the "advance" by him of the money specified, etc. Thereafter the corporation was succeeded in interest by another company. The agreement is to be regarded as one for the purchase of the stock by M. in consideration of the advance, in the expectation that the stock of all concerned would thereby be made valuable. Paine v. Copper Belle Mining Co. of Arizona, 114 Pac. 964, 966, 13 Ariz. 406.

A complaint in an action for an accounting, which alleged the purchase of lands for the complainant's benefit and the taking of title thereto by the defendant under an agreement that he should "advance" sums necessary to purchase, sufficiently charged, as against a general demurrer, that there was a consideration moving from the plaintiff to the defendant which would support the action, as the word "advance" implies the return of money furnished for a specific purpose. Semi-Tropic Spiritualists' Ass'n v. Johnson, 126 Pac. 488, 489, 163 Cal. 639.

As pecuniary advances

"Advance" is equivalent to "pay." Central Trust Co. of New York v. Egleston, 98 N. Y. Supp. 1055, 1057, 47 Misc. Rep. 693.

The word "advance," as used in a contract, ordinarily means money furnished with an expectation that it shall be returned, though it may not necessarily have that meaning; Abbott's Law Dictionary defining it as "To furnish value before it becomes due or in aid of an enterprise from which a return is expected." Linderman v. Carmin, 127 S. W. 124, 128, 142 Mo. App. 519.

An undertaking in writing, whereby one binds himself, as surety, to repay an "advance" to be made to his principal, cannot be regarded as authorizing the latter, and the party invited to make the advance, to enter into an arrangement whereby such party releases his lien on property belonging to the other, thus enabling him to sell it for a sum in excess of the amount of a pre-existing debt he owes to the lienor, to discharge a portion of that debt, and to retain part of the proceeds of the sale in lieu of the advance which the surety authorized to be made. O. S. Hirsch & Co. v. Meldrim, 52 S. E. 818, 815, 124 Ga. 717.

To "advance" is "to supply beforehand"; "to pay before the equivalent is received"; "to pay before the proper time." Plaintiff employed defendant as an insurance solicitor, agreeing to pay a specified commission for his services. The contract also provided that plaintiff might offset against any claim under the contract any and all debts or liabilities of defendant to plaintiff. A supplemental contract provided for advances by plaintiff to defendant of $15 a week, which advances were to be a first lien on all commissions or renewals then due or that might thereafter become due; and plaintiff was authorized to deduct any advances made from any money received on premiums, which, under the primary contract, should be due to defendant. Held, that such advances did not create a debt on the part of defendant, and on failure of the venture to prove successful plaintiff could not recover the same of defendant. Arbaugh v. Shockney, 72 N. E. 668, 669, 34 Ind. App. 268.

A contract of employment as a salesman at a certain commission, the employer to "advance" the salesman a certain sum monthly, "said advances to be charged and deducted from the commission computed at the end of the period of employment," does not create a personal liability on the part of the salesman to repay advances in excess of commissions earned. Schlesinger v. Burland, 85 N. Y. Supp. 350, 351, 42 Misc. Rep. 206.

Giving a note to pay the debt of another to a third person is not an "advance" of its amount, as a note is not payment till it is paid, unless an express agreement to receive it as such is shown. Coleman v. State, 65 S. E. 46-48, 6 Ga. App. 398.

The word "advance," within the meaning of Laws 1903, p. 90, defining the offense of cheating and swindling, means a payment of money which has not been earned. Testimony on the part of a witness that a certain payment was an advance is not competent evidence of that fact; it being the province of the jury to determine from the facts in connection with the payment the state of the employe's account with his employer, and whether the payment made was an advance or part payment of an indebtedness for labor due by the employer to the servant. Fuller v. State, 59 S. E. 1, 2, 2 Ga. App. 606.

A will directed payment of $500 to plaintiff, his son, on the death of testator's wife; any "advances" to the son during the lifetime of the testator to be deducted from the $500. After payment of a legacy, the residue of the estate was given to another son. When the will was made, testator was an indorser on a note for $500, given by a firm of which plaintiff was once a member. The money for which the note was given had been obtained by plaintiff and put into the firm business; but the firm had been dissolved, and nothing had been paid on the note. Held, that the payment by testator of the note, which he kept among his papers, was an "advance," within such clause of the will. Ebeling v. Ebeling, 115 N. Y. Supp. 894, 896, 61 Misc. Rep. 537.

Laws 1902, c. 608, § 2, declares that a warehouseman shall have a lien on goods stored with him for his charges for "advances" thereon, including weighing and cooerage in relation to the goods or other goods belonging to the same owner, and that he may detain the goods until the lien is paid. Held, that the term "advances," as so used, does not include loans made on security of the goods, but is limited to expenditures in handling and protecting the goods. Schwab v. Oatman, 106 N. Y. Supp. 741, 746, 56 Misc. Rep. 393.

By factors

"Advances" by a factor consist of payments by him to his principal on the credit of the goods consigned and in anticipation of the debt which will become due on a sale of the goods. "The ordinary use of the term indicates moneys paid before or in advance of the proper time of payment. 'To advance' is to supply beforehand, to loan before the work is done or the goods are made." In re Murphy Co.'s Estate, 63 Atl. 745, 747, 214 Pa. 258, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1147, 6 Ann. Cas. 308 (quoting Balderston v. National Rubber Co., 27 Atl. 507, 18 R. I. 388, 49 Am. St. Rep. 772).

ADVANCED IN MANUFACTURE

Where raw silk has been re-reeled from skeins upon cops or tubes thus permitting the operation of doubling or twisting to be omitted in the process of finishing the silk, and thus bringing the article one step nearer the condition of finished silk, held, that this removes the article from the provision in paragraph 660, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, § 2, Free List, for raw silk not "advanced in manufacture in any way," and brings it within the provision in paragraph 384, of said act, section 1, Schedule L, for "silk partially manufactured from cocoons, * * * and not further advanced or manufactured than carded or combed silk." United States v. Klotz, 133 Fed. 808, 809.

ADVANCED IN VALUE OR CONDITION

Talc sawed into cubes for use in making gas burners and insulators, the sawing being not merely to remove foreign matter and to put the material in shape for transportation, but to give it certain desired dimensions, has been "advanced in value or condition" within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897,

c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 614, 30 Stat. 198. Kraemer & Foster v. United States, 180 Fed. 638, 639.

ADVANCED ROYALTY

The term "advanced royalty," as used in a mining lease fixing a royalty for coal mined, providing that operations should be commenced within one year, and that if they should not be so commenced certain amounts should be paid as "advanced royalty" for the first and second years, and providing that after the second year the royalties should amount to as much as a sum specified during the contract or until all mineable coal was removed, refers to a failure to take out coal in the years mentioned, and is intended as payment in advance for coal subsequently to be mined, and the parties manifestly intended that the lessee should begin mining the first year, but, in the event this might not be done, the lessors were not to be delayed in receipt of the income contemplated. Kissick v. Bolton, 112 N. W. 95, 96, 134 Iowa, 650.

ADVANCEMENT

Advancement or otherwise, see Otherwise.

The "advancements" for which a lien is created in favor of a landlord, by Code, § 1754, providing that crops raised on leased lands shall be vested in possession of the lessor until the rent is paid and the lessor reimbursed for advancements in making the crops, embraces anything of value supplied by the landlord to the tenant in good faith, for the purpose of making and saving the crop; and, when the advancements are appropriate and necessary to the cultivation of the crop, they will be presumed to create the lien, but where not in themselves so appropriate and necessary, it must appear that they were made in aid of the crop. Windsor Bargain House v. Watson, 62 S. E. 305, 306, 148 N. C. 295.

ADVANCEMENT (To Child)

An "advancement" is an irrevocable gift by a parent to a child of the whole or part of what it is supposed the child will be entitled to upon the death of the parent, who afterwards dies intestate. In re Allen's Estate, 56 Atl. 928, 929, 207 Pa. 325 (citing Appeal of Eshleman, 74 Pa. [24 P. F. Smith] 42); Tart v. Tart, 70 S. E. 929, 930, 154 N. C. 502, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 952; Schweitzer v. Schweitzer (Ky.) 82 S. W. 625; Bowran v. Kent, 100 N. Y. Supp. 768, 769, 51 Misc. Rep. 136; Lindsley v. McIver, 48 South. 628, 629, 57 Fla. 466; Cotton v. Citizens' Bank, 135 S. W. 340, 343, 97 Ark. 568.

An "advancement" is an irrevocable gift in present of money or other property real or personal to a child by a parent to enable the child to anticipate by so much his inheritance or succession. Thompson v. Smith, 75 S. E. 1010, 160 N. C. 256.

"An 'advancement' is that bestowment of property by one standing in loco parentis to another, in anticipation of the latter's share in the donor's estate. It may in one sense be a gift; but its treatment in law as an advancement depends on two facts: one, that the donor shall die intestate, totally or partially; the other, that the gift shall have been in fact with a view to a portion or settlement in life upon the donee." Owsley v. Owsley (Ky.) 77 S. W. 394, 396; Bowron v. Kent, 83 N. E. 472, 475, 190 N. Y. 422.

An "advancement" is a completed gift by the ancestor to be accounted by the recipient as his share or part of his share in the distribution of the estate of the ancestor, and is no part of the ancestor's estate at his death, and the advancement is deducted from the recipient's share, and, if the advancement exceeds what his share otherwise would have been, he accounts for it as the whole of his share; but he is not called on to contribute to make the other shares equal to the remainder of his advancement, and an advancement is not a loan to be repaid to the ancestor or his representative after death, nor is it a legacy paid in advance. Wentworth v. Wentworth, 78 Atl. 646, 648, 75 N. H. 547.

The word "advancement," in its limited statutory meaning, is applicable only to cases of intestacy, and to moneys advanced by a parent to a child in anticipation of such child's future share of the parent's estate. It is employed by courts of equity in a wider sense to denote money or property advanced as a satisfaction pro tanto—a general legacy given by a parent or other person standing in loco parentis to a child or grandchild. In re Cramer, 89 N. Y. Supp. 469, 470, 43 Misc. Rep. 494.

While the term "advancements" is generally used in case of intestacy, it is also applicable to wills; and, where testator's intention is clear that sums advanced should be deducted from bequests made, his intention must control. In re Bresler's Estate, 119 N. W. 1104, 1107, 155 Mich. 567.

According to Bouv. Dict., an "advancement" is "that which is given by a father to his child, or presumptive heir, by anticipation of what he might inherit." The ancestor must in his lifetime divest himself of all interest in the property set apart to the heir. It is unlike an ademption, since it concerns intestate estates only. An instrument recited that the undersigned acknowledged that their father had advanced to them specified sums, "the same to be taken out of" their respective shares at the final settlement of his estate, and bound the children to pay interest per annum during his lifetime, and that if they should fail to pay interest they should give a note for the same, and at the final settlement the money advanced with accrued interest and notes given for unpaid interest should be taken out of their respective shares, and provided that each child reserved the right to pay the sum advanced or any part thereof to the father before his death. Held, that the instrument showed an advancement by the father to his children and not a loan to them, so that the father was not liable for taxation on the sum advanced. Duckett v. Gerig, 79 N. E. 94, 95, 223 Ill. 284.

Where testator devised certain real estate to his son, charged with advancements made to him, the testator did not intend to restrict the meaning of the term "advancement" to its technical, but intended to employ it in its popular, sense. In the case of wills, when "advancements" are spoken of, the term is not taken in its technical sense. Montgomery's Trustee v. Brown, 121 S. W. 472, 475, 184 Ky. 592 (citing Barker v. Comins, 110 Mass. 477; Eisner v. Koehler [N. Y.] 1 Dem. Sur. 277; Hammett v. Hammett, 16 S. E. 298, 839, 38 S. C. 50).

A will divided the residue of the estate into shares, and gave to each of testator's children a share, directing, as to one son, that one half the share should be given to him absolutely and the other half held by the executors for him during his life, with remainder to his surviving children. The will also recited that testator had theretofore given to several of his children sums of money, and that he would probably give further sums to them, and directed that all such sums, as noted in his books, should be charged so as to make an equal division of the estate as respects the advancements. Testator's books showed certain advances of money to the son, part of whose share was held in trust, and notes of the son indorsed by testator and paid appeared among testator's records on a card system. Held that the notes shown by the card system were "advancements," within the meaning of the will, and that all the advancements to the son should be deducted from his whole share, and not from the half share given to him absolutely. In re Vilsack's Estate, 75 Atl. 604, 605, 226 Pa. 379.

Where an agreement provided that a certain trust fund should be treated as "an advancement on account of any share" testatrix's niece should acquire from testatrix's estate, such provision should be construed to refer to testatrix's death intestate, so that, she having made a will disposing of her entire estate without making any reference to such advancements, they were not chargeable against the bequest to the niece, under the rule that, if the donor disposes of his whole estate by will, the doctrine of advancements has no application, unless the will specifically refers thereto, and defines what previous gifts shall be considered as "advancements." Bowron v. Kent, 83 N. E. 472, 475, 190 N. Y. 422.

Advance distinguished

See Advance—Advances.

Debt distinguished

Though an "advancement" is not a "debt" in any sense, testator may nevertheless impose such conditions on his devise to the beneficiary advanced as he sees proper and as are not unlawful. Montgomery's Trustee v. Brown, 121 S. W. 472, 475, 134 Ky. 592.

An "advancement" differs from a debt in that there is no enforceable liability on the part of the child to repay during the lifetime of the donor or after his death, except in the way of suffering a deduction from his distributive share. Duckett v. Gerig, 79 N. E. 94, 95, 223 Ill. 284.

Gift distinguished

An "advancement" differs from a gift in that it is charged against the child. Duckett v. Gerig, 79 N. E. 94, 95, 223 Ill. 284.

The intention which will characterize a gift as an "advancement" is the intention of the donor at the time of making the gift, expressed in the manner required by the statute, and a donor cannot change an executed gift to an advancement without the donee's consent. Bolin v. Bolin, 92 N. E. 530, 532, 245 Ill. 613.

Intent essential

To constitute an "advancement" it is necessary that the ancestor express in the gift or grant his intention that it be an advancement, or that he charge it in writing as an advancement, or that the child or descendant acknowledge in writing the gift or grant as an advancement. Lodge v. Fitch, 101 N. W. 338, 339, 72 Neb. 652; Boden v. Mier, 98 N. W. 701, 704, 71 Neb. 191 (citing Pomeroy v. Pomeroy, 67 N. W. 430, 93 Wis. 262; Bulkeley v. Noble, 19 Mass. [2 Pick.] 337; Bullard v. Bullard, 22 Mass. [5 Pick.] 527; Barton v. Rice, 39 Mass. [22 Pick.] 508).

Where decedent's son had obtained money from his father for which he gave interest-bearing notes, and paid interest from time to time for several years until the notes were surrendered to him by his father, the transaction was a loan, and, nothing showing the intent to convert the loan into an "advancement," the amount cannot be set off against his share of the estate. Even if the original loan to a son was intended to be an advancement, his father's subsequent conduct in returning to the son the notes he had taken, and declarations consistent with an intent to treat the notes as no longer a part of the estate, would prevent their being treated as an advancement. In re Bennington, 124 N. Y. Supp. 829, 830, 67 Misc. Rep. 363.

Transfer of real estate

A voluntary conveyance of property by a parent to a child, expressed in the deed as made in consideration of love and affection, is presumed to be an "advancement." Seed v. Jennings, 83 Pac. 872, 873, 47 Or. 464.

Where a deed is taken in the name of one whom the person paying the purchase money is under a legal or moral obligation to provide for, as a wife or child, the presumption is that the purchase was intended as an "advancement" or "settlement" and not in trust for the person furnishing the money, and evidence to overcome this presumption must be of the most satisfactory kind. De Roboam v. Schmidlin, 92 Pac. 1082, 1083, 50 Or. 388.

Under Rev. St. 1899, §§ 2913, 2914, providing that when any of the children of an intestate shall have received in his lifetime any property by way of advancement shall choose to come into partition, such advancement shall be brought into hotchpot, etc., the doctrine of bringing "advancements," which are money or property, given to a child by the father, or any one in loco parentis, in anticipation of inheritance, into hotchpot, applies only in cases of intestacy. In re Lear's Estate, 124 S. W. 592, 594, 146 Mo. App. 642.

ADVANTAGE

See Prospective Advantage.

ADVANTAGEOUS

A contract which provides that a sale of real estate shall be made when "advantageous" does not necessarily mean that a sale should only be made when profitable as a sale might be advantageous, as is held in this case, when it will prevent the entailment of further losses to the parties. Mariner v. Ingraham, 127 Ill. App. 542, 547.

ADVENTURE

ADVERSE

The word "adverse" is defined as "opposite," "hurtful," "unfavorable"; and as synonyms of "prejudicial" are given "hurtful," "injurious," "disadvantageous." Prunty v. Consolidated Fuel & Light Co., 108 Pac. 802, 803, 82 Kan. 541.

ADVERSE CLAIM

A claim, by one who acquired possession of property of a bankrupt before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, that such property was delivered to him in part payment of a debt, and that he had no reasonable cause to believe that a preference was thereby intended, is clearly an "adverse claim," which a referee has no jurisdiction to summarily determine on its merits, except by the claimant's consent. In re Adams, 130 Fed. 788, 789 (citing In re Hartman, 121 Fed. 940, 10 Am. Bankr. Rep. 387).

An "adverse claim" to an interest in real property, within B. & C. Comp. § 513, providing that any person claiming such an interest in land not in the actual possession of another may sue in equity another who claims an interest therein adverse to him, is the expressed assertion of a right by a claimant of suitable age and sufficient intelligence; and infants who have attained the age of 15 years may be proceeded against under such section for the purpose of determining such adverse claim. Harding v. Harding, 80 Pac. 97, 98, 46 Or. 178.

Where a grantor in a deed containing a condition subsequent re-enters for the grantee's breach of the condition, and is in possession at the time of an action by him to cancel the conveyance for the violation of the condition, the action is brought for the purpose of incidentally compelling the determination of a hostile claim within Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1638-1650, authorizing actions to compel the determination of claims to real estate, and defendant may not complain on the ground that the remedy of the grantor is by ejectment. Norton v. Valentine, 135 N. Y. Supp. 1084, 1085, 151 App. Div. 392.

A claim may be "adverse" within the meaning of Pub. Acts 1893, c. 66 (Gen. St. 1902, § 4053), authorizing any person claiming an interest in real estate to bring a suit against any person or persons claiming an adverse interest, although no attempt has been made to enforce the claim. To set it up is sufficient. Dawson v. Town of Orange, 61 Atl. 101, 102, 78 Conn. 96.

ADVERSE CLAIMANT

A surety on a bail bond of a bankrupt with whom the bankrupt, before the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings, deposited money to indemnify him against liability, is an "adverse claimant" of such money, within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 23, 30 Stat. 552, and the court of bankruptcy is without jurisdiction to proceed against him summarily therefor without his consent. In re Horgan, 158 Fed. 774, 776, 86 C. C. A. 130.

Where a petition was filed by the trustee of a bankrupt corporation against two of its officers in their official capacity to compel them to pay over money alleged to belong to the corporation, and received by them as the proceeds of a sale of certain of the corporation's stock, and also for an amount assessed against them for unpaid stock, and it appeared that they had controlled the corporation absolutely from its inception, and that the other incorporators and first board of directors were but their dummies, they could not be regarded as "adverse claimants" in determining the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court. In re Kor-nit Mfg. Co., 192 F. 392, 396.

ADVERSE PARTY

The "adverse party" on whom a notice of appeal must be served is the party who appears by the record of the proceedings in which the appeal is taken to be adverse.

McKenzie v. Hill, 98 Pac. 55, 56, 9 Cal. App. 78.

An "adverse party" is a natural or an artificial person by or against whom an action or suit is brought, and whose interest in relation to the judgment or decree rendered therein is in conflict with a modification or reversal thereof by an appeal therefrom. Kramer v. Marsh, 90 Pac. 583, 49 Or. 417.

The term "adverse party," as used in a statute providing that the service of notice of appeal must be made on the adverse party or his attorney, means every party whose interest in the subject-matter would be affected by a modification or reversal of the judgment or order appealed from, irrespective of whether he is a plaintiff, defendant, or intervener. Titiman v. Alamance Min. Co., 74 Pac. 529, 9 Idaho, 240; Bell v. San Francisco Sav. Union, 94 Pac. 225, 228, 153 Cal. 64 (quoting and adopting the definition in Senter v. De Bernal, 38 Cal. 637); Diamond Bank v. Van Meter, 108 Pac. 1042, 18 Idaho, 243, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1; Crouch v. Dakota, W. & M. R. R. Co., 117 N. W. 145, 146, 22 S. D. 263; Griffin v. Southern Pac. Co., 87 Pac. 1091, 1092, 31 Utah, 296 (citing Commercial Nat. Bank of Ogden v. United States Savings, Loan & Building Co., 44 Pac. 1043, 13 Utah, 189; Rache v. Stanley, 49 Pac. 648, 15 Utah, 314; Stephens v. Stevens, 75 Pac. 619, 27 Utah, 261; Nelden-Judson Drug Co. v. Commercial Nat. Bank of Ogden, 86 Pac. 498, 31 Utah, 42).

"Adverse parties," within Laws 1899, p. 83, c. 62, providing for the service of notice of appeal on adverse parties, are all parties whose interests require that the order, judgment, or decree appealed from be sustained. It is immaterial whether such party appeared as one of the original parties to the action, or was brought in by order of the court. Stephens v. Stevens, 75 Pac. 619, 620, 27 Utah, 261.

The term "adverse party," as used in Rev. St. 1898, § 3049, relating to the service of notice of appeal to the Supreme Court, does not mean merely the opposite party on the record. A person may be an appellant or an adverse party, within the meaning of the statute, and his name not appear in the litigation resulting in the decision. If he has a substantial interest adverse to the decision, that is all that is required for an appellant, whether it be direct, or by privity created between himself and the person against whom the decision was rendered, by reason of succeeding to his rights after the decision or subsequent to the commencement of the action. Harrigan v. Gilchrist, 99 N. W. 909, 926, 121 Wis. 127 (citing Rogers v. Shove, 73 N. W. 989, 98 Wis. 271; Crowns v. Forest Land Co., 74 N. W. 546, 99 Wis. 103; Hiscock v. Phelps [N. Y.] 2 Lans. 106; Cotes v. Carroll [N. Y.] 28 How. Prac. 436; Barnes v. Stoughton [N. Y.] 6 Hun, 254; Pickersgill v. Read [N. Y.] 7 Hun, 686; Baylies, New Trials & Appeals [2d Ed.] 145).

The plaintiff serving an amended complaint after answer must be deemed an "adverse party," within Code Civ. Proc. § 798, providing that, if service on an adverse party is made through the post office, the time within which such adverse party is required to do an act is double the time specified. Bucklin v. Buffalo, A. & A. R. Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 114, 115, 41 Misc. Rep. 557. "The defendant who serves his answer thereby affords occasion to the plaintiff to take such action thereupon as he may be advised, to reply, etc. At this stage the plaintiff is the 'adverse party' who has afforded to him double the time prescribed by the Code or the rules of practice in case the service had been personal. Certainly the defendant, perforce of his original answer, is not an 'adverse party' when he serves an amended answer. He may become an 'adverse party,' but only when, in sequence to some action of the plaintiff, he takes counter action. The term 'adverse' is relative to the action of the other party." Schlesinger v. Borough Bank of Brooklyn, 98 N. Y. Supp., 186, 141, 112 App. Div. 121.

Code Civ. Proc. § 783, makes the provisions of the Code relative to appeals applicable to certiorari proceedings except so far as inconsistent. By sections 460 and 462 a final order, affecting a substantial right, made in a special proceeding, may be reviewed. Section 752 declares that the party prosecuting a special proceeding may be named as the plaintiff and the adverse party the defendant. Held, that the "adverse party" in a special proceeding embraces any person whose personal or property rights may be adversely affected by the judgment or final relief sought in a certiorari proceeding, as well as the court, tribunal, or officer whose official acts are challenged, so that, where such a proceeding to review the validity of a liquor election sought as a part of the relief prayed the cancellation of licenses issued to third persons, they were "adverse parties," though not originally named as defendants in the application for the writ, or the writ itself, and, their licenses having been canceled by the court, they were "parties aggrieved" and entitled to appeal. State ex rel. Cook v. Board of Com'rs of Tripp County, 137 N. W. 354, 358, 29 S. D. 358.

An "adverse party," within Rem. & Bal. Code, § 1721, requiring the giving of a bond on appeal to the adverse party, is one whose interests will be affected by a reversal or modification of the judgment appealed from; and where the court, in a suit by individuals and a corporation to quiet title, quieted title in the corporation against defendant, without determining that the individuals had any rights in the land, a bond on defendant's appeal, making the individuals obligees, is so defective as to amount to no bond. Bruhn v. Steffins, 119 Pac. 29, 66 Wash. 144.

Where R. & C. were made defendants in an action to recover for labor and to foreclose a lien, and facts are not alleged showing an indebtedness due said R. & C., or that they claimed or were entitled to a lien, and they filed no pleading in said cause or set forth their lien in any manner, and the court made no finding in their favor, or against them, and the judgment in no way granted them any right or gave them anything or denied them any claim or right, and it affirmatively appears from the record that such parties would not be prejudicially affected by a reversal of the judgment, held that, even though they appeared by general appearance only in said action, they were not entitled to any notice of an appeal from the judgment. Nelson Bennett Co. v. Twin Falls Land & Water Co., 92 Pac. 980, 981, 13 Idaho, 767, 13 Ann. Cas. 172 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 224).

Under General Corporation Law (Laws 1892, c. 687) § 27, giving the Supreme Court jurisdiction to review elections of any corporation on notice being given to the "adverse party or to those to be affected thereby," where a suit is brought to review an election of directors of a mutual insurance organization having over 9,000 policy holders, a notice to the corporation itself and to the members of the board of directors, the legality of whose election is challenged, is sufficient without notice to the policy holders. In re Empire State Supreme Lodge of D. of H., 108 N. Y. Supp. 465, 469, 53 Misc. Rep. 344.

A codefendant was an "adverse party" who should have been served with notice of appeal from a judgment for plaintiff in an action to specifically enforce a contract to sell land, where the court found that a defendant purchased from the codefendant who had agreed to convey the land to plaintiff and decreed the codefendant to be the owner and holder of a note and mortgage given by defendants to the codefendant for part of price of the purchase, and that plaintiff pay a certain sum to codefendant, as a condition for the specific performance and satisfaction of the mortgage. Niles v. Gonzalez, 92 Pac. 74, 75, 152 Cal. 90.

Codefendants

The expression "adverse party" is held to include all parties who have an interest in opposing the object sought to be accomplished by an appeal. Under Rev. Codes, § 7100, requiring the service of notice of appeal on the adverse party or his attorney, two defendants represented by the same counsel who appeal on the same grounds from a judgment against them, and from an order refusing to set aside verdicts against each, need not serve the notice of appeal on each other. Cummings v. Reins Copper Co., 107 Pac. 905, 907, 40 Mont. 599.

Plaintiff, suing F., D., and C. on the theory that F. and D. held money in trust for themselves and for plaintiff and C., procured, on his application in which C. joined, the appointment of a receiver of the fund. F. and D. appealed from the order. Held that C., being interested in the fund, was an "adverse party" within Code Civ. Proc. § 940, providing that notice of appeal must be served on the "adverse party." Ford v. Cannon, 89 Pac. 1071, 1072, 5 Cal. App. 185.

Where judgment was rendered against several defendants, one of whom contended that its codefendants alone were liable, which contention, if sustained, would relieve it of all liability, and cast the burden of the judgment wholly on such codefendants without right of contribution, the latter were "adverse parties" within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 659, requiring notice of motion for new trial to be served on the adverse party. Ford & Sanborn Co. v. Braslan Seed Growers' Co., 103 Pac. 946, 947, 10 Cal. App. 762.

Where a joint judgment is rendered against two or more parties and an appeal is taken by one of them, all other parties against whom such judgment was rendered are "adverse parties" within Rev. Codes, § 4808, providing that an appeal is taken by certain acts, including the service of notice of appeal on the adverse party, or his attorney, and notice of appeal must be served upon each to give the Supreme Court jurisdiction. Diamond Bank v. Van Meter, 108 Pac. 1042, 1044, 18 Idaho, 243, 21 Ann. Cas. 1273.

Code, § 3133, declares that a supersedeas may be issued on an application in forma pauperis only when authorized by an order made by the judge on notice to the "adverse party" of such application. Held, that the "adverse party," as there used, meant a party adverse to the plaintiff or parties on opposite sides in the suit, and hence, where several defendants were sued, one of them was not entitled to a supersedeas on notice to the other as "the adverse party," though the latter's interest was adverse as between himself and the other defendant. Campbell v. Boulton, 62 Tenn. 354, 356.

Executor

In an action by an executor against W. to collect money, notice of motion for new trial or of appeal need not be served on another executor made a defendant merely because he would not join as plaintiff, and who was not mentioned in the judgment, which was exclusively in favor of plaintiff and against W.; he not being an "adverse party," and it not being possible for him to be adversely affected by a new trial or a reversal. Sprague v. Walton, 78 Pac. 645, 646, 145 Cal. 228.

Heir or devisee

In a hearing on claims in probate court, an heir is not an "adverse party," in the practice sense; the personal representative is such party as to the claimant. In re Koch's Estate, 134 N. W. 663, 672, 148 Wis. 548.

On application for partial distribution of the estate of a decedent, persons claiming as devisees under the will left by decedent and appearing in that capacity to contest the petition for partial distribution were "adverse parties," within a statute declaring that a draft of the bill of exceptions or a copy thereof must, within 10 days after notice of entry of judgment, be served upon the "adverse party." In re Young's Estate, 85 Pac. 145, 149 Cal. 173.

Intervener

The term "adverse party," within Rev. St. 1887, § 4229, authorizing the court, after notice to the adverse party, to relieve a party from a judgment, etc., taken against him through mistake, etc., means a party to the original action or proceeding, or one who has been brought into the case by order of the court, or who has been allowed by order of the court to intervene or become a party plaintiff or defendant in the action as originally instituted. Kerns v. Morgan, 83 Pac. 954, 957, 11 Idaho, 572.

Where, in an action for the possession of personal property, an intervener intervenes and denies the complaint, and alleges that intervener was the original purchaser of the property from plaintiff under a conditional sale, and that there has been no violation of the terms of the contract, and seeks damages, and after the evidence is in the court sustains a motion to nonsuit the intervener and then sustains a motion made by the defendant and intervener for a nonsuit against the plaintiff, held, that the intervener is an "adverse party" within the purview and meaning of section 4808, Rev. Codes, and that notice of appeal should have been served on the intervener, and that for a failure to do so the appeal must be dismissed. Berlin Mach. Works v. Bradford-Kennedy Co., 123 Pac. 637, 638, 21 Idaho, 669.

Mortgage foreclosure

Where, in an action by an assignee to foreclose mortgages, in which the mortgagor, mortgagees, and transferee of the real estate were parties defendant, the judgment against the mortgagor and mortgagees was for only such deficiency as existed after applying the proceeds of the sale of the realty, the mortgagor and mortgagees were "adverse parties" to the transferee, within Code Civ. Proc. § 659, so as to require such transferee to serve his notice of intention to move for a new trial upon them, since the result of sustaining his contention that the land should not be subject to sale, after payment of a judgment against his codefendants, would increase the deficiency judgment against them. National Bank of California at Los An- geles v. Mulford, 120 Pac. 446, 448, 17 Cal. App. 551.

After a judgment against D. and property sold on execution, D. and her husband mortgaged the property to plaintiff, who brought suit to foreclose the mortgage and have equitable relief in aid thereof, making the persons claiming under the execution sale parties. D. defaulted in the action and judgment was taken against her, and subsequently judgment was rendered for plaintiff on the merits against the other defendants. After the commencement of the action, a defendant claiming under the execution sale conveyed the property to F., who was not made a party defendant to the action. Held, that there was a complete severance of the action as between D. and such defendant, and on appeal by defendant, F. and D. were not adverse parties, within the meaning of Rev. Codes, § 7100, which requires that a notice of appeal shall be served on the adverse party, as an "adverse party," within the meaning of that statute, is one who has an interest in opposing the object sought to be accomplished by the appeal. Jenkins v. Carroll, 112 Pac. 1064, 1067, 42 Mont. 302.

Mortgagee

A mortgagee who is made a defendant to an action on a policy of fire insurance is an "adverse party" to an appeal by the insurance company, within the statute requiring notice of appeal from a judgment to be served on the "adverse party," though such mortgagee never answered or appeared in the action. Johnson v. Phenix Ins. Co., 80 Pac. 719, 721, 146 Cal. 571.

As witnesses

The word "adverse," as used in Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5991, providing that in an action where the "adverse" party sues or defends as executor, administrator, or legal representative of any deceased person, etc., the party in interest shall not be admitted to testify in his own behalf as to transactions made with decedents, etc., does not refer to parties to the action in the sense of either party or both parties. "Adverse," as here used, refers more particularly to the one party or the opposing party who may sue or defend in a representative capacity, and the use of the word "adverse" is made plain when the language is transposed, as: A party in interest or to the record shall not be admitted to testify in his own behalf as to any transaction with a deceased person, where the "adverse" party sues or defends as executor; and the statute does not disqualify an interested witness on the part of the estate; hence, in an action against a widow as administrator of her deceased husband on a note indorsed by him, the widow is competent to testify as to what took place between her husband and plaintiff in her presence at the time the indorsement was made. O'Connor v. Shatter, 89 Pac. 886, 888, 46 Wash. 308.

Where plaintiff's assignor of a contract for the sale of land sued on was made a defendant with the purchaser, and admitted the facts alleged in the complaint, he was an "adverse party" as to the purchaser, and was therefore subject to cross-examination as such, under St. 1898, § 4068, by the purchaser. O'Day v. Meyers, 133 N. W. 605, 608, 147 Wis. 549.

An actuary of a defendant bank, though an officer therein, is not an "adverse party" to plaintiff, within Rev. Laws, c. 175, § 22, conferring upon either party to a suit the right to call and cross-examine his adversary. Reed v. Mattapan Deposit & Trust Co., 84 N. E. 469, 470, 198 Mass. 308.

ADVERSE POSSESSION

See Peaceable and Adverse Possession; Title by Adverse Possession.

See, also, Actual Possession; Color of Title; Fitful Acts of Ownership; Hostile Possession; Peaceable Possession; Possession; Prescription; Substantial Inclosure.

"Adverse possession" is defined to be an actual and visible appropriation of land commenced and continued under a color of title and claim of right inconsistent with and hostile to the claim of another. Montoya v. Unknown Heirs of Vigil, 120 Pac. 676, 690, 16 N. M. 349 (quoting and applying Comp. Laws 1897, § 2938); White v. Pingenot, 90 S. W. 672, 674, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 641; Holland v. Ferris (Tex.) 107 S. W. 102, 104; Costello v. Muheim, 84 Pac. 906, 907, 9 Ariz. 422 (quoting Rev. St. 1901, § 2944); Jenkins v. Maxwell Land Grant Co., 107 Pac. 739, 741, 15 N. M. 281. Every possession is adverse which is not in subservience to the title of another; either by a direct acknowledgment or an open or tacit disavowal of right on the part of the occupant, and it is in the latter case only that the law adjudges the possession of one to the benefit of another. Davis v. Waggoner, 88 N. E. 381, 383, 84 N. E. 1105, 42 Ind. App. 115 (citing Rennert v. Shirk, 72 N. E. 546, 163 Ind. 542; Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Stickley, 58 N. E. 192, 155 Ind. 312; Webb v. Rhodes, 61 N. E. 735, 28 Ind. App. 393; Burr v. Smith, 53 N. E. 469, 152 Ind. 469).

"Adverse possession" is the occupancy of real estate by a person holding it in opposition to the rights of all others, and, to so constitute a valid adverse possession, the possession must be hostile to the rights of all others and under claim of right in its very inception, and must be continuous. Willette v. Gifford, 92 N. E. 186, 187, 46 Ind. App. 185.

Acts of ownership exercised for a sufficient length of time to create a presumption of a valid grant constitute a technical "adverse possession." Shinnecock Hills & Peconic Bay Realty Co. v. Aldrich, 116 N. Y. Supp. 532, 537, 132 App. Div. 118.

"Adverse possession" is the open and hostile possession of land under a claim of title to the exclusion of the true owner, which if continued for the statutory period ripens into an actual title. Scallon v. Manhattan Ry. Co., 78 N. E. 284, 285, 185 N. Y. 359, 7 Ann. Cas. 168.

To constitute "adverse possession," there must be an open, notorious, exclusive, and continuous possession, hostile and under claim of title. Chastang v. Chastang, 37 South. 799, 801, 802, 141 Ala. 451, 109 Am. St. Rep. 45; Hunter v. Malone, 108 S. W. 709, 713, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 116.

"The 'adverse possession' which is required to constitute a bar to the assertion of a legal title by the owner of it must include these five elements: It must be (1) hostile or adverse; (2) actual; (3) visible, notorious and exclusive; (4) continuous; and (5) under a claim or color of title." Page v. Bellamy, 78 N. E. 938, 939, 222 Ill. 556 (quoting and adopting definition in Zirngibl v. Calumet & C. Canal & Dock Co., 42 N. E. 431, 157 Ill. 430); McCaslin v. State, 75 N. E. 844, 845, 38 Ind. App. 184 (quoting and adopting definition in Worthley v. Burbanks, 45 N. E. 779, 146 Ind. 534).

In order to establish a title to land by "adverse possession," it must be shown that for a period of 10 years the claimant and those under whom he claims held a hostile possession under claim of right that was actual, exclusive, open, notorious, and continuous. McCreary v. Jackson Lumber Co., 41 South. 822, 823, 148 Ala. 247 (citing Chastang v. Chastang, 37 South. 799, 141 Ala. 451, 109 Am. St. Rep. 45; Lawrence v. Alabama State Land Co., 41 South. 612, 144 Ala. 524).

"Adverse possession," in its legal sense, arises where one has not for 20 years surrendered control of the premises. Willin v. Roe (Del.) 78 Atl. 773, 775.

To render possession "adverse," it must not only be actual, but open, continuous, notorious, and hostile, and unmistakably indicate assertion of ownership. Enderlin Inv. Co. v. Nordhagen, 123 N. W. 390, 392, 18 N. D. 517.

"Adverse possession" of land is the actual, visible, and exclusive appropriation of the land, commenced and continued under a claim of right, with the intent to assert such claim against the true owner, and accompanied by such an invasion of his rights as to give him a cause of action, and the possession must be hostile, actual, open, notorious, exclusive, continuous, and under a claim of right. Bryant v. Cadle, 104 Pac. 23, 27, 18 Wyo. 64.

To constitute "adverse possession" the possession must be by actual occupation open and notorious, not clandestine; it must be hostile to the plaintiff's title; it must be held under a claim of right exclusive of any other right as one's own; it must be continuous and uninterrupted for a period of five years prior to the commencement of the action; and since the passage of Code Civ. Proc. 1878, proviso to section 325, there must be payment of taxes. Bashore v. Mooney, 87 Pac. 553, 555, 4 Cal. App. 276 (citing Unger v. Mooney, 63 Cal. 595, 49 Am. Rep. 100, distinguishing Churchill v. Louie, 67 Pac. 1052, 135 Cal. 608).

"Adverse possession" sufficient to vest title must consist of actual, open, and notorious occupation, hostile to plaintiff's title, held under a claim of title exclusive of any other right as the holder's own property, continuous and uninterrupted for five years prior to the commencement of the action, and payment of taxes. Steckter v. Ewing, 93 Pac. 286, 288, 6 Cal. App. 761.

Possession to be of any value to vest a right, or bar a remedy, must be actual, continued, visible, notorious, hostile, and open. One having and holding land under the belief that it is vacant and public land with the intention of acquiring title from the state is not holding adversely to the true owner, and such possession will not ripen into title by "adverse possession." Jones v. Weaver (Tex.) 122 S. W. 619, 621 (quoting and adopting definition in Bracken v. Jones, 63 Tex. 184).

To constitute "adverse possession" there must be a claim of title and continuous, open, and notorious possession for the period prescribed by law. Frick v. Harper, 46 South. 453, 155 Ala. 231.

To support a title by "adverse holding," the possession must have been continuous, actual, open, and peaceable for at least 15 years. Young v. Pace, 140 S. W. 555, 145 Ky. 405.

Possession, to be "adverse," must be visible, open, exclusive, hostile in its inception, and so continue for 20 years. Horn v. Metzger, 84 N. E. 893, 895, 234 Ill. 240.

In order to constitute "adverse possession" there must be actual, visible, notorious, distinct, and hostile possession of the premises, cultivating, using, or enjoying the same for the statutory period. Hess v. Webb, 113 S. W. 618, 623. The possession must be such as will operate as unequivocal notice to the true owner that some one is in possession of his land in hostility to his title. Young v. Grieb, 104 N. W. 131, 95 Minn. 396.

"Adverse possession" consists not only in the claimant holding possession of a boundary of land for 15 years, but requires that such possession be adverse, open, and continuous to a well-defined marked boundary. Hughes v. Owens (Ky.) 92 S. W. 595, 596.

"Adversary possession" must be actual, exclusive, open, and notorious and continued for the statutory period, accompanied by bona fide claim of title against all others, and mere naked possession without claim of right, however long continued, cannot ripen into a good title, but is regarded as for the benefit of the true owner. Yellow Poplar Lumber Co. v. Thompson's Heirs, 62 S. E. 358, 362, 108 Va. 612.

"An 'adverse possession' ought to be such as to challenge the right of all the world; but when an occupant evacuates the place, and suffers it to go to wreck, he hauls down his colors, and the challenge is withdrawn." Adverse possession "is to be made out by acts which are open, visible, notorious, and continuous, and does not depend upon the secret purpose and intention of the intruder that he will return at his convenience, sooner or later, and reoccupy the land." Continuous possession for five years, and after an abandonment for several years a possession for six months, followed by occupancy of a storehouse for several years, but less than seven, did not make out that continuous "adverse possession" sufficient to create title by prescription under color. Clark v. White, 48 S. E. 357, 358, 120 Ga. 957 (quoting and adopting definitions in Stephens v. Leach, 19 Pa. 262; Denham v. Holeman, 26 Ga. 183, 71 Am. Dec. 198).

"Adverse possession" rests upon the presumed acquiescence of the party against whom it is held, and such acquiescence presumes knowledge. All that the law requires is that the possession, or rather the acts of dominion by which it is sought to be proved, shall be of such a character as may be reasonably expected to inform the true owner of the fact of possession and adverse claim of title. Lawrence v. Alabama State Land Co., 41 South. 612, 614, 144 Ala. 524 (citing Foulke v. Bond, 41 N. J. Law, 547; Farley v. Smith, 39 Ala. 44; May v. Chapman, 16 Mees. & W. 355; Wells v. Sheerer, 78 Ala. 142; Woods v. Montevallo Coal & Transp. Co., 3 South. 475, 84 Ala. 560, 5 Am. St. Rep. 393).

Exercising dominion over the thing used, taking that use and profit it is capable of yielding in its present condition, such acts being so repeated as to show that they are done in the character of owner, and not of an occasional trespasser, constitute "adverse possession." Every possession, then, is "adverse" which is not subservient to the title of another either by direct acknowledgment of some kind or an open or tacit disavowal or right on the part of the occupant, and it is in the latter case only that the law adjudges the possession of one to the benefit of another. The adverse intention of the tenant, in the absence of proof of his admissions to the contrary or other proof of his possession, was only permissive, or in fact without hostile intent, may be generally evidenced by the character of his possession and acts of ownership. If these are sufficiently definite, open, and exclusive, it will be presumed that they are done with the intent to appropriate the land. By such acts it is said the party proclaims to the public that he asserts an exclusive ownership over the land. Rennert v. Shirk, 72 N. E. 546, 548, 163 Ind. 542 (quoting and adopting definition in Dyer v. Elbridge, 36 N. E. 522, 136 Ind. 654).

"Adverse possession" is predicable only of the title to land or other thing in controversy. It is the possession and enjoyment of real property or any estate lying in grant continued for a length of time and held adversely and in denial and opposition to the title of another claimant. It is held in opposition instead of in subordination to the true title, and an actual, visible, and exclusive appropriation of land commenced and continued under a claim of right with the intent to assert such claim against the true owner and accompanied by such an invasion of the rights of the opposite party as to give him a right of action. The term relates only to the true title, and the exemptions in the statute as to those under disability can apply only to one having by virtue of his title a right of entry or of action. Berry v. W. M. Ritter Lumber Co., 54 S. E. 278, 282, 141 N. C. 386 (citing Black's Dict.; Alexander v. Polk, 39 Miss. 755; Revisal 1905, § 386).

Code Civ. Proc. § 551, provides that where there has been an actual continued occupation of premises, under a claim of title, exclusive of any other right, but none founded upon a written instrument, or a judgment or decree, the premises so actually occupied, and no others, are deemed to have been held "adversely." Van Horn v. Stuyvesant, 100 N. Y. Supp. 547, 551, 50 Misc. Rep. 432.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 3343, limits the bringing of actions for the recovery of land held by another under "peaceable and adverse possession" to 10 years. Article 4348 defines "peaceable possession" as "continuous and not interrupted by adverse suit." Article 3349 defines "adverse possession" as the visible appropriation of land held under a claim inconsistent and hostile to another's claim. Held, that where defendant claimed land by the limitation of the statute, it was error prejudicial to him to instruct the jury that to recover his possession must have been "peaceable, distinct, notorious, continued, and hostile" and that his appropriation must have been "actual, open, and peaceable under a claim inconsistent with the rights of the true owner, and must disavow the owner." Logan v. Meads, 98 S. W. 210, 212, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 477.

Where one entered into possession of land not knowing where the boundaries were, or who, if any one, owned it, never had it listed on the assessment books or paid any taxes, but simply claimed that he had more right to it than anybody else, his possession was not under a claim adverse to the true owner so as to give title by "adverse possession."

Defendants in error, being in actual possession of part of the tract by their tenant living in a house built upon the tract holding under color of title and claiming the land as their own at the time the timber was felled and the logs taken away, their possession extended to the limits or boundaries contained in their title papers which covered the space where the trees grew. This possession was an "effective possession" or "virtual possession" and was an "adverse possession" in the sense in which that term is used in the law. Lieberman, Loveman & O'Brien v. Clark, 85 S. W. 258, 264, 114 Tenn. 117, 69 L. R. A. 732.

A mortgage foreclosure action was prosecuted to judgment of foreclosure and sale, but no sale was had. Subsequently the mortgagee entered into possession of the premises, and held the same for over 25 years, continuously cultivating and improving the same as owners usually do, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the mortgagor, who made no claim adversely to such occupancy, and who did not pay any taxes during such period. Held that, under Code Civ. Proc. § 379, providing that an action to redeem from a mortgage may be maintained by the mortgagor against the mortgagee in possession unless he has maintained an "adverse" possession for 20 years, the mortgagor might sue to redeem; the word "adverse," in view of the judicial decisions rendered prior to the adoption of the section, being used in its ordinary meaning. Becker v. McCrea, 86 N. E. 463, 465, 193 N. Y. 423, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 754.

Actual occupation

"Adverse possession" consists in actual possession with intent to hold to the exclusion of others and is denoted by making the ordinary use of which the property is susceptible and taking the usual profits. Locklear v. Savage, 74 S. E. 347, 348, 159 N. C. 236.

One who purchases land adjoining his farm and clears, fences, and attaches, the greater portion of the same to his home place, and claims to have a definite and well-marked boundary, remaining in actual and adverse possession of the tract for more than 15 years, acquires "title by adverse possession." King v. See (Ky.) 87 S. W. 758. But the possession may be had through a tenant. Willin v. Roe (Del.) 78 Atl. 773, 775.

One holding open "adverse possession" of land without color of title, but by actual possession within an inclosure, for more than 30 years, is entitled to a decree quieting the title as against one claiming under an agreement whereby another agreed to enter under the laws of the United States the land for a homestead for his benefit. Hardy v. Samuels, 122 S. W. 654, 655, 92 Ark. 289.

Possession, to be "adverse" within Rev. St. 1895, art. 3349, defining it as the actual and visible appropriation of land, commenced and continued under a claim of right, inconsistent with, and hostile to, the claim of another, must be actual, continued, visible, notorious, distinct, and hostile, and mere occasional grazing is not sufficient, but continued cultivation is sufficient, as well as any visible and notorious acts evidencing an intention to claim ownership and possession, and an inclosure is only an act indicative of possession and claim of ownership. Stevens v. Pedregon, 140 S. W. 236, 239.

No particular acts are necessary in order that "adverse possession" may be actual; any visible or notorious acts clearly showing an intention to claim by adverse possession being sufficient. McComb v. Saxe, 122 S. W. 987, 92 Ark. 321.

Under the rule that "adverse possession" to ripen into title must be open, continuous, notorious, and to a well-defined boundary, the occupation of land by tenants for a few years who worked on adjoining land, the occasional cutting of small timber for mine props, and the taking of tan bark therefrom, together with the payment of the taxes, was insufficient to establish title by "adverse possession." Mahoning Coal Co. v. Dowling (Ky.) 124 S. W. 370, 372.

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 3349, defining "adverse possession" as an actual and visible appropriation of the land commenced and continued under a claim of right, one claiming adverse possession under a junior title overlapping an older survey must show an actual and visible appropriation of at least some part of the junior survey. Lake v. Earnest, 116 S. W. 865, 868, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 555.

Where defendant and his grantor occupied up to a division fence, and improved the ground to such line exclusively for 40 years, such occupancy constituted "adverse possession" sufficient to vest title up to the fence. Bayhouse v. Urquides, 105 Pac. 1066, 1068, 17 Idaho, 286.

In 1872 a grantee in a warranty deed of 400 acres in one tract entered into possession and cleared a part and claimed the whole. In 1879 he conveyed the entire tract to his son, who for more than 10 years actually claimed title to the whole and lived thereon and cultivated a part thereof. He obtained from another part his rails for his entire farm, and he also cut and sawed timber therefrom, and he paid taxes on the whole tract. His successors in title paid taxes. Held to establish title by "adverse possession." Nall v. Conover, 122 S. W. 1039, 1043, 223 Mo. 477.

Color of title

"Adverse possession," to be effective, must not only be hostile to the title of the true owner, but must be either under a claim of right or under some color of title. Mere naked possession or occupancy, no matter how long, without a claim of right or color of title, cannot ripen into a good title, but must be regarded as being an occupancy for the use and benefit of the true owner. To constitute the basis of adverse possession the entry must be accompanied by a claim of right. Wade v. Crouch, 78 Pac. 91, 92, 14 Okl. 593.

Color of title is not necessary to give title by "adverse possession," but it is necessary to extend the title acquired beyond the limits of the actual possession. Actual possession of part of a tract, with color of title for the whole tract, carries the possession to the limits of the land described in the deed giving color. Bradbury v. Dumond, 96 S. W. 390, 391, 80 Ark. 82, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 772.

To constitute an "adverse possession," there must be a holding under claim of title and with an unconditional intent to hold the land against all the world. Stout v. Michell, 114 Pac. 929, 930, 58 Or. 372.

To constitute the "adverse possession" described in Code Civ. Proc. § 47, providing that when it shall appear that an occupant entered into possession under claim of title, founding such claim on a written instrument as being a conveyance, and there has been a continuous occupation, the premises shall be deemed to have been held adversely, the essential requirement seems to be that the party shall enter under a claim of title exclusive of any other right, founding such claim upon a written instrument. A tax deed under which possession is taken is sufficient color of title, though invalid. Murphy v. Dafoe, 99 N. W. 86, 88, 18 S. D. 42.

Code Civ. Proc. §§ 369, 370, provide that possession shall be deemed "adverse" where one claiming title, exclusive of any other right, founded on a written instrument or a judgment, enters possession of land, protects it with a substantial inclosure, and occupies it continuously for 20 years under the same claim. Held, that where inclosed land was deeded to one in 1866, the conveyance being duly recorded, and the grantee entered into possession under an exclusive claim of title founded on such deed, and improved the premises and held possession until 1888, when he died intestate, the land descending to his only son and heir at law, who went into possession under such conveyance, and no claim of ownership had been made adversely since 1866, there was "adverse possession" within the meaning of the Code. Freedman v. Openhiem, 79 N. E. 841, 843, 187 N. Y. 101, 116 Am. St. Rep. 595.

Where a remainderman in expectancy took a deed in January, 1902, from the life tenant and at a time when it could not be known or foreseen whether the life estate would mature into a fee-simple title or the remaindermen would ever acquire any title or interest in the estate, and the deed thus executed purported to convey an absolute and fee-simple title to the estate, and the purchaser took such conveyance, believing she was acquiring an absolute estate, and entered into the possession of the property thereunder and continued in the open, exclusive, and notorious possession thereof, occupying and cultivating the same continuously until the commencement of an action by the other remaindermen in expectancy in November, 1908, paying all taxes and assessments thereon, and making improvements, held, that such facts constitute color of title and "adverse possession" within the meaning of sections 4038, 4039, and 4040, Rev. Codes, and bar any right of recovery on the part of the other remaindermen in expectancy. Wilson v. Linder, 123 Pac. 487, 490, 491, 21 Idaho, 576, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 242.

Continuance

Whether continuity of possession of land has been broken by an interval of time between the going out and the coming in of tenants depends largely upon the location of the land and the particular surrounding circumstances. "The law has not attempted to define what breaks in possession will constitute breaks in the continuity of possession so as to defeat title by limitation. It has held, however, that an interval of one month in the possession would not be a break." Dunn v. Taylor (Tex.) 107 S. W. 952, 956.

It is an indispensable element of "adverse possession" that it must be continuous, and evidence that a decedent at one time was in possession of land and claimed it is not sufficient to give title as against the owner of the legal title, where it is not shown that deceased exercised any act of ownership over the land for a number of years before his death. Henry v. Brown, 39 South. 325, 326, 143 Ala. 446; Farley v. Smith, 39 Ala. 38.

To give a party the ownership of land by reason of his "adverse possession," the possession must have been not only adverse and actual, but must have been continuous, open, and notorious. A title asserted by virtue of "adverse possession" cannot be maintained unless there has been a continuity of possession. There is not such continuity as will give title by adverse possession where persons live on and cultivate, and at different times and for short periods only, small portions of the land. Overton v. Overton, 96 S. W. 469, 474, 123 Ky. 311.

The "adverse possession" under color of title, necessary to confer title under Gen. St. 1906, § 1721, must be actual, continuous, and adverse for the full statutory period and be established by clear and positive proof. Dallam v. Sanchez, 47 South. 871, 874, 56 Fla. 779. Claimant must maintain continuous domain over the land according to the purpose for which it is being used, and according to the custom of the country. Dunn v. Taylor (Tex.) 107 S. W. 952, 955 (citing Thompson v. Burhans, 79 N. Y. 98).

In order to acquire title as against an elder grant, the "adverse possession" must not only be actual, but so continued for the statutory period as to furnish a cause of action every day during that period. Courtney v. Ashcraft (Ky.) 105 S. W. 106, 107.

A lime kiln was erected on land and used for the burning of lime for some years. About the same time that the kiln was constructed, houses were built for the lime burners. The houses were destroyed by fire four or five years later and were not rebuilt. The lime kiln remained in good condition, but it had not been used continuously for seven years. Held not to show "adverse possession" for seven years, within Shannon's Code, § 4456, vesting title in one who has had seven years' adverse possession, holding under an assurance of title. Southern Iron & Coal Co. v. Schwoon, 135 S. W. 785, 794, 795, 124 Tenn. 176.

An instruction on "adverse possession," requiring plaintiff's possession and his claim of ownership to have been "open, notorious, visible, adverse, and under claim of right" for 20 years, was not erroneous for failure to require the possession to have been continuous, since the phrase quoted excluded the idea of an interrupted or intermittent possession. Fatic v. Myer, 72 N. E. 142, 143, 163 Ind. 401.

Disselsin

The defense that a person's title to land has been lost by "adverse possession" is established by proof that he has been disselsed and continuously kept out of possession for the legal term, by another, occupying the land continuously, openly, and adversely, under a claim of title. Murphy v. Commonwealth, 73 N. E. 524, 530, 187 Mass. 361.

A possession to be "adverse" must operate to disselsed or oust some other person of his possession or right of possession. Le-croix v. Malone, 47 South. 725, 728, 157 Ala. 434.

To hold land "adversely," there must be a disselsin of the owner at some particular time, and the possession must be open and notorious under color of title or claim of right. Johnson v. Ingram, 115 Pac. 1073, 1074, 63 Wash. 554.

Exclusiveness

To make possession "adverse," it must be such as to unmistakably indicate an assertion of claim of exclusive ownership in the occupant. Bender v. Brooks, 127 S. W. 168, 170, 103 Tex. 329, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 559; Scallon v. Manhattan R. Co., 78 N. E. 284, 285, 185 N. Y. 859, 7 Ann. Cas. 168; Chastang v. Chastang, 87 South. 799, 801-803, 141 Ala. 451, 109 Am. St. Rep. 45; Page v. Bellamy, 78 N. E. 938, 939, 222 Ill. 556; Horn v. Metzger, 84 N. E. 893, 895, 234 Ill. 240; Bryant v. Cadle, 104 Pac. 23, 27, 18 Wyo. 64.

Good faith is no element of "adverse possession." Dawson v. Falls City Boat Club, 99 N. W. 17, 18, 136 Mich. 259, 112 Am. St. Rep. 863.

Hostile character

The elements of title by limitation are uninterrupted possession, actual, visible, notorious, adverse, and hostile under color and claim of right for the statutory period; the words "adverse" and "hostile" meaning practically the same thing. Long v. Lackawanna Coal & Iron Co., 136 S. W. 673, 680, 233 Mo. 713.

"Adverse possession" is a possession held by one not the owner adversely to the actual owner." Ramos Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Labarre, 40 South. 898, 903, 116 La. 559.

"Claim of ownership, openly asserted as hostile to the true owner, is an indispensable ingredient of 'adverse possession.'" Henry v. Brown, 39 South. 325, 329, 143 Ala. 446 (citing 1 Brick. Dig. p. 49; Potts v. Coleman, 67 Ala. 221).

Possession to be "adverse" must not only be under claim of right but hostile to and inconsistent with the possession or right of possession of the true owner. Possession under a tax sale certificate is, during the period of redemption, an admission that the possession is subject to the owner's right of redemption, and is not adverse to the true owner. Salt Lake Investment Co. v. Fox, 90 Pac. 564, 32 Utah, 301, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 627, 125 Am. St. Rep. 865. Possession by a widow of land as her homestead during her life is not hostile to that of the heir. Watson v. Hardin, 132 S. W. 1002, 1003, 97 Ark. 33.

"Adverse possession" must be hostile and under a claim of right. An adverse and hostile possession is one held for the possessor, as distinguished from one held in subordination to the rights of another, and is a possession inconsistent with the possession or right of possession of another. As applied to real estate, it is an actual, visible, and exclusive appropriation commenced and continued under a claim of right with the intent to assert such claim against the true owner and accompanied by such an invasion of the rights of the opposite party as to give him a cause of action. "Adverse user" means such a use of property as the owner would make, asking permission of no one, and disregarding all other claims to it so far as they conflict with the use. There must be an ouster of the real owner, followed by an actual, notorious, and continuous possession by the adverse claimant with an intention on his part to claim in hostility to the title of the real owner. There must be an intention to claim title as owner and in defiance of the rights of the true owner. The term "adverse possession" implies that it commenced in wrong by ouster or disseisin, and is maintained against right, since the law presumes that every possession is rightful and consistent with the title and ownership of the land. A party who relies on "adverse possession" must prove his possession to be adverse, and that its character was known to the true owner, or was of such a nature as to charge the owner with knowledge of its true character. (See Hunnewell v. Burchett, 54 S. W. 487, 152 Mo. loc. cit. 613.) Swope v. Ward, 84 S. W. 895, 896, 897, 185 Mo. 316; Lewis v. Pope, 68 S. E. 680, 682, 86 S. C. 285.

Every possession is "adverse" which is not in subservience to the title of another, either by a direct acknowledgment or an open or tacit disavowal of right on the part of the occupant, and it is in the latter case only that the law adjudges the possession of one to the benefit of another. Davis v. Waggoner, 83 N. E. 881, 388, 42 Ind. App. 115 (citing Rennert v. Shirk, 72 N. E. 546, 163 Ind. 542; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Stickley, 58 N. E. 192, 155 Ind. 312; Webb v. Rhodes, 61 N. E. 735, 28 Ind. App. 393; Burr v. Smith, 53 N. E. 469, 152 Ind. 469).

To constitute "adverse possession" by a tenant in common, "acts of an unequivocal character and of such inherent nature as to impart information and give notice to his cotenants of actual disseisin are required. * * * A possession which was in its inception friendly, as under a lease, or for some definite term, or subordinate to the true title, or originating in a fiduciary relation, may not be turned into an 'adverse possession' by a mere change in mental attitude or caprice." Coberly v. Coberly, 87 S. W. 957, 961, 189 Mo. 1.

"Adverse possession" is an aggressive act, and the stamp of its character must always be preserved by acts on the premises. The character of the possession is not determined by what the occupant intends, but what he shows by his acts. As is sometimes stated, he must "keep his flag flying and present a hostile front to adverse pretensions." When the adverse occupant leaves the premises personally, he must leave it under circumstances indicating that he has not left the possession. There must be something in the condition and appearance of the premises themselves showing to the world that there is still a person in possession. Hoyle v. Mann, 41 South. 835, 837, 144 Ala. 516 (citing Susquehanna & W. Val. R. & Coal Co. v. Quick, 68 Pa. 189, 199; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Philyaw, 6 South. 837, 88 Ala. 264, 268; Perry v. Lawson, 20 South. 611, 112 Ala. 489, 494).

While a tenant in common may hold adversely against his cotenant, to make his possession "adverse possession," it must be open, notorious, and hostile to cotenant, and known by him to be so. Kidd v. Bell (Ky.) 122 S. W. 232, 235.

"The possession of one cotenant is not adverse to other cotenants, unless the possessor gives notice to the other cotenants of his adverse claim, or does some act which clearly indicates his adverse claim of which the others have notice, or of which they should take notice." Keith v. Keith, 87 S. W. 384, 385, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 363.

"The claim of title of a tenant in common in possession which is necessary to put in operation the statute of limitations against cotenants out of possession must be actual, exclusive, and wholly within the claimant's own right. The possession must also be exclusive and adverse to all tenants in common, and in this state this condition must continue for a period of 15 years before the statute of limitations becomes a bar to an action of ejectment by a cotenant out of possession." Schoonover v. Tyner, 84 Pac. 124, 125, 72 Kan. 475. There must be an actual ouster, and notice or knowledge of the hostile intention in pursuance of which the exclusive possession has been held. Beers v. Sharpe, 75 Pac. 717, 719, 44 Or. 886.

Where, in an action for a division of land, plaintiff claimed a half interest, but his share had been sold by his agent 35 years before to the owner of the remaining interest, who with his grantees have been in actual continuous possession ever since, and within four years after the sale plaintiff, when asked to clear the title, said he had received his pay and had no interest in the land, the possession was afterward openly and notoriously "adverse" as to him, even as an alleged joint tenant. Godsey v. Standifer (Ky.) 101 S. W. 921, 923.

The possession of the vendee under an executory contract for the purchase of land is not "adverse" to the vendor so long as the purchase money is not paid, or at least not before the vendee is entitled to demand a deed. Johnson v. Peterson, 97 N. W. 384, 385, 90 Minn. 503 (citing Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Miller, 21 S. W. 915, 115 Mo. 158).

In ejectment, a charge to find for plaintiff unless defendant had been in "uninterrupted, continuous, adverse, and hostile possession," etc., was not erroneous in using the word "hostile" in addition to "adverse," as the two words mean the same in law. Weller v. Wagner, 79 S. W. 941, 943, 181 Mo. 151.

The use of the word "adverse," in an instruction that plaintiff or his vendors must have held land in controversy in actual adverse possession, to a well-defined boundary line, continuously, for 15 years prior to an alleged trespass, requires a finding that the land was held in hostile opposition by plaintiffs to the claim of defendants and all others. Vincent v. Willis (Ky.) 82 S. W. 583, 584.

In the absence of an express grant of a right of way, it is necessary for claimants of a right of way to prove an adverse, exclusive, and uninterrupted enjoyment for twenty years. By "adverse" in this connection is meant a user without license or permission, for an adverse right of an easement cannot grow out of a mere permissive enjoyment; the real point of distinction being between a permissive or tolerated use, and one which is claimed as matter of right. Dummer v. United States Gypsum Co., 117 N. W. 317, 823, 158 Mich. 622.

See Hostile Possession.

Intent

Intention to claim title is an essential element of "adverse possession." Bryant v. Cadle, 104 Pac. 23, 27, 18 Wyo. 64.

Occupancy of land necessary to constitute title by "adverse possession" must be so open and exclusive as to leave no inquiry as to occupant's intention, so notorious that the owner may be presumed to have knowledge that the occupancy is adverse, and so continuous as to have furnished a cause of action every day during the required period. McNear v. Guistin, 92 Pac. 1075, 1076, 50 Or. 377 (citing 1 Cyc. p. 984).

To establish "adverse possession" as against the holder of the legal title there must be actual occupancy, clear, definite, positive, and notorious. It must be continued, adverse, and exclusive during the whole statutory period, and with an intention to claim title to the land occupied. One may claim land adversely, though he knows his title to be defective; but his possession must be under claim of right or title. Complainant did not hold land adversely to the true owner where he knew, when he entered it, that he did not have any title, and believed it belonged to the United States, though he cut timber at various places and times on the land, and though there is evidence that he cultivated a field; the description and length of occupancy thereof being indefinite. McDaniel v. Sloss Iron & Steel Co., 44 South. 705, 152 Ala. 414, 126 Am. St. Rep. 48.

Possession, to be "adverse," must be held under claim of right, and there can be no adverse possession without an intention to claim title; and one occupying land up to a certain fence because he believes that to be the line of his land, but without intention to claim up to it if it should be beyond the line, has no intention to claim title coincident with his possession, and the possession to the fence is therefore not adverse; but where coterminous owners agree upon a line as the dividing line and occupy up to it, or where one of them builds a fence as the dividing line and occupies and claims to it with knowledge of such claim by the other, the claim is hostile and the possession adverse. McLester Bldg. Co. v. Upchurch (Ala.) 60 South. 173, 174.

Openness and notoriety

Open and notorious possession is an essential element of adverse possession. Scalton v. Manhattan R. Co., 78 N. E. 284, 285, 185 N. Y. 359, 7 Ann. Cas. 168; Ohastang v. Chastang, 37 South. 799, 801-803, 141 Ala. 451, 109 Am. St. Rep. 45; Hunter v. Malone, 108 S. W. 709, 713, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 116; Page v. Bellamy, 78 N. E. 938, 939, 222 Ill. 556; McCasin v. State, 75 N. E. 844, 845, 38 Ind. App. 184; McCreary v. Jackson Lumber Co., 41 South. 822, 148 Ala. 247; Bryant v. Cadle, 104 Pac. 23, 27, 18 Wyo. 64; Bashore v. Mooney, 87 Pac. 553, 4 Cal. App. 276; Stecker v. Ewing, 98 Pac. 286, 288, 6 Cal. App. 761; Frick v. Harper, 46 South. 453, 155 Ala. 281; Young v. Pace, 140 S. W. 555, 145 Ky. 406; Stevens v. Pedregon (Tex.) 140 S. W. 236, 239; Horn v. Metzger, 84 N. E. 893, 895, 234 Ill. 240; Yellow Poplar Lumber Co. v. Thompson's Heirs, 62 S. E. 358, 362, 108 Va. 612; Clark v. White, 48 S. E. 357, 358, 120 Ga. 957; Enderlin Inv. Co. v. Nordhagen, 123 N. W. 390, 392, 18 N. D. 517.

The term "adverse user," or "adverse possession," implies a user or possession that is not only under a claim of right, but that is open and of such character that the true owner may have notice of the claim. Snowden v. Bell, 75 S. E. 721, 722, 159 N. C. 497.

To constitute "adverse possession," such open and notorious acts of physical possession, continued for 15 years, as would put the real owner, upon notice of a hostile claim to his land to a defined boundary, must be shown. Whitley County Land Co. v. Powers' Heirs, 144 S. W. 2, 7, 146 Ky. 801.

No particular act or series of acts is necessary that possession may be notorious, but any visible act clearly demonstrating an intention to claim ownership and possession is sufficient to establish claim of "adverse possession," and such claim may be made out by visible acts, without any assertions by word of mouth. Gurnsey v. Antelope Creek & Red Bluff Water Co., 92 Pac. 326, 328, 6 Cal. App. 387.

To constitute an effective "adverse possession" there must be a hostile, actual, open and notorious, exclusive and continuous occupancy for the statutory period. Notoriety is important only where the adverse character of the possession is to be brought home to the owner by a presumption, and possession which is actually known to the true owner is equivalent to a possession which is open and notorious and adverse. One who after receiving a deed to wild lands, not susceptible of occupancy, improvement, or cultivation, paid the taxes for a long term of years, during which the former owner neither paid taxes nor asserted any claim to the land, and used the timber from the land in the same way and to the same extent that he used timber from other lands belonging to him with the knowledge of the former owner, and placed mortgages of record on the land, and offered the same for sale to the public, possessed the land "adversely," to the former owner. McCaughn v. Young, 37 South. 839, 842, 85 Miss. 277 (citing 1 Cyc. p. 999, par. C).

To constitute an "adverse possession," there need not be a fence, building, or other improvement made; it sufficing, for this purpose, that visible and notorious acts of ownership be exercised for the statutory period, after an entry under claim and color of title. Baker v. De Armijo (N. M.) 128 Pac. 73, 75.

The word "possession," in Ky. St. 1903, c. 210, declaring that conveyances of lands of which any other person has adverse possession shall be void, means an adverse actual possession, so open and notorious as to give notice to the ousted claimant that another is occupying the premises and such possession as, if maintained long enough, will, under the limitation statute, confer title on the possessor. Interstate Inv. Co. v. Bailey (Ky.) 93 S. W. 578.

Prescription distinguished

"Prescription" is the term usually applied to incorporeal hereditaments; "adverse possession" to lands. Hindley v. Metropolitan Elevated R. Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 561, 564, 42 Misc. Rep. 56.

"Adverse possession" and "prescription" are closely related. The one is regulated by statute and the other by common law, which has adopted 20 years as the prescriptive period from analogy to the statute of limitations. "Adverse possession" is the open and hostile possession of land under claim of title to the exclusion of the true owner which if continued for 20 years ripens into an actual title. "Prescription" rests upon the presumption of a grant of incorporeal rights that has become lost and after the lapse of 20 years the presumption ripens into a title also. It is measured by user, and the adverse use must commence the same way, continue for the same period, and be of the same character as the adverse possession required to give title to the real estate. The close connection between the two methods of acquiring property makes it reasonable and natural to extend the analogy to the subject of disability. Muller v. Manhattan Ry. Co., 102 N. Y. Supp. 454, 456, 53 Misc. Rep. 133 (quoting Scallion v. Manhattan R. Co., 78 N. E. 284, 285, 185 N. Y. 359, 7 Ann. Cas. 169).

Trespass

A possession, to be "adverse," must be denoted by the exercise of acts of dominion over the premises in making the ordinary use and in taking the ordinary profits of which the land is susceptible, and such acts must be so repeated as to show that they are done in the character of owner, and not merely of an occasional trespasser. Currie v. Gilchrist, 61 S. E. 581, 583, 147 N. C. 648.

ADVERSE PROCESS

See Sale by Adverse Process.

ADVERSE TITLE

The grantor in a deed of trust to secure a debt thereafter sold the property to a purchaser, who assumed the debt. The purchaser subsequently gave another deed of trust to another party to secure another loan. Held, that on foreclosure of the junior lien, the purchaser on foreclosure of the senior lien having been made a defendant, his rights were a proper matter for adjudication; his title not being an "adverse title" within the rule precluding litigation of adverse claims of title in foreclosure. Hampshire v. Greeves (Tex.) 130 S. W. 665, 667.

ADVERSE USE OR USER

See Continuous Adverse Use.

"Adverse use" is a use under a claim of right known to the owner of a servient tenement to be availed of whenever desired without permission asked or objection made; a use such as the owner of an easement would make of it without permission, and disregarding the claims of the owner of the land; a use under a claim of right inconsistent with or contrary to the interest of the servient owner, and such as to be difficult to account for except on the presumption of a grant. Crosier v. Brown, 66 S. E. 326, 328, 66 W. Va. 273, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174.

"To constitute 'adverse user,' the acts relied upon in maintenance of a prescriptive right must have been an invasion of the rights of the party against whom it is set up, and of such character as to afford him grounds of action."—Hume v. Rogue River Packing Co., 92 Pac. 1065, 1071, 51 Or. 237, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 396, 131 Am. St. Rep. 732.

"Adverse use" is inconsistent with a license or permissive use. Occupation, in order to constitute an adverse user, must be based upon a claim of right. This claim may be made by acts alone quite as effectively as by the use of words either oral or written. Knight v. Cohen, 98 Pac. 396, 398, 7 Cal. App. 43 (citing Barnes v. Light, 22 N. E. 441, 116 N. Y. 34).

Continued user for more than 20 years, under claim of right, by plaintiff and his predecessors in title of lands up to boundary fences, whether or not the fences were on the true boundary line, constitutes "adverse user" within St. 1898, § 4214, defining adverse possession. Progress Blue Ribbon Farms v. Harter, 132 N. W. 895, 897, 147 Wis. 133.

The term "adverse user," or "adverse possession," implies a user or possession that is not only under a claim of right, but that is open and of such character that the true owner may have notice of the claim. Snowden v. Bell, 75 S. E. 721, 722, 159 N. C. 497.

The use of water by a subsequent appropriator does not begin to be "adverse," as against a prior appropriator, unless it results in a deprivation to such appropriator, or amounts to such an invasion of his rights as will enable him at any time during the statutory period to maintain an action against the subsequent appropriator. Featherman v. Hennessy, 113 Pac. 751, 754, 42 Mont. 535.

To constitute an "adverse user" of water of a stream it is not sufficient merely to show that one used water from the stream, but it must be shown that the water which by priority belonged to another appropriator was taken and used under claim of right or title, and that the taker or user was in the peaceable, open, continuous, and uninterrupted possession thereof under such claim for a period of seven years. When there is sufficient water in the river to supply all parties, there can be no such thing as adverse use of the water to start the statute of limitations running. Each is entitled to the use of the water, and it is only when the water becomes so scarce that all the parties cannot be supplied, and that one appropriator takes water which by priority belongs to another appropriator, that there is an adverse use. The statute commences to run from the time when such adverse use is made of the water, the adverse use being only of that water which the prior party is entitled to. When there is a sufficiency of water in the river, the prior appropriator is not entitled to the water used by the subsequent appropriator, and the subsequent appropriator can use under his appropriation without being an adverse user. Minnie Maud Reservoir & Irrigation Co. v. Grames, 81 Pac. 893, 895, 896, 29 Utah, 225 (quoting and adopting definition in Egan v. Estrada, 56 Pac. 721, 6 Ariz. 248; citing Anaheim Water Co. v. Semi-Tropic Water Co., 30 Pac. 623, 64 Cal. 185; American Co. v. Bradford, 27 Cal. 361; Alta Land & Water Co. v. Hancock, 24 Pac. 645, 85 Cal. 219, 20 Am. St. Rep. 217; Faulkner v. Rondoni, 37 Pac. 883, 104 Cal. 140; Church v. Stillwell, 54 Pac. 395, 12 Colo. App. 43; 8 Farnham, Water & Water Rights, p. 2106).

Plaintiff used a passway belonging to defendant more or less regularly for 15 years, when a gate leading to the way was not locked. Plaintiff on two occasions attempted unsuccessfully to make arrangements with defendant's directors to have the uninterrupted use of the passway, and during the periods when the gate was locked plaintiff made no attempt to open the same or use the way. Held, that plaintiff's use was not an "adverse use," but was permissive only. Prewitt v. Hustonville Cemetery Co. (Ky.) 101 S. W. 892, 893.

ADVERTISE

The word "advertise" is defined in the Century Dictionary as "the act or practice of bringing anything, as one's wants or one's business, into public notice, as by paid announcement in periodicals, or by hand bills, placards, etc., as to secure customers by advertising." The word "solicit" in Kirby's Dig. § 5133, making it unlawful for any one engaged in the sale of liquor where the same may be lawful to solicit orders by agent or otherwise for sale of intoxicating liquors in any place in the state where the same is prohibited by law, does not include advertising, although advertising is a method, in a broad sense, of soliciting the public to purchase the wares advertised, and an advertisement of liquors in a newspaper is not within the statute. Carter v. State, 98 S. W. 704, 81 Ark. 37.

ADVERTISING MATTER

Letter heads and bill heads are not "advertising matter," within a statute requiring every corporation to have printed the word "Incorporated" on advertising matter. Commonwealth v. National Biscuit Co. (Ky.) 106 S. W. 799, 800.

ADVERTISING PURPOSES

A person's picture is not used for "advertising purposes" or for "purposes of trade," within Civil Rights Law (Consol. Laws, c. 6) § 51, prohibiting the use of any person's picture or portrait without his written consent for advertising purposes, or for purposes of trade, so as to warrant an injunction against such use, unless it is used as part of an advertisement, nor is it used for the purposes of trade within the section when merely used for the dissemination of information, and not for commerce or traffic. Jeffries v. New York Evening Journal Pub. Co., 124 N. Y. Supp. 780, 781, 67 Misc. Rep. 570.

ADVICE

See By and with Advice; Independent Advice; Legal Advice and Services; Proper Independent Advice.

"Where the Constitution declares that the power to act is in the Governor or that the act may be done by the Governor 'by and with the advice of council' or 'by and with the advice and consent of the council,' we are of opinion that the responsibility rests primarily upon the Governor to determine, as the supreme executive magistrate, whether any action is called for and what act, if any, is desirable, and that the provision for advice of council is a requirement that their approval and concurrence shall accompany the affirmative act and enter into it before it becomes complete and effective. We do not think that these different phrases, used in different parts of the Constitution, namely, 'by and with the advice of council,' 'by and with the advice and consent of the council,' 'with the advice and consent of the council,' 'with advice of council,' and 'with advice of the council,' differ at all in legal effect. They all recognize the fact that the act first of all, and afterwards for all time, is to be the act of the Governor. The only connection that the council can have with it is advisory. Whether the Governor takes advice or not, his conclusion must rest finally upon his own judgment. Inasmuch as the responsibility for his determination, with or without advice, must rest upon him, both in the beginning and forever after, the natural course of proceeding would seem to be that he would seek such aid as he might desire from any proper source and not be obliged to ask advice, in the first instance, from an official body whose opinion could never relieve him from the duty of deciding." ADVICE

Ky. St. § 3509, provides that a city council, prior to the election of a city attorney, shall fix his compensation, and that it shall be his duty to attend the meetings of the council, advise it in all matters of litigation or legal proceedings, and perform other duties required. Prior to plaintiff's election as city attorney, an ordinance was passed fixing salary, and defining his duties, which required him to give legal advice to the mayor and other officers, and boards of the city and also the board of education, and to "advise" the various boards, etc. Thereafter the council adopted a further ordinance providing that the services of the attorney should include all legal and other business of the city within his jurisdiction. Held, that the word "advise" was used in its broad sense, meaning that he should be the legal adviser of the various boards of the city in litigation and legal proceedings, and that he was not therefore entitled to extra compensation for caring for litigation between the board of education and a schoolhouse contractor arising out of the latter's failure to perform his contract. Board of Education of City of Lud-

The word "advise," as used in a statute authorizing city councils of certain cities to appoint a city attorney whose duty it shall be to advise the board as to all legal matters, etc., means that such city attorney shall be the legal adviser of the council in all matters of litigation and legal proceedings; and in defining the duties which are required of him in his department the council may properly include attention to litigation as to which it is his duty to advise it. City of Ludlow v. Ritchie (Ky.) 78 S. W. 199, 200.

In an instruction that all persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether they directly committed the act constituting the offense, or aided or abetted in its commission, or even if not present at its commission, have advised or encouraged its commission, are principals in the crime so committed, the word "advise" means "to give counsel; to offer an opinion to as worthy or expedient to be followed; to recommend as wise and prudent; or to suggest as the proper course of action." And the term "encourage" means "to give courage to; to excite to action or perseverance." While the terms are not synonymous in a technical sense, they are in popular usage, and one who suggests to another that the commission of a crime is wise or that it is a proper course of action, and the advice so given is followed, may be said in a popular sense to have encouraged the commission of the offense. To incite one to action involves the idea of giving advice to the same end. By avoiding a strictly technical construction and giving the terms employed a more liberal and popular meaning, which is the correct canon of construction to be applied in such cases, there is no difference in principle between giving advice and giving encouragement, and criminal responsibility should be regarded as attaching to the giver in each case. State v. Allen, 87 Pac. 177, 182, 34 Mont. 493.

ADVOCATE IN THE CAUSE

In a criminal case, the presiding judge has been consulted as an "advocate in the cause," in the sense of Act No. 40 of 1880, relative to the recusation of district judges when he has been previously employed on the same matter in civil proceedings. In an action for obstructing access to a street from plaintiff's property, an instruction that no aesthetic or unreasonable desire of plaintiff for convenience of way should be permitted to give him a right of access beyond that essential to a fairly convenient way, was defective and inappropriate for using the word "aesthetic," which relates to the beautiful as a means of producing pleasure, and not to matters of utility, which was the only question involved. Meighan v. Birmingham Terminal Co., 51 South. 775, 778, 165 Ala. 591.

AFFECT

See Injuriouly Affected; Would Affect.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1249, prior to the amendment of April 10, 1911, provided that in condemnation proceedings the right to damages should be deemed to have accrued at the date of the summons, and the actual value at that date should be the measure of compensation. By St. 1911, p. 842, the section was amended by adding a proviso that if the issue is not tried within one year after the commencement of the action, unless the delay is caused by defendant, the compensation and damages shall be deemed to have accrued at the date of the trial, but that nothing in the section contained should be construed to affect pending litigation. Held, that the word "affect" was used in the proviso in its ordinary significance as meaning "to influence," "to produce an effect upon," "to act upon," and hence the amendment did not repeal the section as it previously existed with reference to pending litigation, so that in such a proceeding in which the trial was had within a year from the time of the filing of the complaint the damages were properly assessed as of the date of the summons. Sacramento Terminal Co. v. McDougall, 126 Pac. 503, 504, 19 Cal. App. 562.

Section 15 of the act of July 1, 1902, providing that lands allotted to members and freedmen of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations shall not be "affected" or "incumbered" by any deed, debt, or obligation, of any character, contracted prior to the time at which said land may be alienated, means that there shall be no burden on the title or charge against such allotment, and that the same shall in no event become liable for any debt or obligation contracted prior to the removal of restrictions. In re Davis' Estate, 122 Pac. 547, 551, 32 Okl. 209.

Laws 1895, c. 1006, § 2, authorized local authorities to lay out streets, avenues, and roads in a city and file a map or plan, and provided that on and after the filing of a map, the streets, avenues, and roads shown thereon shall be the only lawful streets, avenues, and roads in that section of the city, and the thoroughfares theretofore laid out dedicated or established not shown thereon, and not then actually open and in use, shall not after the filing of such map or plan cease to be or remain for any purpose a street, avenue, highway, or thoroughfare. Section 5 provided for the filing of claims because of damages by discontinuing streets within six years after the filing of the map showing such discontinuance by any "owner affected," or that such claim should be barred. Held that, as to streets and highways not actually used at the time of the filing of the map as provided and which are to be closed, an owner of adjoining land does not become an "owner affected" by the closing of the street until the closing actually takes place, and hence limitations as to his right to claim damages for the subsequent closing of the street run from the date of closing, and not from the filing of the map. As act on injuriouly

The word "affect," as applied to such parties as a reversal of a judgment would affect, mean adversely affect. Nelson Bennett Co. v. Twin Falls Land & Water Co., 92 Pac. 980, 13 Idaho, 767, 13 Ann. Cas. 172 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 224).

As change

The word "affected," as used in a finding that a grantor was affected by undue influence, signified acted upon, moved, or changed. Lyons v. Elston, 98 N. E. 93, 94, 211 Mass. 478.

AFFECTED BY THE IMPROVEMENT

Laws 1891, c. 124, § 126, provides that the appeal to the circuit court by the owner of land affected by street improvements, given by the preceding section from the report of the board of public works confirmed by the common council, shall be the only remedy of the owner or any person interested therein, affected by the improvements for the redress of any grievance he may have by reason of the making of such improvement. Held, that the words "affected by the improvement" limit the remedy to such parcels of realty as the administrative board dealing with the matter would have jurisdiction under any circumstances to affect thereby. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Douglas County, 130 N. W. 246, 248, 145 Wis. 288.

AFFECTING TITLE

An executory contract for a sale of real estate is, when duly executed and acknowledged, entitled to record as a writing "affecting the title to real estate." McBee v. O'Connell, 120 Pac. 734, 735, 16 N. M. 469.

A suit to rescind an executed contract for the sale of land and to recover the consideration paid therefor is a suit to affect title by the cancellation of the contract and conveyance within Code Civ. Proc. § 982, providing that an action "affecting title" in real property must be tried in the county in which the subject of the action is situated, though a cancellation of the deed is not demanded, since there can be no recovery without a cancellation and a reconveyance. Birmingham v. Squires, 123 N. Y. Supp. 906, 908, 139 App. Div. 129.

A proceeding to enjoin the removal of a wing of a courthouse to another part of the courthouse grounds must be brought in the county where the courthouse is located, under Hurd's Rev. Stat. 1903, c. 22, § 3, providing that suits which may affect real estate must be brought in the county where the same, or some part thereof is situated, as such a proceeding will "affect" real estate. Real estate is affected if the court, to grant the relief sought, must deal directly with the real estate. Munger v. Crowe, 76 N. E. 50, 51, 219 Ill. 12 (citing Johnson v. Gibson, 6 N. E. 205, 116 Ill. 294; Hayes v. O'Brien, 37 N. E. 73, 149 Ill. 403, 23 L. R. A. 555; Craft v. Indiana, D. & W. Ry. Co., 46 N. E. 1132, 166 Ill. 580).

AFFECTION

See Natural Affection.

"Affection" may be expressed by acts or words. When expressed by words, the force of the expression may depend less upon the words used than upon the connection in which they were used or the manner in which they were uttered. If, for instance, the remark made by a testator as to his brother were, 'He is a brother,' it might have indicated one thing, had emphasis, apparently coming from deep feeling, been laid in pronunciation upon 'is' and quite another had it been scornfully thrown upon 'brother.' Appeal of Spencer, 60 Atl. 289, 291, 77 Conn. 638.

AFFECTION (Disease)

See Local Affection.

AFFIANT

Where a claim against an administrator is verified by the affidavit of the claimant, the use of the words "to the knowledge of said claimant," instead of "to the knowledge of said affiant," the words used in the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 2604), does not render the affidavit insufficient. Dorais v. Doll, 83 Pac. 884, 885.

As "affiant" is one who has made an affidavit, a return showing that an information had been made, upon the information and belief of the "affiant," would indicate that the information had been sworn to. People ex rel. Livingston v. Wyatt, 79 N. E. 330, 332, 186 N. Y. 383, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 159, 9 Ann. Cas. 972.

AFFIDAVIT

See Appeal by Affidavit; False Affidavit; Fraudulent Affidavit; Verified by Affidavit.

An "affidavit" is a statement in writing declared to be true by the party making it and certified to have been sworn to before him by the officer who takes it. Partridge v. Mechanics' Nat. Bank of Burlington, 77 Atl. 410, 411, 77 N. J. Eq. 208; Holman v. State, 39 South. 646, 144 Ala. 95.

An "affidavit" is a statement or declaration, reduced to writing and sworn to or affirmed before some officer who has authority to administer an oath. Miller v. Caraker, 71 S. E. 9, 9 Ga. App. 255 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 240); People for use of Esper v. Burns, 125 N. W. 740, 742, 161 Mich. 169, 137 Am. St. Rep. 466; People ex rel. Livingston v. Wyatt, 79 N. E. 330, 332, 186 N. Y. 383, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 159, 9 Ann. Cas. 972. A statement sworn to before a person who gives his official title as "U. S. Comm.," he having no authority to administer oaths, is not an "affidavit" within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 367, defining an "affidavit" as a written declaration under oath, made without notice to the adverse party, and a tax deed issued thereon is void. Lanning v. Haases, 130 N. W. 1008, 89 Neb. 19.

An "affidavit for a lien" under the Mechanics' Lien Law is not a process, a pleading, a judgment, nor a conveyance, but merely a notice of a claim of a mechanic or materialman. Doyle v. Wagner, 111 N. W. 275, 276, 100 Minn. 380.

Under Code, § 4673, providing that an "affidavit" is a written declaration under oath without notice to the adverse party before any person authorized to administer oaths within or without the state, a mere jurat annexed to a justice's certificate to claims for costs in criminal cases did not constitute an affidavit of facts required to be attached to such claims by sections 4598, 4599, relating to the audit and payment from the county treasury of constable's fees in criminal cases. McGuire v. Iowa County, 111 N. W. 34, 36, 133 Iowa, 636.

Deposition distinguished

A verified deposition is an "affidavit." Chubbuck v. Beaty, 104 Pac. 558, 559, 80 Kan. 789.

The reduction of plaintiff's testimony to writing after his oral examination before the chancellor on a motion to dissolve an injunction was not an "affidavit" within Code 1907, § 4535, providing that affidavits may be submitted by the parties, as an oral examination should not be substituted for the affidavits required, unless they are waived by the opposing party. Nelson v. Hammonds, 55 South. 301, 302, 173 Ala. 14.

Under the act of 1901 (P. L. p. 372), authorizing proceedings supplemental to execution, and directing that the discovery shall be before a judge or a Supreme Court commissioner, and Practice Act (P. L. 1903, p. 596) § 228, authorizing a Supreme Court examiner to take any "affidavit" that may be taken before a Supreme Court commissioner, a Supreme Court examiner may take the deposition of a judgment defendant under an order directing him to make discovery in proceedings supplemental to execution, though technically an "affidavit" is taken ex parte, and though a "deposition" is technically taken on notice, so that the testimony taken under an order for discovery is technically a "deposition," but the words "deposition" and "affidavit" may be synonymous. Herschenstein v. Hahn, 71 Atl. 105, 106, 77 N. J. Law, 39.

As evidence or testimony

It was an offer of evidence where an importer appeared before the Board of General Appraisers and submitted an "affidavit" made by a person in a foreign country. H. Mendelson & Co. v. United States, 154 Fed. 33, 34, 83 O. C. A. 145.

An "affidavit" of a claimant, accompanying a claim for compensation for Indian depredations, filed in the Interior Department before the passage of the Indian Depredation act of March 3, 1891, is not evidence within the meaning of section 2 of that act, preserving as pending cases those in which evidence had been presented, since the word "evidence" must be considered as referring to the prior act of 1872, and the regulations authorized thereby, which required claims for such depredations to be accompanied by the depositions of two or more persons having personal cognizance of the facts. Nesbitt v. United States, 22 Sup. Ct. 805, 806, 186 U. S. 153, 46 L. Ed. 1100.

As indictment

See Indictment.

As an oath

A written signed statement of facts, purporting to be the statement of the signer, followed by the certificate of an officer authorized to administer oaths that it was sworn to and subscribed before him, is a lawful "affidavit"; and it is not necessary that it should be stated in the instrument, prior to the signature of affiant, that the declaration was made under oath, if in fact the oath was administered. Miller v. Caraker, 71 S. E. 9, 10, 9 Ga. App. 255.

Signature, necessity of

An "affidavit" is defined by Bouvier as a statement or declaration reduced to writing, and sworn or affirmed to before some officer who has authority to administer an oath.

The signature of the affiant is not necessary, in the absence of a rule of court or statute requiring it. In re Shannahan-Wrightson Hardware Co. (Del.) 58 Atl. 1023, 5 Pennewill, 138.

An "affidavit" attached to a chattel mortgage which is sworn to, but not signed, by affiant, is valid, within Pub. Acts 1907, No. 332, providing that a mortgage is not receivable for filing without an annexed affidavit. Rameau v. Valley, 134 N. W. 987, 988, 168 Mich. 569.

Where the court charged that the affidavit on which the warrant was issued must be signed, the word "affidavit" meant a written statement sworn to, and an objection that the signing of an affidavit was not a swearing to it cannot be sustained. State v. Williams, 56 S. E. 783, 784, 76 S. C. 135.

AFFIDAVIT OF DEFENSE

An "affidavit of defense" peculiar to the practice in Pennsylvania is not a pleading, nor is it equivalent to an answer under the Code practice, or to a plea under the practice at common law; its sole function being to prevent a summary judgment. United States v. Schofield Co., 182 Fed. 240, 244.

AFFIDAVIT OF ILLEGALITY

The proper office of an "affidavit of illegality" to an execution is not to attack the validity of the judgment, where the defendant has had his day in court, but to resist the execution on account of some injustice in the party who seeks to enforce it. Monroe v. Security Mutual Life Ins. Co., 56 S. E. 764, 127 Ga. 549.

AFFIDAVIT OF MERITS

Rem. & Bal. Code, § 208, providing that an action begun in the wrong county may be tried therein unless defendant when he answers files an affidavit of merits and demands a change of venue, must be construed with reference to sections 207 and 209, authorizing the court to change the venue on it appearing by affidavit that the county designated in the complaint is not the proper county, etc., and a change of venue must be made when any of the conditions are shown without a showing of a defense to the action; the phrase "affidavit of merits" referring to a showing of any of such conditions. State ex rel. Stewart & Holmes Drug Co. v. Superior Court for King County, 121 Pac. 460, 461, 67 Wash. 321.

AFFINITY

"An affinity is the relation existing in consequence of marriage between each of the married persons and the blood relatives of the other, and the degrees of affinity are computed in the same way as those of consanguinity or kindred. A husband is related by 'affinity' to all the blood relatives of his wife, and the wife is related by 'affinity' to all blood relatives of the husband." Bliss v. Livingston Probate Judge, 118 N. W. 317, 319, 149 Mich. 601 (citing 1 Bouv. Law Dict. 112; 2 Cyc. p. 38; 23 Cyc. p. 583; 24 Cyc. p. 274; 1 Words and Phrases, p. 245). But one spouse is not related to the affinities of the other; and hence a juror, related by affinity to plaintiff's wife, is not related to plaintiff. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Holland, 55 South. 1001, 1007, 173 Ala. 675.

Rev. St. 1899, § 3785, forbidding the impaneling of a juror of kin to either party within the fourth degree of consanguinity or affinity, disqualifies a juror who is a second cousin of the wife of one of the parties, because he is within the fourth degree of "affinity," which is the relationship by marriage between a husband and his wife's blood relations or between a wife and her husband's blood relations. Pemisot Land & Cooperage Co. v. Davis, 126 S. W. 218, 220, 147 Mo. App. 194.

An award made by an arbitrator whose nephew married a sister of one of the principals is not invalid either under the common law or the statute, because of the relationship, for Rev. St. 1895, art. 48, providing that an arbitrator shall not be related to either party by consanguinity or affinity, means relationship by "affinity" in the third degree. Bell v. Campbell (Tex.) 143 S. W. 953, 956, 957.

AFFIRM

Where a Circuit Court of Appeals affirms a decision "on the opinion below," it approves the reasoning, adopts the findings, and concurs in the conclusions of the court below; but, where the decision below is merely "affirmed," such approval and concurrence are not to be inferred, but, on the contrary, it is to be understood that for some reason the appellate court prefers not to adopt the opinion below. Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. Hoschke, 188 Fed. 326, 328, 110 C. C. A. 304; Same v. Sonora Phonograph Co., 188 Fed. 330.

As confirm

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, provides that claims shall not be proved subsequent to one year after the adjudication. "Adjudication" is defined by section 1, subsec. 2, as the date of entry of a decree that the defendant is a bankrupt, or, if such decree is appealed from, then the date when it is finally confirmed. Held, that the word "confirmed" is not synonymous with "affirmed," but includes termination of an appeal from an adjudication by dismissal, so that where an adjudication was appealed from, and the appeal dismissed, creditors were entitled to prove their claims within a year from date of such dismissal. In re Lee, 171 Fed. 266, 269.

AFFIRM WHOLLY OR PARTLY

See Reverse or Affirm Wholly or Partly.

AFFIRMANCE

If an appellee recover judgment in the Supreme Court, although for a less sum than he recovered in the county court, it is an "affirmance" of the judgment of the county court, within the meaning of the condition of the recognisance for the prosecution of such appeal. Page v. Johnson (Vt.) 1 D. Chip. 338, 339.

Where a judgment for plaintiff was affirmed by the Supreme Court on the condition that he remit a certain item of damage, to show which evidence was admitted when the pleadings did not authorize its recovery, the judgment otherwise being reversed for new trial, the Supreme Court's judgment was an "affirmance in part and a reversal in part," within Comp. St. 1910, § 5126, authorizing an apportionment of the costs in such case between the parties in such manner as the court deems equitable. Henderson v. Coleman, 115 Pac. 439, 455, 19 Wyo. 183.

To "ratify" a fraudulent contract means something more than merely standing on the contract, or affirming it; meaning an "affirmance" of the contract after full knowledge of the fraud, intention to abide by the contract notwithstanding, and a waiver of all claim for damages. Potts v. Lambie, 121 N. Y. Supp. 384, 385, 65 Misc. Rep. 334.

AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

An "affirmative defense" is a plea interposed as a basis for proving some new fact. F. V. Smith Contracting Co. v. City of New York, 128 N. Y. Supp. 351, 353, 70 Misc. Rep. 132.

AFFIRMATIVE EASEMENT

An "affirmative easement" is one which entitles the owner of the dominant estate to make active use of a servient tenement, or to do some act which in the absence of the easement would be a nuisance or a trespass, such as rights of way, etc. Bernero v. McFarland Real Estate Co., 114 S. W. 531, 534, 134 Mo. App. 290.

AFFIRMATIVE EVIDENCE

Where the testimony of a witness, who had opportunity to know of an occurrence, testified by another witness to have occurred, takes the form of recollection, and a positive denial based thereon, the testimony is "affirmative evidence." So testimony that the bell in an elevator did not ring at a particular time, contrary to the evidence that it did ring, while negative in form, is an affirmation of a fact that the bell did not ring. Anderson v. Horlick's Malted Milk Co., 119 N. W. 342, 344, 137 Wis. 509.

AFFIRMATIVE PROOF

The provisions of a benefit certificate, requiring "affirmative proof" of death as the proximate result of external, violent, and accidental means, meant such evidence of the truth of the matters asserted as tended to establish them, regardless of its character, so as to show prima facie that death occurred, and that it resulted from the cause stated. Jenkins v. Hawkeye Commercial Men's Ass'n, 124 N. W. 199, 201, 147 Iowa, 113, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1181.

AFFIRMATIVE WARRANTY

"Warranties in insurance law are of two kinds—affirmative and promissory. 'Affirmative warranties' consist of a representation in the policy of a fact. 'Promissory warranties' are those that require that something shall be done or not done after the policy takes effect." Rosenthal Clothing & Dry Goods Co. v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co., 46 S. E. 1021, 55 Va. 238.

AFFIRMATIVELY AUTHORIZED

Act Cong. March 3, 1899, c. 425, § 10; 30 Stat. 1151, regulating the obstruction of navigable waters, provides that the creation of any obstruction not "affirmatively authorized by Congress" to the navigable capacity of any waters in respect of which the United States has jurisdiction is prohibited, and then declares that the building of certain structures and the performing of certain work with reference to navigable waters are forbidden without authority of the Secretary of War. Held, that the word "affirmatively" was used to distinguish the two kinds of authority referred to, and that the section should be construed to require that the initial authorization to create an obstruction must rest on affirmative congressional authority, and not on a mere permit of the Secretary of War. Hubbard v. Fort, 188 Fed. 987, 996.

See Fixtures.

As expressly defined by statute, a thing is deemed to be "affixed" to land when it is attached to it by roots, as in the case of trees, vines, or shrubs, or imbedded in it, as in the case of walls, or permanently resting upon it, as in the case of buildings, or permanently attached to what is thus permanent, as by means of cement, plaster, nails, bolts, or screws. Western Nat. Bank v. Gerson, 117 Pac. 205, 206, 27 Okl. 280. Under a similar statute, it was held that where mining machinery, consisting of electric motors, etc., was bolted to a concrete foundation placed in the earth or to a wood foundation, and the lighting transformer was on a pole which was fixed in the ground, and an electric pump was bolted down in the mine, and all were used in working and developing the mine, such machinery and appliances, though placed on the premises by an assignee of the vendee of the mine, were fixtures as between creditors of such assignee and the vendor, holding title to the mine as security for unpaid purchase money; the contract of sale containing no provisions for removal. Conde v. Sweeney, 116 Pac. 319, 320, 16 Cal. App. 157.

See Sudden Affray.

An instruction that an "affray is a mutual combat voluntarily engaged in by two or more persons in a public place, while technically accurate, might be construed as one in which both willingly took part, and was therefore misleading. Reynolds v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 82 S. W. 978, 979. See, also, Reynolds v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 82 S. W. 233.

AFORESAID

See As Aforesaid; Day Aforesaid.

The words "aforesaid neat cattle," used as description of property in a count of an information charging the receiving of stolen goods, are insufficient for that purpose, and they are also insufficient to incorporate into that count allegations of the number, sex, age, color, and brands characterizing cattle fully described in the preceding count. State v. Fields, 78 Pac. 833, 70 Kan. 391.

In replevin for wool, which defendant had purchased for plaintiff on commission, defendant claimed a lien for commissions and advances. The jury, in answer, to an interrogatory, expressly denied that the contract was that defendant should purchase at specified prices and store, weigh, and deliver the wool to plaintiff on cars for shipment, and for his services for purchasing, storing, and delivering the same on board the cars as aforesaid should receive one cent a pound. In answer to the succeeding interrogatory, requesting the jury to state the contract of employment, it stated that defendant agreed to purchase wool during the season with plaintiff's money without reference to price, that plaintiff should furnish sacks, and for defendant's services for purchasing, storing, sacking, and delivering the wool on board the cars as aforesaid he should receive one cent a pound. Held, that the word "aforesaid" in the latter answer should not be construed necessarily as referring to the manner of delivery, or to the purchasing, sacking, or storing as described in the prior answer, and that, since no inferences could be drawn in aid of answers to interrogatories, the language of the latter answer did not constitute a finding that it was defendant's duty to deliver the wool to plaintiff on board cars for shipment before his commissions were earned. Welker v. Appleman, 90 N. E. 35, 38, 44 Ind. App. 699.

AFORETHOUGHT

See Malice Aforethought; With Malice Aforethought.

"The term 'aforethought' indicates simply what is thought of beforehand, or premeditated." Commonwealth v. Tucker, 76 N. E. 127, 140, 189 Mass. 457, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1056; State v. Foraba, 88 S. W. 746, 751, 190 Mo. 293, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 576; State v. Bond, 90 S. W. 830, 831, 191 Mo. 555; State v. Hottman, 94 S. W. 237, 239, 196 Mo. 110.

"Aforethought," as used to define murder, means a predetermination to kill, however recently formed in the mind before the killing. Freeman v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 118 S. W. 917. But Bishop says the word, so used has been taken to mean almost if not quite nothing. There is no particular time in which it is necessary that the malice should have existed. 2 New Cr. Law, § 677. State v. Heidelberg, 45 South. 256, 258, 120 La. 300.

"Aforethought" means a predetermination to do the act, however sudden or recently formed in the mind the resolution to do it has been made. Hathaway v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 82 S. W. 400, 402; Gambrell v. Commonwealth, 113 S. W. 476, 480, 180 Ky. 513.

"Aforethought," as used in the term "malice aforethought" distinguishing the higher from the lower grades of assault with intent to kill, means thought of beforehand for any length of time, however short. State v. Tetrick, 97 S. W. 564, 199 Mo. 100.

AFRICAN DESCENT

The words person of "African descent," in by-laws of a cemetery company, providing that "no person of African descent" shall be eligible to become a lot holder or member, necessarily includes the South African Boers, more remotely of Dutch descent, and many Algerians, more remotely of French descent, and such descent must in any case be proved, and cannot be presumed. Corin v. Glenwood Cemetery (N. J.) 69 Atl. 1083, 1084.

AFTER

See At or After; Before or After; From and After; On and After; Thereafter. Immediately after, see Immediately.

Charge or condition imposed

The words "after," or "subject to," when used in a will devising the residue "after," or "subject to," the payment of certain precedent legacies, imply an intention that the legacies are to be charged on the land. Moerlein v. Heyer, 97 S. W. 1040, 1042, 100 Tex. 245.

A clause "after all my lawful debts are paid and discharged," constituting part of a printed form used by a testator does not amount to an expression or declaration that the executor may withhold all payments of the legacy referred to until he has liquidated the last debt against the testator. Conklin v. Clark, 96 N. Y. Supp. 914, 915, 48 Misc. Rep. 432.

Where testator bequeathed a general legacy to a home for destitute children, and then provided that after the payment of such legacy the executor and trustee should pay to the widow a general legacy of $50,000, and invest the further sum of $82,000 and pay to her the income therefrom for her life, the words "after the payment" should be construed as referring to the order of marshaling the assets of the estate, and not to the point of time when the rights of the widow accrued, and the legacy to the widow vested in her at testator's death. In re Kings County Trust Co., 125 N. Y. Supp. 713, 715, 141 App. Div. 43.

Day excluded

The day of demand being excluded, 12 full days must pass before the time "after 12 days" can begin to run. Fenlason v. Shedd, 84 Atl. 409, 410, 109 Me. 326.

Where a time is to be computed "after" a certain date, such date, must be excluded; and where defendant in a dispossessory warrant issued under Civ. Code 1895, § 4821, is given notice on Thursday, November 7th, that after three days, not counting Sunday or holidays, the officer will evict him unless he files the statutory counteraffidavit, defendant has the 8th, 9th, and 11th of November within which to file his defense, and the officer cannot legally evict him before November 12th. Holt v. Richardson, 67 S. E. 798, 134 Ga. 287.

Interest "after date" ordinarily means interest from the date of the instrument. W. H. Howard Piano Co. v. Glover, 67 S. E. 277, 278, 7 Ga. App. 548.

Day included

Under a statute providing for the collection of delinquent taxes and directing that "the advertisement shall also recite that the back tax attorney will 'after thirty days' from date [giving date, time, terms, and place of sale] sell such property at public outcry at the courthouse door for cash to the highest and best bidder," a sale which was advertised on the 12th day of April and took place on the 12th day of May, is advertised for a sufficient length of time. Levy v. Acklen, 2 Tenn. Ch. App. 201, 219.

Enjoyment of estate devised referred to

"There is a long line of uniform authorities that the words 'on,' 'when,' 'after,' 'from and after,' and like expressions, used in a devise of a remainder following a life estate, do not afford sufficient ground in themselves for adjudging that a remainder is contingent, and not vested, and that such words, unless their meaning is enlarged by the context, are to be construed as relating merely to the time of the enjoyment of the estate, and not to the time of its vesting an interest. Where nothing appears in the context of the will which enlarges these words, they do not of themselves effect a postponement of the vesting of the remainder until the death of the life tenant." Davidson v. Jones, 98 N. Y. Supp. 265, 266, 112 App. Div. 254 (citing Connelly v. O'Brien, 60 N. E. 20, 166 N. Y. 406; Hersee v. Simpson, 48 N. E. 890, 154 N. Y. 496; Nelson v. Russell, 31 N. E. 1008, 135 N. Y. 187; Moore v. Lyons [N. Y.] 25 Wend. 119; Clark v. Peters, 124 N. Y. Supp. 961, 68 Misc. Rep. 252.

The word "after" does not always or necessarily refer to time, but to order in point of right or enjoyment; and where testator gave his entire estate to trustees, and provided that on the death of his wife and daughter, and "after" the payment of all his debts, his remaining estate, except a specified bequest, should be distributed, his intention was to dispose of all his property, and the will should not be so construed as to unduly suspend the power of alienation and create a void trust, so as to leave him intestate with respect to certain real estate. McGraw v. McGraw, 176 Fed. 312, 322, 99 O. C. A. 650 (quoting and adopting Haug v. Schumacher, 60 N. E. 245, 166 N. Y. 506, and Lamb v. Lamb, 11 Pick. [28 Mass.] 378).

A will gave all moneys "derived from my father's estate as my share of the same, after my decease," to be equally divided between my sons. Held, that the words "after my decease" did not apply merely to the time of the enjoyment of the fund, and the legatees were not entitled to moneys received by testator in his lifetime as his share of his father's estate. Demarest v. Demarest, 61 Atl. 569, 66 N. J. Eq. 433.

A will created a trust, and provided that on the death of the beneficiary the fund should pass to testator's sister and two brothers, and should be equally divided between them, and that "after" the fund for the trust was set aside the residue should go in trust for the benefit of his father and mother for life, and thereafter to his sister and brothers. It was contended that the creation of the residuary trust "after" the prior created trust indicated an intention to exclude from the residuary trust all of that which was included in the former trust, and the words "after" and "then" were relied on as indicating such intention. It was held, however, that these words were to be considered words of description rather than of exclusion and limitation, and the provision of his will creating a residuary estate was deemed to speak as of the date of his death, so that it would include all property that had been devised or bequeathed to others, including a legacy which had lapsed. Langley v. Westchester Trust Co., 73 N. E. 44, 46, 180 N. Y. 326.

The residuary clause of a will recited that all the rest and residue of the estate, "after providing for the devises, bequests and legacies" mentioned, and after so much thereof as may be necessary to defray the expense of taxes on his homestead and keeping the same in repair for the benefit of testator's wife, was devised and bequeathed to the then living children of his brothers and sisters. Held that, in view of the testator's solicitude for his wife, and the fact that part of the fund of which she was given a life income was directed to be disposed of as part of the residuum, and in view of the use of the word "after," which ordinarily denotes subordination as to time, the will created only one residuum, which was not to be distributed until after the death of the testator's wife. In re Stark's Will, 134 N. W. 389, 397, 149 Wis. 631.

As immediately after or upon

In an action by a judgment creditor to set aside the debtor's transfers of property as fraudulent, an allegation in the complaint that, "after the time" of the transfer, the judgment defendant did not have sufficient property to pay his debts, instead of "at the time" of the transfer, was sufficient, as the words "after the time" had relation to and commenced the moment the transfer was made, and in that connection meant "from the time" of the transfer. Kelley v. Bell, 172 Ind. 590, 88 N. E. 58, 60.

AFTER-ACQUIRED PROPERTY

A water company owning a plant and a franchise for supplying water to the inhabitants of a city executed a mortgage to secure an issue of bonds largely in excess of its then indebtedness, a part of which were to be retained by the trustee, and issued only when required for the extension of the plant. The mortgage covered the company's property and franchises, and all extensions and additions thereto, and all after-acquired property. The reserved bonds were issued on the sworn certificate of the officers that extensions were to be made, and a new pumping station, necessary to obtain a supply of pure water and to fulfill the company's contract obligations to the city, was built, and mains extended therefrom and connected with those of the company. Such station and mains were nominally constructed and owned by a second company controlled by the same stockholders, but the station was equipped with the engine from the old station, and they had no purpose or function except to supply water to the pipes of the original company. Held, that they constituted the extensions and additions contemplated and provided for by the mortgage, and came within its lien, as "after-acquired property," without regard to whether or not they were actually built with the proceeds of the bonds sold for the purpose. New England Waterworks Co. v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 136 Fed. 521, 526, 69 O. C. A. 297 (citing Wade v. Chicago, S. & St. L. R. Co., 18 Sup. Ct. 892, 149 U. S. 327, 37 L. Ed. 755).

AGAINST

The word "against," in a contract with a salesman whereby for his services he was to receive $125 per month and certain commissions on his sales, and "against" such amount $50 was to be paid each week, meant "towards," and the $50 was for paying the salary and commissions already earned, and without any intention that any part of it should be paid back. Lobsitz v. Leffler, Thiele & Co., 124 N. Y. Supp. 533, 534, 140 App. Div. 14.

Competency of witness

A prosecution of a husband for personal violence committed against his wife is a prosecution for a crime "against" her, within Code, § 4606, providing that neither the husband nor wife shall be a witness against the other, except in criminal prosecutions for a "crime committed one against the other." Molyneux v. Willcockson (Iowa) 137 N. W. 1016, 1017, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1213.

AGAINST HER WILL

and against her will, the words "against her will" are synonymous with the words "without her consent." Gore v. State, 46 S. E. 671, 672, 119 Ga. 418, 10 Am. St. Rep. 182; State v. Peyton, 125 S. W. 416, 417, 93 Ark. 406, 137 Am. St. Rep. 98. The phrase, as an element of rape, is not necessarily synonymous with "without her consent"; the words "against her will" being used to describe the condition of mind of the female. Beard v. State, 97 S. W. 667, 669, 79 Ark. 293, 9 Ann. Cas. 409.

Upon the trial of one under indictment for rape, the court did not err (the evidence authorizing it) in instructing the jury: "If you believe and find from the evidence submitted in this case that the defendant now on trial had knowledge of Penny Jones [the prosecutrix, and the wife of another], and that at the time she was asleep and not consenting, or having given the defendant any reason to believe she consented, and the sexual connection was against her will, the jury would be authorized to find that the act was one of rape. Carnal knowledge of a woman while she is asleep and unconscious of the act, and her body being penetrated before she awakes, would be against her will and without her consent, and would constitute the offense of rape, unless she had given the party charged with the rape some reason to believe that she consented to the act." In Gore v. State, 46 S. E. 671, 119 Ga. 418, 100 Am. St. Rep. 182, it was held that the words "against her will," in the definition of rape, are synonymous with "without her consent," and that therefore "a man who has sexual intercourse with an imbecile female, who is mentally incapable of expressing any intelligent assent or dissent, or of exercising any judgment in the matter, is guilty of rape, though no more force be used than is necessary to accomplish the carnal act, and though the woman offer no resistance." This ruling in effect authorized the instruction complained of. Brown v. State, 76 S. E. 379, 138 Ga. 814 (citing Harvey v. State, 14 S. W. 645, 53 Ark. 425, 22 Am. St. Rep. 229; Maupin v. State [Ark.] 14 S. W. 924; Malone v. Commonwealth, 15 S. W. 856, 91 Ky. 307; Payne v. State, 49 S. W. 604, 40 Tex. Cr. R. 202, 76 Am. St. Rep. 712; State v. Shroyer, 16 S. W. 286, 104 Mo. 441, 24 Am. St. Rep. 344; State v. Welch, 89 S. W. 945, 191 Mo. 179, 4 Ann. Cas. 681; see also Carter v. State, 35 Ga. 263; Commonwealth v. Burke, 105 Mass. 376, 7 Am. Rep. 531).

AGAINST LAW

The words "against law," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 657, subd. 6, specifying a verdict or decision against law as a ground for a new trial, includes no cause falling within any other subdivision of that section. People v. Amer, 90 Pac. 698, 700, 151 Cal. 808 (citing Brumagim v. Bradshaw, 39 Cal. 35).

The statutory ground for new trial, that the decision is "against law" refers to a situation furnishing a reason for re-examining an issue of fact. A decision is not "against law," when the only fault in the findings is that they do not support the legal conclusions drawn from them and the judgment based thereon. In re Keating's Estate, 122 Pac. 1079, 1081, 162 Cal. 408.

A verdict which the law does not authorize the jury to render on the evidence, because the conclusion drawn is not justified by the evidence, is a "verdict contrary to law." Tucker v. O'Brien, 117 N. Y. Supp. 1010, 1013.

A verdict is "contrary to law" within Civ. Code Prac. § 340, subsec. 6, authorizing a new trial, where the verdict is contrary to law, when it is contrary to the instructions whether they are right or wrong. Lynch v. Snead Architectural Iron Works, 116 S. W. 693, 695, 132 Ky. 241, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 852.

A failure to find on all the material issues is a "decision against law," for which a new trial may be had. "Whatever else may be meant by the expression 'decision against law,' we think there is no doubt that it includes a case where the decision is based upon findings which do not determine all of the material issues of fact raised by the pleadings." Where a judgment is entered upon findings which do not determine all the material issues raised by the pleadings with respect to which evidence was introduced, the decision is against law. Brown v. Macey, 90 Pac. 339, 340, 13 Idaho, 451 (quoting and adopting definition in Knight v. Roche, 56 Cal. 15).

A judgment based upon findings not determining all the material issues is a "decision against the law," for which a new trial may be had. Cargnani v. Cargnani, 116 Pac. 306, 307, 16 Cal. App. 96.

When upon the trial of a case the court renders its decision without making findings upon all the material issues presented by the pleadings, it is held that such decision can be reviewed upon a motion for a new trial. In such a case there has been a mistrial, and the decision having been fully tried is considered to have been a "decision against law." Dillon Implement Co. v. Cleaveland, 88 Pac. 670, 671, 32 Utah, 1 (quoting and adopting definition in Brisson v. Brisson, 27 Pac. 186, 90 Cal. 323).

The expression "decision against law," in Code Civ. Proc. § 657, providing that a new trial may be granted on certain grounds, among others, that the verdict is against the law, includes a case where the decision is based on findings which do not determine all the material issues of fact raised by the pleading. Hamilton v. Murray, 74 Pac. 75, 76, 29 Mont. 80 (citing Knight v. Roche, 56 Cal. 15).

Under Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 817, declaring that new trials in felonies shall be awarded where the verdict is "contrary to law and evidence," where accused is found guilty of an offense of inferior grade, but of the same nature to that proved, a conviction of manslaughter, while the evidence shows guilt of a higher grade of homicide, is not prejudicial to accused. High v. State, 112 S. W. 939, 940, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 333.

Agency of partner, see Partnership.
Office as a public agency, see Office.

"Agency" is the legal relation founded upon the express or implied contract of the parties, or created by law by virtue of which one party, the agent, is employed and authorized to act for the other, the principal. Harkins v. Murphy & Bolanz, 112 S. W. 136, 137, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 568; Steele v. Lawyer, 91 Pac. 958, 961, 47 Wash. 266. It is a representative relation, and in its broadest sense includes every relation in which one person acts or represents another by his authority. International Harvester Co. v. Commonwealth, 145 S. W. 393, 397, 147 Ky. 655. The relation arises when one is authorized to represent another in bringing or to aid in bringing the latter in contractual relation with a third party, however such authority may be conferred. Keyser v. Hinkle, 106 S. W. 98, 100, 127 Mo. App. 62.

"Agency" is a contract, and, like other contracts, it is essential that the minds of the parties should meet in making it. In re Oullinan, 99 N. Y. Supp. 1119, 1121, 114 App. Div. 509.

Within the purview of the embezzlement statutes, an "agency" may be created without compensation. State v. Fraley (W. Va.) 76 S. E. 134, 136, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 498.

"Agency" properly relates to transactions of business with third persons, and implies more or less of discretion in the agent as to the time and manner of his performance. "Service," on the other hand, has reference to actions upon or about things. It deals chiefly with matters of mere manual or mechanical execution, in which the servant acts under the direction and control of the master." Munn v. Wellsburg Banking & Trust Co., 66 S. E. 230, 231, 66 W. Va. 204, 135 Am. St. Rep. 1024 (quoting definition in Mechem, Agency).

Cotenants are not partners, neither does the relation of "principal and agent" exist between them, except upon an express agreement or one necessarily implied. Wright v. Kaynor, 118 N. W. 779, 782, 150 Mich. 7.

An "agency" was not established by a contract whereby a street railroad company leased to another company its railway, divesting itself of the use of the property for a term of 40 years, in consideration of a specific rent to be paid by the latter company and the performance of other duties in the nature of rent, and providing for the restoration of the property of the former at the end of the term, and for re-entry if the latter defaulted in the performance of its contract during the term; no provision being made that the latter should conduct the business in the name of or for the benefit of the former, except as in so far as the former was benefited by the consideration to be paid to the latter. Moorshead v. United Rys. Co. of St. Louis, 100 S. W. 611, 612, 208 Mo. 121.

The relation of principal and agent not existing between an insane person and his guardian, where such person is sought to be held, upon a default of the guardian's promise or undertaking, an insane person was not liable to her tenant for injuries resulting from her guardian's breach of a covenant to cover a cellarway. The court said: "There cannot be an 'agent' unless there is a 'principal.' In order to create the relation, there must exist a person who is competent to select and appoint an agent to act for the principal. An agent can and does exercise delegated powers only, and an incompetent person cannot delegate powers arising, either directly or by implication of law. The doctrine of principal and agent, therefore, cannot apply between an insane person and his guardian, at least not where the insane person is sought to be held upon a default of the supposed agent's personal promise or undertaking." Reams v. Taylor, 87 Pac. 1089, 1090, 81 Utah, 288, 120 Am. St. Rep. 930, 11 Ann. Cas. 930 (citing Andrus v. Blazard, 63 Pac. 888, 23 Utah, 233, 248, 249, 54 L. R. A. 354, distinguishing Mechem, Agency, § 48; In re Strasburger, 30 N. E. 379, 182 N. Y. 128; Stillwell v. Louisville Land Co. [Ky.] 58 S. W. 696, 50 L. R. A. 325).

"Agency" and "place of business," as used in Civ. Code 1895, § 1900, which provides that a writ may be served on a corporation by leaving a copy with the agent of the defendant, or, if there be no agent in the county, then at the "agency" or "place of business," are synonymous, and hence refer to the same place. Tuggle v. Enterprise Lumber Co., 51 S. E. 433, 434, 123 Ga. 480.

The agreement of defendants, manufacturers of boxes and box materials, in terms creating an "agency," placed in charge of a board of principals, on which each party had a single representative, giving such board authority to appoint a general agent with authority, subject to the supervision of the board, to act as the agent of each of the principals, "severally and respectively," for the sale of all manufactured products "covered by the agreement" and to collect "all proceeds of sales" passing through the agency, he to have only such powers as were "expressly conferred on him" by the agreement, or "may be conferred on him by resolution of the board, passed at a regular meeting and entered on its minutes, declaring the purpose of the agency to limit the production and fix the prices of the output of the mills of the parties," expressly providing that the board was the agent of each of the principals "severally," and that it should not have power to "represent or act for the principals jointly or any number of them jointly," or to bind any principal "jointly with any other principal" or other than separately and severally, and that it should not "create any joint obligation as to the said principals or any number of them," does not create a partnership, but only an "agency." National Lumber & Box Co. v. Grays Harbor Commercial Co., 127 Pac. 577, 579, 71 Wash. 31.

Option distinguished

A writing in express terms empowering and authorizing real estate brokers to sell land for $1,000, or as much less as the owner might take, binding the brokers to accept as remuneration any sum they might obtain in excess of the sum stipulated that the owner should receive is a contract of "agency," and not an option to the brokers to purchase the land. Tate v. Aitken, 90 Pac. 836, 839, 5 Cal. App. 505.

An option is a right acquired by contract to accept or reject a present offer within a limited or reasonable time in the future, and a contract between owners of land who agree to plat the same, and a person who agrees to attempt its sale, paying a certain sum for each acre sold, is not one conferring an option but creates an "agency" to sell. Raddle v. Lindemann, 151 Ill. App. 441, 444.

As place of business

That a traveling soliciting agent of a corporation remained in a county for a week or two at a time during the rice purchasing season for the purpose of buying rice did not establish that the corporation had an "agency" in that county, authorizing the maintenance of a suit for breach of a rice contract therein, under Rev. St. 1895, art. 1194, § 23, declaring that an action against a corporation may be brought in any county where it maintains an agency. Mangum v. Lane City Rice Milling Co. (Tex.) 95 S. W. 605, 606. The statute contemplates service on a person employed in forwarding the particular business for which the corporation was organized, and service on an attorney representing the defendant, and who was in the county at the time of service merely for the purpose of settling certain claims between the parties to the action, is insufficient. Bay City Iron Works v. Reeves & Co., 95 S. W. 739, 740, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 254.

Where a carrier contracts generally to carry goods, but provides that, if it has not an "agency" at the point of destination, it shall carry to its nearest agency, and there notify the consignee, or deliver the property to some other carrier, it is not sufficient to bring the case within the contract to prove that it had no office at the point of destination. Saunders v. Adams Express Co., 74 Atl. 670, 671, 78 N. J. Law, 441.

Within the purview of Civ. Code 1910, § 2259, authorizing actions against corporations to be begun in the county where the action arose, service to be effected by leaving a copy of the writ with the "agent" of the defendant, or if there be none in the county then at the agency or place of business, the expression "agency" is synonymous with "place of business," and means the place wherein the corporation's business is transacted. Central Georgia Power Co. v. Parnell, 76 S. E. 157, 158, 11 Ga. App. 779.

In treatment of disease

"Agency," as used in a statute forbidding the prescribing of any drug or medicine or other "agency" for the treatment of disease by an unlicensed person, means treatment by a method similar to drug and medicine, not including osteopathy, or chiropractics. State v. Liffing, 55 N. E. 168, 169, 61 Ohio St. 39, 50, 46 L. R. A. 834, 78 Am. St. Rep. 358; State v. Gallagher, 143 S. W. 98, 99, 101 Ark. 593, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 828.

Other agent, see Other.

An "agent" is one who acts for another by authority from him; one who undertakes to transact some business or manage some affairs for another by authority and on account of the latter. The term applies to any one who, by authority, performs an act for another. Peters v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 131 S. W. 917, 922, 150 Mo. App. 721 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 352); Pouppirt v. Greenwood, 110 Pac. 195, 196, 48 Colo. 405. To create the relation there must be a contract of employment, express or implied. Uniontown Grocery Co. v. Dawson, 69 S. E. 845, 846, 847, 68 W. Va. 332, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 148.

An "agent" is generally defined as a person who acts on behalf of another person who is his principal. In practical affairs the relation assumes so many phases that it is often difficult to apply the definition, but it is certainly necessary to constitute agency that there be some kind of representation of the principal by virtue of authority conferred by him. Authority to contract is sufficient to constitute agency, but it is said that the claim of agency based on any other authority short of power to contract has rarely been maintained, and certainly should be allowed with great caution. A timekeeper of a foreign corporation is held by divided court to be an agent of the corporation. Jenkins v. Penn Bridge Co., 53 S. E. 991, 992, 73 S. C. 526.

An "agent" is one employed and authorized to represent and act for another, and the distinguishing features of the agent are his representative character and his derivative authority. Taylor v. Sutherland-Meade Tobacco Co., 60 S. E. 132, 133, 107 Va. 787 (quoting and adopting the definition in Mech. Agency, § 1).

"An agent is one who represents another, called the 'principal,' in dealing with third persons (Civ. Code, § 2295), and may be authorized to do any acts which his principal might do (Id. § 2304)." Nicholls v. Mapes, 82 Pac. 265, 267, 1 Cal. App. 849.

The term "agent," as used in Gen. St. 1906, § 8311, denouncing embezzlement, contemplates one who has undertaken to transact some business or manage some affair for another, by the authority and on the account of the latter, and to render an account of it, or who is subject to the immediate direction and control of his master so that a boy employed by the agent of an express company, whose salary was paid by the agent, is not an "agent" of the company within the contemplation of the statute. Tipton v. State (Fla.) 43 South. 684, 686 (quoting and adopting the definitions in 2 Bishop, New Cr. Law, § 333; 1 Clark, Cr. Law, p. 274). The word as employed in a similar statute imports a principal and implies employment, service, delegated authority to do something in the name and stead of the principal. Echols v. State, 48 South. 347, 158 Ala. 48.

Under White's Ann. Pen. Code 1901, art. 10, providing that all words and phrases not having a technical meaning, or where not specifically defined, shall be taken in their ordinary signification, the word "agent," when used in a statute, must be construed to mean one in the employ of another for a specific purpose. Lamb v. State, 93 S. W. 734, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 442.

The word "agent," written after the name of the vendee in a written contract for the sale of real estate without further disclosure of the person for whom he was agent, would be rejected as surplusage or treated as descriptio personæ, and not a word of limitation. In re Miley, 187 Fed. 177, 179.

Stock certificates issued to "M., Agent," were presumed held by him as agent for another; the word "agent" prima facie not being descriptio personæ. Tyson v. George's Creek Coal & Iron Co., 81 Atl. 41, 44, 115 Md. 564.

A contract made by defendant as "agent" without more specific designation, is, under the direct provisions of Civ. Code 1895, § 2998, the individual undertaking of the maker. Hearn v. Gower, 57 S. E. 916, 1 Ga. App. 265.

Attorney at law

The word "agent" in Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 27, § 103, prohibiting embezzlement by an "agent," includes an attorney at law, "attorney," originally meaning "agent," or "attorney in fact," and in its restricted sense relating to the representation of others in legal actions or demands. Dick v. State, 68 Atl. 576, 107 Md. 11.

A return by the sheriff, that he delivered seisin and possession of land taken in execution to the agent, instead of the attorney, of the creditor, is sufficient. "The words 'agent' and 'attorney' are frequently used synonymously; and it ought not to be in the power of a sheriff, who uses one instead of the other, by ignorance or design, to defeat the creditor's title." Pratt v. Putnam, 13 Mass. 361, 363.

As used in Wag. St. c. 88, art. 3, § 19, requiring that notice of a claim for a mechanic's lien shall be given "to the owner, owners, or 'agents,' or either of them," should be construed to include one admitted to be "the attorney" of defendant "for the purpose of attending to the lien on the house." Agency in fact is expressed by the words of the admission and as the statute directs that the notice shall be served on the owner or agent, the matter of the agency was the matter involved, and the service of the notice of claim for a mechanic's lien on such attorney was sufficient. Schulenburg v. Werner, 6 Mo. App. 292, 298.

Bookkeeper

One employed by a corporation as bookkeeper for a definite period is not an "agent" of the corporation within Code 1906, c. 53, § 53, holding his place during the pleasure of the directors, and removable by them without cause without liability on the corporation for breach of the contract of employment. Munn v. Wellsburg Banking & Trust Co., 66 S. E. 230, 66 W. Va. 204, 135 Am. St. Rep. 1024.

While a bookkeeper may be, and often is, the "agent" of his employer, the word does not ex vi termini import that relation, and, in the absence of averment that it exists, the courts cannot by intendment enlarge the ordinary signification of the word so as to bring it within a class to which it may or may not belong. Code 1887, § 3286 (Code 1904, p. 1730), provides that when, in assumpsit, an affidavit is filed with a declaration that the amount claimed is justly due, a plea in bar shall not be received unless verified, in the absence of which judgment shall be for plaintiff. An affidavit by plaintiff's bookkeeper, filed with the declaration, is insufficient to authorize judgment in favor of plaintiff, though the statute permits the filing of the affidavit by plaintiff or his agent. Merriman Co. v. Thomas & Co., 48 S. E. 490, 492, 103 Va. 24.

Broker

An insurance broker who sends applications for insurance to a foreign company, delivers policies issued thereon and sent to him for delivery, collects and remits premiums, retaining a commission which is allowed, is an "agent," within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 4102, defining agency, so that process against the company may be served on him. McCord v. Illinois Nat. Fire Ins. Co. of Springfield, 94 N. E. 1053, 1054, 47 Ind. App. 602. But a person who brings a corporation and a county together in a single transaction resulting in a sale by the corporation to the county of road machinery, and who receives from the corporation pay therefor, is not an "agent" of the corporation within statutes authorizing service of process under an indictment on an agent of accused. Good Roads Machinery Co. v. Commonwealth, 143 S. W. 18, 19, 146 Ky. 690.

One employed on a commission to sell the capital stock of a corporation and required to report all sales, forward to his principal all moneys received, less his commission, is an "agent" within Rev. Laws 1905, § 5078, defining larceny. State v. Phillips, 117 N. W. 508, 511, 105 Minn. 375.

Carrier

The word "agent," as used in a clause, in a contract for the shipment of live stock, by which the shipper agreed to release the carrier from liability for delay after delivery to its agent referred to the connecting line to which the initial carrier contracted to deliver the shipment. Texas & N. O. Ry. Co. v. Farrington, 88 S. W. 889, 891, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 205.

Clerk or collector

Gen. St. 1902, § 1413, by which "agents," etc., are made amenable for the misappropriation of money, goods, or choses in action which are in their care and custody in such capacity, and for money received by them for the sale of such goods or choses in action or collected by them in such capacity, includes a collection agent engaged in the general collection of accounts on commission. State v. Lanyon, 76 Atl. 1095, 1097, 83 Conn. 449.

The chief clerk in the office of a station agent, doing merely the routine work of the office, is not an "agent," within Civ. Code 1895, § 2243, requiring a 30 days' notice to build cattle guards to be served upon the agent of the railroad by the owner of the lands to be affected, and section 2244, imposing a penalty for failure to erect cattle guards within such time. Smith v. Southern Ry. Co., 63 S. E. 801, 804, 132 Ga. 57.

Comptroller of the currency

The Comptroller of the Currency is an "agent," within the provision of Rev. St. § 5209 that every officer of a national bank who makes any false entry in a report to any agent appointed to examine the affairs of such association shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and it is immaterial that another statute confers power upon him to appoint suitable agents to examine the affairs of such banks. United States v. Corbett, 30 Sup. Ct. 81, 84, 85, 215 U. S. 233, 54 L. Ed. 173.

Contractor

A contractor transferring freight from one car which has become defective during transit to another car, to enable the carrier to carry the freight to its destination, is an "agent" of the carrier within Rev. St. 1909, § 5425, authorizing an action for the death of an employé caused by the negligence of any officer or agent while running or managing any car or train. Peters v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 131 S. W. 917, 922, 150 Mo. App. 721.

A person getting out logs and piling under a contract with the owner is an "agent," within the meaning of the statute providing that every person performing labor upon or assisting in obtaining or securing logs, etc., shall have a lien upon the same for the work done in obtaining or securing them, whether it was done at the instance of the owner of the same or his agent; hence the lien of persons performing work for the contractor is good as against the owner of the logs. O'Brien v. Hoppood, 95 Pac. 489, 49 Wash. 395.

One in control or management of property

An "agent within the state," which receives and distributes goods forwarded by a foreign storage and transfer company, is such an agent as may be served with process, within a statute providing that a summons in a suit against a foreign corporation doing business in the state shall be served on an agent thereof. Lee v. Fidelity Storage & Transfer Co., 98 Pac. 658, 659, 51 Wash. 208.

Corporation

One who shipped goods to a corporation on its order containing the words "purchasing agent" after the corporate name, and billed and charged the same to said corporation, by which it was customarily paid, is not entitled to join in a petition in bankruptcy against another corporation merely because its stock was owned and its business controlled by the purchasing company, which fact did not make the latter an "agent," even though by its directions the goods were shipped to the subsidiary company. In re Hudson River Electric Power Co., 173 Fed. 934, 950.

Drayman

A drayman, authorized in writing by the defendant to receive and receipt for freight at a local railway station, is an "agent" of the defendant for such purposes. State v. Dahlquist, 115 N. W. 81, 83, 17 N. D. 40.

Engineers and other railway employes

Gen. St. Kan. 1901, § 5858, providing that railroad companies shall be liable for damages to any employé of said companies in consequence of any negligence of their agents or of any mismanagement of their engineers or other employes to any person sustaining such damage, does not make a distinction between "agents" on the one hand and engineers and other employes on the other, but by the act a company is made responsible for any mismanagement of its engineers or other employes to any person sustaining damage thereby. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Kellerman, 87 S. W. 401, 404, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 274. Under a similar statute it is held that the word "agent" was not used in a strict sense, but was intended to include employes within its meaning. Giving the word "agent" that meaning, it is clear that the act, if applied literally, is broad enough to impose on a railroad company liability for the negligence of a fellow servant. Beale v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 106 N. W. 33, 34, 15 N. D. 318, 11 Ann. Cas. 921.

Guardian

A statute providing that no stay of a judgment against any agent for delinquency in his duties shall be allowed, does not apply to an action against a guardian; he not being an "agent" within the meaning of such statute. Parker v. Wilson, 137 S. W. 926, 99 Ark. 344, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 84.

Machinist

The word "agent," as used in Acts Sp. Sess. 1907, No. 3, § 10, which after providing for the appointment of an agent within the state to accept service of process on a foreign corporation authorized to do business within the state and for service on the secretary of state, declares that service of process may also be made on any officer or agent of such corporation, is not confined to one having authority, discretion, or control over some part of the corporation's business, and where an expert machinist was employed by the corporation's designated agent within the state to go into another county on the company's business, service of process on him within that county constituted service on the corporation. Arnold v. Huber Mfg. Co., 131 N. W. 537, 166 Mich. 190.

Officer of corporation

One distinction between "officers" and "agents" of a corporation lies in the manner of their creation. An officer is created by the charter of the corporation, and the officer is elected by the directors or the stockholders. An agency is usually created by the officers, or one or more of them, and the agent is appointed by the same authority. It is clear that the two terms, "officers" and "agents," are by no means interchangeable. One, deriving its existence from the other, and being dependent upon that other for its continuation, is necessarily restricted in its powers and duties, and such powers and duties are not necessarily the same as those pertaining to the authority creating it. The officers, as such, are the corporation. An agent is an employé. Vardeman v. Penn. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 54 S. E. 66, 67, 125 Ga. 117, 5 Ann. Cas. 221.

The word "agent," in St. 1898, § 2637, subd. 13, which provides for service of process on a foreign corporation by service of summons and notice of object of action, by delivering copies thereof to any agent having charge of or conducting any business, is used in contradistinction to the words "chief officer," "vice president," "secretary," "treasurer," "director," or "managing agent." Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. v. Ashauer, 126 N. W. 113, 115, 142 Wis. 646.

The president of an insurance corporation is its "agent," within Civ. Code Prac. § 71, which provides that an action against such corporation, arising out of a transaction with an agent of the corporation, may be brought in the county where the transaction took place. Ward v. Citizens' Life Ins. Co., 114 S. W. 751, 131 Ky. 129.

A local council secretary of a beneficiary society incorporated in another state was an "agent" of the corporation, within the meaning of the statute relating to the service of process on corporations, where it was his duty to forward to the supreme council approved applications for membership, to receive and countersign benefit certificates issued thereon and deliver them to the members, to collect and forward assessments, to convey communications between the local and the supreme councils and their members and officers, to keep a list of local members, notify the supreme secretary of withdrawals, etc., to make out relief fund statements, etc. Riddle v. Order of Pendo, 89 Pac. 640, 641, 49 Or. 229.

Under Ky. St. § 631, which provides that, before any foreign insurance company may do business in the state, it must file with the Commissioner of Insurance its consent to service of process upon him, and that, if process is served upon the commissioner, he shall at once send it by mail addressed to the company at its principal office, the commissioner is not the company's "agent" in the usual and ordinary sense, and service of process is not completed by a mere delivery of a copy to the commissioner, but only when he has promptly forwarded the summons to the company. Chicago Life Ins. Co. v. Robertson, 143 S. W. 740, 742, 147 Ky. 61.

A summons against an individual, followed by the word "agent," is insufficient to give a corporation for whom the individual is an agent notice that the action is against it and not against the individual. Smith Premier Typewriter Co. v. Westcott, 75 Atl. 1052, 1053, 112 Ind. 146.

The word "agent," as used in a statute providing for service of process on telegraph and telephone companies, is not intended to be understood in any unusual, limited, or restricted sense, or otherwise than was justified in its ordinary signification. Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Parker, 47 S. E. 194, 197, 119 Ga. 721.

The question whether one is an "agent" of a foreign corporation, on whom service of process may be made within Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 155, does not depend on express authority conferred on him to represent the corporation, but such authority may be inferred from the facts and from the law whereby the corporation entering into the state to do business must be deemed to assent impliedly to the authority of its agent to receive service of process, and, where the character of the agency is such as to render it fair and just to imply an authority to receive service, the law will imply such authority, and service on such agent is sufficient. H. L. & L. F. McSwain v. Adams Grain & Provision Co., 76 S. E. 117, 119, 93 S. C. 103.

Officer of state or public corporation

An officer appointed or elected by a municipal corporation, in obedience to law, to perform a public service in which the corporation has no particular interest, and from which it derives no special benefit or advantage in its corporate capacity, is not regarded as an "agent" for whose negligence or want of skill in the performance of his duties a municipal corporation is held liable, although the service is one which the corporation is bound to see performed in pursuance of a duty imposed by law for the general welfare. Under a statute giving the highway agent of a town, under direction of the selectmen, charge of the construction and repair of highways within the town, and empowering him to employ men and teams, the highway agent and selectmen are public officers of the state, and not private agents of the town, so far as their duties in connection with the construction and repair of highways are concerned. O'Brien v. Town of Derry, 60 Atl. 843, 847, 73 N. H. 198 (quoting and adopting the definition in Wakefield v. Town of Newport, 62 N. H. 624, 625).

Under Rev. Laws, c. 42, § 27, providing that the school committee of a town "shall have the general charge and superintendence of all the public schools," the school committee act, not as "agents" of the town, but as "public officers," intrusted with powers and charged with duties concerning the maintenance of the schools. Morse v. Ashley, 79 N. E. 481, 482, 198 Mass. 294.

Municipal tree wardens, for whose appointment provision is made by statute, are public officers, and not "servants" or "agents," within another statute, which authorizes recovery for negligent death caused by a person or corporation or their "agents or servants." Donahue v. City of Newburyport, 98 N. E. 1081, 1082, 211 Mass. 561, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 742.

Selling agent or salesman

The word "agent" is frequently used to indicate that a merchant or dealer has the exclusive right to sell a specified article in certain territory. The dealer does not represent the manufacturer, but simply buys from him in the regular course of trade, and sells the specified article to the public. Poirier Mfg. Co. v. Kitts, 120 N. W. 558, 559, 18 N. D. 556.

Under a statute providing that, in an action against a foreign corporation doing business in the state, the summons may be served on any "agent" thereof, one appointed by a foreign corporation as agent for the sale of its machinery under an agreement to sell the machinery for the corporation at prices and terms fixed by it, and account for the proceeds, was an "agent" on whom service might be made. Womach v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co., 114 Pac. 509, 511, 512, 62 Wash. 661.

Under Stock Corporation Law, § 29, requiring foreign corporations to keep a book showing the names of its stockholders for inspection by stockholders, and prescribing a penalty against the corporation and its agent for refusing an inspection, a mere selling agent of the corporation with no authority to keep such book is not liable to the penalty; "agent" in the statute applying to a transfer agent by whom the book could be kept. Hovey v. Elswald, 124 N. Y. Supp. 130, 131, 139 App. Div. 433.

One employed by a refining company to sell and distribute oil to customers, being paid by a commission on the amount of sales, is an "agent" or servant of the company, which is liable for acts of negligence in the conduct of the business on the part of the agent or others employed by him. Riggs v. Standard Oil Co., 130 Fed. 199, 201.

A mere traveling salesman for a corporation, sent into another state on a special matter with specific instructions, but having general authority to solicit orders for goods, to be submitted to the company for approval, is not an "agent" of the foreign corporation on whom service of process against it may be made. William Grace Co. v. Henry Martin Brick Mach. Mfg. Co., 174 Fed. 131, 132, 98 O. C. A. 167; W. T. Adams Mach. Co. v. Castleberry, 106 S. W. 940, 84 Ark. 578.

The word "agent," as used in the statute of Missouri providing that foreign corporations doing business in the state shall file their articles of incorporation, establish an office or agency, and subject themselves in prescribed respects to the laws of the state, but exempting corporations entirely nonresident, soliciting business through drummers or traveling salesmen, and further providing that service shall be authorized to be made, in an action against a corporation having no office or agency, by serving an agent of the company, wherever found, does not include one merely soliciting orders for goods which are sent to the nonresident principal, a corporation, to be filled, the solicitor receiving a commission on such orders, and having no other relation to the corporation, and having no relation to the matter out of which an action against the corporation arose. Strain v. Chicago Portrait Co., 126 Fed. 831, 832.

Servant distinguished

Civ. Code, § 2295, defines an "agent" as one who represents another in dealings with third persons. Section 2009 defines a servant as one employed to render personal services to his employer and who remains entirely under the control and direction of the latter. Held that, where defendant agreed to devote his entire time and attention to the interests and business of plaintiff, a real estate broker, defendant's compensation to be a specified percentage of commissions, the relation between the parties was that of master and servant and not that of principal and agent. Sumner v. Nevin, 87 Pac. 1105, 4 Cal. App. 847.

Rev. St. 1899, § 2586, provides that eight hours shall constitute a day's labor for all "coal miners and laborers," etc. Section 2587 declares that the word "day" in all contracts between any owner, lessee, or operator of any mine with any such miner or laborer, shall mean eight hours, and section 2589 declares that any owner, lessee, or operator, his or its agent, employés, or servants, violating any of the provisions of the chapter, shall be fined, etc. Held, that the words "employés" or "servants," used in section 2589, should be construed to mean employés or servants of the mine owner occupying positions of "agents," and not to include miners and laborers, so that a miner was not subject to punishment under the penal provision for working more than eight hours a day.—State v. Thompson, 87 Pac. 433, 434, 15 Wyo. 136 (citing Lewis' Sutherland, Stat. Con. [2d Ed.] § 521).

One employed by a refining company to sell and distribute oil to customers, being paid by a commission on the amount of sales, is an "agent" or servant of the company, which is liable for acts of negligence in the conduct of the business on the part of the agent or others employed by him. Riggs v. Standard Oil Co., 130 Fed. 199, 201.

Solicitor

A mere soliciting agent, employed by a foreign corporation which is not "doing business" in the state, is not an "agent" of the corporation, within Laws 1894, c. 61, relating to service of process on agents; the term "agent" meaning only an agent vested with some general authority and discretion. Saxony Mills v. Wagner & Co., 47 South. 899, 901, 94 Miss. 283, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.)

834, 136 Am. St. Rep. 575, 19 Ann. Cas. 199. But a resident who makes contracts for the transportation of freight over the lines of a foreign corporation doing business in the state is an "agent" of the corporation, within Acts 29th Leg. c. 25, authorizing service of process on any agent contracting for the transportation of freight over the line of any foreign railroad corporation doing business in the state. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Demere & Coggin (Tex.) 145 S. W. 623, 628.

A person who transmits the application of another for insurance to an insurance company and sends insured the company's acceptance is the latter's "agent," under the express provisions of St. 1898, § 1977. Costello v. Grant County Mut. Fire & Lightning Ins. Co., 113 N. W. 639, 640, 133 Wis. 361. Code Iowa, § 1750, provides that the term "agent," as applied to insurance, shall include any person who shall, directly or indirectly, transact any insurance business for an insurance company, and that any agent representing such company who may solicit insurance or transact the business generally of such company shall be held to be the agent of the company with authority to transact all business within the scope of his employment. Scrivner v. Anchor Fire Ins. Co., 122 N. W. 942, 943, 144 Iowa, 328.

Where a bartender of a licensed liquor dealer while absent from his place of business and within prohibition territory received an order for whisky, which he in person delivered to defendant at the saloon, and defendant accepted it and received the money and shipped the whisky, he was guilty of violating Acts 1907, p. 327, § 2, forbidding the soliciting of orders within prohibition territory by agent or otherwise, and defining "agent" as any person who receives an order and transmits it to some dealer who accepts and fills it. Van Valkinburgh v. State (Ark.) 142 S. W. 843, 844. But where a person solicits orders for whisky in prohibition territory, and buys the whisky from a distiller and delivers it to his purchasers, the distiller knowing no one in the transaction but such person, the latter cannot be convicted of soliciting orders as an "agent" in prohibited territory. State v. Earles, 106 S. W. 941, 84 Ark. 479.

Tenant.

A tenant is not by virtue of his relation as such, the landlord's "agent" so as to subject the latter's property to a materialman's lien under Rev. St. 1909, § 8212, giving a lien for material furnished under a contract with the owner or his agent; nor is he the landlord's agent within the statute for making repairs by reason of a general covenant by the tenant to keep the premises in repair; but he is the latter's agent within the statute if the landlord binds the tenant for a compensation to make substantial improvements upon the property, so as to entitle one furnishing material for the improvements under contract with the tenant to a lien. McGuinn v. Federated Mines & Milling Co., 141 S. W. 467, 468, 160 Mo. App. 28.

State institution

The school for feeble-minded, supported by the state, is an "officer or agent" within the statute providing that officers or agents who contract for the commonwealth for the construction of public buildings shall obtain security for payment by the contractor for labor and materials. Burr v. Massachusetts School for Feeble-Minded, 83 N. E. 883, 884, 197 Mass. 357.

AGGRAVATE—AGGRAVATION

The term "increase" is the synonym of "aggravate." Mathew v. Wabash R. Co., 78 S. W. 271, 272, 115 Mo. App. 468.

The unlawful breaking of a house, scattering of household goods, and the leaving of the doors unlocked constitutes such a tort as carries "aggravation in the act," authorizing the assessment of damages additional to the actual property loss, irrespective of the intent with which the tort was committed, under Civ. Code 1895, § 3906, allowing additional damages for a tort where there are aggravating circumstances in the act or intent. Holman v. Brown, 69 S. E. 1084, 8 Ga. App. 551.

AGGRAVATED ASSAULT

An assault committed with premeditated design, but without the specific intent to kill, and by the use of means calculated to inflict great bodily injury, is an "aggravated assault." Armstrong v. State, 131 S. W. 1074, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 316. An intent to injure is not a necessary element. Cromwell v. State, 131 S. W. 595, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 183. An unlawful assault with a deadly weapon, not in self-defense, is "aggravated assault." Hamilton v. State, 131 S. W. 1127, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 258. The gist of the offense which is defined by Gen. St. 1906, § 3228, as an assault with a deadly weapon without a premeditated design to effect the death of the person assaulted, consists in the character of the weapon with which the assault is made. Lindsey v. State, 43 South. 87, 89, 53 Fla. 56.

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 610, declaring that an assault is aggravated when committed with a deadly weapon under circumstances not amounting to an intent to murder or maim, an issue of "aggravated assault" was raised on the following facts: Defendant, an adult male, was charged with assaulting a boy 13 years of age and stabbing him with a sword for running between the line of a Knights of Pythias funeral procession. An examination of the boy disclosed a small punctured wound one-fourth to half an inch deep on his thigh and about half an inch long, which seemed to have been caused by a sharp pointed instrument. Defendant denied that he struck the boy, and disclaimed any purpose or intent to do so, nor was there any motive or evidence of any intention on the defendant's part to kill the boy. Malone v. State, 132 S. W. 769, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 509. Accused was guilty of "aggravated assault," if of anything, if he cut prosecutor's throat, and made a gash five inches long around his neck, and one three inches long across his cheek, and cut his coat and vest, without reference to whether he acted in the heat of passion. Wimberley v. State, 130 S. W. 1002, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 65.

For an assault upon a person who is an officer to be "aggravated assault," within Pen. Code 1895, art. 601, which provides that when an assault is committed upon an officer in the lawful discharge of his duties, etc., it must appear that the person assaulted was an officer in the actual discharge of his duties, and that such assault was made as an interruption of his duty. Jeanes v. State, 132 S. W. 352, 353, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 440.

Where one, at the immediate close of religious services, calls the minister just outside the place of worship and assaults him in immediate proximity to the congregation, it is an "aggravated assault"; it not being necessary that the assault be committed within the very walls of the building. Pollock v. State, 131 S. W. 1094, 1095, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 265.

Under a statute providing that an "aggravated assault" must be perpetrated with intent to commit a felony, an information charging that accused feloniously assaulted a married woman with intent to have unlawful voluntary sexual intercourse with her, does not charge an assault with intent to commit a felony, since, if the unlawful act had been committed, both parties would have been guilty of adultery, under section 338, which requires the concurrence of consenting parties. State v. Archer, 115 N. W. 1075, 1076, 22 S. D. 137.

Where there is no intent to kill, but simply a shooting to frighten or even to inflict injury without killing, the offense is "aggravated assault." Young v. State (Tex.) 151 S. W. 1046, 1047; Ward v. Same (Tex.) 151 S. W. 1073, 1076.

Pen. Code 1911, arts. 1008, 1009, 1011, 1022, define an "assault and battery" and declare that, when an injury is caused by violence to the person, the intent to injure is presumed; that an assault and battery may be committed by the use of anything capable of inflicting the slightest injury; and that an assault becomes aggravated when committed in the house of a private family. Accused, while a guest at the home of prosecutrix, went into her bed at night and was discovered by her brother. He claimed that he had received her permission to come to her bed, and that he roused her during the night by touching her with a stick, and that she then awoke and opened the door for him. She denied that she had given her consent. Held, that he was properly found guilty of aggravated assault. Ward v. State (Tex.) 151 S. W. 1073, 1076.

AGGREGATE

Const. art. 9, § 8, providing that "county authorities shall never assess taxes, the aggregate of which shall exceed 75 cents per $100 valuation, except for the payment of indebtedness existing at the adoption of this Constitution, unless authorized by a vote of the people of the county," does not show an intent, by the use of the word "aggregate," that the county authorities shall specify the particular purposes to which the money, when collected, shall be appropriated, and that the "aggregate" shall not exceed the rate specified; but the provision was intended merely as a limitation upon the power of county authorities to levy taxes. People v. Wisconsin Cent. R. Co., 76 N. E. 80, 81, 219 Ill. 94.

AGGRESSOR

As used in the law of self-defense, "aggressor" means one who brings on a conflict or affray by some overt act or demonstration calculated to precipitate the difficulty or conflict. State v. Gray, 79 Pac. 53, 54, 46 Or. 24; State v. Ryan, 108 Pac. 1009, 1014, 56 Or. 524.

AGGRIEVED

As determining right to appeal, see Aggrieved Party.

In a legal sense a person is "aggrieved" by an act when a legal right is thereby invaded. Choate v. Viha, 89 S. W. 1082, 1083, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 566 (quoting and adopting the definition in Peavy v. Goss, 37 S. W. 317, 90 Tex. 89). The word implies a substantial grievance, denial to a person of some right of property or of person, or imposition on him of some burden or obligation. Mills' Ann. St. § 210, provides as to officers or others having any person in custody that they shall admit an attorney whom such person may desire to see or consult, and that any officer violating such provision shall forfeit and pay a certain sum to the "person aggrieved" to be recovered by action. Held to give a right of action only to the person in custody, and not to the attorney as the "person aggrieved." McPhail v. Delaney, 110 Pac. 64, 65, 48 Colo. 411.

Under Ky. St. § 4803, providing "that it shall be unlawful for any warehouseman or commission merchant to directly or indirectly charge the seller or owner anything by way of commission or otherwise, for paying to him the money for which his tobacco is sold," and section 4807, providing that the proprietor of any warehouse who shall violate that section, shall be liable to the "party aggrieved thereby" in the sum of not less than $25 and not more than $100, the seller or owner is "aggrieved" by such unauthorized charge, and therefore entitled to the penalty, though there has been no settlement, and though he be still indebted to the warehouseman after the charge is stricken off. Farmers' Tobacco Warehouse Co. v. Minor, 53 S. W. 641, 642, 107 Ky. 287.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 6620, providing that any of the persons or corporations mentioned in previous sections who shall demand greater compensation than is allowed by the act shall forfeit certain amounts to be recovered in a suit at law by the party aggrieved, a passenger whose father purchased a ticket for her use, and who used it on defendant's passenger train, was a "party aggrieved" and entitled to maintain the action for the penalty. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Freeman, 128 S. W. 1024, 95 Ark. 218.

Abatement of tax

Where it appears that a corporation has no personalty subject to taxes, it sufficiently appears that it is "aggrieved," so as to entitle it to a cancellation of a tax. People ex rel. Twenty-Third St. R. Co. v. Feltner, 87 N. Y. Supp. 304, 307, 92 App. Div. 518.

Under Rev. Laws, c. 12, § 73, providing that a person aggrieved by the taxes assessed upon him may apply for an abatement, etc., a "person aggrieved" means one whose pecuniary interests are or may be adversely affected. Under Rev. Laws, c. 12, § 73, providing that a "person aggrieved" by the tax assessed upon him may apply for an abatement, etc., where the record discloses the illegality of a tax assessed against property belonging to one petitioning for abatement, making it apparent that no proceeding in rem under the assumed tax could affect the title thereto, because it was assessed to one who was neither the record owner nor in occupation on May 1st, the petitioner is not a "person aggrieved," within the contemplation of the statute, and cannot maintain his petition. Hough v. City of North Adams, 82 N. E. 46, 47, 48, 196 Mass. 290.

Application for certiorari

A rival public service corporation is interested in the securities which the Public Service Commission may authorize a competing company to issue, and therefore with reference to that question may be a "party aggrieved" by the commission's order, so as to entitle it to a review thereof on certiorari. People ex rel. New York Edison Co. v. Willcox, 100 N. E. 705, 207 N. Y. 86.

A city charter provided that the council should designate as the official newspapers two papers representing the two principal political parties. The publishers of a newspaper not designated, claiming to represent one of the parties, brought certiorari to review the action of the council. Held, in the absence of a showing that there were no other newspapers published in the city, representing the principles of that party, the publisher was not a "party aggrieved," within Code Civ. Proc. § 2127, providing that the application for writ of certiorari must be made by the party aggrieved. People ex rel. Sweet v. Raymond, 115 N. Y. Supp. 275, 277, 131 App. Div. 160.

Election contest

A person who intends to run as an independent candidate for delegate to a state convention may, under Election Law (Laws 1911, c. 891) § 56, as a "person aggrieved" thereby, maintain a proceeding to review the improper certification of the names of others as designated by a county committee as regular candidates to be placed on the official ballot; he being at a disadvantage if their names are printed thereon as are those of regularly designated candidates, while his, under the primary law, will have to be written thereon. In re Clark, 137 N. Y. Supp. 218, 220.

Where, on the hearing of a protest against a primary election, the parish committee canvassing the returns sustained the protest and ordered a new election, whereupon plaintiff, claiming to have been nominated, instituted proceedings against defendant to contest such ruling, in which defendant appeared and resisted plaintiff's claims, defendant could not object that plaintiff was not entitled to institute the proceeding, because he was not a "party aggrieved," within Acts 1906, p. 66, No. 49, authorizing the party aggrieved by the result declared by a parish committee to prosecute such proceeding, for the reason that defendant had not been declared the nominee, and therefore should not have been sued. Triche v. Labiche, 46 South. 130, 132, 121 La. 138; Vial v. Elfer, 46 South. 134, 121 La. 148.

Failure to receive or delay in delivering freight

The "party aggrieved," within Revisal 1905, § 2631, authorizing recovery by him of a penalty for refusing to receive freight, is one injured by the refusal, and an attorney for persons who attached goods in suits against the real owner could not sue for a penalty for refusal to receive the goods. McRackan v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 63 S. E. 1042, 1043, 150 N. C. 331.

Revisal 1905, § 2632, declares that it shall be unlawful for any railroad company to neglect to transport freight within a reasonable time to or from any place in the state, and for a violation of the duty imposed a penalty is given "to the party aggrieved." In an action to recover the penalty by the consignors of a shipment of hay, one of the plaintiffs testified that the consignees were anxious for the hay, and that they paid in full for it after delivery. Held, that the consignees, and not the consignors, were the "parties aggrieved," within the statute, and that the consignors were without right to sue for the delay. Stone & Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 56 S. E. 932, 936, 144 N. C. 220 (citing Summers v. Southern R. Co., 50 S. E. 714, 715, 138 N. C. 295; Lexington Grocery Co. v. Southern R. Co., 48 S. E. 801, 136 N. C. 396).

Where goods are delivered to a carrier for transportation and a bill of lading issued, the title; in the absence of any direction, or agreement to the contrary, vests in the consignee, who alone is the "party aggrieved" within Revisal 1905, § 2632, imposing a penalty for delay in transporting freight. Elliott v. Southern Ry. Co., 71 S. E. 339, 340, 155 N. C. 235.

Where goods are shipped under an open bill of lading, and the contract between the shipper and the consignee provides that the goods are not to be paid for until received, inspected, and weighed at the point of destination, and the stipulation is inserted to ascertain the quantity of the goods and the price therefor, the title remains in the shipper, who is the "party aggrieved" by the carrier's delay in transportation, and he alone may sue for the penalty imposed by Revisal 1905, § 2632, though the carrier is ignorant of the contract. Id.

A plaintiff, who loaded and received the bill of lading for a car load of wood shipped to a consignee to be sold by him for plaintiff's benefit, and not the consignee, was the "party aggrieved" by an unreasonable delay in the transportation thereof, within the meaning of Revisal 1905, § 2632, giving the "party aggrieved" the right to recover a penalty for such delay. Rollins v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 59 S. E. 671, 672, 146 N. C. 154.

A plaintiff, who sold goods to one at a distant point and delivered them to a carrier, receiving a bill of lading therefor, delivery at the buyer's home being a part of the contract of sale, and not the consignee, was the "party aggrieved" by an unreasonable delay in transporting the goods, within the meaning of Revisal 1905, § 2632, giving such party the right to recover a penalty against the carrier. Cardwell v. North Carolina R. Co., 59 S. E. 673, 146 N. C. 218.

The seller of goods consigned them to his own order at the town in which plaintiff did business, upon a bill of lading reading "order notify" plaintiff, and plaintiff paid for the goods, obtained the bill of lading, and presented it to the railroad company's agent and demanded the goods, which were not delivered to him. Held, that plaintiff was the "consignee aggrieved," within a statute giving such party a right to recover a penalty for failure to adjust, within the statutory period, a claim for nondelivery of goods. Brown v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 74 S. E. 754, 755, 91 S. C. 377.

Failure to receive or transmit telegram

Under Acts 1885, p. 151, c. 48, imposing on telegraph companies the duty to transmit telegrams with impartiality and in the order of time they are received, section 3 of which provides that a party violating the provisions of the act shall be liable to any "party aggrieved" in a certain penalty, the party aggrieved is the real party in interest, with whom the contract was entered into, and for whose benefit the service was to be rendered, and not merely the one whose name is signed to the message, and the fact that a sender of a telegram signs it with the name of another will not prevent any recovery by him. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Troth, 84 N. E. 727, 729, 48 Ind. App. 7.

Injunction

Copyright Act March 4, 1909, c. 320, § 1e, 35 Stat. 1075 (U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1911, p. 1472), gives the owner of a copyright for a musical composition the exclusive right to make or license another to make perforated music rolls or records for mechanically producing such composition, subject to the condition that, if he shall make or authorize the making of such records, any other person may make similar use of the work on payment of a fixed royalty. The right so given to a subsequent maker, however, does not authorize him to copy the record of the first maker, but his work must be done from the original composition, and under section 86 of the act, which authorizes a suit in equity by "any person aggrieved" to enjoin the violation of any right secured thereby, the original maker, whether the proprietor of the copyright or his licensee, is entitled to an injunction to restrain such copying or reproduction of his records. Æolian Co. v. Royal Music Roll Co., 186 Fed. 926, 928.

Irrelevant pleading

The necessity of answering irrelevant and redundant matter makes a defendant, when moving to strike out the same, a "person aggrieved thereby," within Code Civ. Proc. § 545, providing that such matter may be stricken out on motion of a person aggrieved thereby. Kolb v. Mortimer, 120 N. Y. Supp. 543, 544, 185 App. Div. 542.

A defendant is a "person aggrieved" by the answer of a codefendant, which seeks to inject irrelevant matters into the action, within Code Civ. Proc. § 545, providing that irrelevant matter contained in a pleading may be stricken upon motion of a person aggrieved thereby. North River Savings Bank v. Buckley, 180 N. Y. Supp. 787, 788.

A party is "aggrieved," within Code Civ. Proc. § 545, authorizing the striking out of irrelevant and redundant matter contained in a pleading on motion of a person aggrieved, where such matter appears in a pleading which requires an answer or reply. Cleminshaw v. Coon, 120 N. Y. Supp. 181, 183, 136 App. Div. 160.

Recovery of excessive fees

A "party aggrieved," within Code Civ. Proc. §§ 3281, 3282, declaring an officer demanding fees greater than that allowed by law to be liable to an action in behalf of the person aggrieved, is the one whose money is withheld, who is thus directly injured by the excess taken, and may be the attorney himself, instead of his principal. Hale v. McDermott, 137 N. Y. Supp. 975, 976, 78 Misc. Rep. 52.

Recovery of overcharge

One suffering a loss of 50 cents per ton on coal purchased by it by reason of the fact that a carrier transporting the coal charged him 50 cents per ton more than he charged another shipper is a "party aggrieved" within V. S. 3904, making a carrier liable to the party aggrieved for overcharges, in violation of section 3902. State v. Central Vermont R. Co., 71 A. 194, 197, 81 Vt. 463, 130 Am. St. Rep. 1065.

V. S. 3901 (P. S. 4485), authorizing the party aggrieved to recover from a carrier an overcharge for freight, does not permit a buyer to sue a carrier for an overcharge collected from the seller for transporting the goods and included by the seller in the price and paid to him by the buyer; the words "party aggrieved" in their natural sense being the one from whom the overcharge is collected. State v. Central Vermont R. Co., 71 Atl. 193, 81 Vt. 459, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 949.

Reformation of instrument

One who has succeeded to the rights of the grantee in a deed, which, because of a mutual mistake, does not correctly describe the land, is a "party aggrieved," within Civ. Code, § 8399, authorizing reformation on application of the party aggrieved. Hart v. Walton, 99 Pac. 719, 721, 9 Cal. App. 502.

Refusal to give street car transfer

A passenger to whom a transfer is denied is "aggrieved," within Railroad Law, § 104, providing that, for every refusal to comply with the act, the corporation so refusing shall forfeit $50 to the aggrieved party. Fox v. Interurban St. R. Co., 86 N. Y. Supp. 64, 65, 42 Misc. Rep. 538. But the penalty cannot be recovered by one who demanded a transfer with the sole object of recovering for refusal, he not being "aggrieved." Nicholson v. New York City Ry. Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 695, 697, 118 App. Div. 858; Bull v. New York City Ry. Co., 85 N. E. 385, 387, 192 N. Y. 361, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 778. A passenger for whom a transfer is rightfully demanded and wrongfully refused is "aggrieved," though his fare was paid by another. McLaughlin v. New York City Ry. Co., 94 N. Y. Supp. 653, 659, 106 App. Div. 1. Where plaintiff's husband paid the fares of both plaintiff and himself on defendant's street car, plaintiff was entitled to a transfer as a "passenger paying one single fare," and on refusal of such transfer could, as the "aggrieved party," maintain an action under the statute. Carpenter v. New York City Ry. Co., 93 N. Y. Supp. 600-601.

Sale of liquor

The father of a minor son, to whom a retail liquor dealer sold liquor, and whom he permitted to remain in his place of business, in violation of law and the obligations of the liquor dealer's bond, is an "aggrieved" person, and authorized by the statute to sue on the bond for the penalty thereof. White v. Manning, 102 S. W. 1160, 1161, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 298.

A widowed mother injured by the sale of liquors to her adult son, an habitual drunkard, is "aggrieved" within Rev. St. 1895, art. 5060g, providing for a liquor dealer's bond conditioned not to sell intoxicating liquors to any habitual drunkard after notice in writing, which bond may be sued on at the instance of any person or persons aggrieved by the violation of its provisions, though the mother has given no notice not to sell to her son. Coughtry v. Haupt, 105 S. W. 516, 517, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 452.

Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 3380, authorizing suit on a liquor dealer's bond by the person aggrieved by its breach, an action for the unlawful sale of liquor to a minor may be brought by the sister of the minor where the mother of such minor died when he was very young, and the minor was left by the mother with the request to the sister that she take care of and raise him, and gave the possession and custody of the minor to the sister, the father being a drunkard and without a home, and disqualified to care for and raise the minor, and the sister assumed the care and support of the minor and in all respects cared for him as his mother; she being a person "aggrieved" within the meaning of the statute. Saunders v. Alvido & Lasserre, 113 S. W. 992, 994, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 356.

Vacation of grant

Revisal 1905, § 1748, providing that, when any person claiming title to lands under a grant shall consider himself "aggrieved" by any grant issued to any other person, etc., he may sue to have the same vacated, is limited to one claiming title to the land covered by a grant to himself, and does not authorize an action by a private individual in the name of the state to vacate a grant to an oyster bed in which he has no interest other than as a citizen. Jones v. Riggs, 70 S. E. 465, 154 N. C. 281.

AGGRIEVED PARTY

As determining rights other than that of appeal, see Aggrieved.

The "person aggrieved," as used in the statute providing that such persons may appeal, means the "person interested." Woodward v. Spear, 10 Vt. 420, 422.

The rule generally adopted that a party is "aggrieved" by a judgment or decree when it operates on his rights of property or bears directly upon his interest. The word "aggrieved" refers to a substantial grievance, a denial of some personal or property right, or the imposition upon a party of a burden or obligation. McKenna v. McKenna, 69 Atl. 844, 845, 29 R. I. 224.

The phrase "aggrieved party" is not a technical one, and the words must be given their natural meaning, and, when used with reference to legal remedies, the words mean one who is injured in a legal sense, and a person aggrieved is one whose pecuniary interest is directly affected by an adjudication. State v. Central Vermont R. Co., 71 Atl. 193, 81 Vt. 459, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 949. In legal acceptance a party is "aggrieved" by a judgment or decree when it operates on his rights of property, or bears directly upon his interest. Ruff v. Montgomery, 36 South. 67, 68, 83 Miss. 185 (citing 2 Cyc. p. 633); Smith v. Whaley, 61 Atl. 173, 174, 27 R. I. 185.

Upon principle, as to any judgment or order of a court adverse to one in a suit or proceeding, who is the proper representative therein, of the interests of others prejudiced by the result, that one is a "party aggrieved," within the meaning of such term as used in appeal statutes. McKenney v. Minahan, 97 N. W. 489, 490, 119 Wis. 651; In re Creighton's Estate, 129 N. W. 181, 183, 88 Neb. 107.

A defendant is truly "aggrieved" only when by appropriate pleadings, or pleadings and proofs, he has become an active party to an issue or a controversy which is adjudged against him. New Jersey Building Loan & Investment Co. v. Lord, 58 Atl. 185, 187, 66 N. J. Eq. 344.

"Every person aggrieved," within the meaning of Mo. Rev. St. 1879, § 8710, giving the right of appeal to every person "aggrieved" by any final judgment or decision of any circuit court in any civil cause, includes every person whose rights are in any respect concluded by the judgment. Switzer v. Switzer, 98 S. W. 461, 463, 201 Mo. 66, 119 Am. St. Rep. 731 (citing Nolan v. Johns, 18 S. W. 1107, 108 Mo. 481).

If the court entered a judgment which deprived complainant of any of its property rights, then it must be a "party aggrieved," within Rev. St. 1887, § 4802, providing that any party aggrieved may appeal. It is not necessary for a person or corporation to be named as plaintiff or defendant or intervenor in the title to an action, or in the title to a judgment entered therein, in order to become a party to the action. Washington County Abstract Co. v. Stewart, 74 Pac. 955, 956, 957, 9 Idaho, 376.

Plaintiffs in an action to quiet title, having admitted that they could not show title to particular tracts, are not "aggrieved parties" so far as the judgment relates to such tracts. Flannigan v. Towle, 96 Pac. 507, 8 Cal. App. 229.

In proceedings under St. 1898, § 4096, for the examination of adverse witnesses before trial, an individual defendant seeking an appeal from an order denying his petition for the suppression and denial of his examination and dismissing the action as to him, is not an "aggrieved party," within the meaning of section 3048, which gives an appeal to such parties only. American Food Products Co. v. Winter, 133 N. W. 596, 598, 147 Wis. 464.

Under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 185, providing that any party "aggrieved" by the taxation of costs by the clerk may have the same retaxed, and section 4749, providing that the party commencing the action shall be known as the "plaintiff" and the opposite party as the "defendant," the witnesses in a criminal case have no right to appeal from an order disallowing their fees for attendance and mileage as certified by the clerk, they not being parties to the proceeding. State v. Fair, 76 Pac. 731, 734, 35 Wash. 127, 102 Am. St. Rep. 897.

Gen. St. 1902, § 3834, gives the right of appeal from an order of railroad commissioners, approving a street railroad location, to any "party aggrieved" by the decision or order of the commissioners. Section 3843 gives the right of appeal from the location by the local authorities to any owner of land fronting on a highway aggrieved by the location of tracks thereon. Held, that one is "aggrieved" within such sections by a judgment or order, when his rights of property are injuriously affected thereby, and if he claims such injury through the illegal action of the railroad commissioners, and it appears on the face of the proceedings that this may be so, he is entitled to appeal. Appeal of Norton, 78 Atl. 587, 588, 591, 84 Conn. 40.

From an order restraining the common council of a city from proceeding with an election to fill a vacancy caused by resignation of an alderman on the ground that the offices of the aldermen elected at the time he was elected had ceased to exist, such aldermen may appeal as "aggrieved parties," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1294. Koster v. Coyne, 97 N. Y. Supp. 433, 436, 110 App. Div. 742.

Under Rev. Laws, c. 173, § 110, providing that an excepting party, who is aggrieved by the disallowance of a bill of exceptions, may petition the full court to establish the truth of the exceptions, a party is "aggrieved" only when the action of the judge in disallowing the bill is erroneous. In re Meehan, 94 N. E. 393, 395, 208 Mass. 60.

Under Code Va. 1904, § 3454, authorizing a person thinking himself "aggrieved" by a decree to appeal therefrom, etc., a commissioner, appointed in a decree directing a resale of land in a suit to subject the assets of the deceased owner to the payment of debts, cannot in his official capacity alone appeal from a decree setting aside the decree for a resale, rendered on a petition against him alone. Brown v. Howard & Whitehead, 55 S. E. 682, 683, 106 Va. 282.

In a suit against an executor and infant devisees to enforce a contract whereby the executor contracted to convey the lands devised, the infants, on the guardian ad litem failing to appeal from a judgment of specific performance, may do so by some one as their next friend; they being "aggrieved" by the decree. Givens v. Clem, 59 S. E. 413, 414, 107 Va. 435.

The liability imposed by St. 1898, § 1502, declaring that the children of a parent unable to maintain himself shall maintain such parent, gives a child such a substantial interest in a proceeding to appoint a guardian of the person and estate of his father, on the ground that he is incompetent to manage his property and is wasting his estate, as to constitute him a "person aggrieved" by a refusal to make the appointment, within section 4031, allowing an appeal to the circuit court from the county court by any person aggrieved. Merrill v. Merrill, 114 N. W. 784, 785, 134 Wis. 895.

A judgment debtor's personal right being invaded by an order to compel a safety deposit company to permit the judgment debtor's receiver to open a box in the vaults of the company standing in the joint names of the judgment debtor and another and to examine the contents, he was a "person aggrieved" within Code Civ. Proc. § 1294, though title to the contents of the box may have passed to his receiver. Ehrich v. Root, 119 N. Y. Supp. 395, 400, 134 App. Div. 432.

Where directors of a mutual insurance organization were illegally elected, the policy holders were "persons aggrieved" within General Corporation Law (Laws 1892, c. 687) § 27, conferring jurisdiction on the Supreme Court to review elections of any corporation, and such policy holders were entitled to sue to have such election reviewed, and were not limited to an application to the Attorney General to proceed on behalf of the state, as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 1943. In re Empire State Supreme Lodge, 103 N. Y. Supp. 465, 469, 53 Misc. Rep. 344.

An appeal by a city from an order of a city court judge, discharging a person convicted for violating an ordinance, lies under Code 1907, § 6245, providing that any "party aggrieved" by the judgment may appeal. City of Bessemer v. Eidge, 50 South. 270, 271, 162 Ala. 201.

Const. art. 7, § 33, provides that appeals from all judgments of county courts may be taken to the circuit court under such restrictions and regulations as may be prescribed by law, and Kirby's Dig. § 1487, authorizes appeals as a matter of right from the county to the circuit court by "the aggrieved party filing an affidavit," etc. Held that, where a county court had jurisdiction to grant a competing ferry license, the operator of another ferry, who had obtained a previous license, but who had not made himself a party to the proceedings for the granting of the license complained of before judgment, was not a "party aggrieved," and was therefore not entitled to appeal therefrom. Turner v. Williamson, 92 S. W. 867, 868, 77 Ark. 586.

A judgment debtor sold real property, and under agreement with the purchaser part of the purchase money was deposited with trustees to hold for 90 days as security for the payment by the vendor of liens on the premises sold. In proceedings supplementary to execution, before the expiration of the 90 days, in which one of the trustees was examined under third party orders, the trustees were ordered to satisfy judgments out of the trust fund. Held, that the trustee examined was entitled to appeal under Code Civ. Proc. § 1294, providing that a "party aggrieved" may appeal, etc., except where the order of which he complains was made upon his default, since an unauthorized or illegal disbursement would render him liable to the purchaser. Ghersin v. Thuor, 107 N. Y. Supp. 195, 196, 56 Misc. Rep. 465.

One is aggrieved, within Gen. St. 1902, § 3834, authorizing a "party aggrieved" by the order of the railroad commissioners to appeal to the superior court, when his rights are injuriously affected by the unauthorized or irregular acts of the commissioners; but by an appeal the superior court is not empowered to try de novo the questions properly submitted to the commissioners as an administrative tribunal. Stevens v. Connecticut Co., 84 Atl. 361, 363, 86 Conn. 36, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 597.

Code Civ. Proc. § 783, makes the provisions of the Code relative to appeals applicable to certiorari proceedings except so far as inconsistent. By sections 460 and 462 a final order, affecting a substantial right, made in a special proceeding, may be reviewed. Section 752 declares that the party prosecuting a special proceeding may be named as the plaintiff and the adverse party the defendant. Held, that the "adverse party" in a special proceeding embraces any person whose personal or property rights may be adversely affected by the judgment or final relief sought in a certiorari proceeding, as well as the court, tribunal, or officer whose official acts are challenged, so that, where such a proceeding to review the validity of a liquor election sought as a part of the relief prayed the cancellation of licenses issued to third persons, they were "adverse parties," though not originally named as defendants in the application for the writ, or the writ itself, and, their licenses having been canceled by the court, they were "parties aggrieved" and entitled to appeal. State ex rel. Cook v. Board of Com'rs of Tripp County, 137 N. W. 354, 358, 29 S. D. 358.

Action of beneficial association

A by-law of a beneficial association, which stipulates that any "person aggrieved" at the action of a council for failing to pay benefits, may appeal, whereon the council shall appoint a commissioner to take testimony and report, and that the aggrieved party may appeal to the board of appeals from the action of the council refusing to pay benefits, or the action of the council shall be final, includes members and beneficiaries, and is a part of the contract between the association and a member, and a beneficiary must comply therewith before resorting to the courts for relief. King v. Wynema Council, No. 10, etc. (Del.) 78 Atl. 845, 848.

Administrator or executor

Where the probate of a will is denied, the executor therein named is a "party aggrieved," and consequently possesses sufficient interest to enable him to appeal under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1294, 2568, authorizing appeals by any person aggrieved by the order appealed from. In re Rayner's Will, 87 N. Y. Supp. 23, 93 App. Div. 114.

Where the Supreme Court adjudges a probate invalid, and the surrogate revokes letters testamentary before an appeal is taken from the judgment of the Supreme Court, such revocation does not affect adversely the right of the executor to appeal, since, as executor named in the will, he is a "party aggrieved" when probate of the will is denied, and is entitled to appeal. In re Cavanaugh's Will, 131 N. Y. Supp. 982, 985, 72 Misc. Rep. 584.

Appointment of receiver

In an action for the dissolution of a partnership, and for a receiver, where the complaint alleged that all defendants were members of the partnership, and asked relief against them all, even if the articles of partnership were not signed by one of the defendants, he was a "party aggrieved," within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 1289, allowing an appeal by a "party aggrieved" in a proceeding wherein a receiver is appointed or refused. Marshall v. Matson, 86 N. E. 339, 341, 342, 171 Ind. 283.

Creditor

A creditor of an insolvent estate is a "party aggrieved" by an erroneous order making a family allowance to the widow, and may therefore appeal, under Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 3, and section 938, providing that an appeal may be taken from such order by a party aggrieved. In re Fretwell's Estate, 93 Pac. 283, 284, 152 Cal. 573.

Decree or order in probate

To entitle a widow to appeal from a decree probating a will as a "person aggrieved," it must be established with a reasonable degree of certainty that there was a valid marriage subsisting between her and testator at his death. Pattee v. Stetson, 48 N. E. 1022, 170 Mass. 93.

One who contests a will on the grounds of undue influence and testamentary incapacity, and who obtains a judgment on the issue of undue influence, is not "aggrieved" by the judgment, and cannot appeal, though the trial court refused to submit to the jury the issue of testamentary incapacity. Turner v. Anderson, 139 S. W. 180, 185, 236 Mo. 523.

Under Rev. Laws 1905, §§ 3872, 3873, providing that an appeal may be taken from an order of the probate court admitting a will to probate, or denying the same, by any "party aggrieved," an executor, propounding a will by which he is nominated, may appeal from an order denying probate thereof. In re Bretzman's Will, 135 N. W. 980, 981, 117 Minn. 247.

P. L. 1898, p. 793, § 204, gives the right of appeal from any decree of the orphans' court to any "person aggrieved" thereby. Held, that an heir at law and next of kin, who was not cited on the filing of the caveat to the probate of a will, is a "person aggrieved" by a decree admitting the will to probate. One is aggrieved by a decree whose pecuniary interest is directly affected thereby, or whose right of property may thereby be established or divested. In re Young's Will, 59 Atl. 154, 155, 67 N. J. Eq. 553 (citing Swackhamer v. Kline's Adm'r, 25 N. J. Eq. 503; Andress v. Andress, 22 Atl. 124, 46 N. J. Eq. 528).

One not an heir, but merely a legatee under an alleged will of decedent antedating another alleged will of decedent, which was admitted to probate in the county court without first having procured the allowance of the will under which he claims in the county court, which has sole jurisdiction of the probate of wills, is a "party aggrieved," within St. 1898, § 3788, authorizing appeals from the county court on the probate of wills only by persons aggrieved. In re Hunt's Will, 100 N. W. 874, 875, 122 Wis. 460.

A creditor of an estate of decedent was not "aggrieved" by an order of the probate court whereby its records were amended by inserting a provision that the executors give notice of their appointment by certain advertisements. Smith v. Whaley, 61 Atl. 173, 174, 27 R. I. 185.

A petitioner for the appointment of a guardian of the person and estate of a spendthrift is not "aggrieved" by the dismissal of the petition by the probate court, though he has an annuity charged in part on the real estate of the alleged spendthrift. McKenna v. McKenna, 69 Atl. 844, 845, 29 R. I. 224.

Where a surrogate allowed grossly extravagant compensation to special guardians of certain minors for conducting and prosecuting an appeal to the Appellate Division from the surrogate's order settling the accounts of certain trustees, and directing that such compensation be paid out of the minors' shares of the fund to be distributed, the trustees were "aggrieved." In re Stevens, 99 N. Y. Supp. 1070, 1074, 114 App. Div. 607.

Prior to an amendment to Kirby's Dig. § 1348, by Act May 31, 1909 (Laws 1909, p. 956), heirs or legatees could not, without having filed exceptions to an account current of an executor or administrator, appeal from a judgment of the probate court confirming it, for the reason that they were not privy to the record and were not the "party aggrieved," within the meaning of the statute regulating appeals from probate courts. Stricklin v. Galloway, 137 S. W. 804, 805, 97 Ark. 56.

Where, in proceedings for a final accounting by an administratrix, the only issue was whether the alleged donee of all of intestate's property or the next of kin were entitled thereto, and the decree directed payment of the property to the next of kin, the administratrix was not a "party aggrieved" within Code Civ. Proc. § 2568, giving a party aggrieved the right to appeal from a surrogate's decree, and the administratrix would not be entitled to appeal even if a valid gift by way of trust had been established under which the administratrix was trustee for the donee; the purpose of the trust having been accomplished. In re Heldmann's Estate, 135 N. Y. Supp. 143, 144, 151 App. Div. 234.

Where an order is made setting aside a homestead for the use of the widow pending administration, the executors are "parties aggrieved," within the meaning of the law relative to the right of appeal. In re Levy's Estate, 75 Pac. 301, 141 Cal. 646, 99 Am. St.

Rep. 92 (citing In re Heydenfeldt's Estate, 49 Pac. 713, 117 Cal. 551).

Where the wife of a minor under guardianship had obtained a divorce, with a decree for alimony, prior to the settlement of the guardian's account on the husband's becoming of age, but she had neither brought suit against the guardian, attached the ward's estate, nor levied an execution, she was not a "party aggrieved," so as to be entitled to appeal from a probate decree settling the guardian's accounts, though she be regarded as a creditor of the ward. Leyland v. Leyland, 71 N. E. 794, 795, 186 Mass. 420.

St. 1898, § 4031, as amended by Laws 1907, c. 593, provides that any executor or "person aggrieved" by the action of the county court may appeal to the circuit court. On petition for the probate of a lost will, the petitioner alleged that she had been named as executrix in such will, and that her children had been made residuary legatees. On a hearing by the county court, probate was refused, and there was a finding that it could not be determined that any one was named as executrix therein. Held, that the petitioner had no appealable interest, since she had not been judicially declared an executrix of the will, and since she was not a "person aggrieved" within the terms of the statute; the mere fact that petitioner may have a strong natural desire to reverse the judgment, or that its rendition affronted or injured her feelings, not being an appreciable grievance. In re Powers' Will, 130 N. W. 888, 889, 145 Wis. 671.

St. 1898, § 4031, limits the right to appeal from an order denying the application for appointment of a guardian for an insane person to certain specified officers and to "any person aggrieved." Held, that mere affront to desire or sentimental interest, not amounting to a determination adversely affecting the legal rights of a petitioner, was insufficient to make her a "person aggrieved," so that an adult nonresident sister of an alleged incompetent, having no legal right to control the incompetent's custody or conduct, nor any right to support from or legal duty to care for or support the incompetent, nor any rights with reference to her property while the incompetent was living, had no capacity to appeal from a decree dismissing her petition for appointment of a guardian. In re Carpenter, 123 N. W. 144, 140 Wis. 572, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 155; Id., 123 N. W. 145, 140 Wis. 577.

Trustee in bankruptcy

A "party aggrieved," within Kirby's Dig. § 4665, authorizing any person aggrieved by a judgment of a justice to appeal, is one whose pecuniary interest is affected by the judgment or whose right of property may be established or divested thereby, and a trustee in bankruptcy of a defendant in replevin may appeal from an adverse judgment. Brown v. Frenken, 112 S. W. 207, 87 Ark. 160.

An "agistment," under Rev. St. 1899, § 4228, giving a lien for keeping animals, is a species of bailment, and cannot exist without the possession of the animals being left with the bailee. Cotton v. Arnold, 95 S. W. 280, 281, 118 Mo. App. 596 (citing Everett v. Barse Live Stock Commission Co., 88 S. W. 165, 115 Mo. App. 482; State, to Use of Vette, v. Shevlin, 23 Mo. App. 598).

Contract synonymous

The word "agree" being defined as "brought into harmony, united in opinion, settled by consent," and as being synonymous with "contracted," a complaint, alleging that defendant, a common carrier, "agreed" with plaintiff for a reward to receive and transport freight that plaintiff was notified by defendant to have the shipment prepared for loading, and that defendant wrongfully refused to accept and transport the freight when tendered, to plaintiff's damage, was not demurrable for failing to allege that plaintiff agreed to ship the staves and pay the freight thereon. Mott v. Jackson, 55 South. 528, 530, 172 Ala. 448 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 279).

Grant synonymous

"It is settled that the word 'agree,' may be read 'grant.' Bailey v. Agawam Nat. Bank, 76 N. E. 449, 451, 190 Mass. 20, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 98, 112 Am. St. Rep. 296 (citing Hogan v. Barry, 10 N. E. 253, 143 Mass. 538; Ladd v. City of Boston, 24 N. E. 858, 151 Mass. 585, 21 Am. St. Rep. 481).

Understood synonymous

See Understood.

AGREE TO CANCEL

The phrase "agrees to cancel," as used in a lease providing that in a certain contingency the lessee agrees to cancel the lease, is equivalent to saying that the lessee agrees that the lease shall be canceled, and does not contemplate any act by the lessee himself to complete the cancellation. Bruder v. Geisler, 94 N. Y. Supp. 2, 3, 47 Misc. Rep. 370.

AGREE TO LET

The words "agree to let" and similar phrases have been held to confer a leasehold, though a further writing or memorandum was called for in the document wherein these words were used. Ver Steeg v. Becker-Moore Paint Co., 80 S. W. 848, 351, 108 Mo. App. 257.

AGREED

See Dismissal Agreed.

AGREED CASE

An "agreed case" stands for a petition, answer, all the evidence, and a verdict returned to the court. Peake v. Webb, 112 S. W. 13, 14, 132 Mo. App. 601.

AGREED STATEMENT OF FACTS

See Statement of Fact.

AGREED TO

An important vital element in the adoption of a valid amendment to the Constitution is that it shall be "agreed to by three-fifths of all the members elected to each House" of the Legislature. If a proposed amendment is passed by the requisite vote in the Senate, it is done subject to the right of the Senate under the rules to reconsider such passage, and if such passage is duly reconsidered, and the proposed amendment is not afterwards duly "agreed to," its publication and submission to the electors is not authorized by the Constitution and may be enjoined in appropriate proceedings where no other adequate remedy is afforded by law. Crawford v. Gilchrist, 59 South. 963, 966, 968, 64 Fla. 41.

AGREED UPON

The phrase "which will be agreed upon" in the charge of the court that, if plaintiff is entitled to recover on his theory, he is entitled to a specified sum, with interest, "which will be agreed upon," does not mean that the parties will agree that interest must follow the verdict, but only that the amount of the interest will be agreed upon, that there will be no dispute over the computation. McAfee v. Dix, 91 N. Y. Supp. 464, 469, 101 App. Div. 69.

AGREEMENT

See During Life of Agreement; Express Agreement; Future Agreement; Independent Agreement; Mutual Agreement; On Any Understanding or Agreement; Sale by Agreement; This Agreement; Written Contract or Agreement. Executory Agreement, see Executory Contract.

To constitute an "agreement," there must be a proposal by one party and an acceptance by another, which must be manifested by some appropriate act. White v. Allen Kingston Motor Car Co., 126 N. Y. Supp. 150, 152, 69 Misc. Rep. 627.

The statute in relation to homestead entries in forbidding an applicant to make any "agreement" by which the title he may acquire from the government shall inure in whole or in part to the benefit of another, means that there must be a meeting of minds expressed in some tangible way. One party may have intended to sell, the other party may have intended to buy, yet this would not be sufficient, unless the intention of each was in some way communicated from one to the other, and was understood and agreed to by both. United States v. Richards, 149 Fed. 443, 451.

Personal Property Law N. Y. § 42, requires lenders of money on salaries on an assignment or note to file a copy of the "agreement" with the employers. An employé gave a power of attorney to execute a note in his name for a loan and to assign a part of his salary. The attorney executed a note in the name of the employé and delivered it to the lender. The making of the note and the advance of the money were simultaneous acts. Held, that the note and the power of attorney were, when construed together, an "agreement" within the statute. Thompson v. Gimbel Bros., 128 N. Y. Supp. 210, 212, 71 Misc. Rep. 128.

An account annexed to the declaration in an action on an account, which recited that defendant was indebted to plaintiffs for a specified sum, with interest, on account of defendant's share of the amount paid by plaintiffs on a bond given by them to a third person at the request of and for defendant, and on defendant's "agreement" to be responsible for her share, shows a cause of action on an express agreement by defendant to be responsible for her share of the money paid by plaintiffs on the bond. Cunniff v. McDonnell, 81 N. E. 879, 196 Mass. 7.

Decedent executed a demand note to defendant, agreeing that the proceeds of certain policies of life insurance, which he had deposited with defendant as collateral to secure the note, should be applied to the payment thereof, and that, if he should come under any other liability or enter into any other agreement with defendant while it was the holder of such obligation, then any excess of collaterals should be applied to such other note or claim, and, in case of any exchange of the collaterals, the provisions of the note should extend to the new collaterals. Decedent thereafter executed a new note to defendant's cashier for a debt owing to defendant, which note was, in fact, for defendant's benefit. When decedent died, he was also a member of a firm which was indebted to defendant for insurance premiums collected and unpaid. At this time all but $181.50 of the original debt had been paid, for which amount a renewal note had been given which was due and unpaid. Held, that the words "liability," "agreement" and "claim," used in the collateral agreement, were sufficient to cover every conceivable obligation, and that the surplus due on the policies was therefore liable, not only for the balance of the original debt, but also for the note made payable to defendant's cashier.

and for the firm's liability for the unpaid premiums. Norfleet v. Pamlico Ins. & Banking Co., 75 S. E. 937, 939, 160 N. C. 327.

There is no difference between a "contract" and an "agreement." Michael v. Kennedy, 148 S. W. 983, 984, 166 Mo. App. 462.

Deed

A quitclaim deed cannot be regarded as an "agreement in writing," satisfying the statute of frauds, for the conveyance of an after-acquired title. Chamberlain v. Abrams, 79 Pac. 204, 205, 206, 36 Wash. 587.

Receipt

A receipt or memorandum in the following language: "Lowe, Idaho, Nov. 17, 1902. Received from S. C. K. one hundred and ninety dollars on land Sec. 25, Tp. 32, R. 2 E., 160 acres"—signed by the parties, is not such "agreement in writing" as is required by Rev. St. 1887, § 6009, to justify specific performance. Kurdy v. Rogers, 79 Pac. 195, 196, 10 Idaho, 416.

An instrument acknowledging receipt of a sum of money, and stating that the party receiving it deducted the same from the purchase price of described land as commission for the sale, as the commission belonged to a third person and by agreement was to be deducted from the price is not an "agreement in writing" upon which an action may be brought within five years, but is a mere receipt for the money. Lewis v. Norris, 103 Pac. 134, 135, 80 Kan. 620.

Stipulation synonymous

The word "agreements" being synonymous with the word "stipulations," as used in a building contract, providing that the owner on a certificate by the architect of the contractor's failure to perform any of the "agreements" may on notice terminate the contract and complete the work, and that the expense incurred by the owner shall be certified by the architect, whose certificate shall be conclusive, the contract does not provide against abandonment of the work by the contractor, and where the contractor abandons the work the owner may complete it without obtaining the architect's certificate. Heidbrink v. Schaffner, 127 S. W. 418, 420, 147 Mo. App. 632.

AGREEMENT FOR SALE OF REAL ESTATE

Real property defined, see Real Property.

A parol agreement, creating a partnership and giving the partners an interest in real estate owned by a partner at the time of the formation of the firm, is an "agreement for the sale of real estate," within the statute of frauds, and is void. Burgwyn v. Jones, 75 S. E. 188-191, 113 Va. 511, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 120.

AGREEMENT LIMITING LIABILITY

A condition contained in a railroad ticket that the carrier assumed no liability for baggage, except for wearing apparel, and then only for $100 in value, unless a contract for a greater value was made in writing, and a rule or regulation to the same effect filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, did not constitute an "agreement limiting the carrier's liability for its own negligence" resulting in loss of baggage. Homer v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. (Utah) 128 Pac. 522, 527, 528.

AGREEMENT TO ANSWER FOR DEBT OF ANOTHER

Where plaintiffs, attorneys, in a suit brought by their clients to recover land in which defendant was interested, in consideration of $200, agreed that defendant might settle the suit directly with their clients, and such a settlement was made and the suit dismissed, defendant's agreement to pay plaintiffs the $200 was not an "agreement to answer for another's debt," within the statute of frauds, on the theory that it was an agreement to pay the fee which plaintiffs' clients would have owed to them; defendant having agreed to pay the sum for his own benefit to procure plaintiffs' consent to a settlement with their clients. Van Winkle v. King, 141 S. W. 46, 47, 145 Ky. 691.

AGREEMENT TO BE PERFORMED WITHIN A YEAR

See Perform.

AGREEMENT TO MARRY

"The 'agreement to marry' partakes of the nature of a civil contract, as upon its violation the injured party may recover damages; but the contract or agreement to marry and the marriage relation itself are by no means one and the same. When the agreement to marry has been executed in a legal marriage, the relation thus formed becomes much more than a mere civil contract. The rights and duties incident to this relation are from a source much higher than a contract of which the parties are capable, and can never be restricted nor enlarged nor in any way controlled by any contract which the parties can make." Elkenbury v. Burns, 70 N. E. 837, 838, 33 Ind. App. 69.

AGREEMENT TO SELL AND BUY

"An 'agreement to sell and buy' is a contract by which one engages to transfer the title to a certain thing to another, who engages to accept the same from him and to pay a price therefor" (quoting Civ. Code, § 1729). Consequently, a contract by which one agrees to sell to another a half interest in his business in consideration of a specified amount of cash, such other agreeing to devote his entire time and skill to the business is a completed "agreement to sell and buy," though only a small portion of the cash was paid at the time of making the contract, and the cash to be paid is but a fraction of the real value of the interest in the business purchased. Stum v. Hadrich, 94 Pac. 82, 83, 7 Cal. App. 241.

AGREEMENT TO SELL OR CONVEY

Sale distinguished, see Sale.

See, also, Sold.

An "agreement to sell land" is an agreement to sell a title to the land, and, in the absence of a stipulation to the contrary, the law implies an undertaking by the vendor to make a good title, and the form of the conveyance is immaterial so long as the form executed conveys the title contracted to be conveyed. Davis v. Lee, 100 Pac. 752, 755, 52 Wash. 330, 132 Am. St. Rep. 973.

Civ. Code, § 1727, defines an "agreement to sell," generally termed a "conditional sale," as a contract by which one engages, for a price, to transfer to another the title to a certain thing. Ward Land & Stock Co. v. Mapes, 82 Pac. 426, 427, 147 Cal. 747 (citing Van Allen v. Francis, 56 Pac. 339, 123 Cal. 474).

A contract is taxable as an "agreement to sell stock," where it provides for payment in weekly installments, for the transfer to the buyer of a part of the stock when the payments aggregate a specified sum, and for the transfer of the remainder on the payment of the full price and which declares that during the continuance of the agreement, and, until there shall be a default for five days, the stock shall be indorsed in blank and placed in escrow to be held in accordance with the agreement, and that during the continuance thereof the buyer shall have no power to exercise any of the rights of a stockholder. Phillips v. Grossman, 135 N. Y. Supp. 597, 598, 76 Misc. Rep. 497.

AGREEMENT UNDER SEAL

An "agreement under seal" may be construed to be a "grant." Bailey v. Agawam Nat. Bank, 76 N. E. 449, 451, 190 Mass. 20, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 98, 112 Am. St. Rep. 296 (citing Hogan v. Barry, 10 N. E. 253, 143 Mass. 538; Ladd v. Boston, 24 N. E. 858, 151 Mass. 585, 21 Am. St. Rep. 481).

Aid offender

Rev. St. U. S. § 5444, relating to "aid in the illegal admission of imports," includes aid given both before and after the fact; and where a customs officer aids one who has made wrongful entry, by concealing the falsity of the entry, or by supporting it by false official returns, he is within the prohibition of the section. United States v. Mescall, 164 Fed. 584, 586.

Aiding prisoner to escape

Under White's Ann. Pen. Code, 1901, art. 229, providing that, if any person shall willfully aid a prisoner to escape from the custody of an officer by whom he is legally detained on an accusation for a misdemeanor, he shall be punished by fine, etc., a person who has been convicted of a misdemeanor, and is serving a sentence as a county convict, is not in custody on an accusation, within the statute, and hence assisting such a person to escape is not a violation of the statute. Braman v. State, 72 S. W. 184, 185, 44 Tex. Cr. R. 399.

AID AND ABET

The word "aid" does not imply guilty knowledge or felonious intent, whereas "abet" includes knowledge of the wrongful purpose of the perpetrator and counsel and encouragement in the crime. People v. Lewis, 98 Pac. 1078, 1079, 9 Cal. App. 279; State v. Allen, 87 Pac. 177, 182, 34 Mont. 403; People v. Bond, 109 Pac. 150, 155, 13 Cal. App. 175.

The words "aid and abet" comprehend all assistance rendered by acts, or words of encouragement, or support, or presence, actual or constructive to render assistance should it become necessary. No particular acts are essential. If encouragement be given to commit the felony, then aiding or abetting is made out. Jones v. State, 57 South. 31, 32, 174 Ala. 53; Loeb v. State, 64 S. E. 338, 341, 6 Ga. App. 23.

The definition in Raiford v. State, 59 Ala. 106, given in substantially the above language is criticised in State ex rel. Attorney General v. Tally, 15 South. 722, 102 Ala. 66, in which the court says: "The definition was sufficient for the case then in hand, and it is in the form not infrequently found in the books. But it is incomplete. Mere presence for the purpose of rendering aid obviously is not aid in the substantive sense of assistance by an act supplementary to the act of the principal. Nor is it aid in the original sense of abetting, nor abetting in any sense, unless presence with the purpose of giving aid, if necessary, was preconcerted or in accordance with the general plan conceived by the principal and the person charged as an aider or abettor, or, at the very least, unless the principal knew of the presence, with intent to aid, of such person. * * * And in the nature of things the fact of presence and purpose to aid could not incite or encourage or embolden the principal unless he knew of the existence of that fact. * * * The definition we have quoted is, as an abstract proposition, clearly at fault. As applied in the concrete to cases of confederacy as it is, we undertake to say, whenever it is stated in this form, it is free from objection. But in the absence of confederacy, or at least of knowledge on the part of the actual perpetrator of a crime, one cannot be a principal in the second degree who is present intending to aid and does not aid by word or deed. The definition must go further. It should appear by it that, to be an aider or abettor when no assistance is given or word uttered, the person so charged must have been present by preconcert, special or general, or at least to the knowledge of the principal, with the intent to aid him." Morris v. State, 41 South. 274, 283, 146 Ala. 66 (citing Woolweaver v. State, 34 N. E. 352, 50 Ohio St. 277, 40 Am. St. Rep. 667; Goins v. State, 21 N. E. 478, 46 Ohio St. 457; Tanner v. State, 9 South. 613, 92 Ala. 1; Jordan v. State, 79 Ala. 9).

One "aids and abets" in the commission of an offense where he has such a connection with it as at common law would make him guilty as principal in the second degree, which consists of being present and doing some act to aid the actual perpetrator though without taking a direct part in its commission. State v. Davenport, 72 S. E. 7, 15, 156 N. C. 596.

As stated in Bouvier's Law Dictionary, "aiding and abetting" is "the offense committed by those persons who, though not the direct perpetrators of a crime, are yet present at its commission, and do some act to render aid to the actual perpetrator thereof. A 'principal in the second degree' is he who is present 'aiding and abetting' the fact to be done. Actual presence is not necessary. It is sufficient to be so situated as to come readily to the assistance of his fellows." To render one guilty as an "accessory before the fact," it is not necessary that he should have shared the criminal or mischievous design of the principal felony, and that that design should have been substantially effected through his incitement thereto. The essential element in "aiding and abetting" in the commission of a crime is the taking of an active part with a criminal intent to commit the crime. From this it follows that the act of officers or employees of a corporation in obeying the order of the president in preparing and delivering a check by which the funds of the corporation are misappropriated is not "aiding and abetting" the commission of a crime. People ex rel. Perkins v. Moss, 99 N. Y. Supp. 138, 144, 113 App. Div. 329 (citing People v. Peckens, 47 N. E. 883, 153 N. Y. 585).

"Aiding and abetting" must either precede or accompany the commission of the crime. Where one is indicted and placed on trial, and the evidence fails to show that he committed the offense charged, but tends to prove that after said offense had been committed by another the accused performed acts in the interests of the other for the purpose of covering up the crime and of preventing detection and punishment, such subsequent acts do not constitute "aiding and abetting" of the crime within the meaning of the Ohio statute. State v. Lingafelter, 83 N. E. 897, 898, 77 Ohio St. 523.

A finding that a person "aided and abetted" the promoters of a corporation in a fraudulent scheme implies an intentional participation with knowledge of the object to be attained. Lomita Land & Water Co. v. Robinson, 97 Pac. 10, 15, 154 Cal. 36, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1106.

The words "aids or abets," as used in U. S. Rev. St. § 5209, providing that every person who with intent to deprive a national banking association of its funds aids or abets any clerk or agent in any violation of such section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, are to be construed according to their natural import, and are satisfied by proof that accused actually participated in such misappropriation, and of concurring acts performed by him to that end. Kelher v. United States, 193 Fed. 8, 13, 114 C. C. A. 128.

The furnishing by the defendant of a machine that happened afterwards, without his privity, to be used for gambling, does not constitute either the "aiding, abetting, or assisting" in the keeping of a gambling resort. State v. Flynn, 72 Atl. 296, 297, 76 N. J. Law, 473.

AIDER AND ABETTOR

See, also, Particeps Criminis.

"An 'aider and abettor' is one who advises, counsels, procures, or encourages another to commit a crime, whether personally present at the time and place of the commission of the offense or not." Flickinger v. United States, 150 Fed. 1, 9, 79 C. C. A. 515. An aider or abettor may be one who so far participates in the commission of a crime as to be present for the purpose of assisting therein if necessary. In such a case he will also be liable as principal. Brinegar v. State, 118 N. W. 475, 476, 82 Neb. 558.

"To constitute one an 'aider and abettor' in the commission of a crime, he must be present when it is committed, aiding, advising, or assisting therein. Upon the other hand, though he be not present when the crime is committed, if its commission nevertheless results from his advice or assistance or by his procurement, he is equally guilty with the perpetrator of the crime, but as an 'accessory before the fact.'" Wheeler v. Commonwealth, 87 S. W. 1106, 1109, 120 Ky. 697; Vogel v. State, 119 N. W. 190, 197, 138 Wis. 315. To make one an 'aider and abettor,' he must participate in the crime, sharing the criminal intent of the principal. Landrum v. Commonwealth, 96 S. W. 587, 589, 123 Ky. 472.

An aider generally is one who gives aid and comfort, or commands, advises, or encourages another to commit a crime, and persons who were in the employ of accused's employer, and with accused as leader went armed upon land in another's possession, and by force compelled the possessors to vacate and destroyed property thereon, were "aiders and abettors" in the offense of forcible trespass. State v. Davenport, 72 S. E. 7, 15, 156 N. C. 596.

One present at the commission of a trespass, encouraging or exciting it by words, gestures, looks, or signs, or who by any means countenances and approves the trespass, is in law deemed to be an "aider and abettor," and liable as principal. Hunt v. Di Bacco, 71 S. E. 584, 587, 69 W. Va. 449.

AIDFUL

Proper synonymous, see Proper.

AILMENT

See Personal Ailment.

Other serious ailment, see Other.

A person does not consult a physician and is not treated for an "ailment" within the meaning of a question in an insurance application, by merely stating to a physician that he has a headache and receiving medicine therefor, without asking or receiving any professional advice. Modern Woodmen of America v. Miles (Ind.) 97 N. E. 1009. Nor is pregnancy or confinement an ailment. Rascot v. Royal Neighbors of America, 108 Pac. 1048, 1053, 18 Idaho, 85, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 433, 138 Am. St. Rep. 180.

AIM

The words "aim and point," as used in a statute which makes it an offense to "point or aim" a gun, etc., are synonymous. Coleman v. State, 48 South. 181, 182, 94 Miss. 860.

To "aim" a weapon at another is to point it intentionally. There is a distinction between the words "aim," "point," and "level." "Aim" expresses more than the other two words, inasmuch as it denotes a direction towards some minute point in an object, and the others imply direction towards the whole objects themselves. We "aim" at a bird; we "point" a cannon against a wall; we "level" a cannon at a wall. "Pointing" is, of course, used with most propriety with reference to instruments that have points. It is likewise a less decisive action than either aiming or leveling. A stick or finger may be pointed at a person merely out of derision; but a blow is leveled or aimed with an expressed intent of committing an act of violence. Livingston v. State, 65 S. E. 812, 6 Ga. App. 805 (quoting Crabbe's English Synonyms).

The word "aim," as used in Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2073, which provides that it shall be unlawful for any person over the age of 10 years, with or without malice, purposely to point or aim any pistol or other firearm, either empty or loaded, towards any other person, is used in the disjunctive, and under such circumstances the statute may be violated by doing either or both of the forbidden acts. The accused may be charged (1) with having purposely pointed the pistol at and towards another; (2) with having purposely aimed the weapon at and towards another; and (3) with having purposely pointed and aimed the weapon at and towards another. Eaton v. State, 70 N. E. 814, 162 Ind. 554.

AISLE

Greater New York Charter makes the manager of a theater subject to penalty for causing or permitting any person to stand or sit in the "aisles and passageways" during performances, or for neglecting or refusing to cause such persons to forthwith vacate such aisles on being notified of their occupancy thereof. Held that, where the only entrance to the main floor of a theater is through a center door, and persons entering such door are compelled to pass behind the rows of seats to gain the aisle on either side of such floor, the space in the rear of the seats between the said aisles is embraced within the term "aisles and passageways" of the charter. Waldo v. Seelig, 126 N. Y. Supp. 798, 800, 70 Misc. Rep. 254.

ALCOHOL

"Alcohol" is a product of fermentation. It is separated, not produced, by distillation, and the liquor thus separated, containing a percentage of alcohol, is spirituous liquor. Pennell v. State, 123 N. W. 115, 116, 141 Wis. 35.

ALCOHOLIC COMPOUND

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, for "alcoholic compounds," does not include herbs immersed in alcohol. United States v. Stone & Downer Co., 171 Fed. 293. Fresh leaves of aconite and belladonna, and fresh roots of bryonia, immersed in their natural condition in alcohol for preservation, are not "alcoholic compounds," as used in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, 30 Stat. 151. Boericke & Runyon Co. v. United States, 126 Fed. 1018, 1019. But the term does include a mixture of fine-cut herbs and alcohol, in which the alcohol mainly serves as a preservative in the importation of the leaves, but continues in use after importation, for the purpose of producing a tincture, although there might be no justification for holding that the purpose of using the alcohol as a mere preservative determines classification under this provision. United States v. Stone & Downer Co., 175 Fed. 33, 34, 99 C. C. A. 49.

ALCOHOLIC LIQUORS

The phrase "alcoholic or spirituous liquors" necessarily means intoxicating liquors. Marks v. State, 48 South. 864, 159 Ala. 71, 133 Am. St. Rep. 20.

"Alcoholic" means containing or pertaining to alcohol, which is a volatile organic body, a limpid colorless liquid, hot and pungent to the taste, having a slight, but not offensive, scent. It has but one source, fermentation, and is extracted from its by-products by distillation; its purity and strength depending on the degree of perfection of distillation. While it is the intoxicating principle of all intoxicating drinks, within the meaning of ordinary prohibition statutes, it is rarely in its pure state used as a beverage. Marks v. State, 48 South. 864, 866, 159 Ala. 71, 133 Am. St. Rep. 20.

The general words "alcoholic, spirituous, malt, or intoxicating liquors," as used in the prohibition statute of 1907 (Acts 1907, p. 81), import only liquors that will produce intoxication when drunk to excess, and, under an indictment using such words as descriptive of the offense, it is only necessary, to make out a prima facie case, for the state to show that the particular liquor sold was within one of the classes, and the burden is then upon defendant to prove that the liquor was not intoxicating when drunk to excess, or was not a beverage or reasonably capable of being used as such. Stoner v. State, 63 S. E. 602, 603, 5 Ga. App. 716.

The term "alcoholic liquors" does not embrace medicinal, toilet, and culinary preparations recognized as such by standard authority (such as the United States Dispensatory) not intended to be used as intoxicating beverages, and not reasonably capable of being so used, such as paregoric, essence of lemon, essence of ginger, bay rum, cologne, wood alcohol, and the like, although such articles are liquid, contain alcohol, and may produce intoxication. Roberts v. State, 60 S. E. 1082, 1086, 4 Ga. App. 207.

ALCOHOLIC PRINCIPLE

The words "alcoholic principle," as used in Laws N. D. 1909, c. 187, defining intoxicating liquor as a beverage retaining the alcoholic principle as a destructive force, have no reference whatever to quantity, but only to some characteristic or quality. The Legislature evidently meant to connect, without reference to quantity, two qualities, viz., the intoxicating quality present in alcohol with that found in other poisonous drugs, possibly those, or some of those, mentioned in the latter part of the act. State v. Fargo Bottling Works, 124 N. W. 387, 391, 19 N. D. 396, 26 U. R. A. (N. S.) 872.

ALCOVE

An "alcove" is not a room, but merely part of the room. People ex rel. Cornman v. Butler, 105 N. Y. Supp. 117, 118, 120 App. Div. 590.

ALCOVE ROOM

An "alcove room," as used in a statute requiring that every room in a tenement house shall have at least one window, is a room with an alcove, and the words did not refer to the alcove itself, which is only a recess or part of such room. People ex rel. Cornman v. Butler, 105 N. Y. Supp. 117, 118, 120 App. Div. 590.

ALIAS

Or construed as alias, see Or.

Sometimes a man is known by several different names, and it was formerly the custom, in drawing indictments, to charge him under all the names by which he was known; connecting them with the words "alias dictus," or with simply "alias." These words mean "otherwise called" or "otherwise." State v. Howard, 77 Pac. 50, 51, 30 Mont. 518.

ALIAS WRIT

An "alias writ" is a second writ issued when the first has failed its purpose. Municipal Court Act, § 26, provides that an action must be commenced by the service of summons. Section 30 provides that, if defendant cannot be found, the clerk, at the request of plaintiff, shall issue another summons, to be known and stamped "alias." Held, that service of an "alias" summons is not fatally defective, although the original summons is not also served therewith. Lawrence v. Bernstein, 92 N. Y. Supp. 817, 818, 46 Misc. Rep. 608 (quoting and adopting definition in Cent. Dict.).

An "alias summons" is issued when the original has not produced its effect because defective in form or manner of service, and, when issued and served, it supersedes the first writ. Mansur v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. of California, 118 S. W. 1193, 1194, 136 Mo. App. 726.

ALIBI

See Complete Alibi.

The defense of an "alibi" is that accused was not present at the place where the crime was committed. State v. Massey (Del.) 82 Atl. 243, 244; State v. Bond, 90 S. W. 830, 832, 191 Mo. 555 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Bishop's New Cr. Proc. § 1061); State v. Roberts (Del.) 78 Atl. 305, 309; O'Hara v. State, 124 S. W. 95, 97, 57 Tex. Cr. R. 577; Burns v. State, 79 N. E. 929, 75 Ohio St. 407 (citing Walters v. State, 39 Ohio St. 215; Lytle v. Boyer, 33 Ohio St. 506); Tinsley v. State, 106 S. W. 347, 351, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 81.

"Alibi" as a defense to a criminal charge means accused's absence from the scene of the alleged crime at the time of its commission thus making it impossible for him to have perpetrated it. Williams v. State, 51 S. E. 322, 324, 123 Ga. 138; People ex rel. Genna v. McLaughlin, 130 N. Y. Supp. 458, 461, 145 App. Div. 513.

The defense does not deny that the crime was committed, but is designed to prove that the defendant during the whole time was so far from the place where the crime was committed that he could not have participated in it, and such defense is not made out by mere proof that accused was not present at the commission of the crime. People v. Conners, 92 N. E. 567, 570, 246 Ill. 9; People v. Lukoszus, 89 N. E. 749, 751, 242 Ill. 101.

The proof must cover the whole of the time of the commission of the crime, so as to render it impossible, or highly improbable, that the defendant could have committed the act. Briggs v. People, 76 N. E. 499, 503, 219 Ill. 330.

An "alibi" is a defense that if an offense was committed at the time and place alleged, defendant was at that time at another and different place from that at which the offense was committed, and therefore was not and could not have been the person who committed it. Crowell v. State, 120 S. W. 897, 903, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 480.

The term "aliens," as used in Immigration Act Feb. 20, 1907, c. 1134, 34 Stat. 898, applies only to alien immigrants, and not to alien residents. United States v. Tsuji Suekichi, 199 Fed. 750, 751, 118 C. C. A. 188.

Act Cong. March 3, 1903 does not apply to alien residents returning to the United States after a temporary absence. United States v. Nakashima, 160 Fed. 842, 845, 87 C. C. A. 646.

The provision of the naturalization act of June 29, 1906, c. 3592, § 4, cl. 6, 34 Stat. 596 that "when any 'alien who has declared his intention' to become a citizen of the United States dies before he is actually naturalized the widow and minor children of such alien may, by complying with the other provisions of this act, be naturalized without making any declaration of intention," must be construed to include persons who made their declarations under the old statute, and subsequently died, whose minor children may be naturalized under the new act without making any declaration of intention. In re Shearer, 158 Fed. 839, 841.

Persons born out of the limits and jurisdiction of the United States, the father at the time of their respective births not being a citizen of the United States, are born "aliens." The status, as aliens, of children born in a foreign country of alien parents, is not changed by the naturalization of their father as a citizen of the United States by taking out his second papers while the children are detained in custody as immigrants at Ellis Island, and they remain subject to exclusion under the immigration laws for a dangerous contagious disease contracted before their embarkation; such children not being affected by Rev. St. § 2172, which provides that the minor children of persons duly naturalized, if dwelling in the United States, shall be considered as citizens thereof. United States v. Williams, 132 Fed. 894, 895.

A foreign-born Chinese woman, though married to a Chinaman of American birth, is an "alien," within the meaning of the provisions of the act of Congress for the deportation of any alien found as an inmate of a house of prostitution within three years subsequent to her entry into the United States. Low Wah Suey v. Backus, 82 S. Ct. 734, 737, 225 U. S. 460, 56 L. Ed. 1165.

Under the express terms of Act Cong. March 2, 1907, c. 2534, § 3, 34 Stat. 1228, c. 2534, respecting the expatriation of citizens, an American woman became an "alien" by marrying an alien, though she continued to reside in the United States, and hence was incompetent to act as a witness in support of his petition for naturalization. In re Martorana, 159 Fed. 1010, 1011.

The word "alien," within Act Cong. Feb. 20, 1907, c. 1134, § 20, 34 Stat. 904 which provides that any "alien" who shall enter the United States in violation of the law, and such as become public charges from causes existing prior to landing, shall be deported at any time within three years after the date of entry, is not synonymous with "immigrant," but is intended as a broader term, and includes a Russian unmarried woman, who entered the United States in 1897 or 1898, and remained therein continuously until March, 1908, when she returned to Russia, after having engaged in prostitution for a considerable time, and who attempted to re-enter the United States in June, 1908, she being within three years thereafter an alien of the excluded classes and subject to deportation. Ex parte Hoffman, 179 Fed. 839, 841, 103 C. C. A. 327.

The word "alien" as used in Immigration Act March 3, 1903, § 18, which requires officers of vessels to take due precaution to prevent aliens from landing therefrom, except at the time and place designated by the immigration officers, having replaced the term "alien immigrants" in a previous statute, is used in its broad and full meaning, and hence is not restricted to alien immigrants, but includes as well aliens who are members of the ship's crew. Taylor v. United States, 152 Fed. 1, 4, 81 C. C. A. 197.

ALIEN IMMIGRANT

The term "alien immigrant" is a less comprehensive term than "alien." Taylor v. United States, 152 Fed. 1, 4, 81 C. C. A. 197.

"In the statutes regulating immigration, an 'alien immigrant' is one who offers to take up his residence here, but has not yet carried out this desire." An alien, who in good faith has acquired and maintains his residence in the United States, on his return from a temporary absence in a foreign country, is not an "alien immigrant" within the meaning of the immigration statutes, but has the right to leave and re-enter the United States, with the same freedom as a resident who is also a citizen. In re Buchsbaum, 141 Fed. 221, 223 (quoting and adopting definition in In re Panzara, 51 Fed. 275).

Whether an alien who has once been admitted into the United States, but who, without being naturalized, afterward returned to the country of his original domicile, upon again coming to this country, is an "alien immigrant," within the meaning of the immigration act depends upon the circumstances of the particular case. If, on his first entry, he left a family in his native country, to which he returned, without any definite intention of again coming to the United States, and leaving neither business nor property here, he cannot be considered to have acquired a domicile here, which takes him out of the operation of the statute when he again applies for admission without his family. United States v. Rodgers, 191 Fed. 970, 978, 112 C. C. A. 382.

A native of Porto Rico, who was an inhabitant of that island at the time of its cession to the United States by a treaty of April 11, 1899, 30 Stat. 1754, with Spain, is not, upon her arrival at the port of New York, an "alien immigrant," within the meaning of Act Cong. March 3, 1891, c. 551, 26 Stat. 1084, providing for the detention and deportation of alien immigrants likely to become public charges. Gonzales v. Williams, 24 Sup. Ct. 177, 192 U. S. 1, 48 L. Ed. 817.

When defendant's ship was anchored off shore at a Mexican port, a number of native peddlers came on board to sell their wares. When one of them came on deck to go ashore, he found that the vessel had started, and proceeded some distance. Defendant refused his request that he be taken back, and landed, but promised to stop and leave him on the return trip, and thereupon put him at work, but without placing him on the crew list. On arriving at San Francisco an immigration officer notified defendant not to land the Mexican without permission, but the latter stated he did not wish to land, but wanted to be taken back home, and he was not confined. Just before the vessel sailed, however, he left it without the consent or knowledge of defendant or any of his officers, and had not returned when she left the port. Held, that such facts were not sufficient to warrant defendant's conviction for neglecting to detain an alien not entitled to land, as such Mexican was not an "alien immigrant" who left a foreign shore to come to the United States for the purpose of becoming a permanent resident here; all the acts and agreements affirmatively appearing to have been made in the utmost good faith, and not for the purpose of evading any law. Moffitt v. United States, 128 Fed. 375, 379, 63 C. C. A. 117.

ALIEN—ALIENATE—ALIENATION

See Inalienable; Involuntary Alienation; Power of Alienation; Suspension of Power of Alienation; Voluntary Alienation.

"Alienate" means to make over to another title or right and is given as a synonym of "surrender." Kessler v. Claves, 125 S. W. 790, 801, 147 Mo. App. 88 (citing Stand. Dict.). But, "any transfer of real estate short of a conveyance of title is technically not an 'alienation' of the estate." Hubbell v. Hubbell, 113 N. W. 512, 515, 135 Iowa, 637, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 496.

"To 'alienate' real estate is a voluntary parting of the ownership of it, either by bargain and sale, or by some conveyance, or by gift or will." In re Lands of Five Civilized Tribes, 199 Fed. 811, 829 (quoting from Burbank v. Rockingham Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 24 N. H. 550, 57 Am. Dec. 300).

"The word 'alienation' usually means the act by which the title to real property is voluntarily transferred by one person to and accepted by another, and such act is generally accomplished by the execution of a deed or of a will." Kalyton v. Kalyton, 78 Pac. 332, 45 Or. 116 (quoting Burbank v.

Rockingham Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 24 N. H. 550, 57 Am. Dec. 300).

"Alienation" is the voluntary and complete transfer from one person to another, and if it be concerning the transfer of property it involves the complete and absolute exclusion, out of him who alienates, of any remaining interest, or particle of interest, in the thing transmitted. It involves the complete transfer of the property and possession of lands, tenements, or other things to another. Orrell v. Bay Mfg. Co., 36 South. 561, 563, 83 Miss. 800, 70 L. R. A. 881 (citing Stark v. Duvall, 7 Okl. 217, 54 Pac. 454).

The word "alienation" means the transfer of the property and possession of land, tenements, or other things from one person to another, and is particularly applied to absolute conveyances of real property. Where a testator directs that his trustees have and exercise all requisite power, including that of alienation, necessary or convenient for the management of the estate and the division and distribution thereof, the use of the word "alienation" clearly imports an intention on the part of the testator to confer on the trustees the power to alienate or transfer the real estate if it should be necessary for the proper management of the estate or for the division and distribution thereof in the manner contemplated by the will. Dickson v. New York Biscuit Co., 71 N. E. 1058, 1063, 211 Ill. 468.

The words "alienable" and "alienating" are used in Const. art. 10, relating to conveyance of homesteads, in the sense of conveying or transferring the legal title of any beneficial interest in the exempt homestead during the life of the owner, and, the method by which the homestead may be alienated being expressly prescribed in the Constitution to be by joint consent and deed or mortgage duly executed by the husband and wife, all other methods of alienation are prohibited. Thomas v. Craft, 46 South. 594, 596, 55 Fla. 842, 15 Ann. Cas. 1118.

The word "alienation" was not used in its technical sense in Act Cong. March 3, 1885, c. 139 (23 Stat. 340), providing for the allotment of lands to the Indians residing on the Umatilla reservation, and declaring that the law of alienation and descent in force in the state of Oregon shall apply after patents have been executed. Kalyton v. Kalyton, 78 Pac. 332, 45 Or. 116.

The word "alienate" signifies a transfer of property and implies the right by title to do so; and hence a contract of conditional sale under which the buyer acquired no title or interest, and which entitled the seller to immediate possession of the property if it was taken on attachment, was not repugnant to the interest created or a restraint on alienation, within Civ. Code, § 711, declaring that conditions restraining alienation, when repugnant to the interest created, are void.

Morris v. Allen, 121 Pac. 690, 698, 17 Cal. App. 684.

Contract to convey

A contract for the sale of insured property does not of itself constitute an "alienation," within the meaning of an insurance policy declaring that a change of insured's interest shall work a forfeiture. Finkbohner v. Glens Falls Ins. Co., 92 Pac. 818, 320, 6 Cal. App. 379.

Deed of trust or mortgage

A mortgage is not a "sale" or "alienation," within Ky. St. § 4021, providing that the lien on property for taxes shall not be defeated by sale or alienation, unless made more than five years before suit to enforce the lien. Rissberger v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 118 S. W. 819.

A mortgage in Kansas, being merely security for a debt, conveys no title, and is not an "alienation," within the meaning of the homestead act. A mortgage upon government land, made by a claimant holding under the homestead act, prior to final proof, for the purpose of procuring money to improve the land, or for any purpose, provided it is not intended thereby to transfer the title in evasion of the statute, is not void, nor in violation of the homestead laws. Stark v. Morgan, 85 Pac. 567, 568, 570, 571, 73 Kan. 453, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 934, 9 Ann. Cas. 930.

An act empowering a married woman to "alienate" her lands with the assent and concurrence of her husband, evidenced by his joining in the conveyance, of its own force authorized a married woman to execute a deed of trust on her land to secure her debts. Collier v. Alexander, 38 South. 244, 245, 142 Ala. 422.

A mortgage given to secure a loan by an intermarried citizen of one of the Five Civilized Tribes, not of Indian blood, on his surplus lands, is a conveyance amounting to an "alienation" within the meaning of Act Cong. April 21, 1904, c. 1402, § 1, 33 Stat. 204, removing all restrictions on alienation by such allottees except as to homesteads. Frame v. Bivens, 189 Fed. 785, 790.

Descent or devise

"The word 'alienate' means, among other things, the power of disposition by will." A deed by the United States to an Indian forbidding alienation deprives him of the power to dispose of the property by will. Jackson v. Thompson, 80 Pac. 454, 456, 38 Wash. 282.

The words "alienable" and "inalienable," used to restrict the disposition of lands in the supplemental agreement with the Chickasaws and Choctaws (Act July 1, 1902, c. 1362, 32 Stat. 642, 643, pars. 12, 15, 16), include disposition by will. Taylor v. Parker, 126 Pac. 573, 33 Okl. 190; Hayes v. Barringer, 168 Fed. 221, 223, 98 C. C. A. 507.

The word "alienable," in the New York Real Property Law, making an expectant estate "descendible, devisable and alienable in the same manner as an estate in possession," empowers the owner of an expectant estate to deal with it in all respects as he might were he actually in possession of the property. New York Life Ins. & Trust Co. v. Cary, 83 N. E. 598, 600, 191 N. Y. 83.

Lease

A lease of a homestead is an "alienation" thereof within the Constitution, and is void unless signed by the lessor's wife. Mailhot v. Turner, 121 N. W. 804, 805, 157 Mich. 167, 133 Am. St. Rep. 333.

A lease of an Indian allottee's lands constitutes an "alienation." Duff v. Keaton, 124 Pac. 291, 294, 33 Okl. 92, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 472; Eldred v. Okmulgee Loan & Trust Co., 98 Pac. 929, 930, 22 Okl. 742; Barnes v. Stonebraker, 113 Pac. 903, 905, 28 Okl. 75; Sharp v. Lancaster, 100 Pac. 578, 579, 23 Okl. 349.

ALIENATION OF AFFECTIONS

Malice in actions for alienation of affections, see Malice.

The gist of the action for "alienation of affections" is the loss of consortium, namely, conjugal fellowship, company, co-operation, and aid of the husband or wife; and alienation of affections is a matter of aggravation. Such an action is maintainable by the wife as well as the husband. Dodge v. Rush, 28 App. D. C. 149, 152, 8 Ann. Cas. 671.

"Alienation of a wife's affections" includes all wrongful interference by others, causing her to leave her husband or do things destructive of marital happiness. It does not necessarily imply that she has been debauched; but neither her voluntary bestowal of affections upon one who did nothing wrongful to gain it, nor her intercourse with one who did not seduce her, will support the action. De Ford v. Johnson, 133 S. W. 393, 395, 152 Mo. App. 209.

ALIGNMENT

The word "alignment," used with reference to a system of drainage, means the ground plan of the work. Board of Directors of Plum Bayou Levee Dist. v. Roach, 174 Fed. 949, 953, 99 C. C. A. 453.

ALIMONY

See Decree for Alimony; Order Granting or Refusing Alimony; Permanent Alimony.

Judgment for alimony as money judgment, see Money Judgment.

"Alimony" in its origin was the method whereby the spiritual courts of England enforced the duty of maintenance owed by husband to wife during their legal separation, and, in modern jurisprudence, is the allowance made to a woman on divorce for support out of her husband's estate. Anderson v. Norvell-Shapleigh Hardware Co., 113 S. W. 733, 734, 134 Mo. App. 188.

"The amount given to the wife in a decree of divorce is generally called 'alimony.' This term is derived from a Latin word which primarily meant to nourish; that is, to supply the necessities of life. It was introduced into divorce proceedings by the early ecclesiastical courts of England, and in the early practice of those courts it was defined to be 'that support which the husband, on separation, is bound to provide for the wife, and is measured by the wants of the wife and the circumstances and the ability of the husband to pay.'" Fall v. Fall, 113 N. W. 175, 181, 75 Neb. 104, 121 Am. St. Rep. 767 (citing Cole v. Cole, 31 N. E. 109, 142 Ill. 19, 19 L. R. A. 811, 84 Am. St. Rep. 56).

"Alimony" is that provision which the law makes for the support of the wife, on the dissolution of the marriage, out of the estate of the husband, after separation, in lieu of his common-law obligation to support her as wife, if they had continued living together. Muir v. Muir (Ky.) 92 S. W. 314, 316, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 909.

"Alimony" is an allowance to the wife on the termination of the marriage relation by divorce, the authority to grant which is purely statutory. Wallace v. Wallace, 72 Atl. 1083, 75 N. E. 217. The term as used in the Constitution and statutes of new Hampshire means that provision or allowance which is made to a wife upon a divorce from the bonds of matrimony. Wallace v. Wallace, 67 Atl. 580, 581, 74 N. H. 256, 13 Ann. Cas. 293 (citing Sheafe v. Sheafe, 24 N. H. 564, 567; Parsons v. Parsons, 9 N. H. 309, 318, 319, 32 Am. Dec. 362).

In general, "alimony" is not awarded as a penalty, but as a substitute for marital support; the right thereto being wholly statutory and subject to revision as provided by Rev. Laws 1905, §§ 3590, 3592. Haskell v. Haskell, 138 N. W. 787, 789, 119 Minn. 484; Lally v. Lally, 138 N. W. 651, 654, 152 Wis. 56.

The support and maintenance which may be secured in an equitable action is not "alimony," as the word is to be understood in the divorce statutes. Stephen v. Stephen, 113 N. W. 918, 102 Minn. 301.

"The word 'alimony' used in Rev. St. 1881, §§ 5184-5185, in relation to the judgment for support and maintenance, is used in its primary sense of nourishment, sustenance, and means of living." Smith v. Smith, 74 N. E. 1008, 1010, 35 Ind. App. 610 (quoting and approving Carr v. Carr, 83 N. E. 805, 6 Ind. App. 377).

The word "alimony" as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 111, providing that no person shall be imprisoned for a longer period than six months on a fine for contempt of court in the nonpayment of alimony in a divorce case, where the amount is $500 or more, includes both temporary and permanent alimony, whether granted by an interlocutory order or by final judgment, and hence, where a husband in a suit for separation had served a term for failure to comply with an order for temporary alimony, he was not subject to further imprisonment for failing to pay later installments thereafter maturing. People ex rel. Levine v. Shea, 94 N. E. 1060, 1063, 201 N. Y. 471.

Continuous or gross payments

Every provision for support in a judgment in divorce, whether it requires payment of money at intervals or in a gross sum is to be regarded as "alimony." Brenger v. Brenger, 125 N. W. 109, 112, 142 Wis. 26, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 887, 135 Am. St. Rep. 1050, 19 Ann. Cas. 1136.

"Originally 'alimony,' in its technical significance, meant an allowance of money payable in periodical installments, not in gross." "'Alimony' is not a sum of money, nor a specific proportion of the husband's estate, given absolutely to the wife; but it is a continuous allotment of sums payable at regular intervals for her support from year to year." Kusel v. Kusel, 81 Pac. 295, 296, 147 Cal. 57 (quoting 1 Bouv. Law Dict. 131, and citing the definition in 2 Bishop, Mar. & Div. §§ 834, 835).

"Alimony," in general terms, "is the allowance which a husband pays by order of court to his wife while living separate from him." Where a stipulation for the dismissal of a suit for divorce bound the husband to pay certain monthly installments to the wife for her separate maintenance, such installments were in the nature of alimony, to recover which a separate suit in equity was maintainable, as provided by Kirby's Dig. § 2675. Shirey v. Hill, 98 S. W. 731, 732, 81 Ark. 137.

As debt

See Debt.

Dependent on means of parties

"Alimony," by whatever authority it is conferred, is an incident of marriage, and based on the principle that it is the duty of the husband to support his wife, and not necessarily to endow her. It signifies, primarily, not a certain portion of his estate, but an allowance or allotment adjudged against him for her subsistence, according to his means and their condition in life during their separation, whether it be for life or for years. Bialy v. Bialy, 133 N. W. 496, 499, 167 Mich. 559, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 800.

Division of property distinguished

"Alimony" is not to be granted on the theory of division of the husband's estate, as in the case of his death, nor on the theory of dissolution of a business partnership; but the controlling element must be contribution for the wife's support and maintenance under the obligations of the marriage contract, though in practical application an award of permanent alimony in gross may result in a division of the husband's estate. Bialy v. Bialy, 133 N. W. 496, 499, 167 Mich. 559, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 800.

"Alimony" has for its basis maintenance only, while a division of property has for its basis the giving to each party the portion of the property justly and equitably due, without regard to the necessities of the case. Bowers v. Bowers, 78 Pac. 430, 481, 70 Kan. 164.

As estate or property right

"Alimony" is "purely incidental to divorce proceedings, and is an allowance out of the divorced husband's estate, made to the divorced wife for her support and maintenance. In this state it has no existence as a separate and independent right. It must be adjudged, if at all, in the divorce proceedings, and cannot be the subject-matter of an independent suit." Rariden v. Rariden, 70 N. E. 398, 33 Ind. App. 284, 104 Am. St. Rep. 252.

Estate of husband distinguished

"Alimony" is a technical word, theoretically restricted to personalty, and practically to money. It is payable out of the husband's estate, real as well as personal. But the word never covers the estate itself." This is the meaning of the word "alimony," as used in Comp. St. 1901, c. 25, § 22, providing that in case of a divorce the court may decree to the wife such part of the personal estate of the husband, and such alimony out of his estate, as it shall deem just and reasonable. Hence the district court, in a suit for divorce, has no jurisdiction to award real estate of the husband to the wife in fee as alimony. Cizek v. Cizek, 99 N. W. 28, 30, 69 Neb. 797, 5 Ann. Cas. 464.

Maintenance of children

The word "alimony," in Pub. Acts 1899, No. 330, allowing imprisonment for nonpayment of alimony, includes allowance for the support and education of children. Brown v. Brown, 97 N. W. 396, 397, 135 Mich. 141.

"Alimony" is one thing, and an allowance for the maintenance of the minor children is another. "Alimony" is for the maintenance and support of the divorced wife." Lukowski v. Lukowski, 88 S. W. 274, 275, 108 Mo. App. 204.

ALIMONY PENDENTE LITE

"Alimony pendente lite," strictly speaking, is that allowance which the husband may be compelled to pay his wife to prosecute the suit for divorce or separation, or to defend and answer where the proceedings are instituted by him; but an allowance as alimony pendente lite may also be made in an action for alimony without divorce, where the wife is without means and the husband is able to furnish them. Brady v. Brady, 39 South. 237, 239, 144 Ala. 414.

ALIZARIN ASSISTANT

Soluble grease, a preparation of tallow used in the process of dyeing cotton cloth for softening the fabric after the application of the dye, is not dutiable as an "alizarin assistant," but as an unenumerated manufactured article. Abram De Ronde & Co. v. United States, 140 Fed. 92, 93.

ALL

See Either, Any or All.

"All" means every one, or the whole number of particulars (quoting Words and Phrases, p. 312). Heitman v. Commercial Bank of Savannah, 65 S. E. 590, 597, 6 Ga. App. 584.

The word "all," as an adjective of number, means the whole number of; every one of. Encyclopædic Dictionary. In considering whether the statute of Merton, in which the words "omnes viduus" were used, applied to each of the five kinds of dower, Lord Coke observed, "Qui omne dicit nihil excludit"—who says all does exclude nothing. 2 Inst. 81. We would not be understood, however, as asserting that the word, as used in legislation, is always to be understood as an all inclusive one. As so used, it is a general term, which is to be understood as comprehending whatever is within the outmost circle of the meaning of the word, unless, after subjecting the statute to interpretation and construction, there is sufficient reason for holding that the term was not used in so broad a sense. Pittsburgh, C., O. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Lighthouse, 71 N. E. 218, 222, 163 Ind. 247.

Gen. Laws 26th Leg. p. 29, c. 11, set apart to the school fund all the unappropriated public domain of the state, and provided for its survey, classification, and sale. Gen. Laws 27th Leg. p. 253, c. 88, amending the act of the Twenty-Sixth Legislature, provided that tracts or parcels of unsurveyed school lands containing 640 acres or less, and which were detached from other public lands, might be sold without the condition of actual settlement. An act passed at the same session of the Legislature (Laws 27th Leg. p. 292, c. 125, §§ 7, 9), a few days after the passage of the above amendatory act, provided that "all" lands which are or may become detached shall be sold to actual settlers only and repealed all inconsistent acts. Held, that as the act of the Twenty-Sixth Legislature and its amendment dealt with unsurveyed lands, and the last-mentioned act dealt with lands which had been surveyed and sectionized as school lands, the provisions of the amendatory act permitting sale of detached lands of less than 640 acres without the conditions of actual settlement was not repealed by the last-mentioned act. Considering the acts as dealing with different classes of school lands, section 7 must be construed as applying to the surveyed school lands, and the word "all" must be understood as meaning "all" of that class. The generality of the word "all" is frequently to be restrained not only by the context of the statute, but by its general form and scheme as the intention of the Legislature may appear. McGrady v. Terrell, 84 S. W. 641, 642, 98 Tex. 427 (citing Bivins v. Vinzant's Lessee, 15 Ga. 521; State v. Townley, 18 N. J. Law, 314).

As any or each

Under a will providing that all the legatees shall accept such legacies in full satisfaction of all claims against testator or his estate, the words "all the legatees" mean "each" of them, and the legatees who were willing to accept under the will could do so, regardless of the acceptance of the others. Shaver's Adm'r v. Ewald's Ex'r, 134 S. W. 906, 907, 142 Ky. 472.

The word "all" is used in the sense of "any" in a mortgage stipulating that, on default of payment of "all taxes, interest on prior mortgage, charges, and assessments," the mortgagee may pay the same and enforce a lien on the premises, etc. Weinstein v. Sinel, 117 N. Y. Supp. 346, 348, 133 App. Div. 441.

A will provided that upon the decease or marriage of testator's widow the estate should go to testator's three unmarried daughters, so long as they should remain unmarried, and in case they "all" should marry it should be equally divided between testator's five children or the issue of deceased children. Held, that the daughters took the use of the fund during the time they remained unmarried, as joint tenants, with right of survivorship between them, and so long as any of the daughters remained alive and unmarried the trust continued for their benefit, although others had died unmarried, so as to make it impossible that "all" should ever marry. Trenton Trust & Safe Deposit Co. v. Armstrong, 62 Atl. 456, 457, 70 N. J. Eq. 572.

As every

Every as all, see Every.

The word "all" has a distributive as well as a collective meaning. One of the definitions given by the Standard Dictionary is "the entire number," each individual or member being taken separately; and under the word "distributive," the Standard Dictionary says, "all" and "every" are distributive words. Young v. Du Bois, 113 N. Y. Supp. 456, 457, 60 Misc. Rep. 381.

As the whole

"The word 'all' does not mean some, nor a part, but means the whole." Joslin v. Williams, 107 N. W. 837, 839, 76 Neb. 594 (quoting and adopting definition in Haverly v. Elliott, 57 N. W. 1010, 39 Neb. 201).

The word "all," as used in the law giving a farm laborer a preferred lien on all the crops produced, means the "entire quantity; the whole amount." Beckstead v. Griffith, 82 Pac. 764, 767, 11 Idaho, 738.

All actions or proceedings

The phrase "all actions or proceedings," in Rem. & Bal. Code, § 6226, which provides that any receiver or other fiduciary required by law to give bond as such may include as a part of his lawful expenses such reasonable sum paid to a corporation for such suretyship as the head of the department, court, judge, or officer or body by which he was appointed allows, and that in "all actions or proceedings" the party entitled to recover costs may include therein such reasonable sum as may have been paid such company for executing any such bond, as may be allowed by the court or judge before whom the action or proceeding is pending, is sufficiently broad to justify an allowance to an appellant as part of the costs on an appeal of the premium paid for the appeal bond; the section not being limited to fiduciary bonds the expense of which has been allowed by the court. Church v. Wilkeson-Tripp Co., 109 Pac. 113, 114, 58 Wash. 262, 137 Am. St. Rep. 1059.

The expression "all civil actions and proceedings at law and in equity" in Laws 1905, c. 295, which gives the superior court of a particular county jurisdiction concurrent with the circuit court of that county in "all civil actions and proceedings at law and in equity," with an immaterial exception, is extensive and general, rather than restrictive and particular, and confers on the superior court or the judge thereof the same power to appoint commissioners in condemnation proceedings as is possessed by circuit courts or judges. Wisconsin River Imp. Co. v. Pier, 118 N. W. 857, 859, 187 Wis. 325, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 538.

All bills payable

Guaranty of "the payment of all bills payable by this contract" includes a balance of the total amount remaining unpaid. Klosterman v. United Electric Light & Power Co., 60 Atl. 251, 252, 101 Md. 29.

All cases

The term "all cases," of which the Supreme Court has appellate jurisdiction under Const. of 1898, includes civil and criminal cases. State v. Judge of First District Court, 37 South. 546, 548, 113 La. 654.

While Levee Act, § 58, which provides that justices of the peace shall have jurisdiction of proceedings to extend drainage districts, does not authorize an appeal to the circuit court, an appeal is authorized under Hurd's Rev. St. 1911, c. 79, § 115, which allowed appeals from judgments of justices of the peace in all cases, except on judgments confessed; the expression in "all cases" including the particular statutory proceeding in question, as the Legislature did not except it from the general statute. Lower Salt Fork Drainage Dist. v. Smith, 100 N. E. 179, 180, 257 Ill. 52.

The provision of article 3, § 2, of the federal Constitution, that "the judicial power shall extend * * * to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction" is not to be so construed as to annul the provisions of a treaty giving consular representatives of another nation jurisdiction over controversies between officers and seamen of vessels of such nation, the word "all" in such provision being used for the purpose of excluding jurisdiction of the states over admiralty and maritime causes. The Koenigin Luise, 184 Fed. 170, 173.

All charges

See Free of All Charges.

All contracts of insurance

The words "all contracts of insurance," as used in Act Pa. May 1, 1876, declaring that the agent of any insurance company of any other state or government which does not comply with the laws of Pennsylvania shall be personally liable on all contracts of insurance made by or through him, directly or indirectly, for or on behalf of the company applies only to contracts of insurance on property in Pennsylvania. Though the language is inclusive of all contracts, yet, as the liability it imposes is an extraordinary and penal one, it should not be held to embrace anything beyond what clearly appears to have been contemplated by the Legislature; and, for ascertainment of the legislative intent, attention is not to be confined to the words employed, but the familiar rule must be applied, "that a thing may be within the letter of the statute, and yet not within the statute, because not within its spirit, nor within the intention of its makers." Rothschild v. Adler-Weinberger S. S. Co., 130 Fed. 866, 867, 65 C. C. A. 350.

All costs and damages

"All costs of suit" generally include all charges to which a successful party is entitled, including attorney's fees. Chalutz v. Wisconsin Cent. Ry. Co., 128 N. W. 425, 427, 143 Wis. 623.

An undertaking on appeal from a judgment of a justice to pay "all costs," covers costs on appeal. Johnson v. Glaspey, 113 N. W. 602, 603, 16 N. D. 335. In a suit in admiralty brought in forma pauperis, a decree was entered dismissing the libel, from which an appeal was taken, and a surety entered into a stipulation conditioned that appellant should "answer all damages and costs" if he failed to make his plea good. Held that on an affirmance of the decree by the appellate court, "with costs," the respondent is entitled to a decree against the libellant and the surety for his costs in both the appellate and district courts. The Joseph B. Thomas, 158 Fed. 559, 560.

An appeal bond, operating as a supersedeas, given on appeal from a decree in equity which directs the payment of money from the appellant to the appellee, conditioned as required by Rev. St. § 1000, and in accordance with rule 29 of the Supreme Court and rule 13 of the Circuit Court of Appeals, to "answer all damages and costs" if appellant fails to make its appeal good, covers the amount of the decree appealed from, as well as damages for delay and costs. American Surety Co. of New York v. North Packing & Provision Co., 178 Fed. 810, 811, 102 C. C. A. 258.

The phrase "all costs herein expended," as used in a judgment reciting, "It is therefore considered and adjudged by the court that this cause be dismissed, and that defendant recover from the plaintiff all costs herein expended," meant "only such costs as were authorized by law, and could be properly taxed in favor of the defendant below." Casto v. Elgeman, 70 N. E. 807, 162 Ind. 506 (citing Wilson v. Jenkins, 46 N. E. 889, 147 Ind. 533; Mott v. State, 44 N. E. 548, 145 Ind. 353).

The phrase "all damages," as used in a bond given to a sheriff to indemnify him against all damages sustained by a levy on personal property, is broad language, and must be construed to include every element of damages which may fairly be said to have been contemplated by the parties, and covers attorney's fees which the sheriff was compelled to pay in defending an action for conversion of the property levied on, after notice to the obligors to defend and their refusal to do so. Cousins v. Paxton & Gallagher Co., 98 N. W. 277, 278, 122 Iowa, 465.

Civ. Code 1902, § 2484, making a landlord making excessive distress liable for "all damages" sustained by the tenant, authorizes the recovery of punitive and compensatory damages for an excessive distress. Jones v. McCreary Land & Investment Co., 64 S. E. 225, 226, 82 S. C. 456.

A railroad company incorporated under an act which provides that the state may, on expiration of a fixed period, repeal the act, provided the company shall be compensated for "all damages" by reason of the repeal, is, on the repeal of the act, entitled to compensation for the loss of its franchise. Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. State, 111 N. W. 735-738, 148 Mich. 151.

Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 3068, provides that any railroad company operating a line within Oklahoma Territory shall be liable for all damages sustained by fire originating from operating the road. Held, that the term "all damages" as so used should be construed as limited to indemnity recoverable by a person who has sustained an injury either in his person, property, or relative rights through the act or default of another, not including such acts as are damnum absque injuria, and hence a complaint by a husband against a railroad company for alleged mental anguish, suffering, terror, and other states of mind of his wife, caused by fire alleged to have been negligently set out by defendant railroad approaching their dwelling disassociated from any acts of personal injury or violence, did not state a cause of action. Tiller v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 189 Fed. 994, 1000.

All creditors

Creditors as including, see Creditors.

All damages

A deed conveying all the coal underlying land together with the free and uninterrupted right of way into, upon, or under the land, so far as may be necessary in the mining and carrying away the coal, "hereby waiving all damages," includes within the waiver injuries resulting from mining and removing all the coal, and waives the grantor's right to surface support. Stilley v. Pittsburgh-Buffalo Co., 83 Atl. 478, 480, 234 Pa. 492, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 236.

All debts and liabilities

Where the only express provision in a trust deed requiring the trustees to pay the grantor's debts applied to debts contracted by the grantor prior to the execution of the deed, a subsequent clause directing the trustees to convert the remaining part of the grantor's estate into cash, and distribute it after having paid "all the debts and funeral expenses" of the grantor, does not broaden the express provision as to what debts of the grantor the trustees shall pay, so as to entitle a creditor of the grantor, whose debt was contracted subsequent to the execution of the deed, to enforce his claim against the trust estate; the trust deed having been duly recorded prior to contracting the debt. Smith v. Taylor, 72 N. E. 651, 652, 34 Ind. App. 194.

The term "all debts" in a guaranty by defendant of payment of all debts due plaintiff by a commission company included, not only debts which the company might contract directly, but also debts of other persons to plaintiff, which the company might thereafter become liable for, and therefore included the company's liability as indorser on a note. Union Nat. Bank of Mahoney City, Pa., v. Rockefeller, 111 S. W. 883, 884, 132 Mo. App. 252.

A partner agreeing on the dissolution of the firm to assume "all liabilities" of the firm assumes the liability of the firm in favor of an employe injured through its negligence, especially where there was evidence that the employe's suit was contemplated and discussed as a possible liability, though the co-partner then insisted that there was no liability, but without falsely representing to the partner any of the facts. Binyon v. Smith, 112 S. W. 138, 140, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 396.

All delinquent taxes

The word "all" in Laws 1909, c. 57, which provides that all delinquent taxes for stated years shall be distributed to the general county fund and general school fund of the respective counties in which they are collected, should be construed as used in a restrictive sense, excluding from the operation of the act taxes levied for city purposes. Territory v. Pinney, 114 Pac. 367, 370, 15 N. M. 625.

All detail drawings

"All detail drawings," which were required by a contract for structural steel work to be furnished by the owner, was a plan showing the position of each column, beam, etc., and not "shop drawings and punching sheets." New York Architectural Terra Cotta Co. v. Williams, 92 N. Y. Supp. 808, 814, 102 App. Div. 1.

All elections

Const. Schedule, § 18, making the qualifications of electors in "all elections" those prescribed by article 2, meant all elections ordained by the Constitution or mentioned in the Schedule itself, not including local option elections. Willis v. Kaimbach, 64 S. E. 342, 346, 109 Va. 475, 132 Am. St. Rep. 908.

Const. art. 2, § 2, which provides that in "all elections," not otherwise provided for by the Constitution, every white male citizen 21 years of age, with certain residence qualifications, shall be entitled to vote, while intended to apply to the election of constitutional officers, contemplates only elections for officers by whose acts all the people within a district are to be affected, and does not extend to an irrigation district, in which only the landowners have any interest and in which a nonresident owner has the same interest as a resident owner; and hence L. O. L. § 6168, as amended by Laws 1911, pp. 378-404, providing that any person, male or female, of the age of 21 years, whether a resident or not, who is a bona fide holder of land situated in it, may vote at an election, is not in conflict with the Constitution, and an election thereunder was valid. Board of Directors of the Payette-Oregon Slope Irr. Dist. v. Peterson (Or.) 128 Pac. 837, 840.

All expenses

Any and all necessary expenses, see Any.

The term "all expenses," as used in an agreement by a real estate agent to take charge of certain property and pay all expenses, must be deemed to include the annual taxes, and such other expenses or payments as an agent in full charge of property of such a character for a term of years would reasonably be required to pay out of the income in the process of a good management. Seymour v. Warren, 71 N. E. 260, 261, 179 N. Y. 1.

The words "all expenses incurred," in Acts 1905, c. 167, § 75, authorizing the board of commissioners to issue bonds for the construction of a highway improvement to an amount not exceeding the contract price, and "all expenses incurred" and damages allowed prior to the letting of the contract, mean the expenses incurred in the performance of the work required by the act; and, though a petition must be filed to obtain an improvement, a petitioner employing an attorney to draw the petition cannot charge his fees to the construction fund. Overmeyer v. Board of Com'rs of Cass County, 43 Ind. App. 403, 86 N. E. 77, 78.

All hope of recovery

See Lost All Hope of Recovery.

All I may possess

Where a will, after containing certain legacies, devised to testator's wife the residue of all the real and personal property that he owned at the date of the will, and also the residue of "all I may possess at my death," it gave to the wife any property he might acquire between the date of the execution of the will and the date of his death. Mueller v. Buenger, 83 S. W. 458, 465, 184 Mo. 458, 67 L. R. A. 648, 105 Am. St. Rep. 541.

All improvements

The words "all improvements thereon," in an assignment of original letters patent for an improvement in pulp-beating engines and "all improvements thereon," include all improvements on the improvement in engines for which the original letters patent were granted. Marshall Engine Co. v. New Marshall Engine Co., 85 N. E. 741, 742, 199 Mass. 546.

All incumbrances

A conveyance by plaintiff's remote grantor, "subject to all incumbrances of record," applied only to valid incumbrances, and did not preclude plaintiff from attacking a void municipal assessment levied against the property. Carter v. Cemanaky, 102 N. W. 438, 439, 126 Iowa, 506.

All inhabitants

In Const. 1776, art. 4, conferring the right to vote on "all inhabitants" having certain qualifications, the quoted phrase is limited to those having the right to vote before the adoption of the Constitution. Carpenter v. Cornish, 83 Atl. 81, 82, 83 N. J. Law, 254.

All inside and outside repairs

A covenant by a tenant in a lease to make "all inside and outside repairs" includes damages to the building rendering it unfit for occupancy by its collapse through the weight of snow on its roof, and therefor the tenant cannot refuse to pay rent for such reason. A general covenant is binding upon the tenant under all circumstances. If the injury proceeds from an act of a stranger, from storms, floods, lightning, accidental fire, or public enemies, he is as much bound to repair as if it came from his own voluntary act. Such has been the settled rule since the time of Henry III. If the tenant desires to relieve himself from liability for injuries resulting from any of the causes above enumerated, or from any other cause whatever, he must take care to except them from the operation of his covenant. May v. Gillis, 66 N. Y. Supp. 4, 5, 53 App. Div. 393.

All interest

A direction to testamentary trustees to pay to a beneficiary "all the interest" arising out of the personal property, including the proceeds of the sale of real estate, entitles the beneficiary to the net income only after the payment of taxes and other necessary expenses incidental to the care and handling of the property. Goodwin v. McGaughy, 122 N. W. 6, 7, 108 Minn. 248.

All inventions of like nature

An inventor's agreement to assign "all inventions of like nature or similar thereto" is not limited to mere improvements on the inventions, though including them. Davis & Roesch Temperature Controlling Co. v. Tagliabue, 160 Fed. 372, 373.

All items

A clause on a postal card to a bank, acknowledging receipt of a draft drawn on the bank, that "all items sent to us are credited subject to payment," applies only to items drawn upon banks other than the one giving the notice. Walnut Hill Bank v. National Reserve Bank, 121 N. Y. Supp. 892, 893, 65 Misc. Rep. 315.

All kinds

The term "licenses of all kinds," as used in a statute providing that the town council shall prescribe by ordinance the manner in which "licenses of all kinds" shall be applied for and granted, is broad enough to include state as well as municipal licenses, and therefore vests in the council sole power to grant or refuse state or municipal licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors. State v. Harden, 58 S. E. 715, 728, 729, 62 W. Va. 813.

All levies

The words "all levies," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, making void "all levies or other liens, obtained through legal proceedings against a person who is insolvent, at any time within four months prior to the filing of a petition in bankruptcy against him in case he is adjudged a bankrupt," are used in their most comprehensive sense, covering any and all seizures of property of the bankrupt within the four-months period, under legal process looking to the enforcement of claims against the bankrupt which would be released by his final discharge, and cover a seizure of property on a writ of replevin. In re Hynes Buggy & Implement Co., 130 Fed. 977, 980.

All likelihood

See In All Likelihood.

All merchantable timber or trees

Where defendant's grantor sold defendant "all the merchantable pine timber from 12 inches square at the stump and upwards" to be cut and removed within 15 years, the measurement referred to the date of the deed. Where defendant's grantor sold "all the merchantable pine timber 12 inches square" on certain land, defendant was only entitled to timber that would square 12 inches at the date of the deed, excluding the bark. Whitfield v. Rowland Lumber Co., 67 S. E. 512, 513, 152 N. C. 211.

In a contract for the sale of standing timber, a description of the timber sold as, "all merchantable yellow poplar, ash, and cucumber trees" owned by us on a certain tract of land, is sufficiently definite to pass title to the timber. Hays v. McLin, 72 S. W. 339, 340, 115 Ky. 39.

All money in any bank

Moneys deposited by the son of testatrix to his individual account are not included in a bequest of "all moneys in any banks" deposited in my name for my benefit," though a part of the sum so deposited had been collected by the son as agent of testatrix; and where the son, as executor, accounts for the amount of certain checks drawn on the account to the order of testatrix, which checks she held without presentation for payment, the assets represented by the checks should be distributed as part of the residue of her estate not specifically bequeathed.

In re Baker, 137 N. Y. Supp. 530, 533, 77 Misc. Rep. 90.

All my estate

A devise of "all my estate" by one who owns an undivided interest only in property does not show intent to devise more than his interest. Waggoner v. Waggoner, 68 S. E. 990, 992, 111 Va. 325, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 644. The phrase includes all the community estate of the testator and his wife and puts the wife to her election whether to take under the will or claim her statutory rights. Couts v. Holland, 107 S. W. 913, 915, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 476 (citing In re Stewart, 15 Pac. 445, 74 Cal. 98).

All my just debts

See Pay All My Just Debts.

All my lands

A devise of "all my lands" by one who owns an undivided interest only in property does not show intent to devise more than his interest. Waggoner v. Waggoner, 68 S. E. 990, 992, 111 Va. 325, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 644.

All my property

A devise of "all my property" is sufficient to include both real and personal property. Caffey v. Tindall, 56 South. 177, 99 Miss. 851.

There is no difference between the phrases "all my property" and "all the property I possess," as used in a will devising such property. Thomas v. Blair, 35 South. 811, 813, 814, 111 La. 678.

A devise of "all my property of every kind" is plain and free from ambiguity, and excludes the idea that the devise is subject to the curtesy of the husband of the testatrix in the real estate. Balster v. Cadick, 29 App. D. C. 405, 408.

All, and not merely one-half of community property of which testator became the absolute owner by the death of his wife after the making of his will, passed under it, it in terms purporting to cover all his property, "real, personal, and mixed, and where-soever the same may be," notwithstanding a provision whereby he declared that "all of the estate" of which he was possessed was his separate estate, except a certain lot, and that, in his disposition of his estate by the will, he had undertaken to dispose of "all" his separate property and one-half of the community property. In re Lur's Estate, 85 Pac. 147, 149, 149 Cal. 200.

All of which one may die possessed

A gift of "all of which one may die possessed" carries only the net amount of the estate. Blakeslee v. Pardee, 56 Atl. 503, 505, 76 Conn. 263.

All personal property

As money, see Money.

Bank stock being declared to be personal property by Code 1904, p. 608, § 1173a, subsec. 7, such stock was covered by a city ordinance imposing a tax on "all" personal property of every description, including capital stock of banks located within the city, though the latter clause should be construed as referring to the capital of the bank. West v. City of Newport News, 51 S. E. 208, 208, 104 Va. 21.

All persons

The term "all persons," in an act providing that a conveyance certified and recorded shall impart notice to all persons of the contents thereof, means all persons who acquired interests as subsequent purchasers or mortgagees, and it was not intended that the record should be notice to all the world, or even to purchasers or mortgagees, in relation to other matters. McCabe v. Grey, 20 Cal. 509, 516.

The words "all persons concerned," as used in the orphans' court act requiring a citation to "all persons concerned" when a caveat is put in against proving a will, mean the caveators and the proponents, and service of citation upon them gives the court jurisdiction over the question of probate. In re Myers' Estate, 64 Atl. 138, 139, 69 N. J. Eq. 793.

The phrase "all persons interested," as used in Civ. Code Prac. § 499, subsec. 1, providing that a person desiring a division of land held jointly with others may file a petition containing a statement of the names of "those having an interest" in the land, and thereon "the persons interested" in the property who have not united in the petition shall be summoned to answer, refer to persons owning an interest in the land under the same title, and do not include the holder of a lien on the undivided interest of one of the owners. Barry v. Baker (Ky.) 98 S. W. 1061, 1062.

Where, in a suit for 160 acres of land, defendant disclaims as to all but 49 acres thereof, to which it sets up title in virtue of alleged condemnation proceedings pursuant to act of Congress approved February 28, 1902 (Act. Feb. 28, 1902, c. 134, 32 Stat. 43), which requires notice by the referees "to all persons interested," and where the notice given is "to all persons having any claim or any interest in said described premises of whatsoever kind or nature," without naming the plaintiffs who were conceded to be the owners thereof, held, that said notice was void and conferred no jurisdiction on the court, and that, too, although the judgment approving the report of the referees recited that they "gave notice in the manner as provided by law." Bruner v. Ft. Smith & W. R. Co., 127 Pac. 700, 701, 83 Okl. 711.

Labor and materials used in the prosecution of a public work, whether furnished under the contract directly to the contractor or to a subcontractor, must be deemed within the obligation of a surety company under a bond executed pursuant to Act August 13, 1894, conditioned for the prompt payment of the contractor to "all persons supplying labor or materials in the prosecution of the work provided for in said contract," in view of the manifest purpose of that statute to protect those whose labor or materials has contributed to the prosecution of the work. United States v. American Surety Co. of New York, 26 Sup. Ct. 168, 170, 200 U. S. 197, 50 L. Ed. 437.

All pipes

The term "all pipes," as used in P. L. 1876, p. 316, § 21, regulating the laying of gas pipes in streets, and providing that "all pipes" shall be placed at the greatest practicable distance from the nearest part of any other gas pipe then laid, etc., refers to main or distributing pipes only, and not to service pipes. Atlantic City Gas & Water Co. v. Consumers' Gas & Fuel Co., 61 Atl. 750, 751, 70 N. J. Eq. 536.

All probate matters

While the word "probate" in a technical sense means the official proof of an instrument offered as a last will and testament, the term "probate matters," as used in Const. art. 6, § 20, providing that probate courts, when established, shall have original jurisdiction of "all probate matters," means the settlement of estates, including the granting of letters, testamentary or of administration, the collection of assets, allowance of claims, payment of debts, and the sale of real estate, if necessary for that purpose, and the distribution of the property to those, entitled thereto by the laws of descent or by the will, but does not include the administration of testamentary trusts. In re Mortenson's Estate, 94 N. E. 120, 121, 248 Ill. 520, 21 Ann. Cas. 251.

Const. art. 6, § 20, declares that the General Assembly may provide for the establishment of a probate court in each county having over 50,000 population, which courts, when established, shall have original jurisdiction of "all probate matters," the settlement of estates of deceased persons, the appointment of guardians and conservators, and in cases of sales of real estate of deceased persons for the payment of debts. Held, that "probate matters" as so used meant matters pertaining to the settlement of estates of deceased persons, and did not include the administration of testamentary trusts, and hence Act June 14, 1909 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 37, §§ 239f-239k), attempting to extend the jurisdiction of probate and county courts to the administration of testamentary trusts, in so far as it related to probate courts being an attempt to vest such courts with an unconstitutional jurisdiction, and this being one of the controlling purposes for the act, it was void in toto. Frackelton v. Masters, 94 N. E. 124, 127, 249 Ill. 30.

All property

Words of general description used in reference to taxation, such as "all property," include everything of that kind not expressly, or by necessary implication, excepted. Under the amended charter of St. Louis, providing that "all the property" fronting on or adjoining an improvement shall be subject to a special assessment therefor," property constituting part of a railroad's right of way located in a special assessment district is subject to assessment. Heman Constructing Co. v. Wabash R. Co., 104 S. W. 67, 70, 206 Mo. 172, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 112, 121 Am. St. Rep. 649, 12 Ann. Cas. 630.

The phrase, "all property, both real and personal," as used in the statute designating the property that shall constitute a married woman's separate property, being used in a general sense, a married woman, joined by her husband, can make a valid conveyance of her expectancy in the community estate of her mother. Daggett v. Barre (Tex.) 135 S. W. 1099, 1101.

Act Feb. 14, 1855, amending the charter of Northwestern University and exempting from taxation "all property, of whatever kind and description, belonging to or owned by said corporation," applies to real estate acquired after the adoption of such amendment, though such corporation has acquired such a large amount of real estate within the village in which it is situated as to impair the revenues of such village. Northwestern University v. Hanberg, 86 N. E. 734, 735, 237 Ill. 185.

All purposes

See For All Purposes.

All qualifications

Under the statute providing that a special judge must possess "all the qualifications of a circuit judge," it is not necessary that a special judge shall be a resident of the district. Commonwealth v. Carnes, 98 S. W. 1045, 1046, 124 Ky. 340.

All regular policies of insurance

An insurance policy insuring a brig against "risks contained in all regular policies of insurance, being an insurance against the 'usual risks,'" was insurance against loss by capture, and parol evidence was inadmissible to prove that the parties understood it as covering sea risks only. Levy v. Merrill, 4 Me. (4 Greenl.) 156, 161.

All right, title and interest

A conveyance of all the "right, title, and interest" which the grantor has in and to the land described in his deed, conveys only the right, title, and interest which he actually has at the time of the conveyance.

It assumes to convey no more. The grant, in the deed, is of all his right, title, and interest in the land, and not of the land itself, or any particular estate in the land. It passes no estate which is not then possessed by the party. Coe v. Persons Unknown, 43 Me. 432, 436.

A deed purporting to convey "all the right, title, and interest in real estate" is understood to convey nothing more than the interest or estate of which the grantor is seised or possessed at the time and does not operate to pass or bind an interest not then in existence. There is an equal distinction between a contract to convey land absolutely and a contract to convey an interest in land. Ward v. Foley, 141 Fed. 364, 366, 72 C. C. A. 140 (quoting and adopting definition in Van Rensselaer v. Kearney, 52 U. S. [11 How.] 297, 13 L. Ed. 703).

All road crossings

The words "all road crossings," as used in Cobbey's St. 1907, § 11,963, providing that telephone wires shall be placed at the height of not less than 20 feet above all road crossings, refers to private as well as public roads. Weaver v. Dawson County Mut. Telephone Co., 118 N. W. 650, 651, 82 Neb. 696, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1189.

All sums

The expression "all sums due to employes" means sums due at the time of the decretal order appointing the receivers, and which accrued before it. Dickinson v. Saunders, 129 Fed. 16, 21, 63 C. C. A. 666.

The phrase "all sums of money," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 2730, providing that commissions shall be paid to executors and administrators upon "all sums of money" received and paid out, does not include specific securities, or unsold real estate, bequeathed in trust, in advance of their conversion into money. In re Wanninger, 105 N. Y. Supp. 4, 5, 120 App. Div. 273.

Code Civ. Proc. § 3320, as amended in 1904, provided that a trustee shall receive commissions on "all sums of principal" received and paid out. "All sums of principal" would apply as well to securities in bulk as it would to money received. The principal of a trust consists of the securities in which the trust is vested, and, whether they are turned over to the trustee in specie or money, the trustee has received the principal of the estate. Robertson v. De Brulattour, 98 N. Y. Supp. 15, 27, 111 App. Div. 882.

All the evidence

The phrases "all the evidence in the case," and "all the other circumstances appearing in the trial," are not equivalents, and the use of the latter instead of the former, in an instruction in a criminal prosecution is erroneous. Ryan v. People, 122 Ill. App. 461, 464.

All the lumber

A contract by which defendant appoints plaintiff its agent for the sale of "all the lumber" to be sawed on specified land, which refers to certain by-laws of defendant by which contracts are revocable at the pleasure of defendant's directors, may be revoked by defendant's directors at any time; the reference to "all the lumber" being descriptive of his agency while it existed. Bradlee v. Southern Coast Lumber Co., 79 N. E. 777, 778, 183 Mass. 378.

All the rest, residue, and remainder

The mere enumeration of certain articles in a bequest to the residuary legatee, followed by the words and "all the rest and residue of my estate," does not necessarily make the bequest specific as to the things enumerated. Le Rougetel v. Mann, 3 Atl. 746, 748, 63 N. H. 472.

Where a testator, after creating in his residuary estate a trust to raise and pay the widow a certain income for life in lieu of dower, and to raise a certain income for his son for life, directed the trustees to divide all the rest, residue, and remainder of his estate into two equal parts, the words "all the rest, residue, and remainder of my estate" were intended to cover the remainder of the property held in trust for the annuity of the widow. Thomas v. Thomas, 89 N. Y. Supp. 495, 497, 43 Misc. Rep. 541.

All valid liens

The phrase "all valid liens," in Ky. St. § 2316, providing that all valid liens on the personality of a lessee created before the property was carried onto the premises shall prevail against a distress warrant for rent, means such liens as are valid under other provisions of the statutes. Wender Blue Gem Co. v. Louisville Property Co., 125 S. W. 732, 735, 137 Ky. 339.

All wills

The phrase "all wills," used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1322, declaring that all wills duly proved in any other state or country may be allowed and recorded in any county where testator shall have left any estate, should be construed to mean all foreign wills, and to include all wills, other than domestic wills, duly approved and allowed in any of the United States or in any foreign country or state. In re Clark's Estate, 82 Pac. 760, 761, 148 Cal. 108, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 996, 113 Am. St. Rep. 197, 7 Ann. Cas. 306.

All years to come

The Houston city charter of 1803, which provides that all delinquent taxes due the city for the year 1875 up to and including the year 1896, and for "all years to come," may be collected by suit, being a copy of the provisions of city charters granted in 1897 and 1899, authorizes the city to sue for all taxes due it for the year 1875, and up to and including the year 1896, and all years thereafter; for the words "and for all years to come" must mean the years after 1896. City of Houston v. Dooley, 89 S. W. 777, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 371.

ALL OTHER

All other alterations

A sign constructed on the roof of a building was not an alteration within a lease which required the lessee to make certain alterations, consisting of an addition to the building, the putting in of store fronts, and other changes necessary to convert the upper part into bachelor apartments, and that "all other alterations" should be made subject to the landlord's approval, as it did not change the nature or character of the building, but was merely a use to which the outside of it could be applied. Brown v. Broadway & Seventy-Second St. Realty Co., 116 N. Y. Supp. 806, 807, 181 App. Div. 780.

All other causes

See Independently of All Other Causes.

All other creditors

The term "all other creditors," in the Alabama Constitution, giving to holders of bank notes and depositors who have not stipulated for interest a preference of payment over "all other creditors" in case of the bank's insolvency, means and includes, among others, depositors who have stipulated for interest and also persons who have lent money to the bank on notes. A holder of a bank's certificate of deposit, payable on a fixed date with interest, is a creditor of the bank on a loan made to it for a fixed period on which interest is stipulated for, and is not a "depositor" within the meaning of the Constitution. Taylor v. Hutchinson, 40 South. 108, 109, 110, 145 Ala. 202.

All other debts

The words "all other debts," in the article of the Louisiana Code providing that whenever the widow and minor children of a deceased person shall be left in necessitous circumstances they shall be entitled to receive $1,000 to be paid in preference to "all other debts" except those for vendor's privileges and expenses incurred in selling the property, include all privileged debts with the exception of vendor's privileges and expenses of sale. The claim of the widow and minor children is superior to the "expenses of last illness" and all other general privileges set forth in the statute. Succession of Campbell, 40 South. 449, 450, 115 La. 1035.

All other grants, gifts and devises

The word "other," as used in Const. art. 8, § 4, providing that all other grants, gifts, and devises that have been or may hereafter be made to the state shall be applied to the support and maintenance of the common schools, means other than the grants, gifts, and devises specified in sections 2 and 3 of the article. McMurtry v. Engelhardt, 98 N. W. 40, 42, 5 Neb. (Unof.) 271.

All other losses

A marine policy insuring against perils of the sea and "all other losses" extended to accidents occurring in the course of necessary repairs while the vessel was on a railway or in a dock or hove down upon a beach or by a wharf. Swift v. Union Mut. Marine Ins. Co., 122 Mass. 573, 575.

All other necessary charges

Rev. Laws, c. 25, § 15, empowering towns to appropriate money for specified purposes and for "all other necessary charges arising in such town," is an authorization to raise and appropriate money in respect to matters as to which it has a corporate duty, right, or interest to perform, defend, or protect. The question whether liquors shall be sold in a town being one for local determination, and no license having been voted therein, the municipality has such an interest in the enforcement of the law as to warrant it in appropriating money to indemnify a special police officer and a constable who had been subjected to expense by reason of an action brought against them in consequence of complaints made by them in good faith of violations of the liquor law. Leonard v. Inhabitants of Middleborough, 84 N. E. 323, 198 Mass. 221.

All other officers

The words "all other officers," within a statute making a county treasurer the custodian of public funds of the county, and requiring those into whose hands funds come to turn them over to the treasurer, and making it the duty of the county treasurer and "all other officers" of the county having county funds in their possession or under their control to deposit them in the depositories designated by the board of supervisors, include deputies of the treasurer and persons appointed to perform his duties, as authorized by law, but who are not designated as treasurer. Board of Sup'rs of Gratiot County v. Munson, 122 N. W. 117, 118, 157 Mich. 505.

Election Law, § 97, provides that circuit courts may hear contests of the election of judges of the county courts, mayors of cities, presidents of county boards, presidents of villages, in reference to the removal of county seats and in reference to any other subject which may be submitted to the vote of the people, and shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the county court in all cases mentioned in section 98, which declares that the county court shall hear and determine contests of election of all other county, township, and precinct officers and all other officers for the contesting of whose election no provision is made. Held, that such sections should be construed in pari materia, and that the phrase "all other officers," used in section 98, should be read "all other like officers," so that the county court of S. county had jurisdiction to try a contest for the offices of trustees of the Pleasure Drive-way and Park District of a city located in such county, whether the park district be considered a municipal or quasi municipal corporation. Baker v. Shinkle, 94 N. E. 58, 59, 249 Ill. 154.

All other proceedings

The phrase "all other proceedings," in Pol. Code, § 3787, which makes a tax deed conclusive evidence of the regularity of all other proceedings than those enumerated in section 3786 as to which the deed is prima facie evidence only, does not include omission of a jurisdictional prerequisite to a valid sale. A tax deed is therefore not conclusive that the delinquent list and published notice stated the correct amount of taxes, penalties, and costs due. Warden v. Broome, 98 Pac. 252, 254, 9 Cal. App. 172.

All other property

A will commenced with the statement that testator wished to make a suitable disposition of all such personal property as he might leave, and then proceeded to dispose of such personal property, after which followed this clause: "It is my will and wish that 'all other property' of which I die possessed be applied to the payment of my debts and I hereby give and bequeath to my wife all the rest and remainder of my property, to have and to hold the same for her and her assigns forever." Held, that testator intended to devise real estate by such residuary clause. Mills v. Tompkins, 97 N. Y. Supp. 9, 10, 110 App. Div. 212.

All other purposes

Under Laws 1901, p. 318, c. 132, § 202, providing that personal property of corporations taxable under section 187a (page 316) shall be exempt from taxation for "all other purposes," and section 187a, requiring trust companies to pay a tax on their capital stock and profits, the personal property of such companies is exempt from local assessment and taxation. People ex rel. Poughkeepsie Trust Co. v. Lane, 83 N. Y. Supp. 606, 607, 41 Misc. Rep. 1.

All other school officers

The term "all other school officers," used in How. St. § 5132, as amended by the act of 1885, which requires a majority vote to elect the "trustees and all other school officers," means the moderator, director, and assessor, who comprise the board of the primary school district. Cleveland v. Amy, 50 N. W. 298, 294, 88 Mich. 279, 374.

All other taxes

As used in Gen. Laws 1907, p. 479, c. 18, levying gross earnings annual occupation tax on street railways and declaring in section 22 that the tax so levied shall be in addition to "all other taxes" with the exceptions defined by the act, the words "all other taxes" include all taxes except those specified in section 25, which prescribes the taxes from which corporations shall be exempt, including occupation taxes imposed by act 1905 (Laws 1905, p. 217, c. 111). Hence the act of 1907 did not impliedly repeal so much of article 5049, subd. 54, as imposed occupation taxes on street railway companies, but the taxes imposed by that act were in addition to the gross earnings tax imposed under act 1907. Dallas Consol. Electric St. Ry. Co. v. State, 120 S. W. 997, 998, 102 Tex. 570.

ALL POSSIBLE CARE

"All possible care" for the safety of passengers has a broader meaning than "utmost care." "Utmost care" means the greatest care and falls short of the expression "all possible care" in this, that "utmost care" is understood to apply to the surroundings as matters stood and could be foreseen. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Brown, 40 S. W. 608, 614, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 93.

ALL RIGHT

Where defendant requested plaintiff to furnish the lumber his son asked for, saying that it would be "all right," the words "all right" imply with punctual payment. Birdsall v. Heacock, 32 Ohio St. 177, 181, 30 Am. Rep. 572.

ALLEGATION

See Immaterial Allegation; Material Allegation.

The term "allegation" has a fixed technical meaning in law; it is a term in pleading, and not in evidence. An allegation is a formal averment of a party setting forth the issue and what he proposes to prove. The disclosures by a trustee to interrogatories are not allegations by way of pleading, but a discovery. Thompson v. Dyer, 62 Atl. 76, 78, 100 Me. 421.

ALLEGE—ALLEGED

See As Alleged.

The word "alleged" in a statute providing that all prosecutions before justices of the peace for misdemeanors shall be commenced and prosecuted in the township wherein the offense is alleged to have been committed, does not refer to the allegations in the information, so that the naming of the township in the margin thereof will be sufficient to give the justice jurisdiction, no matter in what township the offense was really committed, but it was the intent that the prosecution should be commenced in the township in which the alleged offense was committed. State v. Sexton, 125 S. W. 519, 521, 141 Mo. App. 694.

Suppose synonymous

See Suppose.

ALLEY

See Bowling Alley; Private Alley; Public Alley.

Any street or public ground, see Any.

An "alley" is simply a narrow passageway. Oberhelm v. Reeside, 81 Atl. 590, 592, 116 Md. 265 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 342). A narrow street. Asbury v. Kansas City, 144 S. W. 127, 128, 161 Mo. App. 496. Webster defines it as a narrow passage, especially a walk or passage in a garden or park, bordered by rows of trees or bushes; a bordered way; a narrow passage or way in a city as distinct from a public street. Milliken v. Denny, 47 S. E. 132, 133, 135 N. C. 19.

An "alley" may be public or private. When used in a plat or statute concerning towns or cities, it will be taken to mean a public way, unless the word "private" is prefixed or the context requires a different meaning; but when used in a deed it may mean a private alley. Flaherty v. Fleming, 52 S. E. 857, 859, 58 W. Va. 669, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 461; the word "alley" when used without qualification and applied to subdivision of land into lots, ordinarily means a public alley. Shultz v. Redondo Improvement Co., 105 Pac. 118, 120, 156 Cal. 439; Talbert v. Mason, 113 N. W. 918, 921, 136 Iowa, 373, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 878, 125 Am. St. Rep. 259.

The words "streets" and "alleys" are constantly used in collocation and in legislation, there being no difference between them, except an indefinite difference in width. J. Burton Co. v. City of Chicago, 86 N. E. 93, 94, 236 Ill. 383, 15 Ann. Cas. 965.

The word "alleyway," as used in a deed granting "a free right of way for an alleyway 12 feet wide extending from" the lot conveyed across another lot owned by the grantor, is to be given the same meaning as the word "alley," which is a narrow passage or way in a city, as distinguished from a public street. Flaherty v. Fleming, 52 S. E. 857, 859, 58 W. Va. 669, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 461. But use of the term "alleyway," in a complaint for injuries, does not of itself imply that the strip has been dedicated to the public use; for one may use a part of his land as an alleyway for his business without subjecting it to a public use. Briscoe v. Henderson Lighting & Power Co., 62 S. E. 600, 603, 148 N. C. 396, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1116.

ALLOT

The word "allot," as used in a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to the Secretary of the Interior, reciting the terms of an agreement between the United States and a tribe of Indians in respect to the restoration to the public domain of lands in possession of the Indians, is to be given its technical meaning, which is that land held for allotment among the Indians is to be parceled out to them in severalty. United States v. Moore, 154 Fed. 712, 717.

The word "allot," as used in an act for the allotment of lands to Indians in severalty according to the size of the families, etc., is not a term of sale or grant, but of apportionment of that to which the parties are entitled as of right. Parr v. United States, 153 Fed. 462, 468.

The term "allotted," as used in Sess. Laws 1903, p. 246, § 33, making it the duty of the state engineer to make an examination of the streams, beginning with those streams the waters of which have not been allotted, means decreed by the proper court. Boise City Irrigation & Land Co. v. Stewart, 77 Pac. 25, 29, 10 Idaho, 38.

ALLOTTEE

The word "allottees," as used in Act April 21, 1904, c. 1402, 33 Stat. 204, refers to the parties to whom an allotment is made, and not to their heirs; and where the allottee under the said act would have been authorized to alienate his land, had he lived, the same, on his death, was alienable by his heirs, without reference to their blood. Parkinson v. Skelton, 128 Pac. 131, 132, 33 Okl. 313.

The term "allottee," as used in the Nez Perce treaty, providing that allottees, whether under the care of an Indian agent or not, should for 25 years be subject to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the sale or other disposition of intoxicants to Indians, was descriptive of the person, and not of the condition, and an Indian to whom lands had been allotted was not thereby removed from the class described in the treaty as "Nez Perce Indian allottees" by the issuance to him of a patent conveying the absolute title to his allotment prior to the expiration of the specified 25 years, so that it was no defense to a prosecution for furnishing liquor to such an Indian that he was an allottee to whom the United States had conveyed the absolute title to his allotment by patent. United States v. Zumwalt, 186 Fed. 596, 597.

ALLOTMENT

See Any Allotment.

The term "allotment," in the constitutional provision giving probate courts jurisdiction in all matters of the allotment of dower, applies to parties who claim in virtue of the title of the deceased, as the widow and heirs, and over whom the probate court may have jurisdiction. It signifies an apportionment of the interest of one or more parties entitled to a share of the estate. It does not affect strangers. Jiggitts v. Bennett, 31 Miss. 610, 613.

ALLOW

See Erroneously Allowed; Inspection Allowed.

"Allowed" and "caused" are synonymous as used in an averment that defendant negligently "caused or allowed" cotton to be damaged by fire. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith, 50 South. 241, 244, 163 Ala. 141.

To "allow" grounds of a motion is not equivalent to approving them. Gay v. Peake, 63 S. E. 650, 5 Ga. App. 583. And an order, signed by the judge, "allowing" an amendment to the motion for a new trial, is not an equivalent of the approval and verification required by law as to statements of fact contained in the grounds of a motion for new trial, and the grounds of such amendment cannot be considered on writ of error. Thornton & Warren v. Cordell, 70 S. E. 17, 8 Ga. App. 588.

A certificate of a trial judge that a bill of exceptions was presented within the time allowed but was found to be incomplete, whereupon leave was granted to complete the same, and on a subsequent day the defendant presented the bill as a completed bill of exceptions and asked that the same be signed, filed, and made a part of the record, all of which was accordingly done, to which plaintiff objected and excepted, with the signature of the trial judge, sufficiently shows that the bill was "allowed." Harden v. Card, 85 Pac. 246, 250, 251, 14 Wyo. 479.

A statute, declaring that there shall be "allowed" to a widow the personal property of her deceased husband therein described, vests in the widow an unqualified right to the property on the husband's death, and selection thereof by her is not essential, but only necessary as a designation of the particular property she elects to claim. Sammons v. Higbie's Estate, 115 N. W. 265, 267, 103 Minn. 448 (citing Kellogg v. Graves, 5 Ind. 509; Singleton v. McQuerry, 8 Ky. Law Rep. 782; Mitcham v. Moore, 73 Ala. 542).

Where a secured claim due the administratrix was indorsed by the judge of the superior court, "Allowed and approved the 14th day of March, 1899, for $23,652.30 and interest," the words "allowed and approved" must be construed to refer to the claim on which they were indorsed, and constituted a sufficient allowance of the claim as a secured claim. In re McDougald's Estate, 79 Pac. 878, 879, 146 Cal. 181.

Knowledge implied

To allow a thing to be done is to acquiesce in or tolerate; knowledge, express or implied, being essential. Sawyer v. Mould, 122 N. W. 813, 814, 144 Iowa, 185, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 602. Hypothesals that a locomotive engineer "allowed" the water to get below the crown sheet of a locomotive boiler implies knowledge on his part. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Haberland (Tex.) 125 S. W. 107, 109.

As permit

The meaning of the word "allow" is often controlled by the context. As employed in an averment in a declaration that defendant negligently "caused or allowed" cotton to be destroyed by fire, it is synonymous with "permit," one of its accepted meanings, and familiarly so in common parlance. When so read, the averment is that the defendant negligently caused or permitted the damage. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith, 50 South. 241, 244, 163 Ala. 141.

ALLOWABLE DEBT

In bankruptcy an "allowable debt" is a valid obligation of the bankrupt for which his estate may be held, and so is necessarily a provable debt, although a provable debt may not be allowable. R. P. Williams & Co. v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 75 S. E. 1067, 1070, 11 Ga. App. 635.

ALLOWANCE

See Constructive Allowance; Just Allowance.

"Allowances" are made under discretion of court, while "fees" are sums fixed by law. Nease v. Smith, 73 S. E. 910, 912, 70 W. Va. 325.

"Proof" and "allowance" of claims in bankruptcy are separate and distinct steps. In re J. M. Mertens & Co., 147 Fed. 177, 180, 77 C. C. A. 473.

Within Const. 1901, § 96, prohibiting a law not applicable to all the counties, regulating "fees, commissions or allowances" of public officers, a "salary" is a fixed compensation, decreed by authority and for permanence, to be paid at stated intervals, and depending on the time, and not on the services rendered, while an "allowance" is of the same nature with fees, commissions, and percentages, which are uncertain and variable in amount, and depend on the rendition of services which may or may not be required or performed, and sometimes on the discretion of the court ordering their payment. Brandon v. Askew, 54 South. 605, 608, 172 Ala. 160.

The word "allowances," in Code Civ. Proc. § 3369, relating to condemnation proceedings, and providing that, if judgment be rendered for defendant, costs shall be taxed at the same rates as are allowed of course to the defendant prevailing in an action in the Supreme Court, including the "allowances for proceedings before and after notice of trial," does not mean "additional allowances," and, there being no provision for notice of trial in such proceedings, the court had no power to award an additional allowance of costs to a successful defendant therein. Erie & J. R. Co. v. Brown, 107 N. Y. Supp. 980, 123 App. Div. 655.

Where the purpose of a motion by plaintiff in attachment to retax and disallow certain items of expenditure mentioned in the report of the sheriff was to determine whether or not they were correct and chargeable as costs, and at the time of the hearing the return of the ex-sheriff was on file and considered as evidence at the hearing, and this embraced items to which objections were filed, an order eliminating some of the items and allowing the balance of the sheriff's report constituted an allowance of such balance as costs in the case within 3 Mills' Ann. St. Rev. Supp. §§ 1898, 1898a, providing that a sheriff in addition to fees shall be allowed his actual expenses incurred in executing an attachment writ, and also for custodian fees not exceeding a specified sum per day. First Nat. Bank v. Deane, 104 Pac. 954-956, 46 Colo. 452.

ALLOWED BY LAW

See, also, Law.

The expression "allowed by law," employed in a statute, refers to statutory law. People v. Knapp, 132 N. Y. Supp. 747, 750, 147 App. Div. 436.

ALLUREMENT

"Alluvion" is an addition to riparian land, gradually and imperceptibly made by the water to which the land is contiguous, and may be the effect of either natural or artificial causes. State of Kansas v. Meriwether, 182 Fed. 457, 463, 106 C. C. A. 191.

"Alluvium" is applied to the most recent sedimentary deposits, such as occur in the valleys of large rivers—an imperceptible deposit usually of mingled sand and mud resulting from the action of fluvial currents. Wilson v. Watson, 138 S. W. 283, 284, 144 Ky. 352, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 774.

"Jus alluvionis" is an increase of the land adjoining by the projection of the sea casting up and adding sand and slubb to the adjoining land, whereby it is increased, and for the most part by insensible degrees." Fowler v. Wood, 85 Pac. 763, 775, 78 Kan. 511, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 162, 117 Am. St. Rep. 534.

ALLUVIUM

See Alluvion.

ALMOST

The word "almost" implies uncertainty, want of precision, and one using it within certain limits does not commit himself to exactness or positiveness, but the word also implies that the limits are narrow, and when such limits are transcended, the expression may, and sometimes must, cease to be regarded as an opinion and become a representation of a fact. Hotchkiss v. Bon Air Coal & Iron Co., 78 Atl. 1108, 1113, 108 Me. 34.

ALONG

See Jogging Along; To and Along.

As across

The word "along" means by length of, as distinguished from "across." A grant of a telephone company to erect a line "over and along the property which I own or in which I have an interest," with a right to place poles along the highways adjoining the property, does not give a grant to erect a line diagonally across grantor's lot. Zimmerman v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 51 S. E. 243, 244, 71 S. O. 523, 110 Am. St. Rep. 589.

As adjoining

The word "along," as used in Civ. Code, § 485, making railroads liable for killing or maiming animals belonging to landowners through or along whose land the railroad runs, resulting from failure to maintain suitable fences, means "adjoining," and implies "contact," and hence the section did not give a right of action to an owner or lessee of land which was separated from the railroad right of way by a public road. Barbee v. Southern Pac. Co., 99 Pac. 541, 542, 9 Cal. App. 457.

As alongside of

The word "along," as used in Mills' Ann. St. § 3934, relating to the establishment of highways and providing that notices shall be posted in the most public places "along" the public roads, means by the side of or near (citing Standard Dict.) rather than through or by the length of. Consequently, a notice posted more than a mile from the proposed road was not posted "along" such road as required by statute. Williams v. Board of Com'rs of Routt County, 84 Pac. 1109, 1110, 37 Colo. 55.

As on or over

The word "along," referring to the sidewalk on which plaintiff was injured, is a relative term, and does not with any definiteness explain the location of the stone. It does not convey the thought that the stone was in or upon the sidewalk. City of Vincennes v. Spees, 74 N. E. 277, 279, 35 Ind. App. 389; Id., 72 N. E. 531, 532.

The words "along or across," as used in a statute prohibiting the discharge of a firearm "along or across" any public road, relate to the direction in which the gun is fired, and not to the position of the person firing it, so that a person standing near the margin of a public road and firing "away" from the road does not violate such section. Scott v. State, 44 South. 544, 545, 152 Ala. 63.

The statute requiring a drainage board to cause notices to be posted "along" the line of a proposed drain is sufficiently complied with though one of the notices is posted at a post office one mile from the drain. Edwards v. Cass County, 137 N. W. 590, 592, 23 N. D. 555.

Along the river or stream

A conveyance of land "along," a nontidal stream presumptively carries title as far into the stream as the grantor possesses. Leary v. Jersey City, 189 Fed. 419, 428.

ALPHABETICAL VOTING

To vote a precinct "alphabetically" is equivalent to holding a "fake election"; the term "alphabetical" being derived from the method of fraudulently voting the voters' names as they appear in the register in alphabetical order. Scholl v. Bell, 102 S. W. 248, 260, 125 Ky. 750.

ALREADY

In statutes as affecting application

In Laws 1905, p. 224, c. 175, § 1, authorizing county commissioners of any county not already owning a county courthouse to issue bonds, the word "already" does not limit the operation of the act to counties that had no courthouse at the time of its passage, but refers also to any future time, so that when a courthouse is destroyed by any cause the county commissioners may issue bonds in an amount not in excess of 1 per cent. of the valuation to build a new courthouse. Everson v. Demann, 123 N. W. 930, 109 Minn. 328.

Money appropriated by county commissioners by ordinance remained "already appropriated" within Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 5594e1, providing that no board of county commissioners shall bind the county by any contract, etc., to any extent beyond the amount of money at the time already appropriated by ordinance for the purposes of the obligation, notwithstanding attempt to repeal the appropriation by resolution. Kraus v. Lehman, 84 N. E. 769, 772, 170 Ind. 408, 15 Ann. Cas. 849.

A second lease, executed prior to the expiration of the first lease, but not to take effect until such expiration, does not cover property "already under lease," so as to be precluded by an ordinance authorizing the committee on public property to lease any part of public buildings not already under lease; but the meaning of the ordinance is that the city shall not execute two leases covering the same property for the same period of time. City of Biddeford v. Yates, 72 Atl. 335, 337, 104 Me. 506, 15 Ann. Cas. 1091.

ALSO

See But Also.

As besides

Under Const. art. 19, § 2, providing that proposed constitutional amendments shall be published with the "Session Laws," and that the Secretary of State shall "also" cause the amendments to be published in newspapers for four successive weeks previous to the next general election, the publication for four weeks previous to the next general election relates only to newspapers and not to Session Laws, since the word "also" is used in the sense of "besides," and, "further," and means "in like manner," and since the "Session Laws" is not a serial publication or one that is made at a fixed period or at regularly recurring intervals, but is published only once as a permanent memorial for its designated contents. Pearce v. People, 127 Pac. 224, 226, 53 Colo. 399.

As in addition to

A secondary meaning of "also" is "in addition to." Platt v. Brannan, 81 Pac. 755, 756, 757, 34 Colo. 125, 114 Am. St. Rep. 147. Use of the word "also," in a testamentary clause reciting that it was "also" testator's will that, if either of his children should die without living issue, the child's share should revert, etc., was used in the sense of "additional," does not create any remainder interest in favor of the children of the testator's grandchildren. Hill v. Terrell, 51 S. E. 81, 86, 123 Ga. 49.

Tenants entered upon a five-year term January 1, 1907, and executed a bond with defendant as surety in the amount of two months' rent, conditioned for the full performance of all the obligations of the lease, and also the last two months' rent due and payable as provided by the lease being the rent for the months of November and December, 1911. Held that, as the word "also" preceding the last clause indicated an intention to include something not therefore included, there was no repugnancy in the two clauses of the obligation, and that the contract would be interpreted so as to give effect to the last clause relating to rent. Henne v. Summers, 116 Pac. 86, 88, 16 Cal. App. 67.

As in like manner

"The primary meaning of 'also,' as given in Webster's Dictionary, is 'in like manner.' The sense in which it is used depends largely upon the context. Most frequently in wills it is used in the sense of 'in like manner' or 'in the same manner.'" Where testatrix devised to her husband all her interest in a lot "in which I own an undivided one-half with my husband, 'also' all of my right" in two other lots, to have the said interests in said described portion of land for life, with a gift over, the husband acquired only a life estate in the three lots; testatrix intending but one general devise. Platt v. Brannan, 81 Pac. 755, 756, 757, 34 Colo. 125, 114 Am. St. Rep. 147 (citing the definition in Hauser v. Craft, 46 S. E. 756, 134 N. C. 319; Hysmith v. Patton, 80 S. W. 151, 72 Ark. 296; Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Stich, 59 Pac. 1082, 61 Kan. 474; Connecticut Trust & Safe Deposit Co. v. Chase, 55 Atl. 171, 75 Conn. 683; Hill v. Terrell, 51 S. E. 81, 86, 123 Ga. 49).

"Altenheim" is a German word meaning "home for old people." German Pioneer Verein v. Meyer, 63 Atl. 835, 70 N. J. Eq. 192.

ALTER—ALTERATION

See Material Alteration; Person who Makes, Alters, or Repairs.

"An 'alteration' is defined as a change effected; a changing of form or state, especially one which does not affect the identity of the subject." Chicago Lumber & Coal Co. v. Garmer, 109 N. W. 780, 782, 132 Iowa, 282; Brill v. Miller, 125 N. Y. Supp. 865, 140 App. Div. 602 (citing Cent. Dict.).

Act

Under a constitutional provision that all laws not repugnant to the Constitution are continued in force until "altered" or repealed by the Legislature, the word "altered" means to make different without destroying identity; to vary without entire change. Butler v. City of Lewiston, 83 Pac. 234, 236, 11 Idaho, 393.

Bridge

A decision of county commissioners, made on petition of a mayor and aldermen, as authorized by Pub. St. c. 112, § 129, for alteration of a railroad bridge over a highway, requiring certain additions to the upper surface of the masonry to prevent the dripping of water on the street below, requires an "alteration," within the meaning of the act, and not mere "repairs," where it appears that the bridge has remained exactly as it was built, without any injury or dilapidation. Boston & A. R. Co. v. County Com'rs of Hampden, 42 N. E. 100, 101, 164 Mass. 551.

Building

An "alteration" is generally understood as meaning a change or changes within the superficial limits of an existing structure. Brill v. Miller, 125 N. Y. Supp. 865, 867, 140 App. Div. 602.

Where improvements are limited to repairing interior arrangements of an old building to suit the convenience of the owner, they are "repairs" or "alterations," within the meaning of Mechanic's Lien Law, § 10. Grantwood Lumber & Supply Co. v. Abbott, 78 Atl. 1046, 80 N. J. Law, 564.

It cannot be said that as a matter of law that the installing of a sprinkling device is an "alteration" of a building within Labor Law, § 18, relating to unsafe scaffolds, hoists, stays, etc., since to be an alteration the system must be in some manner installed so as to become an integral part thereof and change its structural quality. Grady v. National Conduit & Cable Co., 138 N. Y. Supp. 549, 553, 153 App. Div. 401.

Labor and material necessary to put in a new sewerage system in a remodeled building were not "alterations," within a provision of the contract declaring that no alterations should be made in the work done or described by the drawings and specifications except on the written order of the architects. Mahoney v. Hartford Inv. Corp., 73 Atl. 766, 769, 82 Conn. 280.

Rev. Laws, c. 104, § 1, authorizing certain cities, for the prevention of fire, to regulate the alteration of buildings, does not authorize an ordinance prohibiting reshingling of a roof; "alteration," being used to denote a change or substitution in a particular of one part of a building for a building different in that particular. Commonwealth v. Hayden, 97 N. E. 783, 784, 211 Mass. 296.

A provision in a lease that "alterations, improvements and additions" made by the lessee at his own expense on the premises shall, at the option of the lessor, remain on the premises and become the property of the lessor at the expiration of the lease, does not apply to electric power and lighting appliances installed by the tenant for his printing presses, which are not imbedded in the walls or floors, except where it was necessary to pass the wires through the floors and which were attached to the walls by bolts and other fastenings; the quoted expression being intended to apply to alterations in the building only. Lindsay Bros. v. Curtis Pub. Co., 84 Atl. 783, 784, 236 Pa. 229, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 546.

The word "alteration" in a lease which contemplated construction by the lessee of a building according to specifications, and called for payment to lessor of a percentage of net profits, defined as the gross income, did not extend to initial construction, but to a modification of that already constructed, and hence less the cost of repairs and alterations, lessee was entitled to deduct from the gross income cost of the changes and alterations, or any part thereof, for proper use of the building, but not cost of additions, nor alterations in specifications under which it was constructed. Grosse v. Barman, 100 Pac. 348, 352, 9 Cal. App. 650.

Contract

A mere change in the site of a dwelling house, to be constructed under a contract, from one place to another in the same square, for the accommodation of the owner, and without causing any additional expense to the contractor, is not such an "alteration of the contract" as will discharge the surety of the contractor. Segari v. Mazzei, 41 South. 245, 247, 116 La. 1026.

Corporate by-laws

An "alteration" of a corporate by-law is a pro tanto repeal. Bornstein v. District Grand Lodge No. 4, Independent Order B'nai B'rith, 84 Pac. 271, 272, 2 Cal. App. 624 (quoting and adopting Kent v. Quicksilver Mining Co., 78 N. Y. 159).

Electric distribution line

Under a statute authorizing an electric company to "alter" its system of distribution, it can change its system from poles and wires to conduits. Allegheny County Light Co. v. Booth, 66 Atl. 72, 74, 216 Pa. 564, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 404.

Highway

"Alteration" of a highway and "location" of a highway do not amount to the same thing. Ford v. Erskine, 83 Atl. 455, 457, 109 Me. 164.

"Alteration," within Code Va. 1904, § 1294b, which provides that any county road may be altered by a railway corporation for the purpose of avoiding or reducing the number of crossings whenever it shall have made an equally convenient road in lieu thereof, the company having first obtained the consent of the board of supervisors of the county to the "alteration" of the road or highway, embraces a new location, construction thereon of a roadway as good as the present one, and discontinuance of the present road. Carolina C. & O. R. Co. v. Board of Suprs of Scott County, 63 S. E. 412, 413, 109 Va. 34.

Instrument

"Alteration" in a writing implies a change made after its execution, and an erasure or interlineation is not an alteration, if made before the final execution of the writing. Wicker v. Jones, 74 S. E. 801, 803, 159 N. C. 102, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 69; Tharp v. Jamison, 134 N. W. 583, 584, 154 Iowa, 77, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 100.

An "alteration" of a written contract such as to destroy it as a legal obligation is any change in its terms made by any party thereto, without the express or implied consent of all the parties, which varies its original legal effect and operation, whether in respect to the obligation it imparts or its force as matter of evidence. To erase the marginal figures "136⁰¹/₁₀₀" in a note and write at the top of the instrument "118⁰⁰/₁₀₀ correct amount," in order to correct a mutual mistake, is not such an alteration as will render the note void. Chamberlain v. Wright (Tex.) 35 S. W. 707.

Forging the name of the payee of an instrument on the back thereof constitutes an "alteration" within White's Ann. Pen. Code, art. 531, providing that one who without lawful authority and with intent to injure and defraud alters an instrument in writing, etc., is guilty of forgery. Carter v. State, 114 S. W. 839, 840, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 43.

Railroad

The word "alteration," within St. 1890, c. 428, which provides for the alteration of railroads on the abolition of grade crossings, is sufficiently broad to include extensive alterations and a change in the location of a station. In re Selectmen of Westborough, 48 N. E. 763, 169 Mass. 495.

Street—Change of grade

Under a municipal charter giving power to lay out and open and change the grade of, or otherwise improve, roads, avenues, streets, etc., and for that purpose to take and appropriate any land of the village, but providing that no road, street, etc., shall be opened and "altered" unless all claims for damages on account of such opening or altering shall be released, the power to "alter" did not cover a change in the grade, and the village was not therefore bound to take any proceeding for the release of damages before changing the grade of a street. An alteration of a street, as the expression is used, generally refers to a change in the course thereof, and therefore necessarily involves, to some extent, the establishment of a new highway, and the vacation of a part of the old highway for which the substitution is made. Rogers v. Village of Attica, 98 N. Y. Supp. 665, 666, 113 App. Div. 603; Manufacturers' Land & Improvement Co. v. City of Camden, 59 Atl. 1, 2, 71 N. J. Law, 490 (citing Commonwealth v. Inhabitants of Westborough, 3 Mass. 406; Commonwealth v. Inhabitants of Cambridge, 7 Mass. 158).

Under North Adams City Charter, § 37, providing that the board of public works shall have control of the "alteration" and repair of streets, and section 23, giving the council exclusive power, except as therein otherwise provided, to act in all matters relating to the laying out and altering of streets, the board of public works had power to change the grade of a street in making ordinary repairs; such change in the grade not being an "alteration." Simpson v. North Adams, 54 N. E. 878, 879, 174 Mass. 450 (citing and adopting Callender v. Marsh, 18 Mass. [1 Pick.] 418; Brown v. City of Lowell, 49 Mass. [8 Metc.] 176; Proctor v. Stone, 33 N. E. 704, 158 Mass. 564, 567).

Same—Widening

The word "alteration" in a petition reciting that common convenience required "the alteration of [the street] by the widening, straightening, and relocation" of such street, and praying that the street might be "altered by widening, straightening, and relocating" the same, was intended to indicate the effect of relocating the street, and the petition would, notwithstanding the use of such word, be construed, in view of the situation of the street, the changes which were sought, and the language of the order granting the location for the railroad tracks, as a petition under Rev. Laws, c. 48, § 12, which provides for the relocation of a highway, either for the purpose of establishing the boundary lines or of making alterations in the course or width thereof, on petition of the town or by five inhabitants thereof. Bennett v. Town of Wellesley, 75 N. E. 717, 719, 189 Mass. 308.

Structure

Labor Law (Laws 1901, c. 257), § 1 (Sanborn's St. Supp. 1906, § 1636—81), provides that a person employing another in labor of any kind in erecting, repairing, altering, or painting of a house, building, or structure shall not furnish, for the performance of such labor, scaffolding, hoists, stays, ladders, or other mechanical contrivances which are unsafe, and which are not so constructed, placed, and operated as to give proper protection to the life and limb of a person so employed. Held that, as "structure," as used in such act, included work below as well as above ground, and the word "erecting" was used in its broad sense to mean the creating of a particular thing out of its parts, an action for injury to an employé by the collapse of a derrick used to lower sections of water main pipe into place in a trench dug to receive it was within the statute; the derrick being within the prohibited instrumentalities, the setting up of the water main an "erection," and the putting in of new pipes an "altering," and the waterworks system a "structure" within the meaning of the act. Kosidowski v. City of Milwaukee, 139 N. W. 187, 188, 152 Wis. 223.

ALTERNATE

ALTERNATIVE CONTINGENT REMAINDER

The remainder created by deed to one for life, remainder to the heirs of her body, is an "alternative contingent remainder" within Civ. Code, § 696, providing that two or more future interests may be created to take effect in the alternative, so that, if the first in order fails to vest, the next in succession shall be substituted for it, and take effect accordingly. Los Angeles County v. Winans, 109 Pac. 640, 644, 645, 13 Cal. App. 234.

ALTERNATIVE SENTENCE

An "alternative sentence" is not imposed by a judgment that accused pay a fine in a given amount, and in default of payment of the same within ten days that he work at hard labor on the streets. Williams v. Sewell, 49 S. E. 732, 121 Ga. 665.

ALTERNATIVE WRIT

The "alternative writ of mandamus" is not an original writ nor a final writ of execution, but is of the nature of an interlocutory rule to show cause. Hamlin v. Higgins, 67 Atl. 625, 629, 102 Me. 510.

ALWAYS

Provided always, see Provided.

See Latent Ambiguity; Patent Ambiguity.

"Ambiguity" is defined as duplicity; indistinctness; an uncertainty of meaning or expression used in a written instrument. Barrett v. Kansas & Texas Coal Co., 79 Pac. 150, 151, 70 Kan. 649. "Ambiguity" also signifies of doubtful or uncertain nature; wanting clearness or definiteness; difficult to comprehend or distinguish; of doubtful import; open to various interpretations. Novelty Hat Mfg. Co. v. Wiseberg, 55 S. E. 923, 924, 126 Ga. 800 (adopting definition in Cent. Dict. and in Nindle v. State Bank, 13 N. W. 275, 13 Neb. 245, as cited in 1 Words and Phrases, p. 367).

AMBIGUOUS

"Ambiguous" means "doubtful and uncertain." Osterholm v. Boston & Montana Consol. Copper & Silver Mining Co., 107 Pac. 499, 502, 40 Mont. 508.

AMEND—AMENDMENT

See Additional Amendment; Immediate Amendment; Implied Amendment; Power of Charter Amendments.

As substantial change, see Substantial Change.

As surprise, see Surprise.

The word "amend" is synonymous with correct, reform, and rectify. It means a correction of errors, an improvement or rectification, and necessarily implies something on which the correction, alteration, and improvement can operate. It indicates a change or modification for the better. McCleary v. Babcock, 82 N. E. 453, 455, 169 Ind. 228.

Bill or law

A statute which adds a provision to a section of an existing statute is an "amendment." Henderson v. City of Galveston, 114 S. W. 108, 111, 102 Tex. 163; Id. (Tex.) 115 S. W. 1193.

"Amendment" of a statute implies its survival and not destruction. City of Ensley v. Simpson, 52 South. 61, 63, 166 Ala. 366; Robinson v. City of Ensley (Ala.) 52 South. 66. It repeals or changes some provision, or adds something thereto. Board of Public Instruction of Polk County v. Board of Com'rs of Polk County, 50 South. 574, 58 Fla. 391.

Provision that another statute is repealed, so far as it applies to a particular city, is a partial repeal, and not an "amendment" within the provision of the Constitution that no law shall be amended by reference to its title or section only. Barron v. Smith, 70 Atl. 225, 227, 108 Md. 317.

The word "amend," in legal phraseology, does not generally mean the same thing as "repeal," but it does not follow that amendments of a statute may not often be accomplished by repeals of some of its parts. A constitutional provision providing that the Legislature shall not pass a special, private, or local law amending, confirming, or extending the charter of any private municipal corporation prohibits the Legislature from passing a special law repealing such charter. Little v. State ex rel. Huey, 35 South. 134, 136, 137 Ala. 659.

There is a distinction between a "repeal" and an "amendment" of a statute. A "repeal" necessarily involves a change in the law, whether the statute repealed is the only enactment on the subject dealt with in the repealed act. A statute in derogation of the common law is not an amendment of the common law. The fact that an independent act, full and complete in itself, repeals by implication any portion of a statutory system, does not render it an amendatory statute where it makes no reference to the statutes affected by it. It is true that such an act alters or changes the system, but this change or alteration is and must be ascribed to the repeal wrought by the independent act and not to the change or alteration consequent upon the repeal. An amendment also involves some change or alteration in the existing statute law and may also operate as a repeal of some of its provisions, but such change or alteration made by the amendment is direct and not consequential, as is the case of a repeal. There is also another marked difference between a "repeal" and an "amendment." An "amendment" may not, and often does not, operate as a repeal, but merely as an addition to the statute of which it is amendatory. This can never be the effect or operation of a repealing statute, whether the repeal be by implication or be direct. As stated in Bouvier's Law Dict. a "repeal" is "the abrogation or destruction of a law by a legislative act," while an "amendment" is "an alteration or change of something proposed in a bill or established as law." A "supplemental" act adds something that was left out of the original act and does not necessarily revise it or amend it in the technical sense, while an amendment is something that may be incorporated into the act amended on its passage. A supplemental act is an independent law, and a "healing act" is one that cures some defect in a proceeding which the Legislature could have authorized in the first instance. From this it is held that an independent legislative act, complete in itself and inconsistent with other statutory provisions on the same subject, is not an "amendment," but is a "repeal." State ex rel. Gamble v. Hubbard, 41 South. 903, 905, 906, 148 Ala. 391.

Charter

Under power to "amend" charters of colleges and universities, the court of common pleas cannot change the corporate location of a college from one county to another, particularly where the college was located permanently in the first county. In re Thiel College's Appeal, 66 Atl. 83, 84, 216 Pa. 630.

Constitution

The word "amendment" is clearly susceptible to a construction which would make it cover several propositions, all tending to effect and carry out one general object or purpose, and all connected with one subject, as well as of the construction that every proposition which effects a change in the Constitution or adds to or takes from it is an amendment. People ex rel. Elder v. Sours, 74 Pac. 167, 178, 31 Colo. 369, 102 Am. St. Rep. 34 (citing State ex rel. Hudd v. Timme, 54 Wis. 318, 11 N. W. 785).

"Amendment" and "revision" of the Constitution mean the same thing. State v. Taylor, 133 N. W. 1046, 1049, 22 N. D. 362.

Court record

The power to "amend" must not be confounded with the power to create. The power of the court to amend a record presupposes an existing record, which is defective by reason of some clerical error or mistake, or the omission of some entry which should have been made during the progress of the case, or by the loss of some document originally filed thereunder. The difference between creating and amending a record is analogous to that between the construction and repair of a piece of personal property. A judgment of naturalization which has never been recorded, or, if recorded, the record of which has been lost, cannot be entered by a common-law court nunc pro tunc 33 years after its rendition, when no entry or memorandum appeared upon the record or files at the time the original judgment is supposed to have been rendered, especially where the declaration of intention was made before another court, in another state, and the territorial court which is alleged to have entered the judgment has itself been abolished and a state court substituted in its place. Gagnon

v. United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 510, 511, 193 U. S. 451, 48 L. Ed. 745.

A motion to "correct" a judgment rendered by a municipal court justice is a motion to "amend" or modify the same, within Municipal Court Act, Laws 1902, p. 1563, c. 580, § 254. Ryan v. Brown, 99 N. Y. Supp. 868, 869, 51 Misc. Rep. 67.

Pleading

Delivery by plaintiff of a notice setting forth matters called for by defendant's motion to make more definite does not constitute an "amendment." Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. State, 87 S. W. 631, 75 Ark. 369.

It is not the office of an "amended and supplemental complaint" to unite allegation of facts stated in the original complaint, and which occurred prior to the service of his original complaint, with facts which occurred afterwards. Horowitz v. Goodman, 98 N. Y. Supp. 53, 55, 112 App. Div. 13.

A pleading which in its substance is a direct and full reply to the cause of action set up in the plaintiff's petition and contains, among other matter, a sworn denial of partnership of the defendants, should, under the rules of pleading, be denominated either an "original" or "amended" answer and is not a "supplemental answer." Chicago, R. I. & T. Ry. Co. v. Halsell, 83 S. W. 15, 98 Tex. 244.

The mere addition of a verification to the answer and cross-petition allowed by the court, when the point was raised that the original petition was verified and the answer was not, was not an "amendment" which materially changed the defense, within Civ. Code 1895, § 5068, so as to open the answer and cross-petition to a special demurrer. Neal v. Davis Foundry & Machine Works, 63 S. E. 221, 222, 131 Ga. 701.

Summons

The power given by Code Civ. Proc. § 723, to "amend" at any stage of an action, authorizes amendment of the summons, so that all the plaintiffs shall be represented by the same attorneys. Jones v. Conlon, 95 N. Y. Supp. 255, 257, 48 Misc. Rep. 172.

AMENDATORY LAW

Reference statutes and interpretative statutes are not "amendatory," within Const. art. 2, § 16, providing that no law shall be amended unless the new act contain the entire section or sections amended, and the section or sections so amended shall be repealed. State v. Board of Com'rs of Shawnee County, 110 Pac. 92, 94, 83 Kan. 199.

A new act which is complete in itself and which does not purport to be amendatory of any previous act and does not require a reference to any other law to discover its scope or meaning, is not "amendatory" within the meaning of the provision of Const. Nev. art. 4, § 17, that "no law shall be revised or amended by reference to its title only, but in such cases the act as revised or section as amended shall be re-enacted and published at length," although in general terms it repeals all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with its provisions. Southern Pac. Co. v. Bartine, 170 Fed. 725, 738-740.

Act May 12, 1869, is entitled "An act to authorize aid to the construction of railroads by counties and townships taking stock in and making donations to railroad companies"; and it and subsequent amendatory acts authorize the granting of such aid. Held, that Acts 1903, p. 233, c. 134, declaring that wherever the word "railroad" occurs in either section of the act of May 12, 1869, or in any section of any subsequent act amendatory or supplemental thereto, the same shall include street railroads, suburban street railroads, or interurban street railroads, is a "supplemental" and not an "amendatory" act, and is therefore not void for failure to set forth in full any part of the act of 1869, as required in case of amendments by Const. art. 4, § 21. McCleary v. Babcock, 82 N. E. 453, 455, 169 Ind. 228.

AMENDED AND SUPPLEMENTAL PLEADING

An ex parte order allowing an "amended and supplemental pleading" allowed a pleading unknown to the code. Luckey v. Mockridge, 98 N. Y. Supp. 335, 337, 112 App. Div. 199.

AMENDMENT BY IMPLICATION

"Amendment by implication" is merely a phrase in common use, because convenient, to indicate that rule of construction by which a later repugnant provision in a Constitution or statute modifies or abrogates an earlier one. People ex rel. Elder v. Sours, 74 Pac. 167, 176, 31 Colo. 369, 102 Am. St. Rep. 34.

AMERCEMENT

An "amercement" is a money penalty in the nature of a fine imposed upon an officer for some misconduct or neglect of duty. It is a statutory proceeding, and, like all other penal statutes, must be strictly construed. The right to demand a judgment in amercement is based on no equitable grounds, and in its enforcement courts are bound to hold the party claiming it to a strict observance of the requirements of the statute. Stein v. Scanlan, 127 Pac. 483, 34 Okl. 801, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 895.

AMERICAN

The word "American" in regulation 68 (c) of the quarantine regulations, authorizing the placing in quarantine of vessels arriving between May 1st and November 1st from "a tropical American port," is to be construed as meaning the continent of America, or the Western Hemisphere, and not the United States. Gow v. Gans S. S. Line, 174 Fed. 215, 217, 98 C. C. A. 223.

AMERICAN FISHERY

Where a corporation consisting of American citizens formed a party and registered an American vessel which was manned with an American crew and engaged in the business of catching turtles in Central American waters, canning them aboard the vessel, it was an "American fishery" within the meaning of the Tariff Act Aug. 27, 1894, c. 349, § 2, Free List, par. 568, which exempts from duty all fish and other products of American fisheries, and the canned turtle meat is free from duty as the product of such fishery; such a fishery not being restricted as to its product to articles captured with hook and line, or net, or strictly to fish. Downing v. United States, 124 Fed. 107, 108.

AMERICAN PLAN

The phrase "American plan," as applied to the conducting of a hotel, means that the hotel keeper provides not only lodging but also meals for his guests. Steward v. Denechaud, 45 South. 561, 564, 120 La. 720.

As applied to hotels, the term "American plan" means that meals are provided at regular hours for patrons, who pay a stipulated sum per day, which includes both meals and room rent, and the term "European plan" means that under it the guests patronize the hotel table or not, as they please, and, when they do so, pay for what they order. New Galt House Co. v. City of Louisville, 111 S. W. 351, 129 Ky. 341, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 566.

AMERICAN SEAMAN

Every sailor on an American vessel is an "American seaman," regardless of his nationality. The Laura M. Lunt, 170 Fed. 204, 205.

AMICUS CURIAE

The term "amicus curiae" implies the friendly intervention of counsel to remind the court of some matter which might otherwise escape its notice, and in regard to which it might go wrong. Such an intervention is granted, not as a matter of right, but a privilege, and the privilege ends when the suggestion has been made. Hamlin v. Particular Baptist Meeting House, 69 Atl. 315, 318, 103 Me. 343.

A person who was neither an officer, attorney, nor agent of a railroad company, and who did not appear to be authorized to act for it, had no power to file a notice of appeal from a judgment against it as "amicus curiae." Southern Ry. Co. v. Locke, 84 S. W. 1069, 1070, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 191.

Where the defendants resisted a case through their attorney, that such attorney assumed the role of amicus curiae does not affect the proceeding, for the office of an "amicus curiae" is restricted to making suggestions as to questions apparent upon the record, or matters of practice presenting themselves for determination in course of proceedings in open court, and cannot take upon himself the management of the cause as counsel. State v. McDonald, 128 Pac. 835, 837, 63 Or. 467.

AMNESTY

An "amnesty" secures against the consequences of one's acts, and not against the acts themselves. It involves forgiveness; not forgetfulness. United States v. Swift, 186 Fed. 1002, 1017.

Pardon distinguished

"Pardon" is granted to an individual criminal by name, while "amnesty" is granted to classes of offenders or communities. They differ, not in kind, but solely in the number they severally affect. United States v. Hughes, 175 Fed. 238, 242.

"Amnesty," as defined by Black's Law Dictionary, is a sovereign act of pardon and forgetfulness for past acts of criminal nature. It is at least coextensive in its meaning with the word "pardon" so far as its effect is concerned, because it effaces or wipes out the offense which has been committed; the difference between the two being that a pardon is granted to one who is certainly guilty, sometimes before but usually after conviction, and the court takes no notice of it unless pleaded or in some way claimed by the person pardoned, and it is usually granted by the crown or by the executive; but amnesty is extended to those who may be guilty, and is usually granted by Parliament or the Legislature and to whole classes before trial. Amnesty is an abolition or oblivion of the offense. Pardon is its forgiveness. In re Briggs, 47 S. E. 403, 411, 135 N. C. 118 (citing State v. Blalock, 61 N. C. 242).

AMONG

The word "among" means intermingled with. The thing which is among others is intermingled with them. Commerce "among the several states," within the commerce clause of the federal Constitution, cannot stop at the external boundary line of each state, but may be introduced into the interior. It is not intended to say that these words comprehend that commerce, which is completely internal, which is carried on between man and man in a state, or between different parts of the same state, and which does not extend to or affect other states. Comprehensive as the word "among" is, it may very properly be restricted to that commerce which concerns more states than one. Kelley v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 152 Fed. 211, 218 (quoting and adopting definition in Gibbons

v. Ogden, 22 U. S. [9 Wheat.] 1, 189, 194, 6 L. Ed. 23).

The phrase "among the several states," in the constitutional provision giving Congress power to regulate commerce among the several states, marks the distinction for the purpose of governmental regulation between commerce which concerns two or more states and commerce which is confined to a single state, and does not affect other states. Mondu v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 32 Sup. Ct. 169, 173, 223 U. S. 1, 56 L. Ed. 327, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 44.

Between synonymous

See Between.

Distribution to each required

The words "among all such issue share and share alike" do not "necessarily mean that each of such issue shall have an equal share with every other, or with a child. It is satisfied if all such issue share in a division which is equal as between living children and the issue of deceased children, taking per stirpes." Coates v. Burton, 77 N. E. 311, 312, 191 Mass. 180 (quoting and approving Hall v. Hall, 2 N. E. 700, 140 Mass. 267).

Where a testator devised to a son W. certain land, he to pay a certain sum per acre for the same, and out of the proceeds pay debts and dower and specified bequests to two daughters, and the balance "to be divided equally among my children," and W. to pay to each of the other children the part that should fall to each of his children, the term "to be divided among my children" meant all of the children, and entitled W. to share with the other children, and the direction to him to pay was not inconsistent with the idea of retention by him of a portion of the fund. In re Hennerstotz' Estate, 16 Pa. 435, 442.

AMORPHOUS

Calcium carbide in an "amorphous" condition is without definite form, or uncrystallized. Union Carbide Co. v. American Carbolite Co., 188 Fed. 334, 337.

AMOUNT

See Gross Amount; Reasonable Amount; Whole Amount.

Of expenditures actually made, see Expenditures Actually Made.

As value

In Transfer Tax Law, § 221a, subd. 1, providing for a tax of 1 per centum on any amount in excess of $5,000 up to the sum of $50,000, "amount" and "sum," though popularly used to denote money, mean value; the tax being upon all kinds of property. In re Elletson's Estate, 136 N. Y. Supp. 455, 456, 75 Misc. Rep. 582.

The word "amount" as used with reference to money is synonymous with value.

People v. Hines, 89 Pac. 858, 859, 5 Cal. App. 122; Richburger v. State, 44 South. 772, 774, 90 Miss. 806.

Under the Constitution of West Virginia, providing that the stockholders of all corporations shall be liable for the indebtedness of such corporations to the "amount of their stock subscribed," and no more, the stockholders are liable to the amount of the par value of their stock subscribed. Security Trust Co. v. Ford, 79 N. E. 474, 475, 75 Ohio St. 322, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 263.

As the whole

Plaintiff, a broker, wrote defendant, asking what he would take for his land, including the stock and a 5 per cent. commission, and defendant replied that: "$22,250 your commission $1,112.50 this amount will buy the place." Held, that the word "amount" referred to the total of the two sums; the word being defined by Webster as "the sum total of two or more particular sums or quantities," as the amount of 7 and 9 is 16." Smith v. Fears (Tex.) 122 S. W. 438, 435.

"In speaking of interest-bearing obligations, the word 'amount' is ordinarily used to designate the total of principal and interest." Cratty v. City of Chicago, 75 N. E. 343, 344, 217 Ill. 453.

AMOUNT COLLECTED

The "amount" collected, within an act imposing an annual state tax for the privilege of carrying on insurance business by domestic insurance companies, based on the gross premiums collected, is either the sum collected and retained, or else it includes something for the business not done or unrealized in the anticipation of business. While in a certain sense it may be said that payment of the premium in advance for one year involves insurance made for one year, notwithstanding the fact that according to its terms the policy is subsequently canceled, a majority of the court is of the opinion that this is inconsistent with the fair meaning of the words "business done," when looked back upon at the end of the year. The premium which represents business done is the amount which the company has the benefit of and furnishes an equivalent for. It is the money earned by the policy. When part of the premium is refunded, it is the same in effect as if it had never been paid. People ex rel. Continental Ins. Co. v. Miller, 70 N. E. 10, 11, 177 N. Y. 515.

AMOUNT DUE

The expenses of an execution sale of mortgaged property is a part of the "amount due on the execution," which amount is required by Court and Practice Act 1905, § 629, to be paid out of the proceeds of the sale after payment of the mortgage debt; and when the proceeds of an execution sale of personality are insufficient to pay the mortgage debt the mortgagee is entitled to recover from the levying officer the full amount of the sale, without any deduction for such expenses. McKenna Bros. v. Brown, 71 Atl. 450, 29 R. I. 339.

The amount "due the county for unpaid county taxes," within a statute providing that all taxes returned as delinquent shall be collected by a county for its own use, but if such delinquent taxes exceed the sum then due the county for unpaid county taxes the excess, when collected with interest and charges thereon, shall be disposed of in a particular manner, is the sum which equals in amount the county tax, with interest allowed thereon by statute, and all the charges fixed by law, and those necessarily incurred in collecting the taxes. Town of Spooner v. Washburn County, 102 N. W. 325, 327, 124 Wis. 24.

AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY

See Original Amount in Controversy.

Under Ky. St. 1903, § 978, authorizing appeals to the circuit court from judgments of the county court where "the amount in controversy" is over $50, orders of the county court removing and appointing sheriffs are not appealable; the word "amount" in the quoted phrase applying only to a judgment for money. Renshaw v. Cook, 111 S. W. 877, 884, 129 Ky. 847.

In an action on a bond given to secure payment of alimony, the "amount" involved for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of the appellate court is not the penalty of the bond, but the actual damages sustained by reason of the breach. Burnside v. Wand, 84 S. W. 995, 996, 108 Mo. App. 539.

As amount claimed or sued for

The "amount in controversy," as determining appellate jurisdiction, is the amount claimed in the petition, and not the amount recovered. Barnes v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 95 S. W. 971, 972, 119 Mo. App. 303.

Costs excluded

Where the sum recovered by plaintiff, exclusive of interest and costs, does not exceed $50, and he is satisfied with his judgment, and there is no set-off or counterclaim, the amount so recovered must be deemed, on defendant's appeal, the "amount in controversy." Hood v. Baker (Ind.) 75 N. E. 608, 609.

On appeal from a decree enforcing a judgment, the interest and costs included in such judgment constitute a part of the amount in controversy. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Mattingly, 40 S. W. 678, 674, 101 Ky. 219.

Counterclaim included

The "amount in controversy," within Code, § 4110, providing that no appeal shall be taken when the amount in controversy does not exceed $100, is determined from the pleadings, including the counterclaims, and the court has jurisdiction of an appeal in a suit in equity for an injunction and for the recovery of money, which, together with defendant's counterclaim, exceeds $100, though plaintiff, though obtaining judgment for a part of the amount claimed, complains of a disallowance of a sum less than $100. Davis v. Laughlin, 124 N. W. 876, 877, 147 Iowa, 478.

An "amount in controversy" is the amount sued for, less that admitted to be due, a reconventional demand not being considered in view of Const. art. 95, providing that an appeal from a judgment rendered on a reconventional demand shall lie to the court having jurisdiction of the main demand. Hood v. Wise, 55 South. 335, 336, 128 La. 731.

Interest included

Though a statute regulating appellate jurisdiction provides for the exclusion of interest and costs in determining the amount in controversy, yet on appeal from a decree enforcing a judgment the interest and costs included in such judgment constitute a part of the amount in controversy. Nashville, O. & St. L. R. Co. v. Mattingly, 40 S. W. 673, 674, 101 Ky. 219.

A contract of employment which specified a definite salary ascertained the amount payable, within Sayles' Ann. St. 1897, art. 3101, providing that interest shall be allowed at 6 per cent. per annum on written contracts "ascertaining the sum payable," when no rate is specified, and the interest due under the employment contract does not enter into the "amount in controversy," as constituting damages, as affecting the jurisdiction of the county court of a suit on the contract. Carter Grocer Co. v. Day (Tex.) 144 S. W. 365, 366.

Under an act forbidding appeals from a certain court where the amount in controversy is less than $100, the "amount in controversy" is the full amount recoverable by the plaintiff under the allegations of his petition, including interest at 6 per cent. per annum thereon to the date of the trial. Gulf, W. T. & P. Ry. Co. v. Fromme, 84 S. W. 1054, 1056, 98 Tex. 459 (citing Schulz v. Tessman, 49 S. W. 1031, 92 Tex. 483).

Where the damages recovered in an action against a telegraph company for negligence in the transmission of a message, together with interest thereon, amount to $100, the case is appealable to the Court of Civil Appeals; the interest being a part of the "amount in controversy." Western Union Tel. Co. v. Noland (Tex.) 77 S. W. 1031.

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 1337j, provides that a losing party may appeal from the Appellate Court to the Supreme Court only when the "amount in controversy," exclusive of the costs and interest on the judgment of the trial court, exceeds $8,000. In construing this statute the court held that the "amount in controversy" and "interest on the judgment" clearly imported the controversy measurable by a sum of money, ascertained and determined by the trial court, and it was held that no appeal lies to the Supreme Court from the Appellate Court unless there was a judgment of the trial court upon the merits for an amount in excess of sum stated. Avery v. Nordyke & Marmon Co., 73 N. E. 119, 120, 164 Ind. 186.

AMOUNT IN DISPUTE

Under the judiciary act the "amount in dispute" which determines the jurisdiction of the circuit court in suits for the recovery of money is the amount demanded by the plaintiff in good faith, and not the amount ultimately recovered. Denver City Tramway Co. v. Norton, 141 Fed. 599, 601, 73 C. C. A. 1 (citing Peeler v. Lathrup, 48 Fed. 780, 1 C. C. A. 93; Ung Lung Chung v. Holmes, 98 Fed. 323).

Where, under a statute providing that in case of death from negligent running of a train the railroad company shall forfeit and pay for every person so dying $5,000, which may be sued for, etc., and only $4,500 has been sued for and recovered, $4,500 is the "amount in dispute," as regards appellate jurisdiction, although a recovery might have been had for $5,000. Marsh v. Kansas City Ry. Co., 78 S. W. 284, 285, 104 Mo. App. 577.

Under Act June 12, 1909, giving the Courts of Appeals jurisdiction where the amount in dispute, exclusive of costs, shall not exceed $7,500, in view of other language in the act directing the transfer of causes pending in the Supreme Court, showing that it was intended to apply where appeals had been taken years before, the amount in dispute is to be determined as of the date the judgment appealed from was rendered, and not the passage of the act, so that, where the amount of the judgment appealed from was $7,500, interest to the time of the passage of the act could not be added to enable the Supreme Court to retain jurisdiction of the appeal; interest not being a part of the "amount in dispute," but an incident of the judgment added by operation of the law. Schwychart v. Barrett, 122 S. W. 1049, 1050, 223 Mo. 497.

So far as jurisdiction of actions ex delicto depends upon the "amount in dispute," it is necessarily controlled by the amount demanded in the petition, but depends on the elements of damage sustainable by the facts proved. Vanderberg v. Kansas City, Missouri, Gas Co., 97 S. W. 908, 199 Mo. 455.

AMOUNT INVOLVED

In a suit to enjoin a threatened or continued commission of certain acts, the "amount" or "value" involved, for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of the federal court, is the value of the right which complainant seeks to protect from invasion, and not the sum he might recover in an action at law, or the damage already sustained; nor is he required to wait until it reaches the jurisdictional amount. Board of Trade of City of Chicago v. Cella Commission Co., 145 Fed. 28, 29, 76 C. C. A. 28.

AMOUNT OF DEMAND

Where live stock has been killed by a railroad train, and the conditions exist under which the statute authorizes judgment for double the damage found to be due, double damages actually and in good faith claimed under the statute constitute the "amount of the demand" for determining the jurisdiction of the court. Georgia, F. & A. Ry. Co. v. Andrews, 54 South. 461, 462, 61 Fla. 246.

AMOUNT DISTRIBUTED

Ky. St. § 3883, providing that "the allowance to executors, administrators and curators shall not exceed five per cent, on all the 'amounts received and distributed,'" does not limit an executor to 5 per cent. on the cash distributed, but he is entitled to a reasonable allowance, not exceeding 5 per cent. on the entire personal estate, including that distributed in kind. Reed v. Reed (Ky.) 66 S. W. 818, 820.

AMOUNT RECOVERED

The "amount recovered," within Laws 1907, c. 5618, which allows, in an action against a carrier upon a claim for freight lost or damaged where the carrier fails to pay the claim in 60 days after presentation, a maximum sum as a reasonable attorney's fee of 15 per cent. of any amount recovered over $100, is the amount of the claim recovered, and not that amount plus the 50 per cent. per annum interest also allowed by the statute. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Coachman, 52 South. 377, 386, 59 Fla. 130, 20 Ann. Cas. 1047.

AMOUNT SUPERSEDED

Under Code Prac. § 764, providing that, upon the affirmance of a judgment which has been superseded, 10 per cent. damages "on the amount superseded" shall be awarded, the appellee is not entitled to damages on the interest accrued after the judgment was superseded. Popp v. Louisville & N. Ry. Co., 40 S. W. 254, 101 Ky. 157.

AMPERE

The unit of volume, called the "ampere," is one-tenth unit of the C. G. S. system. Peoria Waterworks Co. v. Peoria R. Co., 181 Fed. 990, 1001.

AMPLE

The words "ample" and "sufficient" are so nearly synonymous that no material error was committed in the use of the word "ample" in an instruction as to the time a train should stop at a station to permit passengers to alight, though the word "sufficient" would have been more appropriate. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Haynes (Tex.) 86 S. W. 934, 935.

AMUSEMENT

See Place of Amusement; Public Amusement.

Other amusements, see Other.

AMUSEMENT RAILWAY

The phrase "amusement railway" includes those devices in which a car or other vehicle moves along a track in startling and surprising evolutions or through imitation scenery for the gratification of the occupants. Frazer v. Rohr, 180 Fed. 773, 774.

ANARCHIST

The conclusion of the immigrant inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, that an alien came within the provisions of the immigration act of March 3, 1903, for the exclusion and deportation of alien anarchists, cannot be said, as a matter of law, to be wholly unsupported by the evidence, even though such act be so construed as to include only advocates of the forcible overthrow of the federal government or of all governments, or of the assassination of officials, where there was evidence that such alien advocated, "as an anarchist," a universal strike, and proposed to lecture upon "the legal murder of 1887," and to address mass meetings on that subject, in association with a person who had been convicted of advocating revolution and murder. United States ex rel. Turner v. Williams, 24 Sup. Ct. 719, 723, 194 U. S. 279, 48 L. Ed. 979.

ANARCHY

"Anarchy" is a term which has been used in recent years to describe a lawless and dangerous doctrine, and its advocates have been looked upon as persons dangerous to society, and some of its more outspoken and unbalanced disciples have become assassins. Von Gerichten v. Seitz, 87 N. Y. Supp. 968, 969, 94 App. Div. 130.

ANCESTOR

An "ancestor" is defined as "one who has preceded another in a direct line of descent; a lineal descendant; a former possessor; the person last seized; a deceased person from whom another had inherited land." Bowen v. Hackney, 48 S. E. 633, 635, 136 N. C. 187, 67 L. R. A. 440 (quoting Black's Dict.; 2 Bl. Comm. 201). The word is the correlative of "descendant." Parish v. Mills (Tex.) 102 S. W. 184, 188.

The term "ancestor," as used in the statutes of descent, means the person from whom an estate is inherited, and in determining from whom the estate came the title should be traced back to the person last seised. Gray v. Swerer, 94 N. E. 725, 727, 47 Ind. App. 384.

ANCESTRAL ESTATE

Land is to be considered an "ancestral estate" where it has come from or by or on the part of the father or mother of the owner by gift, devise, or descent either mediately or immediately from them or from any person in their respective lines, and will be a new acquisition if derived from any source other than by descent, devise, or gift from any relative in the paternal or maternal line, as by a son from father or mother for a valuable consideration. Martin v. Martin, 135 S. W. 348, 351, 98 Ark. 93.

ANCHOR

See Self Anchor.

ANCIENT

ANCIENT DOCUMENTS

An "ancient document" is one which is not less than 30 years old, the time to be computed from the date of its execution. Wright v. Hull, 94 N. E. 813, 815, 83 Ohio St. 385. A general warranty deed executed in 1878, reciting a consideration and through which plaintiff in ejectment claims title by mesne conveyances, is an "ancient document," and its recitals are admissible as evidence of the facts stated therein. Anderson v. Cole, 136 S. W. 395, 396, 234 Mo. 1.

Records of births and marriages in existence for a century, coming from a proper custody, are "ancient documents," and prove themselves. Layton v. Kraft, 98 N. Y. Supp. 72, 76, 111 App. Div. 842.

ANCILLARY

ANCILLARY LETTERS

Letters testamentary are of two kinds, "domiciliary letters" and "ancillary letters"; the first being issued at the place of the testator's domicile, and the latter at some place, other than domicile, where personalty of the testator is found. Such letters depend upon the situs of such personalty, and do not authorize the administrator or representative to perform any act or to reduce to possession personalty not within territorial authority of the court where issued. Lockwood v. United States Steel Corporation, 138 N. Y. Supp. 725, 727, 153 App. Div. 655.

ANCILLARY RECEIVER

An "ancillary" or "auxiliary" receiver is "a custodian of the property within the state where he is appointed for the purpose of preserving the assets belonging to the party or corporation proceeded against within the state, in order that creditors may reach them without being compelled to go to a foreign jurisdiction to prove their claims." Frowert v. Blank, 54 Atl. 1000, 1002, 205 Pa. 299.

AND

While the word "and" is generally used in a conjunctive sense, it is not invariably so. It is often used to indicate connection of what follows with what has gone before it, in the way of narration or description. Territory v. Kimmick, 106 Pac. 381, 383, 15 N. M. 178. Thus upon demurrer to a declaration for negligence, a clause connected with the general allegation of negligence by the word "and" may be treated as a specification of the negligent conduct, rather than as an independent averment, thus making the whole one allegation, as if the word "and" should be read "by." Brothers' Adm'r v. Rutland R. Co., 42 Atl. 980, 71 Vt. 48.

Laws 1899, p. 797, c. 870, § 6, subd. 3, provides that the civil commissioner shall "make investigation concerning and report upon all matters touching the enforcement and defect of the provision of the act, * * * concerning the action of any examiner or subordinate of the commission and any person in the public service in respect to the execution of this act. Held that the word "and" preceding any person in the public service should not be interpreted "in collusion with" or "in connection with," but the natural interpretation of the statute authorizes an investigation on all matters touching the enforcement and effect of the act. People ex rel. Bender v. Milliken, 97 N. Y. Supp. 223, 225, 110 App. Div. 579.

Use of the word "and" in a devise of all of testator's property to his wife for life, remainder to be equally divided between four named persons, "and" his niece and her six children, showed an intention on the part of testator to group the niece and her children together, and so they are entitled to but one share. In re Myhill, 134 N. Y. Supp. 467, 468, 149 App. Div. 404.

A policy payable to "Alfred Atkins, trustee, and the children of Hiram Atkins," is payable to Alfred Atkins as trustee for the children of Hiram Atkins; "and" here meaning "for." Atkins v. Atkins, 41 Atl. 503, 504, 70 Vt. 565.

As as well as

"And" is sometimes construed in the sense of "as well as." Williams v. United States, 87 Pac. 647, 648, 17 Okl. 28.

As in addition to

The Utah Enabling Act granted to the state public lands to the extent of two townships to be reserved for the state university, and in addition 110,000 acres to be selected and located as provided, "and including" all the saline lands in said state, for the use of the university. Held, the word "and" before "including" was used to express the relation of addition. State v. Montello Salt Co., 98 Pac. 549, 551, 34 Utah, 458.

A lease, providing that the lessees were to take the premises for one year "and" the "privilege of four years," indicates the relation of connection or addition. Willis v. Weeks, 105 N. W. 1012, 1014, 129 Iowa, 525.

Construed as or

Or construed as and, see Or.

It is within common knowledge that the words "and" and "or" are frequently used interchangeably, not only by those unskilled in the use of language, but by those who are acquainted with the shades of difference in the two conjunctions, for oftentimes the idea of the user is as correctly expressed by the use of one as the other. Kennedy v. Haskell, 73 Pac. 913, 914, 67 Kan. 612.

To prevent an absurd or unreasonable result, the word "and," used in a contract, may be read "or," or vice versa. Manson v. Dayton, 153 Fed. 258, 269, 82 C. C. A. 588 (citing Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 303; Thomas v. City of Grand Junction, 56 Pac. 665, 667, 13 Colo. App. 80, 84, 85).

A clause, in a contract for the sale of machinery, that the "agreement shall not be countermanded without the written consent of the said party of the first part, 'and' upon such terms as will indemnify the said party of the first part, against loss of profits, expenses, and other costs incurred," will be construed as though the word "and," between the words "part" and "upon," read "or," since otherwise the words following the word substituted would be meaningless. Gibbes Machinery Co. v. Johnson, 61 S. E. 1027, 1028, 81 S. C. 10.

An instruction that the employer was required to inclose "and" secure the elevators did not impose a higher duty on the employer than is prescribed by a statute providing that elevators shall be substantially inclosed "or" secured to protect the lives and limbs of employes. Fowler Packing Co. v. Enzenperger, 94 Pac. 995, 997, 77 Kan. 406, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 784.

Same—In bonds, deeds, or mortgages

A statutory bond to prosecute an appeal with effect, "and" to pay all costs, etc., requires the appeal to be prosecuted with effect, "or" the costs to be paid, etc. American Surety Co. of New York v. Koen, 107 S. W. 938, 939, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 98 (citing Robinson v. Brinson, 20 Tex. 438; Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Stanley, 13 S. W. 480, 76 Tex. 418; Blair v. Sanborn, 18 S. W. 159, 82 Tex. 687).

Same—In civil statutes

"And" will be construed "or" only where it appears from the context of the statute that the legislative intent can only be so given effect. In re Steinruck's Insolvency, 74

Atl. 360, 225 Pa. 461; James v. United States Fidelity & Guarantee Co., 117 S. W. 406, 409, 410, 133 Ky. 299; Same v. American Surety Co. of New York, Id.; Ransom v. Rutherford County, 130 S. W. 1057, 1062, 123 Tenn. 1, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1356.

In Rev. Laws, c. 185, subd. 4, providing that any person of age who resides in any town and who holds ratable estate in his own right of a certain value shall gain a settlement in such town, "and" is to be construed conjunctively, and not meaning "or." Town of Washington v. Town of Corinth, 55 Vt. 468, 470.

Though Revisal 1905, § 3127, providing that a holographic will must be found among the valuable papers "and" effects of the deceased, changed the prior law by substituting "and" for "or," the word "and" should still be construed as "or," since otherwise a person owning effects of ever so much value, without any valuable papers, could not execute a holographic will. In re Jenkins' Will, 72 S. E. 1072, 1073, 157 N. C. 429, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 842 (citing Hughes v. Smith, 64 N. C. 498; Winstead v. Bowman, 68 N. C. 170; Brown v. Eaton, 91 N. C. 26).

The word "and" in "Water Code" (Laws 1909, p. 332) § 47, requiring the state engineer to approve all applications made in proper form which contemplate application of public water to a beneficial use, but providing that when the proposed use conflicts with determined rights, or is "a menace to the safety and welfare of the public," the application shall be referred to the board of control for consideration, etc., is evidently used with the meaning of "or." Cookinham v. Lewis, 114 Pac. 88, 91, 58 Or. 484.

"And," as used in St. 1878, p. 152, c. 209, which provides that when public buildings or public works are erected, on which liens might attach for labor or materials if they belonged to private persons, the officers or agents contracting on the part of the commonwealth must provide security for payment by the contractors "and subcontractors for all labor furnished, all materials used, etc.," was not used conjunctively, so as to require that the debts secured should be due from the contractor and a subcontractor jointly, but distributively, so as to require only that it should be due either from the contractor or some one of the subcontractors. Fosburgh Co. v. Hampden County, 90 N. E. 851, 856, 204 Mass. 494.

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, for printing paper suitable for books "and" newspapers, is not limited to such paper as is suitable for printing both books and newspapers; and paper used for printing covers of booklets, pamphlets, and the like, but not suitable for printing newspapers, is properly classified for duty under the provision. Hensel, Bruckmann & Lorbacher v. United States, 126 Fed. 576, 577.

Same—In charter or ordinances

The word "and" in a law authorizing the dam company incorporated by that act to collect a toll for the passage of logs driven over its dams "and" improvements, means "or," so as to authorize the collection of toll not only on logs passing over dams, but also on those passing over a part of the stream improved to facilitate the driving of logs. Wilson Stream Dam Co. v. Boston Excelsior Co., 74 Atl. 115, 116, 105 Me. 249.

Under Laws 1895, c. 438, § 20, providing that a city treasurer should receive out of a sewer fund an amount fixed by the council, not to exceed $1,500 annually for his services relating to the collection of assessments "and" clerk hire. Under this act the city of Rochester passed an ordinance providing that the city treasurer should receive from moneys so collected $1,350 annually for the purpose of paying clerk hire. Held, that the word "and," as used in the act of 1895, could not be construed to mean "or," so that the ordinance was no restriction on the right of the treasurer to the compensation to which he was entitled by the express provisions of the act. People ex rel. Williams v. Monroe County Court, 93 N. Y. Supp. 452, 455, 105 App. Div. 1.

The word "and," as used in New York City Charter, § 951, providing that a grade shall be deemed established, when the street has been used by the public as of right for 20 years and has been improved by public authorities at the expense of the public or abutting owners, should be construed "or," so as to permit establishment of a grade by user for 20 years or by improvements. Triest v. City of New York, 105 N. Y. Supp. 571, 575, 55 Misc. Rep. 459.

The term "commission merchants and produce dealers," in an ordinance requiring commission merchants and produce dealers to obtain a license, may be construed to mean commission merchants or produce dealers, and require a license of both occupations, as there is no such general or prevailing custom of uniting produce dealers and commission merchants in one person, firm, or corporation to lead to the conclusion that the ordinance only applied to cases where the businesses were combined. City of Kansas City v. Grush, 52 S. W. 286, 151 Mo. 128.

Same—In constitution

Under Const. art. 5, § 8, providing that, when any office shall become vacant, and no mode is provided "by the Constitution and law" for filling the vacancy, the Governor shall fill it, the Legislature may specify what shall constitute a vacancy in any of the offices for which no provision is made in the Constitution, and may provide how the same shall be filled, though by virtue of article 1, § 22, the provisions of the Constitution are mandatory; the phrase, "Constitution and law" meaning "Constitution or law." People ex rel. Mattison v. Nye, 98 Pac. 241, 244, 9 Cal. App. 148.

Same—In criminal statutes

When necessary to give effect to any part of a statute or the intention of the Legislature, the word "and" may be substituted for "or," and vice versa. Williams v. State, 137 S. W. 927, 928, 99 Ark. 149, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1056; State v. Hooker, 98 Pac. 964, 972, 22 Okl. 712; People ex rel. Cohen v. Butler, 109 N. Y. Supp. 900, 903, 125 App. Div. 384.

"And," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 3318, providing that every rectifier and wholesale liquor dealer shall, at the time of sending out of his stock or possession any spirits, "and" before the same are removed from his premises, enter in a book the day when and the name and place of business of the person or firm to whom such spirits are to be sent, etc., means "or." Williams v. United States, 87 Pac. 647, 648, 17 Okl. 28.

Acts 1907, c. 11, § 1, relating to freight trains, requires 6 employes on trains of more than 50 freight or other cars, and 5 on trains consisting of less than 50 freight or other cars. Section 2 requires 5 employes other than baggage and express messengers on passenger, mail, or express trains, and section 3 declares that any railroad company doing business in the state who shall send out on its road any train not manned "in accordance with sections 1 and 2" shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Held, that the conjunction "and" in the phrase "sections 1 and 2" should be construed disjunctively in order not to defeat the intention of the Legislature, though the statute is penal. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. State, 87 N. E. 1034, 1038, 172 Ind. 147.

Same—In wills in general

To effectuate the intention of a testator, the word "and" may be read as "or," or vice versa. Shropshire v. Gault (Ky.) 83 S. W. 590, 591 (citing Hunt v. Johnson, 49 Ky. [10 B. Mon.] 342; Robb v. Belt, 51 Ky. [12 B. Mon.] 647; Aulick v. Wallace, 75 Ky. [12 Bush] 531); Goldsbrough v. Washington, 70 S. E. 525, 527, 112 Va. 104. "And," in the testamentary clause, "should either of my said sons W. A. and D. die without * * * issue and my said son G. die without leaving him surviving his said son, whom I call William," then the share of which such deceased received the income shall be paid to the survivors or survivor, provided that the issue of either of sons, W. A. and D., if deceased, shall receive the share to which the parent would be entitled, and the grandchild shall receive the share to which son G., his father, would be entitled if living, will not be construed conjunctively so as to show an invalid intention to suspend the absolute ownership of such property for more than two lives in being. In re Hinchman, 125 N. Y. Supp. 680, 701, 141 App. Div. 95.

The word "and" in an instrument will not be construed as meaning "or," except for strong reasons and to carry out the manifest intention of the parties. A contract to indemnify A. from certain obligations of a company "and" himself personally" prima facie covers only the joint debts of such company and A. and does not, unaided, support an action for the separate indebtedness of either. Capital City Bank v. Hilson, 51 South. 853, 855, 50 Fla. 215.

Same—In wills naming devisees

The words "and heirs" may be construed as "or heirs," and the words "or heirs" may be construed as "and heirs," in order to effect the apparent intention of the testator. In re Allison, 102 N. Y. Supp. 887, 891, 53 Misc. Rep. 222.

Where, in a will containing three separate clauses devising property to each of testator's three children, the first two clauses providing that, if the devisees should die without children or grandchildren living at their death, the property was devised to the devisee's brother and sister or their children or grandchildren, and the third clause making provision for testator's son, and declaring that, if he should die without children or grandchildren, his share should pass to his brother and sister and their children or grandchildren, if there should be any living, the word "and" in the devise to testator's son should be construed as having been used instead of the word "or," and, where the son died without children or grandchildren, his share passed to his brother and sister in fee, and not to them and their children and grandchildren as tenants in common. Davie v. Davie (Ky.) 81 S. W. 246, 247.

A will of one who died survived by a widow and one daughter to whom 11 children were born, gave one-third of a residue of the estate in trust for the widow's life, one-third in trust for the daughter's life, and one-third in trust for the support of the grandchildren, and provided that at the widow's death the trust income should be divided between the daughter and the grandchildren, and that at the daughter's death the estate should "then" go to the grandchildren "and to the issue" of any grandchild who might have died leaving issue, per stirpes, share and share alike. The widow predeceased a grandchild, who died without issue, but leaving a will, and the daughter still lives. Held, that the deceased grandchild took a vested remainder in one-eleventh of the estate, and not jointly with the other grandchildren, nor as a member of a class; the gift to the "issue" of grandchildren being substitutional, and not original, "and" in the quoted phrase being subject to construction as meaning "or," if necessary. Staples v. Mead, 137 N. Y. Supp. 847, 851, 152 App. Div. 745.

Not construed as or

A credit insurance policy limited defendant's liability as to old customers to those who possessed a rating expressed in "Schedule A," or possessed a capital "and" credit rating other than those contained in a specified list, or were rated entirely blank as to both capital and credit, or whose names were not printed in a designated mercantile agency book. Held, that the word "or" could not be substituted for "and" in the clause referring to customers possessing a capital and credit rating other than those contained in the list, and hence an old customer, rated by the mercantile agency as "——— 4," which referred to credit only, and not to capital, was not covered by the policy. Paskusz v. Philadelphia Casualty Co., 131 N. Y. Supp. 421, 423, 146 App. Div. 763.

Same—In contracts or deeds

"And," in a contract which required plaintiff to furnish terra cotta for a building "shown on drawings and described in specifications," is not necessarily to be construed in its disjunctive sense as "or," so as to require plaintiff to furnish terra cotta shown on either the drawings or described in the specifications. Atlantic Terra Cotta Co. v. Masons' Supply Co., 180 Fed. 332, 338, 103 C. C. A. 462.

Same—In civil statutes

"And," as used in Act March 26, 1891, creating a board of state assessors and fixing the term of office of the assessors first chosen by the Legislature to be one for two years, one for four years, and one for six years, "and" until their successors are elected and qualified, who are each elected by the Legislature for six years, cannot be interpreted to mean "or," as it is contemplated that the terms of office shall expire at definite times. Marshall v. State, 72 Atl. 873, 874, 105 Me. 103.

Under Levee Act, § 58, providing that the owner of land outside a drainage district who shall make a connection with a drainage ditch or whose land will be benefited by such ditch shall be deemed to have made voluntary application to be included in the district, it is not necessary that there should be both connection and benefit, but either in itself is sufficient, since this is the plain and unambiguous meaning of the language of the act, and there is no room for construction where there is no ambiguity, and, while "or" may sometimes be construed in statutes, contracts, or wills as "and" to effectuate the intention of the parties, this will be done only where the intention is clearly manifest, and a construction of the word according to its real meaning would involve an absurdity, or produce an unreasonable result. Gar Creek Drainage Dist. v. Wagner, 100 N. E. 190, 193, 256 Ill. 338.

Same—In ordinance

A city ordinance providing that the city treasurer shall receive a monthly salary and a specified "per cent. of all moneys received and paid out by him as treasurer," which shall be payable monthly, is unambiguous, and comprehends both a receipt and disbursement of funds before any commission is payable; and under Code Civ. Proc. § 1858, requiring the court, in the construction of a statute, to declare its terms, and not insert what has been omitted, the court may not construe the ordinance so as to allow the percentage on all moneys received, and on all moneys paid out, by construing the word "and" in the quoted phrase to mean "or." City of Corona v. Merriam (Cal.) 128 Pac. 789, 770.

Same—In penal statutes

Penal Statutes being subject to construction in favor of the accused, the word "and" will not in general be construed "or," or vice versa, to the disadvantage of accused. Williams v. United States, 87 Pac. 647, 648, 17 Okl. 28 (citing United States v. Ten Cases of Shawls, 28 Fed. Cas. 35; Rice v. United States, 53 Fed. 910, 4 C. C. A. 104; United States v. Fisk, 70 U. S. [3 Wall.] 445, 18 L. Ed. 243).

A pleader should use the word "and" in an indictment when the word "or" is used in the statute, whenever the word "or" would leave the averment uncertain as to which of two or more things is meant, but not so where the complaint charges inaction as the violation of a statute commanding action, and the use of the conjunctive "and," instead of the disjunctive "or," would not make the allegation more certain. State v. Smith, 72 Atl. 710, 715, 29 R. I. 513.

In Civ. Code 1895, § 3090, providing that a tenant for life who commits acts tending to the permanent injury of the remainder or reversion shall "for the want of such care and the willful commission of such acts" forfeit his interest to the remainderman, the word "and" should be construed "or," and the section should read that "a forfeiture results from the want of such care or the willful commission of such acts," or should read "for the want of such care, as well as for the commission of such acts." While, in interpreting statutes, it is sometimes permissible to read "and" "or," this change in wording should not be permitted in penal statutes, when it is apparent that it was intended by the Legislature that there should be a concurrence of two things to work the forfeiture or impose the penalty, and the result of a change in the verbiage would have the effect to render the forfeiture or penalty operative by the existence of only one of the two things. Roby v. Newton, 49 S. E. 694, 696, 121 Ga. 679, 68 L. R. A. 601 (citing Hateley v. State, 44 S. E. 852, 118 Ga. 81).

Same—In wills

The word "and" will not be substituted for "or" in the clause in a will providing for the disposition of the testator's estate in case any of his sons should die "without leaving a wife or child," unless the whole context of the will plainly requires such substitution in order to give effect to the intention of the testator. Travers v. Reinhardt, 27 Sup. Ct. 563, 565, 205 U. S. 423, 51 L. Ed. 865.

Under a will making provision for testator's daughter, and providing that in case she should die unmarried and without leaving lawful issue surviving she was authorized to appoint persons who should take her share of the estate, the word "and" could not be read as "or," so that on her death without issue her surviving husband was not entitled to take such fund as the sole beneficiary under her will. Beers v. Grant, 97 N. Y. Supp. 117, 119, 110 App. Div. 152.

AND AFTER THAT

The partial exemption from taxation under a charter provision that the stock of a railway company and its branches shall be wholly exempt for seven years, "and after that" shall be subject to a tax not exceeding a given per cent. on the net proceeds of their investments, cannot be regarded as limited to the 36 years during which the company was to have exclusive rights within a defined territory, on the theory that the words "and after that" do not mean "thereafter," and do not refer to the limitation immediately preceding, but to the 36 years' limitation of the exclusive right regulated by the preceding part of the same section of the charter. Wright v. Georgia R. & Banking Co., 30 Sup. Ct. 242, 243, 216 U. S. 420, 54 L. Ed. 544.

ANGER

"Anger" is defined to mean a strong passion or emotion of displeasure or antagonism excited by real or supposed injury or insult to one's self or others by the intent to do such injury; resentment, wrath, rage, fury, passion, ire, gall, choler, indignation, displeasure, vexation, grudge, spleen. "Anger" and "passion" are interchangeable and mean practically the same thing. Morris v. Territory, 99 Pac. 760, 768, 1 Okl. Cr. 617 (quoting Webster's Dict.). "Anger" is not ordinarily classed as mental suffering. The Standard Dictionary defines it as "violent and vindictive passion or emotion caused by injury or insult, real or imagined. * * * 'Anger' is commonly a sin." The antonyms of "anger," as given by the Dictionary cited, "amiability, forbearance, gentleness, patience, self-control, self-restraint," are emotions of the mind that we are taught to cultivate. Ft. Worth & R. G. Ry. Co. v. Jones, 85 S. W. 37, 39, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 129.

ANGLE BARS

"Angle bars" on a railroad track are pieces of steel bolted in the hollow of the rails, and holding ends of two rails together. Briley v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 76 S. E. 231, 232, 160 N. C. 88.

ANGLO-INDIAN.

An "Anglo-Indian" is the name applied to a British subject domiciled in India. Mather v. Cunningham, 74 Atl. 809, 815, 105 Me. 326, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 761, 18 Ann. Cas. 662.

ANGOSTURA

"Angostura" is a common name in the Spanish language; one meaning is "narrow" or "contracted." Siegert v. Gandolfi, 139 Fed. 917, 919.

ANGUISH

See, also, Mental Agony or Anguish.

"Anguish" is intense pain of body or mind, and not mere disappointment and regret. It is derived from the Latin word "anguis," a snake, referring to the writhing or twisting of the animal body when in great pain. The term is used as indicating a high degree of mental suffering, without which the plaintiff could not recover substantial damages. Mere disappointment would not amount to mental "anguish" or entitle plaintiff to more than nominal damages. Hancock v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 49 S. E. 952, 953, 137 N. C. 497, 69 L. R. A. 403 (citing Stornmouth's Dict.; Hunter's Case, 47 S. E. 745, 135 N. C. 459).

In an action for personal injuries, an instruction that plaintiff, in case of recovery by her, would be entitled to recover for pain and "anguish" shown to be the direct result of the injury, was not erroneous on the ground that the word "anguish" authorized an allowance of damages for humiliation or mental annoyance. City of Evanston v. Richards, 79 N. E. 673, 674, 224 Ill. 444 (citing Village of Sheridan v. Hibbard, 9 N. E. 901, 119 Ill. 807; Cicero & Proviso St. Ry. Co. v. Brown, 61 N. E. 1093, 193 Ill. 274).

A declaration in a servant's action for injuries, averring that he suffered pain and "anguish," is sufficiently explicit to warrant recovery for both mental and physical suffering, or for such mental suffering as was necessarily connected with, and resulted from, physical injury; the word "anguish" meaning pain of mind. Tomasi v. Donk Bros. Coal & Coke Co., 100 N. E. 853, 855, 257 Ill. 70.

Dogs

A dog is an "animal," under Revisal 1905, § 3299, making it a misdemeanor to willfully injure or cruelly kill any useful animal, and defining the word "animal" as including every living creature. State v. Smith, 72 S. E. 321, 324, 156 N. C. 628, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 910.

Fish

An indictment for polluting a stream charging merely that filth and offal "destroyed 'animal life'" therein, does not charge an offense under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 2546, making it unlawful to pollute water so as to injure or destroy fish. United States Board & Paper Co. v. State, 91 N. E. 953, 955, 174 Ind. 460.

Fowls

In 1861 Congress exempted from duty "animals living of all kinds; birds singing and other; and land and water fowls." In 1866 it imposed a duty on "horses, mules, cattle, sheep, hogs and other live animals." Afterward the Supreme Court, in reversing a judgment which charged duty on imported live birds, held that in the act of 1861 Congress adopted the popular meaning of the word "animals" and applied it to quadrupeds only, placing birds and fowls in a different classification, and that accordingly that the act of 1866, when it spoke of "animals," also meant quadrupeds and intended to impose a duty upon domestic quadrupeds, leaving the act of 1861 to apply as before to all other quadrupeds and also to birds and fowls. Debitulla v. Lehigh & Wilkes-Barre Coal Co., 174 Fed. 886, 890.

Green turtles

Under Penal Law, § 180, declaring that the word "animal," as used in the article, includes every living creature other than the human race, green turtles imported and used for food are animals within section 189, providing that a person who carries or causes to be carried in or on any vessel or vehicle any animal in a cruel and inhuman manner, or so as to produce torture, is guilty of a misdemeanor. *People ex rel. ANNOY—ANNOYANCE

"Annoy" means to disturb or irritate especially by repeated or continued acts. Hence the encroachments and unfair competition of a combination may annoy the community and cause a nuisance. Territory v. Long Bell Lumber Co., 99 Pac. 911, 920, 22 Okl. 890 (citing Webster's Dict.).

The word "annoyances," though used in a kindred sense with the word "inconveniences," in an instruction in condemnation proceedings, authorizing the jury in determining the amount of damages to consider the annoyances and inconveniences resulting from the appropriation, was an injudicious expression, as it ordinarily relates to injuries for which no damages can be recovered, because the amount is so uncertain, speculative, and indefinite. Toledo & C. I. Ry. Co. v. Wagner, 85 N. E. 1025, 1026, 171 Ind. 185.

ANNUAL

The word "annual," as used in an antenuptial contract providing for the annual payment of a certain sum to the wife after the husband's death in lieu of dower, not only denotes the amount to be paid, but the time of payment. It means not only that the wife is to receive the specified sum for each year, but that the sum is to be paid to her each year. An agreement to pay a fixed sum annually for each year, in the absence of language modifying the ordinary meaning of these terms, cannot fairly be construed as a promise to pay such sum annually in advance, or at the commencement of each year. Mower v. Sanford, 57 Atl. 119, 120, 76 Conn. 504, 63 L. R. A. 625, 100 Am. St. Rep. 1008.

ANNUAL MEETING

The expression "annual meeting," in Rev. St. § 3246, providing for the election in corporations not formed for profit of trustees who shall hold their office until the next "annual meeting," and "annual election," used in Rev. St. § 3246, providing for the annual election of such trustees, refer to the same thing, and the annual meeting is the time when the annual election is to occur. State ex rel. Wachenheimer v. Toledo & Lucas County Burial Ass'n, 28 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 397, 412.

Acts 1902, p. 94, No. 90, § 2, provides, that the warning of "every town meeting to be held on the first Tuesday of March, 1903, and annually thereafter," shall contain an article providing for the vote on the question of whether license shall be granted for the sale of intoxicating liquors. P. S. 6, provides that the words "annual meeting" shall mean the annual town meeting in March, or an adjournment thereof. Section 3418 provides that town meetings shall be held annually on the first Tuesday of March, and may be adjourned to another time to complete the business, but that a failure to hold such meeting shall not prevent the election of officers at a subsequent meeting. Section 3419 requires that a town meeting be warned by the selectmen as to the business to be done. Section 5104 provides that the warning of each annual town meeting shall contain an article providing for a vote on the question whether license shall be granted for the sale of intoxicating liquors. The selectmen of a town failed to warn the annual town meeting at the proper time, and a special town meeting was warned and held on the 17th day of March. The warning for the special meeting contained an article calling for a vote on the question of license. Held, that a vote on that question at that meeting was not authorized, as the question of license can only be submitted at the annual meeting. State v. Sargent, 69 Atl. 825, 81 Vt. 266.

ANNUAL SALARY

A contract for an "annual salary" of $1,800 per year is a contract for an annual salary of such amount, payable in monthly installments, where the parties by their conduct have so construed the same. F. B. Tait Mfg. Co. v. Tinsman, 138 Ill. App. 74, 77.

ANNUAL SESSION

Under County Law (Laws 1892, c. 686) § 23, providing that each supervisor shall receive $4 per day for attending sessions of the board, and mileage for once going and returning between his residence and the place of meeting for each regular and special session, and section 10, providing that the board shall meet annually, may hold special meetings, and may adjourn from time to time, the terms "annual meeting" and "regular session" are synonymous, and a "regular" or "special" session is measured by its actual duration; each day not being a session, within section 23, so as to entitle the supervisors to mileage for each day's actual attendance at sessions of their boards. Wallace v. Jones, 107 N. Y. Supp. 288, 290, 122 App. Div. 497.

As per annum see Per Annum.

"The words 'per year' are equivalent to the word 'annually.'" In the absence of terms indicating a contrary intention, a covenant in a gas and oil lease to drill a well on the leased premises within two years, or thereafter to pay $80 "annually" until a well is drilled does not require the annual payments to be made in advance, and the covenant is performed by a single payment of the entire sum at any time before the end of the year for which it is made. Rhodes v. Mound City Gas, Coal & Oil Co., 104 Pac. 851, 852, 80 Kan. 762 (citing Curtiss v. Howell, 39 N. Y. 211, 213).

ANNUITY

An "annuity" is a yearly sum stipulated to be paid to another in fee or for life or years. Wiegand v. Woerner, 184 S. W. 596, 603, 155 Mo. App. 227.

"An 'annuity,' in its strict sense, is a yearly payment of a certain sum of money granted to another in fee or for life or for years and chargeable only on the person of a grantor." Dulaney's Adm'r v. Dulaney, 54 S. E. 40, 41, 105 Va. 429.

An "annuity" is a sum payable annually, unless the language of the instrument creating it may properly be construed as providing for a different time of payment. Mower v. Sanford, 57 Atl. 119, 120, 76 Conn. 504, 63 L. R. A. 625, 100 Am. St. Rep. 1008.

An "annuity" is a fixed amount directed to be paid absolutely and without contingency. It is a stated amount payable annually. It is a yearly payment of a certain sum of money granted to another in fee for life or for years. It is a grant of a certain sum of money payable at the expiration of fixed consecutive periods, for a definite term or for life. Peck v. Kinney, 143 Fed. 78, 80, 74 C. C. A. 270 (citing Pearson v. Chace, 10 R. I. 455).

Where a testatrix devised property to a trustee to rent and pay the income to her four sons, the sons had neither a rent charge nor an annuity, for an "annuity" is a certain yearly sum granted to a person in fee or for life or for years, chargeable only on the person of the grantor, or in a broader sense a fixed sum payable periodically chargeable on real property as well as on the person. Routt v. Newman, 97 N. E. 208, 209, 253 Ill. 185.

Where an executor was to invest a sufficient sum to produce $1,200 annually, which was to be paid to the annuitant during her natural life, "in payments quarterly or three hundred dollars each," such bequest is an "annuity." Steelman v. Wheaton, 66 Atl. 195, 196, 72 N. J. Eq. 626.

The reservation, in a deed of a life estate, in the land conveyed by the grantor and his wife, from which rents and profits to the amount from $400 to $500 were received annually, was not an "annuity," which is a yearly sum of money granted by one person to another in fee for life or years, charging the person of the grantor only. White v. City of Marion, 117 N. W. 254, 256, 139 Iowa, 479.

Income or profits distinguished

"An 'annuity' is a stated sum per annum, payable annually unless otherwise directed. It is not income or profits, nor indeterminate in amount varying according to the income or profits, though a certain sum may be payable out of which it is to be payable." A bequest to an executor of a sum sufficient to produce $1,200 annually to be paid to the annuitant "in payments quarterly of $300 each" is an "annuity." Steelman v. Wheaton, 66 Atl. 195, 196, 72 N. J. Eq. 626 (quoting and adopting the definition in Booth v. Ammerman [N. Y.] 4 Bradf. Sur. 129).

"An 'annuity' is a stated sum payable annually unless otherwise directed. It is not 'income' or 'profits' or indeterminate in amount, varying according to the income or profits, though a certain sum may be provided out of which it is to be payable, and hence, when a testator gave a beneficiary the interest upon a certain sum payable annually, it is not an annuity but merely an ordinary legacy, for it is not a stated sum, but may be more or less according to the earnings of the capital and is merely interest or income. There is a distinction between income and annuity. The former embraces only the net profits after deducting all necessary expenses and charges. The latter is a fixed amount directed to be paid above and without contingency. The income or interest of a certain fund (bequest) is not an annuity, but simply profits to be earned, and, although directed to be paid annually that relates only to the mode of payment and does not change the character of the bequest." Poe v. Raleigh & A. Air Line Co., 54 S. E. 406, 407, 141 N. C. 525 (quoting 1 Words and Phrases, p. 405; citing Bartlett v. Slater, 22 Atl. 878, 53 Conn. 102, 55 Am. Rep. 78, and Booth v. Ammerman [N. Y.] 4 Bradf. Sur. 129).

A gift of an income from a certain fund is not an "annuity," and interest does not begin thereon until one year from the death of the deceased. In re Brown's Estate, 77 Pac. 160, 162, 143 Cal. 450.

Rent charge distinguished

A "rent charge" is a charge against land in the hands of the purchaser and arises out of the land itself, while an "annuity" is a yearly payment of a certain sum of money granted to one for life, years, or in fee, chargeable upon the person of the grantor. A deed of land in consideration of the payment to the grantor of an annual sum until the grantor's death, and retaining a lien to secure such payments, imposed merely a personal obligation on the grantee to make the payments and created an "annuity," and not a "rent charge," the provision securing the payments by a lien not affecting the personal character of the obligation, and that the grantor rented the land and applied the rent on the annual payments with the grantee's acquiescence did not affect the character of the instrument. Lynch v. Houston, 119 S. W. 994, 995, 138 Mo. App. 167.

ANNUL

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 1991, providing that, when a will has been probated, its provisions and directions, unless annulled or suspended by an order of court, shall be executed, the refusal of the county court to appoint the person named as executor did not annul the will; an annulment being a special proceeding. Shook v. Journeay (Tex.) 149 S. W. 406, 412.

Repeal synonymous

See Repeal.

ANONYMOUS

The word "anonymous" is defined in the Century Dictionary as "of unknown name; one whose name is withheld, as an anonymous author, or as an anonymous pamphlet; or without any name; wanting a name; without the real name of the author; nameless." A newspaper article signed "Smith," written by a person with such a surname, is not "anonymous," within a statute providing that the requirement of notice of intention to bring an action for libel published in a newspaper shall not apply to anonymous publications. Williams v. Smith, 46 S. E. 502, 503, 134 N. C. 249.

ANOTHER

See Debt of Another; House of Another; Right of Another.

Action arising in another state, see Arise—Arising.

The word "another," as used in Lien Law (Consol. Laws, c. 33) § 17, providing that, if the lienor is made a party defendant in an action to enforce another lien, the lien of such defendant is thereby continued, is equivalent to "other." John A. Philbrick & Bro. v. Ignatz Florio Co-op. Ass'n, 122 N. Y. Supp. 341, 344, 137 App. Div. 613.

Under Pen. Code, § 179, defining homicide as the killing of one human being by the act, procurement, or omission of "another," and section 180, providing that homicide is either murder or manslaughter, and section 193, subd. 3, making a homicide manslaughter in the second degree when due to the act, procurement, or culpable negligence of any "person" which does not constitute murder or manslaughter in the first degree, a corporation may not be indicted for manslaughter, since the word "another" means another human being, and since the word "person" does not include a corporation. People v. Rochester Ry. & Light Co., 88 N. E. 22, 24, 195 N. Y. 102, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 998, 133 Am. St. Rep. 770, 16 Ann. Cas. 837.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 3017, which gives a right of action for death caused by the wrongful act, negligence, unskillfulness, or default of "another," makes a private corporation liable to the same extent as a natural person would be under the same facts; and whatever acts of its general manager, done for the corporation, would render him liable, if done for himself, will bind the corporation as it would bind him, but no further. Commerce Cotton Oil Co. v. Camp (Tex.) 145 S. W. 902, 903.

A house belonging to a married woman is the property of "another" than her husband under Gen. St. 1901, § 2046, providing that any person burning the property of "another" shall on conviction be adjudged guilty of arson, since the common-law idea that husband and wife are one does not prevail in this state. State v. Shaw, 100 Pac. 78, 79, 79 Kan. 396, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 27, 131 Am. St. Rep. 298.

Arson is an offense against the security of the habitation, and is defined as the malicious burning of another's house, and by "another's house" in the definition is meant another's to occupy. Peinhardt v. State, 49 South. 831, 832, 161 Ala. 70.

The word "another," as used in Rev. St. 1895, art. 3017, which gives a right of action for death caused by the wrongful act, etc., of another, means another person, and includes private corporations. Williams v. Coca-Cola Co. (Tex.) 150 S. W. 759, 761.

ANOTHER CARGO

Plaintiff, having sold to defendant a cargo of ties, by certain telegrams offered to sell defendant "another cargo" on certain terms, which offer defendant accepted. Held, that the contract was not objectionable for failure to fix the amount of ties to be furnished; the words "another cargo" being construed to mean another cargo of the same quantity as the former one. Maydwell v. Rogers Lumber Co., 159 Fed. 930, 981, 87 C. C. A. 110.

ANOTHER COUNTRY

The Philippine Islands are not "another country" within the meaning of the provision of the commercial convention with Cuba (Act Dec. 17, 1903, art. 8, 33 Stat. 2136) that the rates of duty granted to Cuba by that treaty, being a reduction of 20 per cent. from the rates prescribed by Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, 30 Stat. 151, or any tariff laws subsequently enacted, shall continue preferential in respect to all like imports from other countries. Faber v. United States, 31 Sup. Ct. 659, 660, 221 U. S. 649, 55 L. Ed. 897.

ANSWER

See Full Answer; Held to Appear or Answer; Original Answer; Promise to Answer for Debt, Default, etc.; Quick Answer; Sham Answer; Supplemental Answer; Time for Answering.

Frivolous Answer, see Frivolous Pleading.

An "answer" must confute plaintiff's claim in fact or in law—in other words, being to defeat suit, it must contain matter of defense or avoidance—and hence a pleading admitting the debt sued on, alleging inability to pay and praying judgment according to law, is not, strictly, an answer; being a plea of confession. Arizona Mining & Trading Co. v. Benton, 100 Pac. 952, 954, 12 Ariz. 373.

Counterclaim or set-off

"The distinction between an 'answer' and a 'counterclaim' or set-off is an obvious one. The purpose of an answer is to defeat the action and bar recovery. A counterclaim or set-off, on the contrary, is a pleading by which defendant states a cause of action in his own favor and against plaintiff. It does not purport to answer the complaint, or to set forth any facts which bar a recovery on it. It has none of the properties of an answer. It neither admits nor denies the allegations of the complaint. It does not confess and avoid them. Where a defendant succeeds on an answer going to the whole complaint, the only judgment the court can pronounce is that plaintiff can take nothing by his complaint, that defendant go hence thereof without day, and by virtue of the statute that defendant recover his costs. If a defendant wishes to obtain affirmative relief against plaintiff, he must state his cause of action by way of counterclaim or set-off. It is settled beyond dispute that the same pleading cannot be treated both as an answer and as a counterclaim." It is provided in Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 350, Rev.

St. 1881, § 347, that set-off and counterclaim may be pleaded as answers, but to be sufficient they must allege facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against the plaintiff." Stoner v. Swift, 74 N. E. 248, 164 Ind. 652 (quoting and adopting definition in Bird v. St. John's Episcopal Church, 56 N. E. 129, 133, 154 Ind. 138).

Under Gen. St. 1894, § 5236, providing that the "answer" may contain new matter constituting a counterclaim, and section 5240, declaring that sham, irrelevant, and frivolous answers may be stricken out, an answer consisting of a counterclaim may be stricken out as sham and frivolous, since a counterclaim, although consisting of new matter, may constitute an "answer." Monitor Drill Co. v. Moody, 100 N. W. 1104, 93 Minn. 232.

The word "answer," in Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 352, providing that the answer shall contain a denial of each allegation of the complaint controverted by defendant, and a statement of new matter constituting a defense, counterclaim, or set-off, is a statement of a defense to the cause, and a pleading cannot perform the office of both an answer and a counterclaim or set-off. Duffy v. England, 96 N. E. 704, 707, 176 Ind. 575.

A "set-off," which was unknown to the common law, but is permitted by Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 353, requiring a set-off to consist of matter arising out of debt, duty, or contract held by defendant when the suit was commenced, etc., is a counterdemand growing out of an independent transaction for which defendant may sue plaintiff, and pleaded by defendant to counterbalance plaintiff's recovery in whole or in part and to recover judgment in his own favor, but a set-off is not an "answer" in its ordinary meaning as a statement of a defense to plaintiff's cause of action, for it impliedly admits the cause of action. Duffy v. England, 96 N. E. 704, 707, 176 Ind. 575.

A "counterclaim," which was unknown at common law, and is defined by Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 355, as any matter arising out of or connected with the cause of action which might be the subject of a cause of action for defendant, embraces both the chancery cross-bill and the common-law recoupment, and must arise out of or be connected with plaintiff's cause of action, but a counterclaim is not an "answer" in its ordinary meaning as a statement of a defense to plaintiff's cause of action. Duffy v. England, 96 N. E. 704, 707, 176 Ind. 575.

Cross-bill

Under Rev. Codes, §§ 6530, 6540, defining an "answer" as a general or specific denial of the complaint controverted by defendant, etc., and a statement of any new matter constituting a defense or counterclaim, and defining a counterclaim, without making any mention of a claim by one defendant against a codetendant, there is no such pleading as a cross-bill. Alywin v. Morley, 108 P. 778, 783, 41 Mont. 191.

Demurrer, motion, or plea

A motion directed to a defective statement in a pleading does not present an issue of fact or of law, and cannot be classed as an "answer." Brownell v. Salem Flouring Mills Co., 87 Pac. 770, 771, 48 Or. 525.

A motion to strike out a part of the complaint as frivolous, irrelevant, and redundant does not constitute an "answer," within B. & C. Comp. § 548, providing that any party to a judgment other than by confession, or for want of an answer, may appeal therefrom, the term "answer," contemplating a pleading raising a question of law or fact, and hence a defendant could not appeal from a judgment rendered upon denial of the motion. Multnomah County v. Faling, 104 Pac. 964, 55 Or. 45.

Leave to one in default to "answer" does not imply leave to file a demurrer or plea. Turpin v. Derickson, 66 Atl. 276, 278, 105 Md. 620.

ANSWER OF ANY GARNISHEE

The phrase, "the answer of any garnishee," in Rev. St. 1895, art. 245, providing that, where the garnishing plaintiff is dissatisfied with "the answer of any garnishee," he may controvert the same, applies to all answers, and in whatever way an answer of a garnishee is obtained the garnishing plaintiff may controvert it. American Surety Co. v. Bernstein, 105 S. W. 990, 992, 101 Tex. 189; Same v. Hockwald, 105 S. W. 992, 101 Tex. 197.

ANSWER OF JUROR

The "answer" of a juror, under Code 1896, § 5308, relative to the polling of the jury, and which speaks of the "answer" of any juror, need not be by word of mouth, but may be made by movement of the head. Brown v. State, 37 South. 408, 409, 141 Ala. 80.

ANTICIPATION

"Anticipation" is defined as used in the present for what is to accrue; dealing with income before it is due. Gray v. Board of School Inspectors of Peoria, 83 N. E. 95, 99, 231 Ill. 63 (quoting Anderson's Law Dict.).

A patent is not "anticipated" by prior patents for devices which might by slight modifications have been made to perform the function of that of the later patent, where it does not appear that the patentees had in mind their use or adaption to accomplish such result. Gunn v. Bridgeport Brass Co., 148 Fed. 239, 242.

A device which does not operate on the same principle as that of a patent cannot be an "anticipation." It is not sufficient to constitute anticipation that the devices relied upon might, by a process of modification, reorganization, or combination, be made to accomplish the function performed by the device of the patent. Los Alamitos Sugar Co. v. Carroll, 173 Fed. 280, 284, 97 C. C. A. 446.

ANY

See By Any Device Whatever; Either, Any or All; If Any.

The word "any," in Rev. Codes, § 2315, as amended by Sess. Laws 1909, p. 174, giving to every city the power to issue municipal coupon bonds for "any" or all of the purposes named therein, and section 2316, providing the procedure whenever the common council of a city or the trustees of a town shall deem it advisable to issue coupon bonds for "any" of the purposes aforesaid, should be considered in connection with the entire body of existing statutory law relating to municipal improvements, keeping in mind the purpose of the Legislature and the object to be attained, and should not receive a technical or limited construction, but should be construed in harmony with the evident intention of the lawmaking body. Platt v. City of Payette, 114 Pac. 25, 27, 19 Idaho, 470.

Failure of a coal mine operator to provide a person to open and close a door in a coal mine gives the driver of a car, who was injured by his head striking the top of the doorway while trying to keep the self-closing door open while going through on his car, no right of action, under Act March 2, 1891, § 18, providing that the doors used in assisting or directing the ventilation of the mine when coal is being hauled through shall be opened and closed by persons designated to do the same, so that the driver shall not.

cause the doors to stand open, the provision of the statute being designated solely to prevent interference with the circulation of the air, and not to protect drivers from injury in opening the doors; and this, though section 13 of the statute provides that for "any" injury to a person occasioned by violation of the act a right of action shall accrue, the word "any" referring to such injury as the statute is designed to prevent. Indiana & C. Coal Co. v. Neal, 77 N. E. 850-852, 166 Ind. 458, 9 Ann. Cas. 424.

As all or every

The word "any," as used in an allegation that defendant, an abstractor of titles, made a false certificate that certain land was "free from any incumbrance," is to be construed as meaning that there were no incumbrances, or that there was not a single incumbrance. A contention that the words of the certificate were insufficient to convey the idea that the land was free from all incumbrances cannot be sustained. This construction of the language of the certificate is not affected by the construction of the word "any," in Webster's Dict.: "One out of many; indefinite, some; an indefinite number or quantity." Hershiser v. Ward, 87 Pac. 171, 174, 29 Nev. 228.

The word "any," as used in a will providing, after directing the payment of debts, that testator's wife should have the family residence for life, remainder to his three daughters, and then directing that his executor should have power to convert into money "any" property, real or personal, of which he might die possessed, and divide and distribute as follows: To his granddaughter one-fifth of a $2,000 life policy, the amount to be paid out of the estate if the policy was not paid in full, and to his wife the household and kitchen furniture, and also providing, "It is my special desire that my wife and three daughters shall share equally in the distribution of my estate after the bequests already made are complied with," would be construed to mean "all," and was meant to include, besides the personal property, all his real estate, except his residence. Thomas' Ex'r v. Thomas' Guardian (Ky.) 110 S. W. 853, 855.

Section 11 of the Paris City Charter is as follows: "Provided, that the offices of assessor and collector and city secretary, as heretofore combined by the city council under the name of city secretary, may so continue at the option of the council. * * * Provided, further, that the city council may combine, or abolish any of the offices above named." Held, the word "any" refers to an indefinite number of objects, and, as "either" is singular, and has reference to only one group, "any" to give it its usual and ordinary meaning, must be construed to mean "all," rather than "either," and the proviso cannot therefore refer to section 11, as only two offices constitute the entire group therein, and the section itself combines such offices, leaving action by the council unnecessary, and the proviso cannot refer to a section dealing with the council itself, and, section 10 dealing only with offices and agencies which the council may create, it will be held to refer to section 9, enumerating all offices constituting the city government, except the city council; that section being the first appropriate section in proximity to the proviso. McCuistion v. Fenet (Tex.) 144 S. W. 1155, 1157.

Ky. St. § 3187, as amended by Acts 1910, c. 106, § 4, authorizing a direct action for judgment where "any property" subject to taxation has been omitted from assessment, includes all property subject to taxation, and, where the franchise of a corporation has not been assessed as prescribed by section 4077 because of the failure of the corporation to make a proper report, a direct action lies against the corporation for taxes on the franchise; the word "any" meaning "all."—City of Covington v. Cincinnati, C. & R. Ry. Co., 139 S. W. 854, 855, 144 Ky. 646.

The phrase "the answer of any garnishee," in Rev. St. 1895, art. 245, providing that if the garnishing plaintiff is dissatisfied with the answer of "any garnishee" he may controvert the same, includes all answers, and in whatever way an answer of a garnishee is obtained the garnishing plaintiff may controvert it. American Surety Co. v. Bernstein, 105 S. W. 990, 992, 101 Tex. 189.

In Const. art. 12, § 7, declaring that no corporation shall lease or alienate "any franchise" so as to relieve it from liabilities of the lessor or grantor, the words "any franchise" include all franchises, both primary and secondary. Cooper v. Utah Light & Ry. Co., 102 Pac. 202, 206, 35 Utah, 570, 136 Am. St. Rep. 1075 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, pp. 413, 414).

Loc. Acts 1883, No. 259, being an act providing for the payment of fees to the clerk of court in the county of W. in suits in the circuit court of that county, provides for a decree fee of $4, if there be no other answer or pleading filed by the defendant. Pub. Acts 1911, No. 267, prescribing the fees of clerks of courts and registers in chancery, declares (section 1) that before any suit at law or in chancery shall be commenced in any circuit court, or in the superior court of Grand Rapids, there shall be paid to the clerk or register of said court by moving party, before the entry of any final judgment by default in the action at law or pro confesso decree in chancery, the sum of $2. Held, that the word "any" meant "every," "each one of all"; that the two acts were in irreconcilable conflict; and that the general act repealed the local one. Hopkins v. Sanders, 137 N. W. 709, 713, 172 Mich. 227.

As any one out of a number

The term "any," as used in V. S. 1183 (P. S. 1534), providing that where an execution on a judgment against a partnership or association is returned unsatisfied a suit for the amount unpaid may be brought against any or all of the partners or associates upon their original liability, should not be given its limited sense, but its enlarged and plural sense—meaning some; however few or many; an indefinite number. And a suit may be brought against one or more of the associates of an association, without making all the associates defendants. Tarbell & Whitham v. Gifford, 65 Atl. 80, 79 Vt. 369.

In Const. art. 12, § 7, declaring that "no corporation shall lease or alienate any franchise so as to relieve the franchise or property held thereunder from the liabilities of the lessor or grantor, lessee or grantee, contracted or incurred in operation, use or enjoyment of such franchise or any of its privileges," the word "any" means any one of a number. Cooper v. Utah Light & Ry. Co., 102 Pac. 202, 206, 35 Utah, 570, 136 Am. St. Rep. 1075 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, pp. 413, 414).

As either

The Paris City Charter, § 11, which follows several sections designating the city officers, and prescribing the manner of their election or appointment, their duties, and their terms of office, contains the following proviso: "Provided, that the offices of assessor and collector and city secretary * * * may so continue at the option of the city council. * * * Provided, further, that the city council may combine or abolish any of the offices above named." Held, that the last proviso refers only to the officers named in the next preceding clause of the same section and not to officers mentioned in the other section, and does not authorize the city council to abolish the offices of city attorney and city marshal; the word "any" having the sense of "either" or "any one." Fenet v. McCuiston (Tex.) 147 S. W. 867, 869.

Any action

The words "any action," as used in Hurd's Rev. St. 1901, c. 51, § 9, giving courts, in any action pending before them, power to compel the production of books containing evidence pertaining to the issue, includes a suit at law as well as a bill in chancery, and the words exclude the idea that the evidence sought to be obtained can only be acquired by a bill of discovery. Swedish-American Tel. Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 70 N. E. 768, 773, 208 Ill. 562.

Any additions

A gas franchise to which plaintiff succeeded authorized it to lay gas pipes and extend the service throughout the city, and any additions thereafter made to it. A subsequent amendment authorized laying pipes and extending the service throughout the city and "any additions thereto," and later a new franchise authorized a factory to supply gas in the city and as the boundaries thereof were or might hereafter be. Held, that the words "any additions thereto" were not limited to unplatted areas within the then city limits, and that, on the addition of territory, the franchise attached to it at once and authorized plaintiff to extend its mains through it. Seattle Lighting Co. v. City of Seattle, 102 Pac. 767, 54 Wash. 9, 18 Ann. Cas. 1117.

Any agent

The words "any agent" in McIlwaine's Dig. art. 1223a, authorizing service of process on any agent making contracts for the transportation of passengers or freight over the line of railway of any foreign corporation doing business in the state, mean any agent who sells tickets or makes contracts of transportation over the line of a foreign railroad; and the section, so construed, provides for service in addition to the means provided by article 1223, providing for the service on enumerated officers of foreign corporations. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Demere & Coggin (Tex.) 145 S. W. 623, 626.

Any alien

The provision of Naturalization Act June 29, 1906, § 4, cl. 6, that "when any alien who has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States dies before he is actually naturalized the widow and minor children of such alien may, by complying with the other provisions of this act, be naturalized without making any declaration of intention," is precisely the same in effect as Rev. St. § 2168, which is repealed by the later act, and, being a re-enactment, the words "any alien who has declared his intention" must be construed to include persons who made their declarations under the old statute, and subsequently died, whose minor children may be naturalized under the new act without making any declaration of intention. In re Shearer, 158 Fed. 839, 841.

Any allotment

In the original Seminole Agreement of December 16, 1897 (Act July 1, 1898, c. 542, 30 Stat. 567), providing that all contracts for sale, disposition, or incumbrance of any part of any allotment made prior to patent shall be void, "any allotment" has reference to all allotted lands, whether set apart directly to the allottee or descending to the heirs of the allottee upon his or her death. Stout v. Simpson, 124 Pac. 754, 756, 34 Okl. 129.

Any and all liability

In a release of the parties to a lease from "any and all liability arising therefrom," the phrase quoted referred to liability arising from the lease and not to the time when the liability should cease, but covered any and all liability arising from the lease.

Escambia Land & Mfg. Co. v. Ferry Pass. Inspectors & Shippers Ass'n, 52 South. 715, 716, 59 Fla. 239.

Any and all necessary expenses

The phrase "any and all necessary expenses," as used in a will devising the body of the testator's estate to the executors in trust to collect the income, and, after deducting any and all necessary expenses, to divide the net income in equal shares among the persons named, is sufficient to include the payment of taxes charged upon the legacies under the collateral inheritance tax law, the New York state transfer tax, and the United States war tax, and such taxes are payable out of the gross income, and not out of the principal of the estate. In re Brown's Estate, 57 Atl. 360, 208 Pa. 161.

Any and all suits, proceedings, causes or actions

The proviso of Pub. Acts 1907, p. 212, No. 161, that in any and all suits, proceedings, causes, or actions pending a change of venue may be had in the manner provided by Pub. Acts 1905, p. 483, No. 309, does not authorize a change of venue in condemnation proceedings, as it merely continues in force "any and all suits, proceedings, causes, or actions" pending under Pub. Acts 1905, p. 483, No. 309, which authorizes a change in a "criminal action" or a "civil action," but does not apply to condemnation proceedings. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co. v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 117 N. W. 1050, 154 Mich. 493.

Any and every description

Where a deed provides that the grantee shall assume and pay existing mortgages, liens, taxes, and "claims of any and every description," the maxim of ejusdem generis has no application to restrict the phrase "and claims of any and every description" to such claims as are indicated by the preceding words "mortgages, liens, and taxes." Gage v. Cameron, 72 N. E. 204, 208, 212 Ill. 146.

Any and every kind of business

Where a policy provided for indemnity in case insured by reason of injury should be immediately and wholly disabled and prevented from prosecuting any and every kind of business for a period of not less than a week, the word "prosecution" indicated that the parties intended that the insured, in order to recover benefits, should be wholly disabled from doing that business which he had the ability to prosecute, and hence the term "disabled from prosecuting any and every kind of business" and did not mean that insured, who was a day laborer and able to do only manual work, could not recover because he was not so disabled as to be prevented from performing mental activities if he had the requisite education, and he was therefore wholly disabled within the policy when he was incapacitated from performing manual labor. Industrial Mut. Indemnity Co. v. Hawkins, 127 S. W. 457, 459, 94 Ark. 417, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 635, 21 Ann. Cas. 1029.

Any appreciable degree

See Appreciable Degree.

Any article of imported merchandise

Boxes containing lemons, which are treated in the tariff act as a dutiable entity by themselves, being subjected to a separate classification from the lemons they contain, are within the provision in Customs Administrative Act for the undervaluation of "any article of imported merchandise," and, when undervalued, are subject to the penalties provided by said section.—Phelps Bros. & Co. v. United States, 142 Fed. 213.

Any article or thing

A railroad entering into an agreement with other railroads to fix passenger and freight rates does not thereby violate the anti-trust act, prohibiting combinations to fix the price of articles of merchandise, manufacture, mechanism, commodity, convenience, repair, or the products of mining "or any article or thing whatsoever," since the quoted words do not include passenger and freight rates, and since the subject of transportation by carriers has been the subject of separate and independent legislation. State v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 128 S. W. 555, 556, 95 Ark. 114.

Any bill

Plaintiffs, commission merchants, after doing business with defendant's son, refused to make any further sales to him unless they had a guaranty from defendant, whereupon defendant wrote plaintiffs that, "I will be responsible for any bill that my son James will make." Held, that the use of the word "any" did not limit the guaranty to the bill of goods purchased at the time of the delivery of the guaranty, but that the guaranty was a continuing one. Newcomb v. Kloeblen, 74 Atl. 511, 512, 77 N. J. Law, 791, 89 L. R. A. (N. S.) 724.

Any building

Gen. St. 1902, §§ 4135-4138, providing for the creation and enforcement of a mechanic's lien for material furnished and services rendered in the construction of "any building," do not authorize such lien on a public school building. National Fire Proofing Co. v. Town of Huntington, 71 Atl. 911, 81 Conn. 632, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 261, 129 Am. St. Rep. 228.

Any business connected with said railway

The term "any business connected with said railway or incident thereto," as used in a conveyance by citizens of a town to a railroad, making a donation of a right of way through lands suitable for residences only, for the purpose of having railroad depots placed nearer the town and to enhance the value of their property, giving the right to the railroad to establish, on the land so conveyed, "any business connected with said railway or incident thereto," does not give the railroad the right to establish stockpens on the land so conveyed, to the damage of adjacent property. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas v. Mott, 81 S. W. 235, 239, 98 Tex. 91, 70 L. R. A. 579.

Any car

Locomotives are embraced by the words "any car" in Act March 2, 1893, § 2, prohibiting common carriers from using any car in moving interstate commerce not equipped with automatic couplers, although locomotives were elsewhere in the statute in terms required to be equipped with power driving-wheel brakes. Johnson v. Southern Pac. Co., 25 Sup. Ct. 158-161, 196 U. S. 1, 49 L. Ed. 363.

Any case or cause

See If in Any Case.

The phrase "in any case," used in Act March 3, 1891, § 14, providing that if it shall appear that lands, or any part thereof, decreed to any claimant, shall have been sold by the United States, applies not only to proceedings brought by the claimant himself for confirmation, but to proceedings on behalf of the government in which the court is to determine the matter, subject to all lawful rights adverse to the claimant or possessor. Richardson v. Ainsa, 81 Sup. Ct. 23, 24, 218, 289, 54 L. Ed. 1044.

The reciprocal demurrage law requires railroads to furnish suitable cars to persons applying therefor in good faith, to provide suitable facilities for handling them, and to receive and transport empty and loaded cars furnished by connecting roads. Section 11 provides that the period during which the movement of freight is suspended by strikes, public calamities, accident, or any cause not within the power of the railroad company to prevent, or during which the loading or unloading of freight by shipper or consignee is delayed by inclement weather, making loading or unloading impracticable, or by any cause not within the power of the shipper or consignee to prevent, shall be added to the free time allowed. Held, that the clause "any cause not within the power of the shipper or consignee to prevent," and the term "accident," are to be broadly construed, and include all causes not reasonably within the power of the carrier to prevent. Hardwick Farmers' Elevator Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 124 N. W. 819, 821, 110 Minn. 25, 19 Ann. Cas. 1088; Gray v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., 124 N. W. 1100, 110 Minn. 527.

Under a statute requiring the court to appoint a special administrator when there is delay in granting letters of administration "from any cause," the phrase "from any cause" means from any legal cause. State ex rel. Eakins v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist., 85 Pac. 1022, 34 Mont. 226.

That from the tenor of the lease itself and the circumstances of the case the rule ejusdem generis is applicable in the construction of said saving clause; that the words "any cause beyond the control of the second party," as therein used, refer to causes of a temporary character, created and arising subsequent to the execution of the lease, and that, therefore, the unminable condition of a part of the mine as aforesaid, is not such a cause, within the meaning of the saving clause, as will relieve defendant from the production of the required minimum tonnage or payment of the agreed royalty therefor. New York Coal Co. v. New Pittsburgh Coal Co., 99 N. E. 198, 206, 86 Ohio St. 140.

Any cause whatsoever

A rule of a water company provided that it should not be liable for a deficiency of water whether occasioned by shutting off water to make repairs or for "any cause whatsoever." Held, that the phrase embraced every possible cause, not only those arising out of the exigencies of the company's business, but even those resulting from its negligence. Buchanan & Smock Lumber Co. v. East Jersey Coast Water Co., 59 Atl. 31, 32, 71 N. J. Law, 350.

Any certain kind of accepted kinds

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 8710, provides that residents on a street sought to be improved may require that it be paved with "any certain kind of the accepted kinds" of city pavements, and where the residents have petitioned for the use of bitulithic pavement, and the specifications of the proposed contract required its use, it is no objection that it could be had under open bids naming a bituminous macadam pavement, since the words "any certain kind of the accepted kinds" mean a kind which is fixed and determined when the specifications are filed for bids. Tousey v. City of Indianapolis, 94 N. E. 225, 227, 175 Ind. 295.

Any change increasing the risk

Rev. St. 1906, § 3643, makes an insurance company liable for the full amount mentioned in the policy in case of total loss, in the absence of "any change increasing the risk" without consent of the insurers. These words refer only to change in the insured building or structure itself, and were not intended to include or apply to anything distinct from or accidentally related to the corpus of the insured building or structure. These words do not include a violation of a stipulation that the policy should become void if any part of the property insured shall be incumbered by mortgage without the consent of the company or that the policy shall become void by the taking of additional insurance without the consent of the insurer. Germania Fire Ins. Co. v. Werner, 81 N. E. 980, 981, 76 Ohio St. 543, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 456, 118 Am. St. Rep. 891 (citing Sun Fire Office of London v. Clark, 42 N. E. 248, 53 Ohio St. 414, 38 L. R. A. 562; Webster v. Dwelling House Ins. Co., 42 N. E. 546, 53 Ohio St. 558, 30 L. R. A. 719, 53 Am. St. Rep. 658).

Any change in grade

The words "any change in the grade of such highway," in Gen. St. 1902, § 2051, providing that when the owner of land adjoining a public highway shall sustain special damages to his property by reason of any change in the grade of such highway he shall be entitled to the amount of such special damages, imply an already existing grade, and the statute contemplates the existence of a worked highway completed and in actual use. Gorham v. City of New Haven, 58 Atl. 1, 2, 76 Conn. 700.

Any child or children

Testator, after making certain bequests to his wife's sister and his nephew, directed his executor to sell certain land and invest the proceeds in the name of testator's wife, to be held by her during her life without impeachment of waste or hindrance from any person whomsoever, with power to sell and re-invest as she might think advisable. He also devised all the rest of his estate to her for life, "she to have sole control of my said estate without let or hindrance," etc., "and, in the event of my said wife having any child or children at the time of her death, I devise the whole of said estate to said child or children," etc. "But in the event of my said wife dying without issue living," etc., "I devise and bequeath all said estate to my heirs at law." Held, that the words "any child or children" embraced children of his wife by second marriage. Schapiro v. Howard, 78 Atl. 58, 62, 113 Md. 360, 140 Am. St. Rep. 414.

Any city

The words "any city," as used in Act May 23, 1889 (P. L. 277) art. 12, § 2, providing that "'any city' which now has the title to any water, gas, or electric light works * * * is hereby empowered to create a department to be called the water and light department," refers to cities individually, and, while they may include all cities, they do not necessarily do so. Commonwealth v. Heller, 67 Atl. 925, 926, 219 Pa. 65.

Any claim

The words "any claim for money," in Rev. St. 1895, art. 2082, providing that when any claim for money, against an estate, has been rejected by the executor or administrator, the claimant may, within a specified time, sue to establish the same, do not mean both the debt and the lien as security therefor, but mean only the debt, and the claim only need be allowed and proved, or established, by suit. Whitmire v. Powell (Tex.) 117 S. W. 433, 436.

The word "demand" is the largest word in law except "claim"; and a release of demands discharges all sorts of actions, rights, and titles, conditions before or after breach, executions, appeals, rents of all kinds, covenants, annuities, contracts, recognizances, statutes, and commons. Hence, in a statute providing that no action lies against a city on "any claim or demand" of any kind or character whatsoever until it has first been disallowed in whole or in part, etc., the words "any claim or demand" include a cause of action for negligence in supplying plaintiff with tools while in the employ of the city. McCue v. City of Waupun, 71 N. W. 1054, 1055, 98 Wis. 625 (quoting Lord Coke, Vedder v. Vedder, 1 Denio [N. Y.] 261; Bac. Abr.; Litt. § 508; Co. Litt. 291b).

Any communication

"Any communication" is in form of words of broader import than the expression "confidential communication." Code, § 4607, providing that "neither husband nor wife can be examined in any case as to any communication made by one to the other while married," was intended to protect only marital communications. Sexton v. Sexton, 105 N. W. 314, 315, 129 Iowa, 487, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 708.

Any consideration

See On Any Consideration.

Under Rev. Pen. Code, § 618, making it an offense to buy or receive in any manner, upon "any consideration," property, knowing that it has been stolen, the gist of the offense is the buying or receiving with such knowledge, and an information is not bad for omitting to allege that the property was bought or received "upon any consideration"; that phrase being synonymous with "any motive" or "for any cause." State v. Pirkey, 118 N. W. 1042, 1044, 22 S. D. 550, 18 Ann. Cas. 192.

Any corporation

The term "any corporation," in General Corporation Law (Laws 1892, c. 687), conferring jurisdiction on the Supreme Court to review elections of "any corporation," includes an assessment insurance company as well as that of a stock corporation, and the Supreme Court may review an election of directors of a mutual insurance company which is not a stock corporation. In re Empire State Supreme Lodge, 103 N. Y. Supp. 465, 468, 53 Misc. Rep. 344.

The words "any corporation other than municipal," as used in Const. art. 1, § 16, providing that no right of way shall be appropriated for the use of "any corporation other than municipal" until full compensation shall have been made, irrespective of benefits, is intended to exclude public or political corporations, distinguished from private corporations. A county should be considered a municipal corporation under this section. Lincoln County v. Brock, 79 Pac. 477, 478, 37 Wash. 14.

Kirby's Dig. § 957, provides that any corporation may surrender its charter by a resolution, on filing a certified copy of the resolution with the Secretary of State and the clerk of the county in which "such corporation" is organized. When that section was adopted as a part of the act of April 12, 1893 (Laws 1893, p. 265), railroad corporations could be organized by filing the articles of association with the Secretary of State, while manufacturing and other business corporations were required by Kirby's Dig. § 845, to file their articles of association and certificate with the clerk of the county in which they were to have their principal place of business and also with the Secretary of State. Held, that section 957 does not apply to railroad corporations "such" meaning, previously mentioned or specified, and the phrase "in which such corporation is organized" limiting "any corporation" to those required to file their articles and certificate with the clerk of the county in which they are to have their principal place of business. Freeo Valley R. Co. v. Hodges (Ark.) 151 S. W. 281, 282.

Any county

In Act Sept. 19, 1908, relating to the letting out of convicts to counties and municipalities, and providing that any county may rent a farm on which to work the convicts, "any county" means every county in the state, and is not limited to counties having any particular system of road laws. Garrison v. Perkins, 74 S. E. 541, 137 Ga. 744, 745.

Any court

Cities and Towns Act 1905 (Acts 1905, c. 129) § 218, requiring the mayor to fill a vacancy in the office of city judge, does not violate Const. art. 5, § 18, requiring the Governor to fill any vacancy in the office of a "judge of any court," as the constitutional phrase refers to courts having the dignity of state courts mentioned in Const. art. 7, § 1, which the Legislature may establish, and not to inferior courts created by the Legislature in the exercise of its power under article 3, §§ 6, and 9, to provide for the appointment of municipal officers to administer local affairs. State ex rel. Gleason v. Gerdink, 90 N. E. 70, 71, 173 Ind. 245.

Where a state court having jurisdiction of the administration of an insolvent's estate authorized plaintiff to sue its receiver "in any court of competent jurisdiction" to enforce plaintiff's contract and to settle and determine the rights of the parties thereunder, the necessary jurisdictional facts appearing to entitle plaintiff to sue in a federal court, such court was not prevented by comity from assuming jurisdiction. James Free- man Brown Co. v. Harris, 189 Fed. 105, 108, 71 C. C. A. 303.

Rev. Laws, c. 167, § 126, provides that an attachment of property on mesne process shall be dissolved by the appointment by "any court of competent jurisdiction in this commonwealth" of a receiver to take possession of the property, etc. Section 127 provides that, when an attachment has been so dissolved, the proceedings for the appointment of a receiver shall not thereafter be dismissed, and the receiver discharged, until all the assets which have come into his hands as receiver have been fully distributed, or the claim upon which the attachment was made has been fully paid and discharged, etc. Held, that the words "any court of competent jurisdiction in this commonwealth" means any court which is subject to the legislation of the commonwealth, and the act does not apply to receivers appointed by federal courts. Reynolds v. Enterprise Transportation & Transit Co., 85 N. E. 110, 112, 193 Mass. 590.

Rev. St. Idaho 1887, § 2653, requiring foreign corporations to comply with certain conditions before doing business within the state, and declaring that no contract made in the name or for the use or benefit of a foreign corporation, not having performed such conditions, can be sued on or enforced in "any court of this state" by such corporation, did not preclude a foreign corporation, not having complied with the prescribed conditions, from resorting to the federal courts in Idaho to enforce a mortgage to it on land in that state. Colby v. Cleaver, 169 Fed. 206, 208.

Any creditor

Code 1896, § 4164, allowing "any creditor" to object to the allowance of a claim against an insolvent who has made an assignment for the benefit of creditors, gives the right to any creditor, whether preferred or not. Taylor v. Hutchinson, 40 South. 108, 145 Ala. 202.

Any criminal case or proceeding

The provision of the bankrupt act that no testimony which he may give on examination before the registrar should be used against him in "any criminal proceeding" refers to such as might arise out of the conduct of his business, the disposition of his property, and other past transactions about which alone the statute authorizes the examination in question to be made, and the immunity relates to the use of his evidence in such criminal prosecutions only. Edelstein v. United States, 149 Fed. 636, 643, 79 C. C. A. 328, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 236.

The phrase "in any criminal case," in Const. art. 1, § 6, declaring that no person shall be compelled "in any criminal case" to be a witness against himself, applies to proceedings under the executive, legislative, or judicial powers of government directed against the person invoking the provision, or against co-offenders with such person, or against unrelated third persons, to such as are preliminary, collateral, or independent, and both to such as are pending and not pending at the time of the assertion of the privilege. People v. Rosenheimer, 128 N. Y. Supp. 1093, 1095, 70 Misc. Rep. 433.

Any dangerous condition

"Any dangerous condition" used in the mines and mining act is not, under the doctrine of ejusdem generis, limited in application to dangers and to the same kind of dangers expressly specified in the statute. Dunham v. Black Diamond Coal Co., 88 N. E. 216, 217, 239 Ill. 457.

Any deceased child

Testator died leaving him surviving a son and two daughters and two grandchildren, children of a deceased son and daughter, who died before the execution of the will. To these two grandchildren he bequeathed pecuniary legacies, and then directed that the residue of his property should be held in trust, to pay one-third of the net income monthly to each of his three remaining children, and, on the death of either of said children of testator without issue, to pay his or her one-third share of the net income to the survivors of them, share and share alike, and to the children of "any deceased child" by right of representation, and, on the death of the last survivor of testator's children, all the property and estate representing the one-third share or interest of any child who may have died without issue. Held, that the term "any deceased child" referred only to children living at the time of the execution of the will, and who had been made beneficiaries of the trust, so that, on the death of testator's son, who was one of the three surviving children, without issue, his one-third share of the net income passed to his surviving sisters, and was not to be divided among them and the grandchildren, whose parents died prior to the death of the testator and the making of his will. Cookson v. Hamilton, 118 Pac. 116, 118, 160 Cal. 743.

Any defect

The phrase "any defect in any sidewalk," in Rev. Codes, § 3289, requiring notice to municipalities of injuries received by reason of any defect in any sidewalk, includes any defect interfering with the proper use of a sidewalk, and accumulation of snow and ice so as to make the surface uneven and dangerous is a defect within the statute. Tonn v. City of Helena, 111 Pac. 715, 717, 42 Mont. 127, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1136.

Any defendant

Under the statute providing that "any defendant," being a nonresident and a citizen of any state, who makes it appear to the satisfaction of the court that he cannot obtain justice in the state court where the action is pending, or in any court to which he may have the right to remove his case, on account of prejudice or local influence, is entitled to have the same removed to the federal court, the right of a defendant so to remove is not affected by the fact that a co-defendant is a resident and citizen of the state where the suit was brought. Parker v. Vanderbilt, 186 Fed. 246, 249.

A suit in which one of two defendants is a citizen of the same state as the plaintiff cannot be removed by the other defendant for prejudice or local influence from a state to a federal Circuit Court, under Act March 3, 1887, as corrected by Act Aug. 13, 1888, providing for removals on those grounds of suits embracing a controversy between a citizen of the state in which the suit is brought and a citizen of another state, by "any defendant, being such citizen of another state," since to hold otherwise would bring this provision into conflict with the rule that suits, to be removable, must be within the original jurisdiction of the circuit court. Cochran v. Montgomery County, 26 Sup. Ct. 58, 62, 199 U. S. 280, 50 L. Ed. 182, 4 Ann. Cas. 451.

Any defense

An instruction, in a suit on a note, that if defendant sets up a failure of consideration he must establish it by a preponderance of the evidence, and that the burden of proving "any defense" is on defendant, followed by an instruction that by a preponderance of the evidence is meant the greater weight of the evidence, is not erroneous as leading the jury to believe that the word "any" refers to every other defense than those spoken of in the instruction. Ewen v. Wilbor, 70 N. E. 575, 578, 208 Ill. 492.

Any degree

The words "in any degree" are equivalent to the words "in any way" or "in any manner." An instruction that the rule that a carrier of passengers is required to exercise the highest degree of care for their safety, consistent with the practical operation of its railway, does not "in any degree" excuse passengers from the duty of exercising ordinary care for their own safety, was not erroneous, in that the use of the words quoted might mislead the jury to believe that plaintiff was held to the highest degree of care. Harvey v. Chicago & A. Ry. Co., 77 N. E. 569, 570, 221 Ill. 242.

Any deposit

Under Code 1892, § 1089, forbidding an officer of a bank conducting the business of receiving money on deposit from receiving any deposit, knowing or having good reason to believe the bank insolvent, without informing the depositor of such condition, a count of an indictment charging a violation of the statute by receiving deposits from divers persons without informing such persons and depositors of the insolvent condition of the bank, and a count charging that deposits were received from several persons named, were demurrable for joinder of separate offenses in a single count. The language of the statute clearly indicates that if an officer of a bank receives "any deposit" without notifying the depositor of the insolvency of the bank he shall be guilty of a crime. Every single act of receiving any deposit is a separate and distinct offense. State v. Walker, 41 South. 8, 88 Miss. 592.

Any description

The words "of any description," as used in Pub. Laws 1901, c. 240, regulating the packing of sardines for canning purposes, are of wide application, and prohibit all sardine canning within the time limits fixed by the statute. State v. Kaufman, 57 Atl. 886, 888, 98 Me. 546.

Any determination

Laws 1906, c. 724, providing for the acquisition of lands by the city of New York for its water supply, provides by section 16 that on application to confirm the report of commissioners the court at Special Term may confirm such report or, in its discretion, refer the report to the same commission or to a new commission for a new hearing, and that such report, except in case of an appeal, shall be conclusive. Section 22 provides that, within 20 days after notice of the confirmation of the commissioners' report, either party may appeal to the Supreme Court, and that such appeal shall be heard either at Special Term or by the Appellate Division as the appellant may choose, and that from any determination of the Special Term on appeal an appeal may be taken to the Appellate Division, and from any determination of the Appellate Division either party may appeal to the Court of Appeals. Held, that "any determination of the Special Term" meant any or every order of the Special Term, and that "any determination of the Appellate Division" meant any order of the Appellate Division, and that the Appellate Division had the power to review an order of Special Term setting aside the report of commissioners and ordering a rehearing before new commissioners. In re Simmons, 96 N. E. 456, 459, 203 N. Y. 241.

Any device

The words "or any device," used in Comp. Laws 1909, § 2422, providing for the punishment of any person conducting a gambling house, include every scheme by which a person who conducts such a house enables the public to bet on any kind of game whatsoever. James v. State (Okla.) 113 Pac. 226, 229, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 827.

Any devise

It was a rule "that, if a lapse occurred in the bequest of personal property outside of the residuary clause, the property bequeathed should pass to the residuum, and be distributed among the residuary legatees, because it ought to be held that the testator did not intend to die intestate as to any of his property if it could be avoided; that whilst this should be held true as to personalty, it ought not to prevail as to a devise of realty; and as to it, the rule was that, if a lapse in a devise of realty outside of the residuary clause occurred, it should not go to the residuum and pass to the residuary devisees, but should go to the heir; and the reason assigned for the distinction between a bequest and a devise was that as to personal property the will spoke as of the date of the testator's death, but as to real property it spoke as of the date of its execution; that the above-announced principles had no application whatever to lapses occurring in the residuary clause of the will; and that, if a lapse there occurred, it continued, and the testator as to this should be held to have died intestate; and that the bequest or devise, as the case might be, passed to the next of kin or the heir." Code Va. 1904, § 2524, relating to that rule, provided that, unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will, such of the real estate or interest therein as shall be comprised in "any devise" in such will which shall fail or be void, or otherwise incapable of taking effect, shall be included in the residuary devise, if any, contained in such will. Held, that the words "any devise" are to be limited to any devise other than the residuary clause, thereby placing real and personal estate on the same footing in respect to lapsed devises and legacies. Kent v. Kent, 55 S. E. 564, 565, 106 Va. 199.

Any disease

There is no kinship between the words, "orchitis, hernia, freezing, and sunstroke," and no sort of relationship between them, and the words "intoxicants, sleepwalking, narcotics," etc., as used in an accident policy providing that the insurance shall not cover injuries received while under the influence of, or resulting directly or indirectly, from intoxicants, sunstroke, vertigo, hernia, or "any disease" or bodily infirmity, and the phrase "disease or bodily infirmity" will not be limited by the preceding specific exceptions under such a policy recovery cannot be had for a fall from a window while delirious. Carr v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 75 S. W. 180, 183, 100 Mo. App. 602.

Any election

A municipal election is included in the phrase "at any election," as used in Code 1906, § 1122, denouncing illegal voting. Sample v. Town of Verona, 48 South. 2, 3, 94 Miss. 264.

The words "any election," as used in the Kansas Bill of Rights, § 7, providing that no religious test or property qualification shall be required for any office of public trust, nor for any vote at any election, relate only to elections and offices provided for in that instrument, and have no application to elections held in or officers chosen for a public corporation created by statute, such as a drainage district, and the Bill of Rights does not prevent the Legislature from authorizing the creation of drainage districts, the powers of which are exercised by directors who are required to be freeholders elected by the resident taxpayers. State v. Monahan, 84 Pac. 130-133, 72 Kan. 492, 115 Am. St. Rep. 224, 7 Ann. Cas. 661.

Any evidence

Evidence which only raises a mere surmise or suspicion of the existence of a fact sought to be established falls short of being "any evidence" and can never sustain a verdict. Cobb v. Bryan, 88 S. W. 887, 888, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 339.

Any extent

Appreciable extent distinguished, see Appreciable Extent.

Any game

A city ordinance, general in its terms, and prohibiting playing at any game of chance, played with dice for money or representatives of money, was broad enough to include a dice gambling game called "twenty-six" for the purpose of winning money, cigars, and articles representative of money by chance, although the game was not enumerated in the ordinance. City of Seattle v. MacDonald, 91 Pac. 952, 47 Wash. 298.

Any goods or chattels

A railroad ticket, though not yet stamped or delivered to a passenger, is a "railroad ticket," and also within the term "any goods or chattels," within L. O. L. § 1947, providing that any one stealing any goods or chattels or any railroad passenger ticket or other evidence of the right of a passenger to transportation should be guilty of larceny, although the stealing of railroad tickets was not larceny at common law. State v. Willson, 127 Pac. 980, 982, 63 Or. 344.

Any heir

Under Rev. St. 1890, § 6098, authorizing any heir or creditor of a deceased person to request an administrator or executor to reject any claim presented for allowance, a widow may file a requisition on an executor to disallow a claim, as the words "any heir," or "creditor," include devisees and legatees or any person whomsoever whose property may be affected by the recovery of a judgment. Todd v. Todd, 27 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 224, 227.

Any illegal official act

"Any illegal official act," as used in Laws 1892, c. 301, authorizing a taxpayer to sue to prevent "any illegal official act" on the part of any county officials, agents, commissioners, or other persons, etc., includes any action on the part of the sheriff of a county by which he procures the audit of a bill, the amount of which is in excess of the amount which the statutes of the state permit him to charge.

Hicks v. Eggleston, 98 N. Y. Supp. 909, 910, 105 App. Div. 73.

Any incorporated company

Const. art. 12, § 4, which provides that the right of trial by jury shall be inviolate in trials of claims for compensation where, in the exercise of the right of eminent domain, "any incorporated company" shall be interested, gives to a railroad company the right to a jury to assess its damages for the taking of its lands by a city for a street; the railroad being within the statute although the municipality is not. City of St. Louis v. Roe, 83 S. W. 435, 184 Mo. 324 (citing Kansas City v. Smart, 30 S. W. 773, 128 Mo. 272; Kansas City v. Vineyard, 30 S. W. 326, 128 Mo. 75).

Any increase

Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 140b, specifying securities in which trust funds may be invested, provides that any trustee may continue to hold any investment received by him under the trust or any increase thereof. At testator's death, he owned stock in various corporations which became a part of a trust created of the residue of his estate with power to the trustees to invest and reinvest, declaring that it was his desire that the trustees should retain for his estate the better class of securities, including mortgages, railroad, or other stocks and bonds, or other securities in which they might find any part of his estate invested at his death. Held, that the trustees were authorized to acquire and pay for their pro rata share of any increase of capital stock offered to them by a corporation at less than market value by reason of their ownership of shares of stock which belonged to testator at his death, or which came to them by reason of their ownership of stock belonging to testator at that time; the words "any increase thereof," as used in the statute, being inclusive of stock so issued. Merchants' Loan & Trust Co. v. Northern Trust Co., 95 N. E. 59, 250 Ill. 86.

Any incumbrance

The word "any" as used in an allegation that defendant, an abstractor of titles, made a false certificate that certain land was "free from any incumbrance," is to be construed as meaning that there were no incumbrances, or that there was not a single incumbrance. A contention that the words of the certificate were insufficient to convey the idea that the land was free from all incumbrances cannot be sustained. This construction of the language of the certificate is not affected by the construction of the word "any," in Webster's Dictionary: "One out of many, indefinite, some; an indefinite number or quantity." Hirshiser v. Ward, 87 Pac. 171, 174, 29 Nev. 228.

Any indebtedness

Laws Utah 1909, c. 124, § 1, authorized the regents of the university to expend $250,- 000 for a central building, and section 2 directed the State Board of Land Commissioners to convert sufficient investments of the Utah University permanent land fund into cash, and pay the same over to the university as a loan, until such payments equaled $250,000, provided that the loan should be a debt of the university and not of the state, and that the interest on such land fund should be paid to the university, as before, for its general maintenance. Section 6 declared that the regents were authorized to pay out of the funds, appropriated or otherwise available, for its general maintenance, the principal and interest of such obligations as they became due. Held, that such indebtedness was in fact the indebtedness of the state, notwithstanding the legislative declaration to the contrary, and that the law was therefore in violation of Const. art. 14, §§ 1, 2, providing that the state shall never contract any indebtedness in excess of $250,000, except to repel invasions, etc.; the phrase "shall never contract any indebtedness" including any obligation which the state undertakes or is obligated to pay out of the future appropriations derived from an exercise of the state's power of taxation. State v. Candland, 104 Pac. 285, 292, 36 Utah, 406, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1260, 140 Am. St. Rep. 834.

Any individual or copartnership

The words "any individual or copartnership" do not include corporations, as used in Act May 27, 1841 (P. L. 396), directing the treasurer, on the payment of a certain sum, to grant to the individual or copartnership paying it a commission, under the seal of the county, authorizing him or them to purchase, and sell as agents, or for the use and benefit of others in the city or county to be designated. Commonwealth v. Real Estate Trust Co., 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 149, 152; Id., 60 Atl. 551, 553, 211 Pa. 51.

Any interest or rights

The president and controlling stockholder of two street railroad companies entered into a contract by which he agreed to sell his stock and to secure for the purchaser long term leases of the property and the two companies under the control of the board of directors, which he did, but, before the sale was consummated, he caused a side agreement to be made between the companies and another owning connecting lines of which he owned stock. This agreement provided that "any interest or rights" heretofore or hereafter acquired by the Union Traction Company in stock by the consolidated traction company or any of its companies formerly owned by any of the constituent lines or in any company succeeding to the ownership of any of said lines should, during the continuance of the leases, be held and owned for the joint benefit of all the parties to the agreement, etc. Held, that the words "any interest or rights," as so used, meant the legal title to the stock carrying full power of the control of the consolidated lines. North Chicago St. R. Co. v. Chicago Union Traction Co., 150 Fed. 612, 624.

Any issue in the case

The phrase "on any issue in the case," as used in a statute providing that, if a verdict shall be found on any issue in the case for plaintiff, costs shall be given at the discretion of the court, is very comprehensive, and the term "case" includes all the issues presented by the parties for judicial inquiry and determination and embraces issues tendered by defendant's counterclaim as well as those tendered by the petition. Ozias v. Haley, 125 S. W. 556, 557, 141 Mo. App. 637.

Any judicial officer

In Pen. Code 1910, §§ 919, 957, authorizing an arrest under a warrant issued by a judicial officer, and that "any judicial officer" in the county where the accusation was found may receive bail, the words "any judicial officer" mean any judicial officer of such county where the accusation was found and an official of another county cannot admit to bail. Weatherly v. Beavers, 76 S. E. 853, 139 Ga. 122.

Any kind

In an agreement between a man and a woman releasing the man from a claim of "any kind," the quoted expression was sufficiently broad to include bastardy proceedings which were set in motion against the man by the woman's agency. Schnurr v. Quinn, 82 N. Y. Supp. 468, 469, 83 App. Div. 70.

Any manner

A statute, providing that a borrower of money who afterwards paid "in any manner" might recover usury of the lender, would permit a recovery whether the lender received payment in money or other property. The manifest intention was not to restrict the right of reclamation to cash payments. Footman v. Stetson, 32 Me. 17, 20, 52 Am. Dec. 634.

Any means or force

The term "by any means or force," in Pen. Code, § 245, declaring that every person committing an assault with a deadly weapon, or by any means or force likely to produce great bodily injury, etc., is a general and comprehensive term, designated to embrace many and various means or forces which, aside from a deadly weapon or instrument, may be used in making an assault. People v. Perales, 75 Pac. 170, 171, 141 Cal. 581.

Any office

The words "any office," as used in Kansas Bill of Rights, § 7, providing that no religious test or property qualification shall be required for any office of public trust, nor for any vote at any election, relate only to elections and offices provided for in that instrument, and have no application to elections held in or officers chosen for a public corporation created by statute, such as a drainage district, and the Bill of Rights does not prevent the Legislature from authorizing the creation of drainage districts, the powers of which are exercised by directors who are required to be freeholders elected by the resident taxpayers. State v. Monahan, 84 Pac. 130-133, 72 Kan. 492, 115 Am. St. Rep. 224, 7 Ann. Cas. 661.

Any one appointed

A city charter provision authorizing the mayor to remove for cause "any one appointed to office by him" refers to the officers appointed by the mayor, and not to individual appointments. O'Neil v. Mansfield, 95 N. Y. Supp. 1009, 1011, 47 Misc. Rep. 516.

Any order

The exclusive jurisdiction conferred on the Commerce Court by Act June 18, 1910, c. 309, § 1, 36 Stat. 539, creating such court, of "cases brought to enjoin, set aside, annul or suspend, in whole or in part, 'any order' of the Interstate Commerce Commission," includes a suit to annul an order of the Commission awarding reparation in damages to a complainant made under Interstate Commerce Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 16, 24 Stat. 384, as amended by Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 5, 34 Stat. 590, which is not affected by the provision excepting from the jurisdiction so conferred cases for the enforcement of orders of the Commission "for the payment of money"; such cases being actions based on such order in which there is a constitutional right to a jury trial, jurisdiction of which is reserved to the Circuit Court. Southern Ry. Co. v. United States, 193 Fed. 664, 665.

Railroad Commission Act (Acts 1905, c. 53) § 6, provides that, "if any such railroad company * * * shall be dissatisfied with any order or regulation of said commission, respecting the location or construction of sidings, switches or connections between railroads, or the crossing of one railroad by another, * * * such dissatisfied company * * * may file a written petition to the circuit or superior court of the county wherein any such * * * crossing * * * is situated and the court may affirm, modify or set aside, the action of the commission." Held, that the term "any order or regulation respecting crossings" was broad enough to include orders made by the railroad commission installing interlocking plants for the purpose of protecting such crossings. Grand Trunk Western Ry. Co. v. Railroad Commission of Indiana, 40 Ind. App. 168, 81 N. E. 524, 526.

Any paper

Under Code 1896, § 934, subd. 14, providing that, when proper tender of fees is made, the clerk shall make and deliver to any person applying for the same "a correct transcript of 'any paper' in his office," the clerk must deliver, on application of the defendant in a criminal case, accompanied by a proper tender of fees, a correct transcript of subpoenas issued by the state and filed in the clerk's office. Jackson v. Mobley, 47 South. 590, 593, 157 Ala. 403.

Any part

The words "any part of or projection," as used in a deed providing that no dwelling or other house or building, or any part thereof or projection therefrom, shall be built on the grantor's remaining land within a certain distance of the premises conveyed, "evidently refer to bay windows or porches or things of that nature." Clark v. Lee, 70 N. E. 47, 185 Mass. 223.

In the original Seminole Agreement of December 16, 1897 (Act July 1, 1898, c. 542, 30 Stat. 567), providing that all contracts for sale, disposition, or incumbrance of any part of any allotment made prior to the date of patent shall be void, "any part" applies either to the homestead or surplus allotment. Stout v. Simpson, 124 Pac. 754, 756, 34 Okl. 129.

"Any part," as used in the anti-trust act, forbidding a person to monopolize "any part" of the trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, has both a geographical and a distributive significance; it includes any portion of the United States and any one of the classes of things forming a part of interstate or foreign commerce. Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey v. United States, 31 Sup. Ct. 502, 516, 221 U. S. 1, 55 L. Ed. 619, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 834, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734.

The words "any part thereof" in the homestead exemption law, providing that the exemption shall not apply to debts "for the purchase price of property or any part thereof," has reference to any part of the purchase price and not to any part of the property. Where the vendor's claim affects only one undivided half of the homestead, and the homestead is sold as being worth more than $2,000, the homestead exemption may be claimed to the extent that the property is not affected by the vendor's right; that is to say, to the extent of one-half of the price. Iberia Cypress Co. v. Christen, 40 South. 529, 116 La. 53.

Any person

The words "any person," as used in Code N. C. § 210, allowing "any person" to sue in forma pauperis, on making affidavit that he is unable to give security, are "broad enough to include any litigant whatever, and hence residents of another state can sue here in forma pauperis." An administrator may sue in forma pauperis, and, where the action is for death of his intestate, he need not show that those who may share in the recovery cannot give security. Christian v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co., 48 S. E. 743, 136 N. C. 321, 68 L. R. A. 418, 1 Ann. Cas. 803 (citing and adopting Allison v. Southern Ry. Co., 40 S. E. 91, 129 N. C. 336; Porter v. Jones, 68 N. C. 320).

The state may maintain ejectment under L. O. L. § 325, providing that any person having a legal estate in real property and a present right to the possession thereof may recover such possession by an action at law; the common-law rule that the king cannot be disseised having no application, since disseisin is not necessary under the statute, and "any person" being broad enough to include artificial as well as natural persons. State v. Duniway, 128 Pac. 853, 854, 63 Or. 555.

"Any person" entitled to redeem, within Code, § 1440, providing that any person entitled to redeem lands sold for taxes after the delivery of the deed shall do so by an equitable action, etc., "is not one having such an interest in or lien on property as that, but for the deed he might have paid the county auditor the necessary amount and procured a certificate of redemption." Where the treasurer's deed is given without certificates and proof of the statutory notice, a mortgagee, who, though not having title to the land, has an interest entitling him but for the deed to redeem by or without suit, may maintain an action to redeem. Busch v. Hall, 93 N. W. 356, 357, 119 Iowa, 279.

The language of St. 1892, c. 318, § 7, providing that "any person receiving under his care or control, or placing under the care or control of another for compensation, an infant under two years of age," etc., shall give notice to the state board of lunacy and charity within two days of such reception of the infant, is general, and includes "any person" receiving an infant, and any person placing an infant under the care or control of another; and it relates to the reception of one infant, and has no reference to the provisions of the statute requiring a license. Commonwealth v. Johnson, 39 N. E. 349, 162 Mass. 596.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 2863, declaring it actionable to publish falsely that "any person" has been guilty of fornication or adultery, a false charge of the commission of unlawful sexual intercourse is slander, although the charge is made in language technically inaccurate, in that it charges unmarried persons with adultery. Brown v. Wintsch, 84 S. W. 196, 198, 110 Mo. App. 264.

Under the statute making it an offense for "any person" to seduce a female by means of any feigned or pretended marriage, or of any false or feigned express promise of marriage, the words "any person" include any male, whether married or single, if the female seduced is ignorant of such marriage. Davis v. State, 129 S. W. 530, 95 Ark. 555.

11 St. at Large (1845) p. 341; 3 St. at Large (1787) p. 470; 4 St. at Large (1783) p. 543; 5 St. at Large (1801) p. 397; and Cr. Code 1902, § 873—providing punishment for forgery, were intended to enlarge the offense and regulate the punishment thereof, and the use of the words "any person," in describing the party to be defrauded, does not abolish the common-law crime of forgery when committed with intent to defraud the state. State v. Zimmerman, 60 S. E. 680, 682, 79 S. C. 289.

"Any person," as used in Pen. Code 1895, § 109, declaring that one who forcibly abducts or steals away "any person" without lawful authority or warrant, and sends or conveys such person beyond the limits of the state against his will, is guilty of kidnapping, "means any man, woman or child of any age." Sutton v. State, 50 S. E. 60, 61, 122 Ga. 153.

Same—In limited sense

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2766, providing that any person may contest the validity of a will, means any person having an interest in the subject-matter of the contest. Campbell v. Fichter, 81 N. E. 661, 662, 168 Ind. 645, 11 Ann. Cas. 1089.

The right of "any person" to contest the validity of a will, given by Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 3154, is limited by section 251, providing that every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest; and hence only those having an interest in the subject-matter of a will may contest its validity. Crawfordsville Trust Co. v. Ramsey (Ind.) 98 N. E. 177, 180.

Same—In law of negligence by carriers

In an action by a railroad servant for personal injuries by being struck by runaway cars, the company's liability, if any, must result from the negligence of him who has charge or control of the train and not of the fellow servant, and "by the words, 'any person * * * who has charge or control' is meant a person who, for the time being at least, has immediate authority to direct the movements and management of the train as a whole, and of the men engaged upon it. * * * The mere fact that a laborer or brakeman is put in such a position that for the moment he physically controls and directs its movements under the eye of his superior does not of itself constitute him a 'person in the charge or control' of the train." Denver & R. G. Co. v. Vitello, 81 Pac. 766, 770, 84 Colo. 50.

Section 3305, Rev. St., relating to the lease of railroads, and making the lessor and lessee "jointly liable upon all rights of action accruing to 'any person' for any negligence or default growing out of the operation and maintenance of such railroad," covers obligations of the lessor and lessee to the public; hence, does not apply to an action for negligence by an employé of lessee against the lessor and lessee. Powers v. Hocking Valley Ry., 81 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 488.

Laws Kan. 1874, p. 143, c. 93, providing that a railroad company shall be liable for all damages done to any employé of it from any negligence of its agents or by any mismanagement of any employés "to any person sustaining such damage," adopted from the state of Iowa after the Supreme Court of the state had construed it as covering the case of death of an employé and creating a cause of action in favor of the administrator of deceased, was adopted with such construction. Iarussi v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 155 Fed. 654, 656.

Same—As including particular persons

Laws 1903, c. 156, § 12, prohibiting "any person" from disturbing a public school, includes an enrolled pupil of the school disturbed. State v. Packenham, 82 Pac. 597, 599, 40 Wash. 403.

Pen. Code 1911, art. 622, denounces as a misdemeanor the selling or giving away of intoxicating liquor knowingly to a minor by a retail liquor dealer. Article 1054 denounces as a misdemeanor the selling or giving or being in any way interested in the gift or delivery of intoxicating liquors knowingly to a minor by "any person." Article 593 denounces as a misdemeanor the giving or delivery or being in any way concerned in the gift or delivery of intoxicating liquors to a minor "whether consigned to such person or to some other person" without the written consent of the parent or guardian of such minor. Held, as article 593 may properly be held to apply to express companies and common carriers alone, and article 1054 to all persons other than licensed retail liquor dealers and express companies and common carriers, article 622 will be held to apply to retail liquor dealers alone in order to effectuate all the provisions of the Code. Talley v. State (Tex.) 147 S. W. 255, 256.

Oleomargarine Act 1886 (Act Aug. 2, 1886, c. 840, § 3, 24 Stat. 209) as amended by Act May 9, 1902, § 2, 32 Stat. 194, imposes a tax on manufacturers of oleomargarine, and declares that every person who manufactures oleomargarine for sale, and "any person" that sells, vends, or furnishes oleomargarine for use and consumption of others, except to his own family table without compensation, who shall add to or mix with such oleomargarine any artificial coloration that causes it to look like butter, shall be held to be a manufacturer of oleomargarine within the act. Held, that the words "any person" are not limited to licensed wholesale or retail dealers in oleomargarine, but are comprehensive enough to embrace any or all persons, whether licensed dealers or not, selling, vending, or furnishing oleomargarine to which he has added coloring matter to represent butter.

Vermont v. United States, 174 Fed. 792, 794, 98 C. C. A. 500.

Any person interested

The phrase "any person interested," in Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896, c. 3, par. 46, providing that, when any person dies seised of any real estate within the state and has no relative or creditor within the state who will administer on the estate, the county court, on application of "any person interested" therein, shall commit the administration to the public administrator, is used in its general sense and is not limited to a person residing in the state. Where a resident intestate died without a widow, next of kin, or creditors in Illinois, but was possessed of personal property in such state, his nonresident sister was entitled to nominate a resident to act as administrator as authorized by 4 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1902, c. 3, par. 6. Strong v. Dignan, 69 N. E. 909, 911, 207 Ill. 385, 99 Am. St. Rep. 225.

The words "any persons interested therein" as used in Code Ala. 1896, § 4287 (Code 1886, § 1989), permitting any person interested therein to contest a will, include only such persons as would take an interest in the estate of the testator under or by virtue of a provision of the will, and judgment creditors of the husband of a testatrix have not under the statute such an interest as gives them a right to contest the probate of the will of the testatrix by which a child is made the sole legatee and devisee and the husband is deprived of his distributive share in the property of the wife. Keeler v. Lauer, 85 Pac. 541, 544, 73 Kan. 388 (quoting Lockard v. Stephenson, 24 South. 996, 120 Ala. 641, 74 Am. St. Rep. 63).

The interest of a divorced husband in the estate of his divorced wife, contingent on the death of their minor child, is not sufficient to authorize him to contest her will, under Rev. Prob. Code, § 43, permitting contest only by a person interested. Under Rev. Civ. Code, §§ 107-127, relating to the custody and control of minor children and their property, the divorced husband of testatrix, the latter of whom was awarded the custody of their minor child on divorce being granted, is not authorized to contest her will, since he had no control over the property of the child, before the divorce proceedings, and no interest thereafter in the property of the wife, or child, except such as was contingent on the death of the child. Halde v. Schultz, 97 N. W. 369, 370, 17 S. D. 465.

Any person out of state

Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4808, providing that, if a cause of action shall accrue against "any person who shall be out of the state," such action may be commenced within the time limited after the return of such person into the state, applies not only to persons who have resided in the state and have removed therefrom, but to persons who have never at any time resided within the state. Omaha Nat. Bank v. Lindsay, 84 Pac. 11, 12, 41 Wash. 531.

Any personal estate

Laws (Ed. 1830) p. 333, tit. 77, c. 1, § 4, provides that an executor shall account in money for the debts due the deceased, by him received, or which by due diligence might have been collected and received; that he shall also be charged in money with the appraised value of the goods and chattels of the deceased, or, if sold under a license, with the proceeds of the sale, provided that if there be "any personal estate" specially bequeathed or undisposed of at the request of the heirs or legatees, or preserved for their greater benefit, and not wanted for the payment of debts, the executor or administrator shall be discharged therefrom by producing and delivering it to the heirs or legatees to whom it belongs; and Rev. St. 1842, c. 159, § 6, provides that any property may be reserved at a sale, unless needed for the payment of debts, for the benefit or on the request of heirs or legatees, and that the administrator shall be discharged by delivering the same to persons entitled thereto. Held that the term "any personal estate" was sufficient to include choses in action. Stevens v. Meserve, 61 Atl. 420, 422, 73 N. H. 293, 111 Am. St. Rep. 612.

Any place

The words, "in any place," in Pen. Code, § 675, as amended by Laws 1891, c. 327, providing that any person who shall, by any offensive or disorderly act or language, annoy or interfere with any person in any place, or with the passengers of any public stagecoach, railroad car, or other public conveyance, refers to a public place, and public stages, railroad cars, and other conveyances were doubtless specified to remove any question as to whether they were public places, and included in the words "in any place." People v. St. Clair, 86 N. Y. Supp. 77, 79, 90 App. Div. 239.

Pen. Code, § 287, declares that a parent, who deserts a child "in any place" with intent wholly to abandon it, is punishable by imprisonment. Section 288 makes criminal the omission to furnish a minor child with food, clothing, and shelter. The criminal abandonment of a child under 16 years of age in destitute circumstances, and the criminal omission to furnish food, clothing, or shelter, is punishable by imprisonment, etc., by section 287a. Held that: "Considering these three sections together, the language of section 287, as well as its history, the words 'in any place,' in the sentence 'deserts in any place,' cannot be regarded as mere surplusage; they are significant, and have an important bearing upon the construction to be placed upon this section. To make out this crime, it is necessary to show that such a child is deserted in a place, and is so left with the intent wholly to abandon it, and leaving two children, two and three years of age, with their own mother, is not such a desertion and abandonment as section 287 intends to punish." People v. Joyce, 98 N. Y. Supp. 863, 867, 112 App. Div. 717.

Any property

In Rev. St. 1895, art. 2113, declaring that no sale of any property belonging to an estate shall be made by an executor or administrator without an order of the court authorizing the same, the term "any property" embraces promissory notes as well as all other kinds of property. Browne v. Fidelity & Deposit Co., 80 S. W. 593, 595, 98 Tex. 55.

Section 6, c. 67, Laws 1905, entitled "An act to abolish the state board of taxation and to create in lieu thereof a board for equalization, revision, review and enforcement of tax assessments," authorizes the state board of equalization, "after due investigation," to increase the assessment made upon "any property" that has been assessed at less than its true value, and for this purpose, if necessary, to direct a reassessment of such property to be made by an assessor or other taxing officer, or by some other person appointed by the board. The terms "any property" and "such property" import that its purpose is to secure an increase in valuation of some specific parcel of property, and, when the state board determines after due investigation that the property has been assessed at too low a rate, the board is to increase the assessment made upon such property. Jersey City v. Board of Equalization of Taxes of New Jersey, 67 Atl. 38, 40, 74 N. J. Law, 753.

Laws (Ed. 1830) p. 333, § 4, provides that an executor shall account in money for the debts due the deceased, by him received, or which by due diligence might have been collected and received; that he shall also be charged in money with the appraised value of the goods and chattels of the deceased, or, if sold under a license, with the proceeds of the sale, provided that if there be any "personal estate" specifically bequeathed or undisposed of at the request of the heirs or legatees, or preserved for their greater benefit, and not wanted for the payment of debts, the executor or administrator shall be discharged therefrom by producing and delivering it to the heirs or legatees to whom it belongs; and Rev. St. 1842, c. 159, § 6, provides that any property may be reserved at a sale, unless needed for the payment of debts, for the benefit or on the request of heirs or legatees, and that the administrator shall be discharged by delivering the same to persons entitled thereto. Held, that the term "any property," as so used, was sufficient to include choses in action. Stevens v. Meserve, 61 Atl. 420, 422, 73 N. H. 293, 111 Am. St. Rep. 612.

Any proposed ordinance

Dallas City charter, granted by Sp. Acts 30th Leg., provides by chapter 71, art. 3, par. 1, that all powers conferred on the city, unless otherwise provided, shall be exercised by the mayor and four commissioners, designated as the board of commissioners. Article 2, § 8, par. 27, gives the city power, by ordinance, to regulate and fix the charges of local telephones. Paragraph 7 provides that "the right is hereby delegated to the city of Dallas, acting through its board of commissioners," to regulate the charges made by corporations, etc., exercising a public privilege, and to change such regulations, but forbids such change except after notice and a fair hearing. Article 8, par. 1, provides that "any proposed ordinance" may be submitted to the board by petition signed by 5 per cent. of the electors voting at the last mayoralty election, when the board shall submit such ordinance without alteration to a vote of the people, and upon its adoption by a majority of the electors it shall go into force. Article 2, § 1, par. 2, provides that the specification of particular powers shall not be a limitation upon the general powers granted, the intention being that the city shall exercise all powers of municipal government not otherwise prohibited. Held, that article 8, par. 1, did not authorize a submission to the electors of ordinances upon any subject of legislation named in the charter, but only upon subjects to which the initiatory method was applicable, and an ordinance regulating telephone rates could not be presented to the electors for adoption, since a fair hearing on the reasonableness of the rate fixed, as required by article 2, § 8, par. 7, could not be had by that method, and hence such an ordinance adopted by the electors was invalid. Southwestern Telegraph & Telephone Co. v. City of Dallas, 134 S. W. 321, 322, 104 Tex. 114.

Any question of fact

Under a rule of the district court that in all civil actions not more than five witnesses shall be examined as to "any question of fact or issue in the cause," the phrase quoted refers to any single, substantial allegation of the pleadings on which an issue is raised, and not to the ultimate fact to be determined. Hoskins v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 102 Pac. 988, 991, 39 Mont. 394.

Any railroad

The phrase "any railroad, steamboat, stagecoach or other vehicle for the conveyance of goods or passengers," in Rev. St. 1895, art. 3017, providing that an action for injuries causing death may be brought when the death is caused by the negligence of the proprietor, owner, charterer, or hirer of "any railroad, steamboat, stagecoach, or other vehicle for the conveyance of goods or passengers," does not include tram railroads owned and operated by private individuals on their own premises for private purposes; the statute being designed to apply to common carriers. Ott v. Johnson (Tex.) 101 S. W. 534.

Any real or personal property

The words "any real or personal property," used in Ky. St. 1903, § 4039, declaring that it shall be the duty of all persons owning "any real or personal property" to list the property for taxation, etc., are to be read in connection with other words of the section, and refer to things of like character to those named, and do not include notes and mortgages on property within the State, kept in another state. Callahan v. Singer Mfg. Co. (Ky.) 92 S. W. 581, 582.

Any reason

See If For Any Reason.

In a contract, where plaintiff subscribed money to be used to purchase property of a corporation and reorganize the same, the consideration to be that he should be given the position of business manager, and should render competent and efficient services as such, and "if for any reason" he should not be given such position defendants would purchase the stock of plaintiff in said company at a sum sufficient to reimburse him, the words "any reason" mean any reason other than the failure of the plaintiff to render competent and efficient services. Hall v. Hardaker, 55 South. 977, 979, 61 Fla. 267.

Any receipt

The words of Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 38, § 124, forbidding the uttering of "any receipt or other written evidence of the delivery or deposit of any grain," etc., and those which forbid the utterance of the writing unless the goods are still in store and the property of the person to whom or to whose agent the receipt is issued, do not show that the statute does not cover a writing evidencing the deposit in a building of grain belonging to the owner of that building, but the requirements of the section are satisfied where such a writing is assigned, transferred, or delivered to another, and a receipt evidencing the deposit of corn in an elevator is within the section, and section 125, notwithstanding it reserved the right to store or intermingle the grain with other grain of the same grade. McReynolds v. People, 82 N. E. 945, 948, 230 Ill. 623.

Any record

"Any record," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 5403, includes any part of a record. Therefore a few lines or even one line from a page of a record would be a record of the facts stated in such line or few lines and would be included in the term "any record," as used in such statute. McInerney v. United States, 143 Fed. 729, 733, 74 C. C. A. 655.

Any road crossing

The words "any road crossing," as used in Code, § 2072, providing that in moving a railroad train the engine whistle must be sounded at least 60 rods before any road crossing is reached, and after the sounding of the whistle the bell shall be rung continuously until the crossing is passed, do not include private crossings, but include only roads as defined by section 48, cl. 5, providing that the term "road," as used in the Code, means any public highway, unless otherwise specified; and it is not otherwise specified in section 2072. Nicholas v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 100 N. W. 1115, 1116, 125 Iowa, 236.

Any salary

Where, on the institution of a contest of the election of clerk of a city board of education, the board suspended payment of defendant's salary as clerk, and, after three months' salary had accrued, defendant executed a bond to save the board harmless by reason of a payment to him of "any salary now due him as clerk," such quoted clause referred to and included the three-months clerk's salary then due, which the board, having paid to defendant, was entitled to recover in an action on the bond after defendant's defeat in the contest. McLaughlin v. Board of Education of City of Covington (Ky.) 83 S. W. 568, 569.

Any sale

An ordinance of the city of Omaha granted a right of way in its streets for the construction and maintenance of waterworks, together with a contract to furnish a city with water for 25 years, and provided that the city, at any time after 20 years, might purchase the waterworks at an appraised value. The works were completed in 1883, and in 1896 the water company, which was then the owner of the waterworks and franchises, executed to a trust company in this state a prior lien mortgage of the waterworks, etc., to secure bonds due in 1916, which referred to the ordinance, and provided that the water company should pay the principal of the bonds issued, when due; that the water company might, at any time, redeem the bonds at 105 and interest, and that upon a default in interest or in any of the agreements of the water company, or on the appointment of a receiver, the principal of all outstanding bonds should become due, at the election of the trustee; that "upon any sale of the property * * * the principal of all the bonds secured and outstanding shall become due, if not already due"; and other provisions in case of default or foreclosure. In 1903 the city, under the reservation in the ordinance, elected to purchase, and the water company was decreed to file a power of attorney authorizing the trustee to discharge the mortgage upon payment of the amount of all outstanding bonds and interest, and that the balance of the proceeds be paid by the city direct to the water company; and thereunder the trustee claimed a sum equal to all of the bonds for redemption at 105 and accrued interest. Held, that the mortgage contemplated only a sale at the instance of the trustee in proceedings after default or a receivership; the provision as to "any sale of the property" referring only to a sale under the terms of the mortgage, and not to a sale under the reservation contained in the ordinance, and hence that the bonds must be redeemed at 105 and accrued interest. Harnickell v. Omaha Water Co., 181 N. Y. Supp. 489, 494, 146 App. Div. 693; Carlsen v. Same, 181 N. Y. Supp. 495, 146 App. Div. 702.

Any school district

Rev. St. 1899, c. 154, provides for the organization of school districts. Article 1 provides for subdistricts, or what are generally known as "country school districts." Article 2 provides for city, town, and village districts; article 3, for districts in cities of more than 50,000, and less than 100,000, inhabitants; and article 4, for districts in cities of 300,000 inhabitants and over. Section 9739, being the first section of article 1, declares that "all sub-districts [i. e., country districts] as organized and bounded shall hereafter be known as school districts," etc. Section 9747 of the same article provides that whenever "any school district" shall be divided by a county line, etc., an election may be held for the purpose of forming a separate district, or attaching either fractional part of the district to an adjoining district in the county in which such fractional part lies. Held, that the words "any school district" must be limited to country school districts, according to the subject-matter of the article of which section 9747 is a part, and a village school district lying in two counties cannot be divided under the provisions of such section. State ex rel. Balch v. Fry, 85 S. W. 328, 186 Mo. 198.

Any seaman

The phrase "any seaman," used in Act Cong. Dec. 21, 1898, § 24, amending Act June 26, 1894, § 10, providing that it shall be unlawful to pay "any seaman" wages in advance of the time when he has actually earned the same, includes not only American seamen, but foreign seamen shipping on foreign vessels from American ports. The Kestor, 110 Fed. 432, 439.

Any shad fish

Since the Legislature, in passing Act S. C. Feb. 16, 1904 (24 St. at Large, p. 385), prohibiting the transportation of "any shad fish" beyond the limits of the state, distinctly refused to limit the act to shad fish caught within the limits of the state, it could not be construed by the courts to be so limited, and as limited, held constitutional. McDonald & Johnson v. Southern Express Co., 134 Fed. 282, 283.

Any special order

Under Rev. Codes, § 4807, subd. 3, providing that an appeal may be taken to the Supreme Court from a district court from "any special order made after final judgment," an appeal may be taken from an order made after final judgment vacating and setting aside such judgment. Shumake v. Shumake, 107 Pac. 42, 44, 17 Idaho, 649.

Any species of seines

Setting a gill net is within Comp. Laws 1897, § 5857, designed to protect abutting landowners against the use of nets by other fisherman, and forbidding the building by any person in waters fronting or bordering land where fish are taken by the legal owner or occupant of such land of "any species of seines or continuous trap nets," or the placing or driving any net piles, or stakes, or any other piles or stakes or posts. Hilborn v. Smith, 111 N. W. 1082, 148 Mich. 474.

Any specific real estate

In St. 1898, § 2367, providing that in an action for divorce, where alimony or other allowance is made, the court may impose as the charge upon "any specific real estate of the party liable," the words "any specific real estate of the party liable" must include the homestead. Schultz v. Schultz, 113 N. W. 445, 446, 133 Wis. 125, 126 Am. St. Rep. 934.

Any stage

See At Any Stage.

Any stock of goods

Pierce's Code, § 5346, declares that it shall be unlawful to purchase "any stock of goods, wares or merchandise in bulk" for cash or on credit, without requiring the vendor or his agent, before payment is made, to give to the buyer a sworn statement of the names and addresses of his creditors. Held, that a sale of the business and appliances of a boarding house and restaurant was not exempt from the provisions of such section, and a failure to comply therewith rendered the sale invalid. The word "any" is comprehensive, and so is the word "stock." There is no limit placed by the Legislature on the meaning of the word "stock." A stock of goods may mean a great many different kinds of goods. Plass v. Morgan, 78 Pac. 784, 785, 36 Wash. 160.

Any street or public ground

The term "any street or other public ground," as used in an ordinance prohibiting the use of space thereunder without a permit, and prohibiting the granting of a permit for such use, includes public "alleys." J. Burton Co. v. City of Chicago, 86 N. E. 98, 95, 238 Ill. 383, 15 Ann. Cas. 965.

Any subsequent meeting

The phrase "any subsequent meeting of the board," as used in St. 1901, p. 27, § 2, providing that whenever the legislative branch of any municipal corporation, by resolution passed by a two-thirds vote and approved by the executive, shall determine that public necessity demands a municipal improvement, the cost of which will be too great to be paid out of the ordinary annual income of the municipality, it may at "any subsequent meeting" of such board call a special election and submit the question of incurring a debt for the purpose, includes a stated or special meeting, and no particular time is required to intervene. A resolution calling an election under such section, passed at an adjourned meeting of the board, and immediately succeeding the meeting at which the resolution of public necessity was adopted, is passed at a "subsequent meeting" as required. City of Redondo Beach v. Barkley, 90 Pac. 452, 453, 151 Cal. 176.

Any such place of public amusement

Rev. Codes, § 6825, provides that it shall be unlawful for any person to keep open on Sunday any theater, playhouse, race track, circus, or show, etc., "or any such place of public amusement." Held that, to bring a public amusement not enumerated by the statute under the general language of "any such place of public amusement," the likeness must be based on something other than the mere fact that it is a "public amusement," and must correspond to the amusement specified. A "scenic railway" is not "such a place of public amusement" as a "merry-go-round" enumerated by the statute. Ex parte Hull, 110 Pac. 256, 257, 18 Idaho, 475, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 465.

Any suit or proceeding

The phrase, "any suit or proceeding," in the federal Judicial Code (Act March 3, 1911, c. 221, 36 Stat. 1087), in force January 1, 1912, declaring in section 299 that the repeal of laws shall not affect "any suit or proceeding," including those pending on writ of error, appeal, certificate, or writ of certiorari, includes an inquiry pending before a grand jury properly impaneled in the District Court, and an indictment returned by the grand jury after January 1st is valid. The word "proceeding," though frequently used in a restrictive sense, must be understood in its ordinary signification. United States v. New Departure Mfg. Co., 195 Fed. 778, 779.

Any time

See At Any Time.

A deed conveying timber, with the right to enter on the land and cut and remove it at "any time thereafter," entitles the grantee to a reasonable time after notice to remove the same. St. James v. Erskine, 119 N. W. 897, 155 Mich. 606.

Any township

Acts 1899, c. 97, providing that the county commissioners when petitioned therefor by 50 freeholders, voters of "any township" or townships contiguous to each other, and inhabitants of the county where the roads petitioned for are to be improved, shall submit to the voters thereof the question of such improvement, does not require that a petition for the improvement of roads in a district containing two or more contiguous townships should be signed by 50 or more voters in each township, but it is sufficient if it is signed by 50 petitioners in all, some of whom resided in each township. Davern v. Board of Com'rs of Decatur County, 72 N. E. 268, 269, 34 Ind. App. 44.

Any trade, manufacture or business

The phrase "in which any trade, manufacture, or business is carried on," in Acts 1891, c. 124, requiring certain fire escapes on public buildings, includes any business of any nature. Carrigan v. Stillwell, 59 Atl. 683, 685, 99 Me. 434, 68 L. R. A. 386.

Any trial, hearing, proceeding, or investigation

The phrase "trial, hearing, proceeding, or investigation," as used in a statute relating to the preservation of the purity of elections, which defines and punishes offenses against the elective franchise, and provides that a person offending against any provision thereof is a competent witness against another person so offending, and may be compelled to attend and testify upon any trial, hearing, proceeding, or investigation, as any other person, means some trial, hearing, proceeding, or investigation of a person other than the witness for the commission of such offense. Lindsay v. Allen, 82 S. W. 648, 649, 113 Tenn. 517.

Any two corporations

A consolidation of corporations under a statute authorizing the consolidation of "any two corporations" is not invalidated by the fact that one of the constituent corporations was itself created by a prior consolidation. Jones v. Missouri-Edison Electric Co., 135 Fed. 153, 157.

Any useful beast, fowl, or animal

The poisoning of chickens is within the purview of Revisal 1905, § 3299, relating to cruelty to animals, enumerating as the subjects protected from cruelty "any useful beast, fowl or animal." State v. Bossee, 59 S. E. 879, 145 N. C. 579.

Any way dispose of

The words "in any way disposes of," as used in a dramshop ordinance, construed in this case to signify more than to sell. City of Jerseyville v. Becker, 117 Ill. App. 86, 88.

Any way mentioned

2 Rev. St. (1st Ed.) pt. 2, c. 6, tit. 1, art. 3, § 49, as amended by Laws 1869, c. 22, provides that a child born after the making of his parent's will, not "provided for nor in any way mentioned in such will," shall take as if the parent died intestate. Held that the words "in any way mentioned" indicate that the expression was to be used in the broadest possible sense, so as to cover any form of reference that showed that a testator had in mind the possibility of after-born children, and where a testator gave his estate to his wife to her own use, and that of her heirs forever, and provided that in case of her death during the lifetime of the testator, leaving issue, the issue would take the estate, and, if the wife should die leaving no lawful issue, the estate should be divided in accordance with the intestate laws, and the testator at the time of the execution of the will was a married man, but had no children, a child born after testator's death was "mentioned" in the will, and he was bound by it, and could not take as if the testator had died intestate. Stachelberg v. Stachelberg, 101 N. Y. Supp. 178, 180, 52 Misc. Rep. 22.

Any will

Under Act Feb. 10, 1821 (Laws 1821, p. 119), § 5, authorizing contest of "any will," and, under Act 1819 (Laws 1819, p. 231, § 23), providing for authenticating and filing foreign wills, such wills could be contested as well as domestic wills. Dibble v. Winter, 93 N. E. 145, 151, 247 Ill. 243.

ANY ONE

The words "any one," in Act Cong. March 1, 1895, c. 145, 28 Stat. 697, § 8, punishing any person who shall manufacture, sell, give away, or by any means furnish to "any one" any intoxicating liquors, are words of general and comprehensive description, and an indictment for the sale of intoxicating liquors need not state the name of the person to whom the liquor is sold. Parmenter v. United States, 98 S. W. 340, 6 Ind. T. 530.

ANY OTHER

See, also, Other.

Ejusdem generis

Mansf. Dig. Ark. § 1640, defining embezzlement by "any carrier or other bailee," is not confined to bailees of the generic class "carriers," but embraces all bailees. Faggard v. State, 104 Pac. 930, 931, 3 Okl. Cr. 159.

An indictment for larceny after trust charged that the accused was intrusted by T. J. Moss with $250, "for the purpose of a cash bond for Roy Y. Moss for the space of six months, said Roy Y. Moss to be employed as a collector and office man for the General Adjusting Company (a corporation)," said accused claiming to be manager of the corporation, and the said sum of money was intrusted to the accused and to be paid back to said T. J. Moss at the expiration of six months from February 17, 1910, but that at the expiration of six months said T. J. Moss made a demand on the accused, and the accused wrongfully and fraudulently converted the said sum to his own use after being so intrusted, and without the consent of and to the injury of T. J. Moss, and without paying him the market value thereof. Held, that the indictment set forth an offense under section 189 of the Penal Code of 1910; the accused coming within the classification of "any other bailee," as used in that section. An intimation to the contrary in Sanders v. State, 12 S. E. 1058, 86 Ga. 717, was, in Cody v. State, 28 S. E. 106, 100 Ga. 105, expressly held to have been obiter; and it was in the latter case ruled that the words "any other bailee," as used in what is now section 189 of the Penal Code of 1910, "include any bailee, whether he be of the class enumerated or not." McCrory v. State, 76 S. E. 163, 11 Ga. App. 787. See, also, Weaver v. Carter, 28 S. E. 889, 871, 101 Ga. 206, 213; Belt v. State, 27 S. E. 451, 103 Ga. 12.

Where the concealing of an offender is first mentioned, and then there is added the giving of such offender any other aid, the "other aid" is of a similar character as that particularly specified. State v. Jett, 77 Pac. 546, 547, 69 Kan. 788 (citing State v. Doty, 57 Kan. 835, 48 Pac. 145).

Acts 33d Gen. Assem. c. 168, provides that all hotels shall be kept and maintained in a clean and sanitary condition, free from any effluvia, gas, or offensive odors arising from any sewer, drain or privy, or from any other source whatever within the control of the owner, manager, or person in charge, does not confer on the hotel inspector arbitrary power to declare a nuisance solely because of "offensive odors," since, under the rule ejusdem generis, the words "any other source whatever" refer to a source of like kind with "sewer, drain, and privy." Hubbell v. Higgins, 126 N. W. 914, 918, 148 Iowa, 36, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 822.

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 2356, making it unlawful to entice a female to enter "any house of prostitution, assignation, saloon or winerom where intoxicating liquors are sold, or any other place for vicious or immoral purposes," an affidavit is insufficient which charges accused with enticing a female "to enter into a certain house situated at No. 202 East Broadway street" in a city, county, and state named, "for the purpose of having sexual intercourse with her," as "any other place" means place of like character with those previously enumerated. Wiggins v. State, 87 N. E. 718, 172 Ind. 78.

In the provision of Immigration Act Feb. 29, 1907, § 8, making it a felony to import into the United States any alien woman or girl for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose, the words "any other immoral purpose" must be construed with reference to the preceding word "prostitution," and to relate only to a like immoral purpose, and, so construed, cannot be held to include concubinage. United States v. Bitty, 28 S. Ct. 396, 208 U. S. 393, 52 L. Ed. 543.

The term "or any other person entitled," in Code Civ. Proc. § 1368, providing that, if any person entitled to administration is a minor, letters must be granted to his guardian, or any other person entitled to letters, is general in its designation of persons, and must either apply to persons in the same class as the minor, or to persons in inferior classes, who, as provided in section 1365, are entitled, in the absence of others having superior rights, to a grant of letters. In re Turner's Estate, 77 Pac. 144, 146, 143 Cal. 438.

An action of trespass quare clausum fregit, in which an issue of title is adjudicated, is not within Civ. Code 1902, § 3096, providing that in any action "for assault, battery, false imprisonment, libel, slander, malicious prosecution, criminal conversation, or seduction, or in any other action for damages for torts," the costs shall not exceed the recovery where that is less than $100, for there is nothing in the general expression "any other action for damages for torts" which compels an extension of meaning to cover classes of torts unlike those enumerated. Vassey v. Spake, 65 S. E. 825, 826, 83 S. C. 566.

Greater New York Charter, Laws 1897, p. 522, c. 378, § 1481, provides that it shall not be lawful to exhibit to the public on Sunday in any building, garden, grounds, concert room, or other room or place within the city of New York any interlude, tragedy, comedy, opera, ballet, play, farce, negro minstrelsy, negro or other dancing, or any other entertainment of the stage, or any part or parts therein, or any equestrian, circus, or dramatic performance, or any performance of jugglers, acrobats, or rope dancing. Held, that the phrase "any other entertainment of the stage" should not be limited, under the rule of ejusdem generis, to performances similar to those specified, but should be construed to enlarge the scope of the section, so as to forbid all performances of any character in a place of public amusement on Sunday. In re Hammerstein, 108 N. Y. Supp. 197-199, 57 Misc. Rep. 52.

Any other building

St. 1898, § 4409, prohibiting the breaking and entering "any office, shop, or warehouse, or any other building" with intent to commit a felony, when considered in connection with sections 4407-4411, defining burglary, and section 4412, providing a penalty for breaking, entering, and stealing in public buildings, does not make the breaking and entering a schoolhouse with intent to commit a felony a burglary; the words "any other building" not including a schoolhouse.—Howard v. State, 121 N. W. 133, 134, 139 Wis. 529.

Any other cause

The phrase as used in a statute providing that a tenant may surrender the premises if the building is destroyed or so injured by the elements or "any other cause" as to be untenable, limits the "other causes" to physical destruction or injury to the demised premises of a permanent nature, and does not include untenability by means of vibration caused by the operation of an adjacent electric light plant. Floyd-Jones v. Schaan, 109 N. Y. Supp. 362, 364.

A covenant in a lease binding the lessee at the expiration of the term to surrender the premises in the condition received except natural wear and decay, and to repair from time to time any damage done to the premises by the negligence of his employes, careless usage or from "any other cause whatever," does not bind the lessee to make repairs caused by natural wear and decay, for the words "any other cause whatever" mean any other cause except natural wear and decay. Herboth v. American Radiator Co., 123 S. W. 533, 537, 145 Mo. App. 484.

The words "or any other causes" do not enlarge the scope of the particular words in the midst of which they appear. The addition of the word "preventable" before the word "cause," in a contract providing that if the pavement is defective from overburning or improper mixing of material or "any other preventable causes," has relation to causes of the same kind as those particularized, and does not diminish or affect the scope of the contractor's obligation.—City of Mankato v. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co., 142 Fed. 329, 345, 73 C. C. A. 439.

Any other dangerous, noxious or offensive establishment

"The covenant that the grantee shall not at any time erect, suffer, or permit on the premises 'any brewery, or any other dangerous, noxious, or offensive establishment whatsoever,' is not one that restricts a business which would be injurious or offensive to the neighboring inhabitants, but, after specifying several specific uses to which the property is not to be put, couples with such restricted uses any other dangerous, noxious, or offensive establishment whatsoever; and, while the construction of this covenant would not be governed by the general laws as to nuisances, but by the force and effect of the covenant (Rowland v. Miller, 34 N. E. 765, 139 N. Y. 193, 22 L. R. A. 182), there must be evidence to justify the finding that the building or business to be conducted by the defendant is dangerous, noxious, or offensive." Grimm v. Krahmer, 98 N. Y. Supp. 523, 525, 112 App. Div. 489.

Any other felony

Under Rev. St. 1898, § 4334, as amended by Sess. Laws 1905, c. 19, making it burglary for any person to break and enter a building with intent to commit a "larceny" or any other felony, an information charging the breaking and entering a building at night with intent to steal goods, without stating their value, sufficiently charges a burglary in the first degree, as "larceny" within such section includes both a misdemeanor and a felony, and the words "or any other felony" are equivalent to "or any felony other than that embraced within the larceny." State v. Hows, 87 Pac. 163, 31 Utah, 168.

Any other house whatsoever

Under Gen. St. 1883, c. 29, art. 7, providing that if any person shall willfully and unlawfully burn a powder house, warehouse, storehouse, stable, barn, or any house or place where wheat, corn, or other grain, fodder, hemp, cotton, wood, fruit, etc., is usually kept, or "any other house whatever," or any stack, rick, or shock of hay, etc., he shall be confined in the penitentiary, etc., the words "or any other house whatever" are sufficiently broad to include the offense when committed by burning a church. McDonald v. Commonwealth, 4 S. W. 687, 86 Ky. 10.

Any other insurance

In the questions in the written application for life insurance, the words "any other insurance" did not include accident insurance; the preceding questions having reference wholly to life insurance. Mutual Reserve Life Ins. Co. v. Dobler, 137 Fed. 550, 554, 70 C. C. A. 134.

Any other liability

A deed given as security for a note and for "any other liability or liabilities" which may be hereafter contracted will secure advances for enterprises other than that in which the mortgagor was then engaged. Huntington v. Kneeland, 92 N. Y. Supp. 944, 945, 102 App. Div. 284.

Any other matter

Civ. Code 1902, § 806, providing for the auditing and payment by the county board of accounts for "labor performed, fees, services, disbursements or any other matter," covers a claim for injury to an automobile resulting from a defective highway, and confers jurisdiction on the county board to act judicially in the matter when presented to it. Du Pre v. Lexington County, 73 S. E. 70, 71 90 S. C. 180.

Any other means

Within the statute providing for the punishment of any person setting fire to any building or to any other material with intent to cause the building to be burned, or who shall by any other means attempt to cause a building to be burned, the phrase "by any other means" does not include a mere invitation to another person to burn the building. The statute intended to require some physical act and cannot be satisfied without some such act, committed in person or through another, reaching far enough to amount to the commencement of the causation. McDade v. People, 29 Mich. 50, 55.

Any other person

The words "any other person," as used in Acts, 1891, p. 181, § 19, providing that every dramshop keeper or any other person who shall sell, etc., any intoxicating liquor to any minor, etc., shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, referred to any one representing a dramshop keeper or who may be temporarily in charge of his business when such offense is committed and did not include a merchant or druggist who might sell intoxicating liquor to a minor. State v. Hamill, 108 S. W. 1108, 127 Mo. App. 661.

The words "any other person," in an instruction in an action for injuries to a servant, that the servant could recover if his injury was due to the negligence of the employer's foreman, either with or without the negligence of "any other person," are broad enough to include the servant himself, and the instruction is for that reason erroneous because disregarding the question of the servant's contributory negligence. Texas Cent. R. Co. v. Waldie (Tex.) 101 S. W. 517, 519.

Rem. & Bal. Code, § 2004, providing for punishment of "the parent or parents, or persons having custody" of a delinquent or neglected child, "or any other person who contributes to the delinquency or neglect of such child," is not limited to parents or other persons in loco parentis, but protects delinquent children in the hands of all persons, as the first clause of the statute includes all persons of the class having custody of children, so that the second clause embraces all persons not having custody of children who contribute to their delinquency. State v. Plastino, 121 Pac. 851, 852, 67 Wash. 374.

Under the juvenile court law (St. 1909, c. 133), defining, in section 1, a "dependent child" as any child found wandering and not having any home or proper guardianship, or who has no parent or guardian capable of exercising proper parental control, or whose home, by reason of neglect of his parents or guardian or person in whose custody he may be, is an unfit place, and providing in section 26 that in all cases where any child shall be dependent or delinquent, the parent or parents, guardian or person having the custody of such child "or any other person" who shall, by any act, contribute to the dependency or delinquency of the child, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, any one who contributes to the dependency of a child, whatever may be his relation thereto, becomes subject to punishment; the words "any other person" including all persons committing the acts specified. Ex parte Mills Sing, 112 Pac. 582, 14 Cal. App. 512.

Where plaintiff sued on an administrator's bond before a final decree had been entered on the administrator's account, and while exceptions thereto were pending, the action was prematurely brought, and could not be sustained under Act June 14, 1836 (P. L. 640, § 6) providing that, where suit has been brought on a bond, any other person to whom a cause of action has accrued at any time before judgment may be made a party; the designation "any other person" not applying to one who has brought an action on a bond when no one has a right of action thereon, and no one has intervened. Commonwealth v. Magee, 69 Atl. 805, 806, 220 Pa. 201.

The words "any other person" in the contributory delinquent law (Sess. Laws 1903, p. 198, c. 94), providing that the parent, guardian, or person having the custody of a delinquent child or "any other person" responsible for the delinquency shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, etc., mean such persons as occupy a relation similar to that of parent, legal guardian or person having the custody of such child, and no person is guilty unless he occupies towards the child a relation similar to those enumerated. Gibson v. People, 99 Pac. 333, 335, 44 Colo. 600; Wilson v. Same, 99 Pac. 335, 44 Colo. 603.

Rev. Codes 1899, § 4730, declaring that a grant absolute in form, but intended to be defeasible, is not affected as against any person other than the grantee, unless a defeasance is recorded, in the use of the term "any other person," refers to any person otherwise entitled to protection of the recording law, but does not include general creditors. Valley v. First Nat. Bank of Grafton, 106 N. W. 127, 129, 14 N. D. 580, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 387, 116 Am. St. Rep. 700.

Any other place

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 2356, making it unlawful for a male person to entice a female to enter "any house of prostitution, assignation, saloon or wine room where intoxicating liquors are sold, or any other place for vicious or immoral purposes," an affidavit is sufficient which charges accused with enticing a female "to enter into a certain house situated at No. 202 East Broadway street" in a city, county, and state named, "for the purpose of having sexual intercourse with her," as "any other place" means place of like character with those previously enumerated. Wiggins v. State, 87 N. E. 718, 172 Ind. 78.

Any other purpose

An indictment under Rev. St. § 903, making a public officer who shall convert to his own use, or shall use by way of investment, or shall loan, or use in any other manner than as directed by law public money, or for any other purpose, guilty of embezzlement, is not bad because using the words "or otherwise" instead of "or for any other purpose," as the phrases are equivalent. State v. Dudenhefer, 47 So. 614, 618, 122 La. 288.

Any other railroad

Burns' Ann. St. Ind. 1894, § 5257, which authorizes any railroad company to intersect, join, and unite with "any other railroad," does not limit the right of consolidation to two companies. Bonner v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co., 151 Fed. 985, 987, 81 O. C. A. 476.

Any other source

The statutory provision that a second or subsequent application for a continuance in a criminal case must show that the absent testimony cannot be procured from "any other source known to the defendant" does not contemplate accused's testimony as another source, but refers to other sources besides accused himself. Morgan v. State, 113 S. W. 934, 937, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 542.

Any other structure

A railroad is within the term "any other structure," as used in a statute providing that every person furnishing material of any kind to be used in the construction of any building, wharf, bridge, ditch, flume, tunnel, fence, machinery, or aqueduct, or any other structure or superstructure, shall have a lien upon the same for the materials furnished. Giant Powder Co. v. Oregon Pac. Ry. Co., 42 Fed. 470, 473, 8 L. R. A. 700; Ban v. Columbia Southern Ry. Co., 117 Fed. 21, 31, 54 C. C. A. 407.

Any other water

A nonnavigable pond is within the class of "any other water" in Civ. Code, § 830, providing that, except where a grant under which land is held indicates a different intent, the owner of upland bordering on tide-water takes to ordinary high-water mark, and bordering on a nontidal navigable lake or stream to low-water mark, and bordering on any other water to the middle of the lake or stream, so that, unless a different intent appears from a patent of land bordering on a nonnavigable pond, the patentee takes to its center. Foss v. Johnstone, 110 Pac. 294, 298, 158 Cal. 119.

Any other witness

The use of the term "any other witness," as used in an instruction declaring that, if the jury are of the opinion that any witness has willfully sworn falsely as to anything material to the issue, then the jury are at liberty to disregard the entire testimony of such witness, except in so far as the jury may find it corroborated by the testimony of "any other witness," renders the instruction fatally defective, because the jury may disregard the entire evidence of a witness not corroborated by some credible witness. Hart v. Godkin, 100 N. W. 1057, 1060, 122 Wis. 646 (citing F. Dohmen Co. v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co., 71 N. W. 69, 96 Wis. 38; Allen v. Murray, 57 N. W. 979, 87 Wis. 41; Mercer v. Wright, 3 Wis. 645; Patnode v. Westenhaber, 90 N. W. 467, 114 Wis. 460).

ANYTHING ELSE

Substances which are not in themselves taxable under the laws of the United States are not embraced in the words "anything else," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 3455, providing for a seizure, forfeiture, and penalty for selling packages which contain, at the time of sale, anything else than the contents when the same were lawfully stamped by a revenue officer, even where there is no intent to defraud, and for a much heavier penalty where there is such fraudulent intent. United States v. A. Graf Distilling Co., 28 S. Ct. 264, 266, 208 U. S. 198, 52 L. Ed. 452.

ANYTHING OF VALUE

"Anything of value," as used in Rev. St. § 7076, which makes it an offense to obtain by any false pretense, and with intent to defraud, "anything of value," includes obtaining by false pretense, with intent to defraud, title to real estate situate within the state. State v. Toney, 90 N. E. 142, 143, 81 Ohio St. 130.

APARTMENTAPARTMENT HOTEL

The words "known as the B. apartment hotel," after the word "building" in a lease thereof, were merely descriptive of the character of the hotel at the time of the making of the lease, and not indicative of an agreement that no portion of the building might be devoted to purposes not inconsistent with the use of the building described as an "apartment hotel." Bristol Hotel Co. v. Pegram, 98 N. Y. Supp. 512, 514, 49 Misc. Rep. 535.

APARTMENT HOUSE

A restrictive covenant in a deed against "tenement houses" is not to be construed as relating to first-class apartment houses having all the conveniences and appliances of the best order of houses and externally in their architecture of the character and appearance corresponding with first-class dwellings in the immediate neighborhood. Kitching v. Brown, 87 N. Y. Supp. 75, 76, 92 App. Div. 160.

The term "apartment or community house" is not synonymous with "tenement" in a covenant precluding the erection of any tenement, apartment, or community house. McClure v. Leaycraft, 90 N. Y. Supp. 233, 234, 97 App. Div. 518.

An "apartment house" is either a building otherwise termed a "flat" or "flat house," or it is a building divided into separate suites of rooms intended for residence but commonly without facilities for cooking, etc. If what is known as a "flat" becomes an "apartment house" when higher rental is charged, the payment of a rental of from $35 to $40 per month does not turn what is otherwise a "flat" into an "apartment," so as to take it out of a building restriction binding the grantee not to erect a flat on the prem-

Isea. Lignot v. Jaekle, 65 Atl. 221, 224, 72 N. J. Eq. 233.

Laws 1901, c. 834, regulating tenement houses in cities of the first class, by section 2, subd. 1, defined a tenement house as any house or building, or portion thereof, rented to be occupied as a residence of three families or more, living independently of, each other, and doing their cooking, or by more than two families on any floor so living and cooking, but having a common right to the halls, stairways, yards, water-closets, or some of them. Section 95 declares that in every tenement house hereafter erected there shall be a separate water-closet in a separate compartment within each apartment, provided that, where there are apartments consisting of but one or two rooms, there shall be at least one water-closet for every three rooms. Pursuant to Greater New York Charter (Laws 1897, c. 378) § 647, authorizing the city to amend its Building Code, the city defined an "apartment house" to include every building which should be intended or designated for, or used as, the home of three or more families or households, living independently of each other, and in which every such family or household shall have provided for it a kitchen, set bath tub, and water-closet, separate and apart from each other, and that such building should be under the control of the building department of the city of New York. Held that, since the Building Code was a special act and was not in conflict with the tenement house act, the Building Code was not repealed by the tenement house act either for repugnancy or inconsistency, so that, where the compartments in plaintiff's building contained a separate water-closet, set bath tub, and a separate kitchen, it was an "apartment house" within the jurisdiction of the building department, and not a tenement house within the jurisdiction of the tenement house commissioner. Grimmer v. Tenement House Department of City of New York, 97 N. E. 884, 886, 204 N. Y. 370.

A six-story elevator apartment house of brick and limestone, which, erected, will present a dignified and attractive appearance, and will consist of elegantly appointed apartments, is not a tenement house within a covenant prohibiting the owner of the property from erecting any "tenement house," etc., thereon. The court said: That there is a wide difference between a tenement house and an "apartment house" (and in the construction of covenants, such as that involved here, such difference is recognized by the courts) is well settled. While there is no actual legal definition of a tenement house, still, in the year 1889, when the covenant between these parties was made, and even prior thereto, the difference between such a house and an "apartment house" was a matter of common knowledge. Marx v. Brogan,

APOTHECARY

The keeping and selling by a retailer of some of the articles used by apothecaries does not constitute him an "apothecary," within the statute relating to sale of intoxicating liquors, but there must be combined therewith skill in the preparation of medicines. State v. Chandler, 15 Vt. 425.

A distiller of alcohol from oleoresin, obtained from ginger root in the manufacture of a ginger ale paste, which alcohol so obtained was again used in obtaining ginger extract by percolation, was not engaged in business as an "apothecary" and was not exempt from liability for internal revenue taxation as a rectifier, purifier, or refiner of distilled spirits by Rev. St. § 3246, exempting apothecaries from liability to taxation for the distillation of spirits used exclusively in the preparation of medicines. United States v. S. Twitchell Co., 184 Fed. 525, 528.

The alcohol so distilled and used in the further preparation of fluid extract of ginger was not used exclusively in the preparation of medicine so as to exempt the distiller from taxation under Rev. St. § 3246, providing that no special tax shall be imposed on "apothecaries" as to spirituous liquors used exclusively in the preparation of medicines. United States v. Hance, 184 Fed. 528, 530.

Defendant was not exempt from such tax as an "apothecary" under Rev. St. § 3246, providing that no special tax shall be imposed on apothecaries as to spirituous liquors used exclusively in the preparation of medicines. United States v. Hance, 184 Fed. 528, 530.

Defendant manufactured a fluid extract of ginger by pouring distilled spirits on ginger root. After drawing off the fluid, the distilled spirits remaining in the dregs were separated therefrom by distillation, and this product, less in quantity and lower in grade than that previously placed in the receptacle with the ginger root, was reused in repeating the process and in the manufacture of medicinal preparations. Held, that the defendant was not exempt from an internal revenue tax as an "apothecary" under Rev. St. § 3246, providing that no special tax shall be imposed on apothecaries as to spirituous liquors used exclusively in the preparation of medicines. United States v. Smith-Kline & French Co., 184 Fed. 532-534.

Of trade

Even if keeping a restaurant is a trade, shelving, safes, furniture, tableware, and kitchen utensils used in a restaurant are not "apparatus," within Rev. St. 1895, art. 2395, subd. 5, exempting to every family apparatus belonging to any trade. Geise v. Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co. (Tex.) 107 S. W. 555,

A paper cutter, weighing 685 pounds, and a card cutter, weighing from 8 to 8 pounds, both being machines operated by hand, necessary in conducting the business of a printer, the head of a family residing in the state, are exempt, under Comp. Laws 1909, § 3346, subd. 5, providing that there shall be reserved to every family residing in the state, exempt from forced sale for payment of debts, all tools, "apparatus," etc., belonging to and used in a trade. *Brummage v. APPAREL

See Ship's Rigging and Apparel; Ship's Tackle, Apparel, and Furniture; Wearing Apparel.

"Since 'apparel' is not confined to outer clothing, but 'is used in an inclusive sense, as embracing all articles which are ordinarily worn * * * dress in general,' it seems to me to be clear that shields are embraced within the meaning of that word," as used in the tariff act. Darlington, Runk & Co. v. United States, 136 Fed. 716, 718.

The word "apparel," as given by lexicographers, is not confined to clothing. The idea of ornamentation seems to be a rather prominent element in the word, and in this sense it is not improper to say that a person wears a watch or wears a cane. It has been said that the phrase "wearing apparel," as used in exemption laws, includes all the articles of dress generally worn by persons in the calling and condition of life and in the locality of the residence of the person claiming the exemption, including whatever is necessary to a decent appearance and protection against the weather and also what is reasonably proper and customary in the way of ornament. A ring valued at $20 and a watch and chain valued at $35 worn by decedent may be set apart as exempt to the widow and minor children as "wearing apparel" of decedent. Phillips v. Phillips, 44 South. 391, 392, 151 Ala. 527, 125 Am. St. Rep. 40, 15 Ann. Cas. 157 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 440).

APPARENT

See Error Apparent; Open and Apparent; Reasonably Apparent.

The Century Dictionary defines "apparent" as "exposed to sense of sight;" "open to view;" "visible to the eye;" "within the range of vision." Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Calvert, 54 South. 184, 186, 170 Ala. 565.

"Apparent" means clear or manifest to the understanding; plain; evident; obvious; known; palpable; indubitable. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas v. Reynolds (Tex.) 115 S. W. 340, 343.

"Evident" is synonymous with "apparent." State v. Kauffman, 108 N. W. 246, 20 S. D. 620 (quoting Webster's Dict.).

The word "apparent," as used in an instruction in a personal injury action in connection with the word "reasonable," is not erroneous, for the word "apparent" means plain or evident, and is the fair equivalent of "certain." Harrison v. Ayrshire, 99 N. W. 132, 133, 123 Iowa, 528.

There is no material difference between the words "apparent" and "reasonably apparent" as used in an instruction, in an action for injuries sustained in a railroad crossing accident, making the doctrine of discovered peril applicable if the employees on the engine saw the person injured on the track, and it was apparent, or reasonably apparent, that he would not get off, and the words "realized his peril." Webster defines "apparent" as clear or manifest to the understanding; plain; evident; obvious; known; palpable; indubitable. If the danger was apparent, or reasonably apparent to the employees operating the engine, it was known to them. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Reynolds (Tex.) 115 S. W. 340, 343.

The court charged that where a party is assaulted, and his adversary "apparently" abandons the difficulty, he has no right to pursue or fire on him unless it is necessary to do so in order to protect himself from a renewal of the unlawful attack, in which case he may lawfully pursue, and his right to do so continues so long as the necessity continues. Held, that while the word "apparently" was used in the sense of "evidently," "obviously," or "clearly," the instruction was misleading, as calculated to lead the jury to believe that a mere retreat by decedent, apparently abandoning the difficulty, ended defendant's right to continue to shoot. Derden v. State, 120 S. W. 485, 490, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 396, 133 Am. St. Rep. 986.

As actual and real

The use of the word "apparent," in a charge that no one is justified in taking the life of another unless the necessity for doing so is "apparent," as the only means, etc., held objectionable on account of the dual meaning of the term; it being sometimes synonymous with actual and real. State v. Jones, 60 Atl. 396, 397, 71 N. J. Law, 543.

APPARENT AUTHORITY

An act is within the "apparent" scope of an agent's authority when a reasonably prudent person, having knowledge of the nature and usages of the business, is justified in supposing that he is authorized to perform it from the character of the duties which are known to be intrusted to him. Townsend v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 128 Pac. 389, 390, 88 Kan. 260.

"The 'apparent authority' of an agent, which will bind his principal, is such as the agent appears to have by reason of the actual authority which he has." Northwest Thresher Co. v. Eddyville State Bank, 114 N. W. 291, 293, 80 Neb. 377 (citing Creighton v. Finlayson, 64 N. W. 1103, 46 Neb. 457); Cooper & Cole Bros. v. Cooper, 133 N. W. 243, 245, 90 Neb. 209.

The "apparent authority" of an agent is such authority as the acts or declarations of the principal give the agent the appearance of possessing. Farmers' Co-op. Shipping Ass'n v. George A. Adams Grain Co., 122 N. W. 55, 57, 84 Neb. 752.

"The 'apparent authority' of an agent is that which, though not actually granted, the principal knowingly permits the agent to exercise, or which he holds him out as possessing. Dispatch Printing Co. v. National Bank of Commerce, 124 N. W. 236, 240, 109 Minn. 440.

"Apparent authority" in an agent to represent his principal exists when the principal permits the agent to exercise powers not expressly granted; but such apparent power is to be determined, not by the acts of the agent, but by the acts of the principal, and it must appear that they were relied and acted upon in good faith to justify a third person in dealing with the agent. Dispatch Printing Co. v. National Bank of Commerce, 132 N. W. 2, 3, 115 Minn. 157.

Under the rule that the principal is liable upon a contract duly made by his agent with a third person (1) when the agent acts within the scope of his actual authority; (2) when the contract, although unauthorized, has been ratified; (3) when the agent acts within the scope of his "apparent authority" unless the third person has notice that the agent is exceeding his authority, the term "apparent authority" includes the power to do whatever is usually done and necessary to be done in order to carry into effect the principal power conferred upon the agent and to transact the business or to execute the commission which has been intrusted to him, and the principal cannot restrict his own liability for acts of his agent which are within the scope of his apparent authority by limitations thereon of which the person dealing with his agent has not notice. Bank of Mor- ganton v. Hay, 55 S. E. 811, 812, 143 N. C. 326.

APPARENT DANGER

See Imminent and Apparent Danger.

An "apparent danger" is one which may be seen or otherwise comprehended, through the medium of the senses. Correll v. National Acc. Soc., 116 N. W. 1046, 1048, 139 Iowa, 36, 130 Am. St. Rep. 294.

APPARENT EASEMENT

Easement as, see Easement.

The word "apparent," as applied to an easement, as against a purchaser of the servient estate, does not necessarily mean "visible," but includes easements used by means of some artificial structure on the servient tenement, such as a pipe, sewer, or ditch, as distinguished from those using the servient easement in its natural state and at intervals, in the meantime leaving no visible sign of their existence, such as a way or right of fishery or pasture. Rubio Cañon Land & Water Ass'n v. Everett, 96 Pac. 811, 813, 154 Cal. 29.

APPARENT GOOD ORDER

"Apparent good order" ordinarily refers to the outward appearance of the goods or to their receptacles, and not to hidden or concealed conditions. Where a shipment delivered to the carrier in good order is received in bad order, it is presumed that it was damaged while in the carrier's possession. Kelly v. Southern Ry., 66 S. E. 198, 199, 84 S. C. 249, 137 Am. St. Rep. 842.

APPARENT ON THE FACE OF THE RECORD

In Rev. Civ. St. 1911, arts. 1607, 1612, requiring that errors at law not "apparent on the face of the record" be presented by timely assignments of error, the phrase quoted refers to such manifest error as when removed destroys the foundation of the judgment. Oar v. Davis (Tex.) 151 S. W. 794, 796.

In Rev. St. 1895, art. 1014, "apparent on the face of the record" means fundamental error which can be readily seen to go to the foundation of the action without looking into the record and considering the evidence, etc.; "apparent" meaning clear or manifest, plain, evident, obvious. Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Kimball, 122 S. W. 533, 537, 103 Tex. 94.

The phrase "apparent on the face of the record," as used in Rev. St. 1895, art. 1014, providing that in all cases of appeal or writ of error to the Court of Civil Appeals the trial shall be on a statement of facts, or on an error in law either assigned or "apparent on the face of the record," signifies a prominent error, either fundamental in character, or one determining a question upon which the very right of the case depends. Adams v. Faircloth (Tex.) 97 S. W. 507 (quoting Wilson v. Johnson, 94 Tex. 272, 60 S. W. 242).

APPARENT ORGANIZATION

See Color of Apparent Organization.

APPARENT SOLAR TIME

"Apparent solar time" is time measured by the actual passage of the sun over meridian. Owing to the variability of this measure, apparent time is a varying quantity, and therefore for purposes of practical convenience an arbitrary measure was adopted known as mean solar time. Globe & Rutgers Fire Ins. Co. of New York v. David Moffat Co., 154 Fed. 13, 20, 83 C. C. A. 91.

APPEAL

Reason for appeal, see Reason.

An "appeal" is a continuation of the original action or proceeding in another jurisdiction. State ex rel. City of Duluth v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 109 N. W. 238, 239, 99 Minn. 280.

"An 'appeal' is a continuation of the original suit, for the purpose of obtaining a new trial and a new judgment. It is analogous in its effect to the award of a new trial, by which the previous verdict is entirely set aside, and the case is to be heard anew like an original action and as if no judgment had been rendered in the court below. In highway appeals and generally, the appeal vacates the judgment in the court below, and the judgment in the appellate court is a distinct and original judgment." Bickford v. Town of Franconia, 60 Atl. 98, 99, 73 N. H. 194 (citing Morse v. Wheeler, 45 Atl. 561, 69 N. H. 292; Cook v. Bennett, 51 N. H. 85, 91; Stalbird v. Beattie, 36 N. H. 455, 72 Am. Dec. 317; Wallace v. Brown, 25 N. H. 216, 220; Mathes v. Bennett, 21 N. H. 188, 203).

The word "appeal," as used in an undertaking reciting an appeal from a judgment and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, and binding the sureties to pay "all damages and costs which might be awarded on the appeal or on the dismissal thereof," means the whole appeal as described by the instrument, including the appeal from the judgment, and the appeal from the order denying the new trial, and therefore binds the sureties for any and all costs and damages that may be awarded on either of such appeals. Buchner v. Malloy, 92 Pac. 1029, 1030, 152 Cal. 484.

An "appeal" is a process of civil law origin and is the appropriate mode of review for causes originally in a court of chancery, and in the absence of statutes providing otherwise, it removes the cause entirely subjecting the facts as well as the law to a review and retrial. Where the statutes have so restricted the appeal that in its nature it only operates to review as does a writ of error, the appeal like the writ of error becomes a new suit and not a continuation of the suit, the proceedings of which are sought to be reviewed. Wingfield v. Neall, 54 S. El. 47, 49, 60 W. Va. 106, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 443, 116 Am. St. Rep. 882, 9 Ann. Cas. 982.

The word "appeal" refers to proceedings provided for in Code Civ. Proc. tit. 13, pt. 2, relating to the time and method of taking appeals. Under the Code, provision that, if an action is commenced within the time prescribed therefor and a judgment for plaintiff is reversed on "appeal," the plaintiff may commence a new action within a year after reversal, commencement of a suit and the bringing of an action within a year from the annulling of a decree therein on a "writ of review" does not prevent the bar of limitation. Fay v. Costa, 83 Pac. 275, 277, 278, 2 Cal. App. 241.

The word "appeal," as used in Rev. Laws, c. 100, § 4, providing for the removal of licensed commissioners by the mayor for cause, after charges preferred and reasonable notice of the hearing, and granting to the officer removed a right to review by the superior court, and declaring that the court after hearing shall affirm or revoke the order of the mayor removing such commissioner, "and there shall be no 'appeal' from his decision," is used in a broad general sense so as to cover all proceedings for a revision by a higher court, and where the superior court determines a controversy arising under the statute the officer removed is not aggrieved by the ruling of the court, since the same is binding upon him. Dow v. Casey, 79 N. El. 810, 811, 194 Mass. 48.

"The words 'intends to appeal,' 'will appeal,' or 'give notice of their application to appeal,' are equivalent to and have the same effect as the more direct phraseology of the statute ('appeals from the judgment'); that is each will effect an appeal. Of course, if the phrases above cited are sufficient to effect the appeal, the words 'has appealed' will likewise perform the same office." James v. James, 77 Pac. 1082, 35 Wash. 655 (citing Ranahan v. Gibbons, 62 Pac. 773, 23 Wash. 255; In re Murphy's Estate, 68 Pac. 424, 26 Wash. 222; Brown v. Calloway, 75 Pac. 630, 34 Wash. 175).

The county commissioners, when permitting a liquor licensee to remove his business to a different location, sits as an administrative board and not as a court, and an appeal from their decision does not and cannot transfer to the superior court their jurisdiction to hear purely administrative questions, but transfers only judicial questions involving the legality of the commissioner's conduct, so that the term "appeal" applied to such transfer is a misnomer. Appeal of Bridgeport Malleable Iron Co., 85 Atl. 580, 582, 86 Conn. 378; Vaill v. McPhail, 83 Atl. 1075, 1078, 84 R. I. 361.

Certiorari

As substitute for, see Certiorari.

Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896 (2d Ed.) c. 3, par. 68, in relation to administration, provides that in all cases of the allowance or rejection of claims by the county court either party may take an "appeal" to the circuit court of the same county, in the same time and manner that appeals are taken from justices to the circuit courts by appellant giving a bond, and it is provided that the appeal shall be tried de novo. Chapter 79, par. 115, in relation to justices and constables, provides for an appeal from a justice to the circuit court, and chapter 79, par. 177, provides that the judges of courts to which appeals may be taken from justices shall have power to grant writs of certiorari. At the time of the adoption of the statute upon administration, there was in force a general statute (Laws 1849, p. 62) establishing county courts, which provided that appeals might be taken from and writs of certiorari prosecuted on its judgments in the manner prescribed by law in case of similar judgments rendered by the probate court, and by a statute of 1845 it was provided that appeals from probate justices of the peace might be taken and writs of certiorari prosecuted upon their judgments in the same manner as from judgments of justices. Held, that a statutory writ of certiorari does not lie from a circuit court to a county court sitting in probate to review the proceedings upon a claim against the estate of a decedent, but the sole remedy is an appeal; the word "appeal" not including appeal by means of writ of certiorari. Schaeffer v. Burnett, 77 N. E. 546, 547, 221 Ill. 315.

As new trial

An "appeal" and trial de novo is an "appeal" and not exclusively a new trial. State ex rel. Hart v. Judge of First District Court, 37 South. 546, 547, 113 La. 654.

As original application

In Rev. St. 1909, §§ 11,405, 11,406, relating to the power of county boards of equalization on appeal from the valuation of property made by the assessors, the word "appeal" is not used in its technical legal sense, but simply authorizes the party who felt himself aggrieved by the assessment made by the assessor to review it by objecting or protesting against the same. In re Sanford, 139 S. W. 376, 380, 236 Mo. 665.

Gen. St. 1902, § 2860, provides that an aggrieved taxpayer may "appeal" to the superior court from the decision of the county commissioners granting a liquor license. Held, that the section in legal effect authorizes a proceeding by way of original application to the superior court to set aside the county commissioners' action in the matter of liquor licenses in excess, or in unlawful abuse of their power. Appeal of Coles, 66 Atl. 508, 79 Conn. 679.

Statutory proceedings for the improvement of streets and for the assessment of the cost thereof being special in character, so that no right of appeal can be asserted, except that expressly provided by the statute itself, under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 8716, which, before and after its amendment by Laws 1909, c. 172, provided that a petition seeking to modify an assessment must be filed within 10 days after the final order of the board approving the assessment, and that when the assessment roll was completed and delivered as therein provided the decision of such board as to all benefits should be conclusive, and that an appeal from the assessment made by the town board to the circuit court, and a trial of the case by the court, without a jury, as in other civil cases, might be had, an application for a reassessment of benefits is not an "appeal" to the circuit court, and that court acquired no jurisdiction and could exercise no judicial power in the proceedings, but can act only in a ministerial capacity, from which no further appeal would lie; and hence there was no further remedy, either under section 8716, or under the section as amended. Holderman v. North Manchester (Ind.) 96 N. E. 29, 30.

As perfected appeal

This term as used in a statute, "the appeal is held to have been perfected," referring to the giving of the notice of appeal in term time and filing the bond, means that the removal of a cause from an inferior to a superior court is brought to consummation or completeness. It is clear that the practical idea of the term "appeal is perfected" is that the act of the parties in the particular case, by giving notice of the appeal and filing the appeal bond, have completely lodged appellate jurisdiction in the appellate court. Nothing further is left to be done by the parties to the particular cause to give active jurisdiction or power to hear and review the action of the trial court. It follows therefore that the active jurisdiction in the particular case for all purposes attaches to the appellate court, when the appeal is per-fectcd. Gordon v. Rhodes & Daniels (Tex.) 104 S. W. 786, 787.

Cheyenne City Charter (Rev. St. 1887, § 146), giving the police court jurisdiction to hear cases arising under the ordinances of the city, and Comp. St. 1910, § 1383 (Rev. St. 1899, § 1291), providing that on appeal from the police court the case shall stand for trial in the district court on the transcript filed, and that no trial de novo shall be had in the district court, are not amended by sections 949, 950, 952, Comp. St. 1910, providing for municipal courts, and that appeals therefrom shall be taken in the manner provided by law for appeals from justices of the peace, which are regulated by sections 5260, 6119-6122, authorizing appeals from judgments of justices of the peace, and providing that a cause "when thus appealed" shall stand for trial anew in the district court, since section 952 relates only to the method of taking an appeal, and the proceedings after the taking of an appeal are subject to section 1383; the words "when thus appealed" meaning after the appeal has been taken or perfected, and the jurisdiction of the appellate court having attached to try the case. Stutsman v. City of Cheyenne, 113 P. 322.

Petition in error distinguished

See Petition in Error.

Petition in error included

The word "appeal" designates generally any method provided by statute for removing a case from an inferior to a higher court for review, including the proceeding under the statute by petition in error. Caldwell v. State, 74 Pac. 496, 12 Wyo. 206.

Plenary suit in equity distinguished

A proceeding in a circuit court by parties injuriously affected by orders of the interstate commerce commission, though not parties to the proceeding before the commission on which they are based, to suspend or annul such orders, is not an "appeal," but a "plenary suit in equity." F. H. Peavey & Co. v. Union Pac. R. Co., 176 Fed. 409, 417.

As proceeding

See Proceeding.

As removal of cause

The word "appeal," when used in a statute, does not necessarily imply the removal of a controversy from one tribunal to another, nor has it any absolutely definite meaning, but it is to be interpreted like other expressions by the ordinary rules of construction. Nash v. City of Glen Elder, 88 Pac. 62, 64, 74 Kan. 756 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, pp. 442, 444).

The word "appeal," as used in practice, is defined as "the removal of a cause from a court of inferior to one of superior jurisdiction, for the purpose of obtaining a review and retrial." Williamson v. Musick, 53 S. E. 706, 708, 60 W. Va. 59.

As special proceeding

See Special Proceeding.

Writ of error distinguished

An "appeal" is a statutory right, and is the continuation of the original suit; while a "writ of error" is an independent action, in the nature of a new and original suit. State v. Preston, 97 Pac. 388, 30 Nev. 301.

A "writ of error" is a process of common-law origin, and it removes nothing for examination but the law; while an appeal is a process of civil-law origin and removes a cause entirely, subjecting the fact as well as the law to a review and retrial. It is essential to the validity of a "writ of error" to a United States District Court of the Indian Territory that all defendants against whom judgment was rendered be made parties thereto, and a defect in a "writ of error," consisting of failure to make a party thereto one of the defendants against all of whom judgment was rendered, is not cured by entry of appearance of such party after the filing of the writ and expiration of the time for suing it out. Lewis v. Sittle (Ind. T.) 104 S. W. 850, 851.

"Writs of error" are different from 'appeals.' An 'appeal' is the continuation of an old action. A 'writ of error,' however, is considered a new action." City of St. Louis v. Butler, 99 S. W. 1092, 201 Mo. 396.

A "writ of error" at common law when seasonably sued out, and an appropriate bond given, operated as a supersedeas, but left the judgment in full force; while a technical chancery "appeal" vacated the decree appealed from and brought up the whole case for retrial de novo. Fort v. Fort, 101 S. W. 433, 435, 118 Tenn. 103, 11 Ann. Cas. 964.

A marked distinction exists between proceedings in error to obtain a reversal of a judgment or final order in a law action, and an "appeal" in a suit in equity, which latter brings up the case for trial de novo, and is accomplished solely by the filing in due time in the Supreme Court of a transcript of the record containing the judgment, decree, or final order appealed from. In case of an appeal in a suit in equity, the filing of a transcript operates ipso facto as a removal of the cause to the appellate court and in the event of death, proceedings for a revivor and substitution are authorized, as though the action had been pending in the appellate court since prior to the death of the party; but the right to review by proceedings in error are regulated by an altogether different method of procedure, which must be followed in order to obtain such revivor. Ritchey v. Seeley, 97 N. W. 818, 819, 68 Neb. 120.

The distinction between a "writ of error," which brings up the record in an action at law for a review of questions of law only, and an "appeal," which involves a rehearing upon both the facts and law, is vital. These remedies have their origin and functions in the inherent difference between courts of law and courts of equity, differences which are recognized in the Constitution of the United States and the laws of Congress. The "writ of error" is a common-law writ, and searches the record for errors of law in the final judgment of a common-law court. If error is found, the judgment awards a venire facias de novo. The "appeal" is a procedure which comes to us from the civil law along with the fundamentals which go to make up the jurisprudence of a court of equity. Its office is to remove the entire cause, and it subjects the transcript to a scrutiny of fact and law, and is, in substance, a new trial. Nashville Ry. & Light Co. v. Bunn, 168 Fed. 862, 865, 94 C. C. A. 274 (citing Parsons v. Bedford, 3 Pet. 433, 446, 448, 7 L. Ed. 782.)

"Appeal" was the process by which decrees in suits in chancery were reviewed, and the "writ of error" was the process designed for the review of actions at law." Marinan v. Baker, 78 Pac. 531, 532, 12 N. M. 451.

A "writ of error" is a process of common-law origin, and it removes nothing for examination but the law. The distinction between a "writ of error" and an "appeal" has been observed by the court and recognized by the legislation of Congress. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. Rice, 104 S. W. 819, 821, 7 Ind. T. 514.

APPEAR

See Clearly Appear; Held to Appear or Answer; If It Appears.
See, also, Appearance.

An instruction directed that, in determining the weight of the testimony, the jury should consider any interest of the witnesses in the result of the case; their conduct and demeanor while testifying; their apparent fairness or bias; their opportunities for seeing or knowing the things about which they testify; the reasonableness of the "story told" by them, and all the evidence and circumstances proved tending to corroborate or contradict them, "if any such appears." Held, that such instruction was not erroneous in the use of the word "appears"; the word "appears" being used to mean the fairness or bias of the witness as disclosed by his conduct on the stand; his manner of testifying, etc. Nicholson v. State, 106 Pac. 229, 231, 18 Wyo. 298.

As being manifest or obvious

"Appear," as used in Code 1904, § 2871, requiring the names of the members of a limited partnership to appear conspicuously upon the front of the place of business, means to be obvious and manifest. R. S. Oglesby

Co. v. Lindsey, 72 S. E. 672, 676, 112 Va. 767, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 913.

Kirby's Dig. § 718, with reference to the adoption of a constitutional amendment, declares that, if it shall "appear" that a majority of the electors voting at the election at which the amendment is submitted adopt such amendment, then the Speaker of the House of Representatives, on canvassing the returns, shall declare such proposed amendment duly adopted, etc. Held, that the use of the word "appear" in defining the duties of the speaker in this regard, was quite apt and properly imposed the formal and ministerial function of casting up and declaring in open session what would appear to be the result. Rice v. Palmer, 96 S. W. 396, 399, 78 Ark. 432.

As prove or proven

The word "appear," as used in instructions in a criminal case, that "it must be shown beyond a reasonable doubt," or "it must appear beyond a reasonable doubt," is synonymous with the word "prove" or "proven," and does not exact a less degree of proof than would have been exacted if the word "prove" or "proven" had been used. State v. Crofford, 110 N. W. 921, 925, 133 Iowa, 478.

APPEAR BY AFFIDAVIT

"Appear by affidavit" means that such legal evidence going to establish the fact must be given as would be received in the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, and not conclusions, opinions, or hearsay. The affidavit must contain a statement of the facts and circumstances upon which the applicant bases his belief of the truth of what he wishes to establish. It must be so full that the officer to whom it is presented may find, upon the evidence contained in it, that the facts exist satisfactorily to his mind. Mackubin v. Smith, 5 Minn. 367, 370 (Gil. 296, 298).

APPEAR FROM THE EVIDENCE

The statement of the bill of exceptions that certain facts "appeared from the evidence" is to be construed as meaning that they were undisputed or admitted. Neal v. Scherber, 93 N. E. 628, 629, 207 Mass. 323.

APPEAR ON ASSESSOR'S BOOKS

A statement that an assessment on real estate "appears on the assessors' books" means that the assessment was entered on the books specified in Pub. St. 1882, c. 11, §§ 50-54, relating to books for use in assessment of taxes; and hence a finding that the assessment was made by the board of assessors as a whole, or a majority thereof, is authorized, notwithstanding the testimony of a witness that a designated person was appointed assessor, and was the assessor for a specified ward, and who, with another as first assistant, and another as second assistant, assessed the land, the first assistant being the local man and having all the say. Welsh v. Briggs, 90 N. E. 1146, 1148, 204 Mass. 540.

APPEARANCE

See General Appearance; Same Appearance; Special Appearance; Voluntary Appearance.

As included in served with process, see Served.

The term "appearance" designates the act by which one against whom suit has been commenced submits himself to the court's jurisdiction. Rogers v. Penobscot Mining Co., 132 N. W. 792, 795, 28 S. D. 72.

The word "appear," when used to designate a step taken in litigation by a defendant, means the act or proceeding by which he places himself before the court, and does not necessarily imply the actual physical presence, either of the party or his attorney before the court. Thornhill v. Hargreaves, 107 N. W. 847, 848, 76 Neb. 582.

Answer or demurrer

An "appearance" is generally defined as the formal proceeding by which a defendant submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court, and, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1014, a defendant appears when he answers, demurs, or gives plaintiff written notice of his appearance, or when an attorney gives notice of an appearance for him. California Pine Box & Lumber Co. v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, 108 Pac. 882, 884, 13 Cal. App. 65.

"A demurrer is an 'appearance' in the cause (New Jersey v. New York, 81 U. S. (6 Pet. 323, 8 L. Ed. 414), and by filing it a defendant waives all objections to the jurisdiction of the court over his person." Sayre & Fisher Co. v. Griefen, 60 Atl. 513, 72 N. J. Law, 1 (citing Ogdensburgh & L. C. R. Co. v. Vermont & C. R. Co., 63 N. Y. 176, 181; Handy v. Insurance Co., 37 Ohio St. 366; Rowland v. Coyne, 55 Cal. 1; Thompson v. Michigan Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 18 N. W. 247, 52 Mich. 522).

Where a national bank, in an action in a state court against it by attachment, pleaded to the merits after the dissolution of the attachment, the state court acquired jurisdiction under Code 1896, § 562, providing that, where a defendant appears and pleads, the cause proceeds as in suits commenced by summons, though Rev. St. U. S. § 5242, provides that no attachment shall be issued against a national bank in any action in any state court. Merchants' Laclede Nat. Bank v. Troy Grocery Co., 43 South. 208, 150 Ala. 128.

Under Civ. Code, § 118, providing that a party may by answer or other proper pleading object to the jurisdiction over the parties, and a failure to do so is a waiver of the objection, a party may in one answer plead both to the jurisdiction and to the merits, and the filing of such an answer does not constitute an "appearance." Louisville Home Telephone Co. v. Beeler's Adm'x, 101 S. W. 397, 398, 81 Ky. Law Rep. 19.

Application for removal

An application by a defendant not served to remove a cause from the state to a federal court is not an "appearance" to the merits. Northwestern State Bank of Hay Springs, Neb., v. Silberman, 154 Fed. 809, 813, 83 C. C. A. 525 (citing Wabash Western Ry. Co. v. Brow, 17 Sup. Ct. 126, 164 U. S. 271, 41 L. Ed. 431).

Application to set aside order or judgment

Certain orders were entered making allowances to a receiver of an insolvent bank, after which certain stockholders were granted permission to sue to vacate the orders, as granted ex parte, and without jurisdiction. This suit was prosecuted to judgment, which was adverse to the plaintiffs, whereupon they brought a writ of error to review the original orders as improvidently entered and void for want of jurisdiction. Held that, plaintiffs having proceeded in the trial court to set aside the orders, such proceeding constituted an "appearance" which cured the alleged jurisdictional defect. In re Bank of Newcastle, 89 Pac. 1035, 1037, 15 Wyo. 501; Kilpatrick v. Horton, Id.

Delivery bond in replevin

The giving by defendant in replevin, within the time allowed by law, of a redelivery bond conditioned that he will deliver the property to plaintiff if the delivery shall be adjudged against him and will pay the costs and damages awarded against him and retaining possession of the property, is an "appearance" in the cause, amounting to a waiver of the issuance of summons. Fowler v. Fowler, 82 Pac. 923, 927, 15 Okl. 529.

Demand for property of estate

A demand made through an attorney or agent upon an administrator for possession of the property of the estate which he represents, or a request made by an attorney of the judge of the probate court that he be notified if any further proceedings are to be taken in the estate, is not an "appearance" or claim within the purview and meaning of section 5715 of the Revised Codes sufficient to stop the running of the statute limiting the time within which such claim of the right of succession shall be made by a non-resident alien. Connolly v. Reed, 125 Pac. 213, 217, 22 Idaho, 29.

Exceptions to sureties on attachment bond

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1014, providing that a defendant appears when he answers, demurs, or gives plaintiff written notice of his appearance, or when an attorney gives notice of appearance for him, a notice served by defendant's attorney on plaintiff's attorney that defendant excepted to the sufficiency of plaintiff's sureties on an undertaking given by plaintiff to secure an attachment, and demanding that the sureties justify, did not constitute an "appearance." Written notice is required under this section only when defendant appears in pro. per. Salmonson v. Streiffer, 110 Pac. 144, 146, 13 Cal. App. 395.

The fact that a motion for a continuance is made orally does not affect the question of its constituting an "appearance." Zobel v. Zobel, 90 Pac. 191, 192, 151 Cal. 98.

As personal appearance

Where defendant appeared by attorney and asked for a continuance of a motion by plaintiff to strike from the files pleadings of the defendant which had not been served on plaintiff's attorney, such "appearance" was equivalent to personal service, since the relief could only be asked on the theory that defendant was submitting to the general jurisdiction of the court. Zobel v. Zobel, 90 Pac. 191, 192, 151 Cal. 98.

Prosecution of appeal or writ of error

The filing of an affidavit and bond for appeal by a defendant in justice court constitutes an "appearance," and gives the circuit court jurisdiction of defendant on appeal. Carden v. Bailey, 112 S. W. 743, 744, 87 Ark. 230.

The prosecution of a writ of error operates as an "appearance," and further process is unnecessary. Barwick v. Rouse, 43 South. 753, 53 Fla. 643.

Under the statutes of Nebraska, which abolish the common-law writ of error, and provide for proceedings in the Supreme Court to review a judgment of a district court by the filing of a petition in error and the issuance and service of a summons thereon, such proceedings are in effect an original action, and a foreign administrator who avails himself of the right given him by the statute of the state to sue in its courts by instituting such a proceeding in error to review a judgment of a district court subjecting lands of his intestate to an attachment voluntarily submits the question of the validity of such judgment to the Supreme Court of the state, and its decision is binding upon him and upon the property. Benker v. Meyer, 154 Fed. 290, 294, 295, 83 C. C. A. 270.

Questioning jurisdiction

Defendant appeared and filed pleas to the jurisdiction of the court, and after demurrers had been sustained thereto defendant elected to stand by the pleas and refused to plead further in the cause. The court thereupon proceeded to hear the evidence and assess the damages, defendant objecting to the court taking jurisdiction for that purpose and excepting to the action of the court in assessing damages and to the rendition of judgment, after which defendant moved to expunge the judgment from the record for want of jurisdiction. Held, that defendant's proceedings after refusing to plead further on demurrers being sustained to the pleas, though unnecessary to preserve its objection, were consistent with the purpose of limiting defendant's appearance to the sole purpose of questioning the court's jurisdiction, and did not, therefore, amount to an "appearance" waiving such objection. Supreme Hive of Ladies of Maccabees of the World v. Harrington, 81 N. E. 533, 537, 227 Ill. 511.

Stipulation for trial or judgment

"Appearance" ordinarily means the process by which a person, against whom a suit has been commenced, submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court; and where, in an action against a corporation and an individual, both defendants answered, and questions involved were decided by the court, and an agreement for a certain judgment, signed by the same attorneys who signed the pleadings of the respective parties, was filed, it authorized a recital, in the judgment entered on the stipulation, that all parties appeared and announced ready for trial. Forty-Acre Spring Live Stock Co. v. West Texas Bank & Trust Co. (Tex.) 111 S. W. 417, 419.

APPEARANCE DE BENE ESSE

"The 'appearance de bene esse' is peculiar to the courts of this state, and has invariably prevailed, from a time to which the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. I have known the practice to prevail for more than forty years, and have seen such entries long before my time. It was borrowed from the filing a declaration de bene esse; that is, conditionally, until special bail be put in. A declaration de bene must be delivered and filed before the time for putting in bail has expired. If it be delivered after appearance, it is called 'delivering it in chief.' The reason of filing it conditionally is this: that it is no waiver of bail; but demanding a plea is, because it is admitting the defendant to be in court. This declaration stands, without more said, where the special bail is put in, and remains without exception. The declaration is generally indorsed thus: 'This declaration is filed conditionally, till special bail is entered,' or 'Common bail is filed,' as the case may be. All our proceedings are short notes—memoranda—afterwards to be filled up. The appearance de bene esse, if filled up at length, is an appearance conditionally, if the summons of scire facias be returned served. If it is, there is a return, with a full appearance; so much so that, on the writ thus returned, I would consider the party in court, appearing by his attorney, unless on or before the return he entered a retraxit of his appearance. The court would hold the attorney to it; there should be no shuffling." Blair v. Weaver (Pa.) 11 Serg. & R. 84, 85.

APPEARANCE OF DANGER

In a prosecution for homicide, the court charged that if the defendant, not the jury, honestly believed, without fault or carelessness on his part, that at the time he struck the blow that killed deceased that deceased was in the act of killing the father of the defendant, or of inflicting upon him great bodily injury, and that the danger "appeared" to defendant to be urgent and pressing, then defendant was justified in assaulting and striking deceased to prevent his father from being killed or receiving great bodily injury. Held, that the word "appeared" in such instruction had reference to the defendant and was erroneous, since the word "appears" should have been used so as to require that such conditions should appear not to defendant but to the jury. Mabry v. State, 97 S. W. 285, 287, 80 Ark. 345.

APPELLATE

"Appellate" pertains to the judicial review of adjudications." In re Burnette, 85 Pac. 575, 579, 73 Kan. 609 (citing Ex parte Henderson, 6 Fla. 279).

APPELLATE COURT

The fact that a court is called an "appellate court" and was created as a court of appeal, and that strictly speaking an appellate court can review a decision of a court only, does not preclude the Legislature from conferring upon it jurisdiction other than strictly appellate jurisdiction. The question is whether the particular duty placed upon the court is a judicial duty. Chicago, I. & L. Ry. Co. v. Railroad Commission of Indiana, 78 N. E. 338, 346, 38 Ind. App. 439.

A condition in an appeal bond for the performance of the judgment when affirmed by the "appellate court" meant the court with jurisdiction to affirm the judgment, and the surety was not absolved from liability because the affirmance was by the Court of Appeals instead of the Supreme Court. Zellers v. National Surety Co., 108 S. W. 548, 549, 210 Mo. 86.

APPELLATE JURISDICTION

"Appellate jurisdiction" of a court is the power and authority conferred on a superior court to rehear and determine causes tried in inferior courts. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. State (Tex.) 106 S. W. 326, 331.

"Appellate jurisdiction" is the power to take cognizance of and review proceedings had in an inferior court, irrespective of the manner in which they are brought up, by appeal or writ of error." In re Burnette, 85 Pac. 575, 579, 73 Kan. 609 (citing Ex parte Henderson, 6 Fla. 279).

"Appellate jurisdiction" is defined as the jurisdiction which a superior court has to rehear causes which have been tried in inferior courts, and the very expression "appellate jurisdiction" refutes and contradicts any idea of filing new pleadings, and framing and settling issues in a court of such jurisdiction. In re McVay's Estate, 93 Pac. 28, 32, 14 Idaho, 56 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.; State ex rel. Williams v. Anthony, 65 Mo. App. 543; State ex rel. Wallace v. Baker, 19 Fla. 19; In re Jessup's Estate, 21 Pac. 976, 22 Pac. 742, 1028, 81 Cal. 408, 6 L. R. A. 594; Dodds v. Duncan (Tenn.) 12 Lea, 731; People ex rel. Dickinson v. Board of Trade of City of Chicago, 193 Ill. 577, 62 N. E. 196).

"Appellate jurisdiction" consists of many parts. The power to review by writ of error or by appeal is but one portion of that jurisdiction. The 'appellate jurisdiction' exercised by the issue of writs of habeas corpus is distinct and separate from that invoked by writs of error or by appeals. The former is limited to a consideration and determination of the existence and extent of the jurisdiction of the subordinate court which has confined the prisoner. The latter extends to a review of the regularity of its procedure, of its rulings upon questions of law and in suits in equity to a reconsideration of its findings of fact. The former presents the question whether the prisoner is confined without authority of law, the latter whether the case of the aggrieved party was lawfully tried. Those two powers do not occupy the same, but different portions of the entire 'appellate jurisdiction' of a court which may exercise both. Neither of them includes the other. Neither of them is identical with the other or with the 'appellate jurisdiction' of the court. But that jurisdiction includes them both." Ex parte Moran, 144 Fed. 594, 599, 75 C. C. A. 396.

"Appellate jurisdiction" necessarily implies that the subject-matter has been instituted in and acted upon by some other court whose judgment or proceedings are to be reviewed. While this jurisdiction may be exercised in a variety of forms and in any form which the Legislature may prescribe, the substance of the jurisdiction must exist before the form can be applied to it. It is the power vested in a superior tribunal to review and revise the judicial action of an inferior tribunal. Ex parte Evans, 52 S. E. 419, 420, 72 S. C. 547 (citing 3 Story, Const. p. 626).

The term "appellate" in the Constitution, providing that the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court shall extend to all criminal cases until a Criminal Court of Appeals with exclusive appellate jurisdiction in criminal cases shall be established by law, is not used in a restricted sense, but in its broadest sense as embracing the power and jurisdiction to review and correct proceedings of inferior courts in criminal cases, brought before it for determination in the manner provided by law. State ex rel. Eubanks v. Cole, 109 Pac. 736, 744, 4 Okl. Cr. 25.

Act May 18, 1908 (Laws 1907-08, c. 28), creating the Criminal Court of Appeals, provides (section 2) that such court shall have exclusive "appellate jurisdiction" in all criminal cases appealed from county and district court, and that if any cause appealed to such court involves the construction of the Constitution of the state or of the United States, or any act of Congress, such court shall certify such questions for final determination to the Supreme Court, further proceedings in the Criminal Court of Appeals awaiting the Supreme Court's decision, which when made shall be certified to the Criminal Court of Appeals and shall govern it, establishes a Criminal Court of Appeals with exclusive appellate jurisdiction in all criminal cases not only appealed thereafter from judgments in the district or county courts, but also of criminal cases pending in the Supreme Court, including proceedings transferred from the Supreme Court of the territory after erection of the state, as contemplated by Const. art. 7, § 2, providing that the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court as to criminal cases shall be coextensive with the state until a Criminal Court of Appeals with exclusive appellate jurisdiction in criminal cases shall be established by law; the procedure for certifying of questions to the Supreme Court not being the exercise of "appellate jurisdiction" within the constitutional provision. Buck v. Dick, 113 Pac. 920, 27 Okl. 854.

The terms "appellate jurisdiction" and "original jurisdiction" are relative terms, and, like the basic term "jurisdiction," dependent upon the manner of use, the context, and the understanding had of the term in the light of its application. The words "appellate jurisdiction," in Const. § 86, are used in the same sense as in section 103, defining the jurisdiction of the district courts. And when in the latter section it is declared that the district courts shall have such appellate jurisdiction as may be conferred by law, it is not meant that the Legislature may define appellate jurisdiction, and make it mean one thing in one case and a different thing in another case. It is only meant that it shall have appellate jurisdiction in such cases as the law may declare. In re Peterson's Estate, 134 N. W. 751, 762, 22 N. D. 480.

APPELLEE

By "appellee" is meant the party against whom the appeal is taken; that is to say, the party who has an interest adverse to setting aside the judgment. Slayton & Co. v. Horey, 78 S. W. 919, 920, 97 Tex. 341; Hall Music Co. v. Hall, 120 S. W. 904, 905, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 610.

APPENDAGE

A water pipe under the roadbed of a public street laid for the distribution of water for the use of a city and of its inhabitants is not an "appendage" to or a part of the adjoining lot, as a sidewalk may be, and a charge of a definite sum per front foot, to be paid by the owner for the expense of such pipe, cannot be supported either under the power of general taxation or under the power to tax for local improvement. Doughten v. City of Camden, 63 Atl. 170, 172, 72 N. J. Law, 451, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 817, 111 Am. St. Rep. 680, 5 Ann. Cas. 902.

APPLIANCE

Reasonably safe appliance, see Reasonably Safe.

The word "appliances" is very broad, and includes anything applied or used as a means to an end. Cook v. Big Muddy-Carterville Mining Co., 94 N. E. 90, 249 Ill. 41.

A tram railroad was not an "appliance" of a manufacturing business within Rev. St. 1899, § 8486, taxing manufacturers on tools, machinery, and appliances. State ex rel. Western Tie & Timber Co. v. Pulliam, 135 S. W. 443, 444, 233 Mo. 229.

"Appliances" include machinery, apparatus, and premises. The failure of an employer to furnish a domestic servant with a lodging room in such repair as not to endanger her health is a violation of his legal duty to furnish safe appliances. Collins v. Harrison, 56 Atl. 678, 25 R. I. 489, 64 L. R. A. 156.

A rope furnished by a master for servants to use in rigging staging held not an "appliance" in itself, in view of the circumstances, notwithstanding a rope may be an appliance under some circumstances. Bort v. Quadt, 96 Pac. 815, 816, 8 Cal. App. 290.

A gate on the side of the platform of a surface street car is an "appliance," within the rule requiring a carrier of passengers to exercise the utmost human skill, care, and foresight in the maintenance of its "appliances" for the protection of its passengers. Stappers v. Interurban St. Ry. Co., 106 N. Y. Supp. 854, 855, 56 Misc. Rep. 337.

"A staging or scaffolding for workmen is an 'appliance' or instrumentality by the means of which the work is to be done." Phoenix Bridge Co. v. Castleberry, 181 Fed.

175, 180, 65 C. C. A. 481 (quoting and adopting definition in Thomas, Neg. p. 790).

A scaffold, erected by carpenters for work on a building, is not an "appliance" within the rule requiring the master to furnish safe appliances, as his duty is performed when he employs competent men and furnishes them proper tools and lumber and materials with which to erect the same. McDonald v. Hoffman, 102 Pac. 678, 674, 10 Cal. App. 515.

Whether a crosspiece nailed across lumber on a flat car and from the standards on one side to those on the other for the purpose of staying the lumber was a way or "appliance" within the statute (Revisal 1905, § 2646), which defendant was bound to inspect and see that it was properly nailed, was, on the evidence, for the jury. Wallace v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 54 S. E. 399, 402, 403, 141 N. C. 646, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 384.

As regards the question of furnishing proper appliances, skids laid over a trench and onto which iron pipes are rolled, to rest there till raised and lowered into the trench by means of a derrick, are "appliances" within the meaning of the employer's liability act (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 31, §§ 200-204). Tamaseric v. Beckwith, 129 N. Y. Supp. 361, 364, 145 App. Div. 78.

An air pump intended to be set up for use in a plant to be erected to prepare material for street paving is not while being unloaded from a railroad car an "appliance" within the rule requiring the master to exercise reasonable care to furnish his servants with reasonably safe appliances to carry on the business. Westlake v. Murphy, 122 N. W. 684, 686, 85 Neb. 45, 19 Ann. Cas. 149.

A hoist was used for the purpose of elevating material to the second story of a building in course of erection. It was triangular in form, simple in design, and easily made. Its construction and operation on the roof was not immediately supervised by the foreman or master, but the material was selected and it was put together by the carpenters engaged upon the building. Such hoist was not an "appliance," within the rule that the master is obliged to use tools and appliances reasonably safe for the uses to which they are to be put. Gittens v. William Porten Co., 97 N. W. 378, 379, 90 Minn. 512.

A contract between a shipowner and a boss stevedore provided that the stevedore had permission to use the ship's winches, booms, falls, and tackle, or any other "appliances," but that no obligation or undertaking was assumed by the shipowner therefrom, except to furnish necessary steam to operate them, and that such permission should constitute a mere license to the stevedore and his men to use, at his own and their discretion, any winch, boom, fall, tackle, or any other appliance which may happen to be on or over the ship's deck, without any responsibility on the part of the ship in respect to the fitness or safety of such winch, boom, fall, or tackle, or other appliance, at any time. Held, that the word "appliance" did not include hatches, and that the stevedore's servants were not mere licensees in the use thereof. Crimmins v. Booth, 88 N. E. 449, 452, 202 Mass. 17, 132 Am. St. Rep. 468.

APPLIANCE OF TRANSPORTATION

"Appliances of transportation," within the rule as to the burden of proof as to negligence of a carrier, means the roadbed, tracks, cars, engines, and all other machinery and equipment furnished by the carrier and used in connection with the conduct and management of its business, but does not include property belonging to and taken by a passenger into a car. Burns v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 82 Atl. 246, 247, 233 Pa. 304, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 811.

APPLICABLE

See Money Applicable; So Far as Applicable.

Rules of practice, when controlling the form of process to be used on a pleading, are "applicable" to it. Farmers' Banking & Loan Co. v. Mauck, 97 N. W. 835, 836, 70 Neb. 586.

APPLICATION

See Interlocutory Application; Misapplication; Original Application; Summary Application.

The words "motion" and "application," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 686, declaring that notwithstanding the death of a party after judgment execution may issue in case of the death of the judgment creditor on "application" of his executor, administrator, or successor in interest, and section 685, declaring that judgments may be enforced after five years from the date of its entry by leave of court on motion, have the same significance, and on the death of a judgment creditor his administratrix is not required to institute an action at law to enforce the judgment, but is entitled to an execution on "motion." Weldon v. Rogers, 90 Pac. 1062, 1063, 151 Cal. 432.

As special proceeding

See Special Proceeding.

For discharge of accused

The term "application," as used in Gen. St. 1909, § 6800, providing that accused is entitled to discharge after the third term unless the delay happened on his "application," signifies the means to accomplish an end and denotes affirmative action, not passive submission. State v. Lewis, 118 Pac. 59, 60, 85 Kan. 586.

For insurance

Where an application for life insurance was incorporated in a policy by reference, the term "application" should be construed to include all the statements on both pages thereof, except the medical examiner's report. Paquette v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 79 N. E. 250, 251, 193 Mass. 215 (citing McCoy v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 133 Mass. 82, 85; Millard v. Brayton, 59 N. E. 436, 177 Mass. 533, 52 L. E. A. 117, 83 Am. St. Rep. 294).

The meaning of the term "application," as employed in a question propounded to an applicant for insurance as to whether any application to insure his life had ever been made to any other company on which a policy had not issued, is not confined to a full and final completion of all the various parts into which the preliminary negotiations and examinations are divided by another company for its convenience. In the absence of an agreement, the completion, signing, and delivery of an application for insurance to the soliciting agent constitutes an application for insurance. An applicant for insurance answered the question as to whether any application to insure his life had ever been made to any other company, and refused, in the negative. Some five months previously he had signed two of the divisional parts of an application to another company, and had delivered them to the local agent and medical examiner, and had been partially examined by the latter. Subsequently he declined to complete the examination on the ground that he had been misinformed as to the character of the policy. The parts of the application signed were thereafter forwarded to the company, and the application was formally rejected, of which fact he was notified. The failure to disclose such facts in answer to the question avoided the policy issued to him, which policy provided that all the statements in the application should be deemed material, and that the policy should be void if any statement was not full and complete, or was untrue. Webb v. Security Mut. Life Ins. Co., 126 Fed. 635, 637, 61 C. C. A. 383.

A life insurance company furnished its agents a printed blank for use by applicants for insurance, which first had blanks, under the caption "Proposal for Insurance," to be filled and signed by applicants, next had a "memorandum for the solicitor to sign," followed by two questions as to amount of insurance now in force in the company and amount now applied for, and then, under the caption "Application for Insurance," questions as to health and other matters affecting the risk, to be answered over the signature of applicant, together with a declaration and warranty as to the representations and answers. Held, that neither the proposal for insurance nor the memorandum for the solicitor to fill was a part of the "application," within Rev. Laws, c. 118, § 73, requiring as a condition to the insurer introducing the application in evidence, that a correct copy of it shall have been annexed to the policy. Bonville v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., 85 N. E. 1057, 200 Mass. 197.

For new trial

An appeal from a determination of the Appellate Term which either grants or refuses a new trial is in effect an "application to the Appellate Division for a new trial" within Code Civ. Proc. § 3251, subd. 4, regulating costs upon application to the Appellate Division for a new trial. Greenwald v. Weir, 116 N. Y. Supp. 172, 174, 131 App. Div. 568.

For receiver

The consent of a corporation to the appointment of a receiver for its property on an application by others is not equivalent to having "applied for a receiver," as an act of bankruptcy under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 3a (4), 30 Stat. 546, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, § 2, c. 487, 32 Stat. 797. In re Gold Run Mining & Tunnel Co., 200 Fed. 162, 164.

APPLIQUÉ

It does not appear that there is any definition of "appliqué" in trade and commerce different from the dictionary definition of it as "any ornament laid out and applied on another surface, such as cloth"; and goods within this definition are dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule L, par. 390, 30 Stat. 187, relating to "articles * * * appliquéd." Further, it is not necessary that the design should be regular, conventional, or highly ornamental; and the provision includes a fabric to which a gilt cord has been applied in irregular loops of a crude design, being in this form fairly durable, permanent, and salable. United States v. A. A. Vantine & Co., 166 Fed. 735, 737, 92 C. C. A. 397.

APPLY

See Misapply.

One of the definitions of the word "apply" is to declare or pronounce as suitable. This was used with reference to a provision of the Constitution defining a general law as one which "applies" to the whole state. State ex rel. Covington v. Thompson, 38 South. 679, 683, 142 Ala. 98.

APPOINT—APPOINTMENT

See Duly Appointed; During Appointment; Hereinafter Appointed Executrix; Illusory Appointment.
Any one appointed, see Any.

An "appointment" may mean an appropriation of money to a specific purpose or the act of a person in directing the disposition of property by limiting a use, or the exercise of the right to designate a person; consequently an instrument which declared that it was an "appointment" of money deposited with a third person will not create a valid trust where the deposit was not irrevocable. Worthington v. Redkey, 99 N. E. 211, 213, 86 Ohio St. 128.

"Appointments" is used in the sense of designation to or selection for public office, not only as meaning the office or service to which one is appointed, but denoting the right or privilege conferred by an appointment, and the subject of a term of office is fairly included in a broad signification of the word. State v. Peake, 120 N. W. 47, 49, 18 N. D. 101.

Under Laws 1904, c. 9, § 1, providing that in every public department and upon all public works, etc., honorably discharged veterans of the Civil War who are citizens and residents of the state shall be entitled to preference in appointment and employment, etc., a position as janitor of a courthouse is one by "appointment or employment." Kitterman v. Board of Sup'rs of Wapello County, 115 N. W. 13, 14, 137 Iowa, 275.

Election distinguished

The words "elected" and "appointed" ordinarily are not synonymous. In its limited sense the word "elected" is usually employed to denote the selection of a public officer by the qualified voters of a community. On the other hand, "appointed" is generally understood to mean the selection of a public officer by one person who is empowered by law to make the appointment. In its broadest sense, however, the word "elected" means merely "selected." When used in that sense, the word "elected" is synonymous with the word "appointed." Odell v. Rihn, 127 Pac. 802, 805, 19 Cal. App. 713.

Where a borough president of New York City has been removed by the Governor, and the aldermen vote to reinstall him under Greater New York Charter 1906, p. 227, § 302, providing that a vacancy in that office is to be filled for the unexpired term by a majority vote of all the members of the board of aldermen, their act, though termed an "election" by the charter, is an "appointment" within Const. art. 10, § 2, providing that all city officers whose election or appointment is not provided for by the Constitution shall be elected by the electors of the city or some division thereof, or appointed by such authorities thereof as the Legislature shall designate. People v. Ahearn, 115 N. Y. Supp. 664, 667, 181 App. Div. 80.

Organic Act, § 8, declares that all county officers shall be appointed or elected in such manner as shall be provided by the Governor and legislative assembly of the territory.

Act July, 1851, provided for the election of sheriffs. Held, that a contention that the words "elected" and "appointed" had the same meaning, and that when the people were authorized by the Governor and assembly to "elect" certain officers, they were merely empowered to act in so doing as agents, possessing a mere revocable authority and incapable of binding their principals, who retained the right to be exercised through the Governor, as the executive, of removing at his discretion, all the officers whom the people should thus choose, was without merit, but the words were used to distinguish one method of selection from another, and the Governor did not have the right to remove a sheriff elected in accordance with the statute, as an incident to appointive power. Territory ex rel. Hubbell v. Armijo, 89 Pac. 267, 272, 14 N. M. 205.

Under Pol. Code, § 58, providing that, except where otherwise specially provided, an elector is eligible to an office for which he is an elector, and that no person is eligible who is not such an elector, and County Government Act, providing that no person shall be eligible to a county office who, at the time of his election, is not an elector of the county in which the duties of the office are to be exercised, a person who is not an elector of a county is not eligible to any office of that county, whether filled by election or appointment, the term "at the time of his election" not being limited in meaning to an election in the popular sense, in which all electors participate, but also including an "appointment" to office; and hence, prior to the constitutional amendment extending the elective franchise, a woman was not eligible to the office of assistant probation officer of a county. Reed v. Hammond, 123 Pac. 346, 347, 18 Cal. App. 442.

Employment distinguished

In the common acceptation, the meaning of the words "appointment" and "employment" is quite different. An officer is usually appointed, while a person employed is spoken of as an "employé," and but rarely, if ever, as an "officer." The Century Dictionary defines "appointment" as: "The act of appointing, designating, or placing in office. An office held by a person appointed." Among the definitions given to those words by the courts are the following: "Appointment is the designation of a person by the person having authority therefor to discharge the duties of some office or trust." State ex rel. Nicholls v. City of New Orleans, 6 South. 592, 41 La. Ann. 156. "Where the selection of an officer is referred to some functionary, it is called an 'appointment.'" Speed v. Crawford, 60 Ky. (3 Metc.) 207. The definition of "employé," as given by the Century Dictionary, is: "One who works for an employer; a person working for salary or wages; applied to any one so working but usually only to clerks, workmen, laborers, etc., and but rarely to the higher officers of a corporation or government or to domestic servants." In re Cortland Mfg. Co., 45 N. Y. Supp. 630, an "employee" is defined to be a person who is employed; one who works for wages or a salary. In Palmer v. Van Santvoord, 47 N. E. 915, 153 N. Y. 612, 38 L. R. A. 402, the court held: "An 'employee' is one who works for an employer; a person working for a salary or wage. The word is applied to any one so working, but usually only to clerks, workmen, laborers, etc., and but rarely to officers of a government or corporation." United States v. Schlierholz, 137 Fed. 616, 624.

Nominate distinguished

The terms "nominate" and "appoint" are not synonymous, though there are some instances where the terms may be used to mean the same thing, as under St. Cal. 1887, p. 67, providing for the appointment of certain trustees by the Governor with the advice and consent of the Senate, an appointment is not completed by the transmission of the nomination by the Governor to the Senate and the confirmation of the nomination by the Senate. The appointment is not made until the commission is issued, and issuing the same is the last act, and in issuing the commission the Governor is performing an executive and not a ministerial act, and is therefore acting under his discretionary powers, and may or may not issue the commission, although the Senate may have advised it and consented that he should make the appointment. Harrington v. Pardee, 82 Pac. 83, 84, 1 Cal. App. 278 (citing Marbury v. Madison, 5 U. S. [1 Cranch] 137, 2 L. Ed. 60).

Officer or officers making appointment

The words "appointed by him," in Baltimore City Charter, § 25, authorizing the mayor to remove at pleasure during the first six months of their respective terms all officers appointed by him, means appointed by the mayor; and the mayor can remove the officers whom he has authority to appoint, whether appointed by him or his predecessor. MacLellan v. Marine, 56 Atl. 359, 360, 98 Md. 53.

Laws 1907, p. 1521, c. 661, creating a board of public works in New Rochelle, etc., provides (section 1) for their appointment by the mayor subject to the affirmative vote of one-half of the aldermen. Held, that the common council, which consists of the mayor and aldermen, does not appoint such members within the charter provision giving the council authority to remove officers "appointed" by it. People ex rel. Lathers v. Raymond, 114 N. Y. Supp. 365, 367, 129 App. Div. 477.

When complete

The word "appointment," as used in St. 1887, p. 67, providing for the appointment of certain trustees by the Governor with the advice and consent of the Senate, is not synonymous with nomination, as the "appointment" is not completed by the transmission of the nomination by the Governor to the Senate and the confirmation of the nomination by the Senate, but it is still discretionary, after the confirmation, for the Governor to issue a commission or not, and unless the commission is issued the appointment is not completed. Harrington v. Pardee, 82 Pac. 83, 84, 1 Cal. App. 278.

The word "appoint," as used in Act No. 185, of 1898, amending and re-enacting Act No. 40, § 3, p. 39, of 1880, providing that in a case in which the district judge shall be recused because of interest he shall "appoint" some district judge of the adjoining district, means not only that there shall be a tender or order of appointment, but it shall be made to some one willing or obliged to accept. State ex rel. Le Blanc v. Twenty-First Judicial Dist. Democratic Committee, 47 South. 405, 406, 122 La. 83.

The appointment by the Governor of a commissioner of a city to fill a vacancy is not an "appointment" to a state office, within Code 1907, § 1474, requiring a commission to officers appointed to fill vacancies; and the act of the Governor in advising one by letter of his appointment as commissioner of the city, and the indorsement on the communication from the judge of probate, officially advising the Governor of the qualification of the appointee, of a direction to send a commission to the appointee, and the recital of the appointment for a specified term, followed by the words, "By order of the Governor: * * * Private Secretary," constituted a complete appointment without a commission, and the Governor could not thereafter cancel the appointment. Draper v. State (Ala.) 57 South. 772, 773.

APPOINTING POWER

"Appointing power," when employed with reference to matters pertaining to the government, or to the distribution of the powers of government, means the power of appointment to office; the power to select, and indicate by name, individuals to hold office and to discharge the duties and exercise the powers of officers. Under Tax Law, § 234, as amended by Laws 1905, c. 368, and Laws 1906, c. 699, providing that the State Comptroller may, on recommendation of the surrogate, "appoint" and may at pleasure remove certain assistants and clerks in the surrogate's office in certain counties, including a transfer tax assistant in a certain county, the surrogate is merely to determine the necessity of the appointment, and the Comptroller is not limited in making the appointment to a person recommended by the surrogate. Duell v. Glynn, 106 N. Y. Supp. 716, 717, 56 Misc. Rep. 41.

APPOINTMENT OR AUTHORITY

"Appointment or authority," as used in section 110, Civ. Code, means a right to act for another, and an allegation to the effect that one has full right, power, and authority to act for himself is not taken as true when not denied under oath. Washbon v. State Bank of Holton, 121 Pac. 515, 517, 86 Kan. 468.

APPORTION

The word "apportion," as used by a testator in providing that a part of his estate should be "equally apportioned amongst my children," means to divide and assign in just proportions; to divide and distribute proportionately; to portion out. That is, whatever the children were to receive, they were to have in equal proportions. Robbins v. Smith, 73 N. E. 1051, 1053, 72 Ohio St. 1.

APPORTIONMENT

See Equal Apportionment by Lot.

Costs

Where plaintiffs in ejectment recovered a part of the land sued for, a judgment assessing all the costs against plaintiffs was not an "apportionment" within the rule that, where plaintiff recovers only a part of the land sued for, the court may apportion the costs. Daniels v. Smith, 96 N. E. 902, 904, 252 Ill. 222.

APPRAISE

Where the price named in a memorandum of sale of imported tobacco stored in a bonded warehouse was a certain sum per pound, including the estimated duty thereon of 70 cents per pound with an agreement that if it was appraised at less the difference should be allowed the buyers, the rights of the parties depend on the meaning of the expression "if appraised at less," which means a lawful appraisal, whether made by the collector or adjudged by the court. It means such an appraisal as the law required and justified, not such as was made by the collector, which was illegal and has been treated by the government as illegal. Since the purchaser advanced the duty as estimated simply for the protection of the seller, the word "appraised" should not be limited to the unlawful action of the collector, but should be extended to the method, whatever it was, by which the lawful duty was ascertained. M. & E. Solomon Tobacco Co. v. Cohen, 77 N. E. 257, 258, 184 N. Y. 308.

APPRAISAL

A fire policy provided that the insurer should not be held to have waived any provision or condition of the policy or any forfeiture thereof by any requirement, act, or proceeding on its part relating to the appraisal or to any examination therein provided for. Held, that the "appraisal" and

"examination" did not cover acts of the assured's appraiser in demanding of and causing assured to incur trouble and expense in furnishing an estimate of the builder showing the value of the property insured and destroyed by fire. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co. v. Colvard, 68 S. E. 1097, 1100, 135 Ga. 188.

APPRAISEMENT

An "appraisement" denotes the valuation of goods and chattels or real estate by two persons of suitable qualifications, fair, impartial, and disinterested, having knowledge of the property, and with intelligence to ascertain its value after inspection and inquiry. Magin v. Niner, 73 Atl. 12, 14, 110 Md. 299.

Where an appraiser who has advanced the value of imported merchandise fails to give notice of the advance to the importer as required by the customs regulations, the importer thus being deprived of the right of appeal for reappraisement, the "appraisement" is invalid, and does not afford a proper basis for the forfeiture and condemnation of the goods for undervaluation, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, § 32, 30 Stat. 211. Unless the appraisement is put in writing and signed or in some way identified by the officer making it, notice of it be given, it seems impossible to give effect in practice to the statutes intended to allow a review of the appraisement, which right of review is a valuable one, and a construction of the statutes ignoring it cannot be correct. The Lace House v. United States, 141 Fed. 869, 876, 73 C. C. A. 103.

Arbitration distinguished

Although the terms "appraisement" and "arbitration" are sometimes used interchangeably and frequently without any clear difference in meaning, there is a plain distinction between the two; arbitrators being appointed to settle a controversy and being required to observe certain rules of procedure as in a judicial inquiry, or their award will be void, while appraisers are selected to prevent disputes from arising and, unless restricted by the agreement under which they are appointed, are not required to give notice of hearings, hear evidence, or receive the statements of the parties, but are expected to act on their own knowledge and investigation, and have a wide discretion as to their methods of procedure and sources of information. Sebree v. Board of Education, 98 N. E. 931, 935, 254 Ill. 438.

APPRAISER

See Competent Appraiser; Merchant Appraiser.

APPRECIABLE

"Appreciable" is defined as "capable of being estimated; perceptible; as an appredable quantity." Chaffin v. Fries Mfg. & Power Co., 47 S. E. 226, 228, 135 N. C. 95.

APPRECIABLE DEGREE

In an action for personal injuries, an instruction that if plaintiff's negligence contributed to her injury "in any appreciable degree" she could not recover was not erroneous; the phrase "in any appreciable degree" meaning any degree capable of being appreciated or ascertained or discerned, and not that plaintiff's negligence, to be a defense, must be important or material. Domke v. Gunning, 114 Pac. 436, 437, 439, 62 Wash. 629.

APPRECIABLE EXTENT

The words "appreciable extent," as used in an instruction, in an action for damages for maintaining a dam, that plaintiff is entitled to nominal damages if the dam caused water to be ponded on his land to any appreciable extent, without proof of substantial damages, cannot be held to be synonymous with the words "any extent," and hence the instruction was erroneous, as plaintiff is entitled to nominal damages if the water was ponded on his land to any extent. Chaffin v. Fries Mfg. & Power Co., 48 S. E. 770, 771, 136 N. C. 364.

APPRECIATE—APPRECIATION

"Appreciation of danger," as used in the law of master and servant relative to assumed risk, means that the servant formed a judgment as to the future, and that his judgment was right. Stewart v. Pittsburg & Montana Copper Co., 111 Pac. 723, 725, 42 Mont. 200.

To "appreciate the danger" incident to a condition of things signifies that the danger is recognized, and that possible accidental consequences are justly estimated. Rooney v. Brogan Const. Co., 86 N. E. 814, 194 N. Y. 32.

"Although the terms 'knowledge of danger' and 'appreciation of risk,' are frequently used in the discussion of due care, still these elements in and of themselves do not constitute contributory negligence as a matter of law." Frost v. McCarthy, 86 N. E. 918, 919, 200 Mass. 445.

The test of "knowledge of danger" is not the exercise of ordinary care to discover danger, but whether the danger was known to or plainly observable by the employé. The test of "appreciation of risk" is whether the servant understood the risk, or by the exercise of ordinary observation ought to have understood it. Rase v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. M. Ry. Co., 120 N. W. 360, 366, 107 Minn. 260, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 138.

"Appreciate" is defined as follows: "To be sensible of; to distinguish as compared with estimate; it supposes a union of sensibility with judgment producing a nice and delicate perception." So, to be able to appreciate the danger of crossing a street car track in front of a moving car, a person must be capable of having at least some idea of the speed at which the car is moving and the distance it is likely to travel in a given time, and the distance such person may travel either running or walking, as the case may be, in the same time. So an allegation, in an action for injuries to a child struck by a work train of a street railway company, that she was too young to be capable of appreciating danger or to have caution and discretion, and the answer to special interrogatories that at the time of the injury the child was 5 years and 10 months old, and of average intelligence and ordinary judgment for a girl of her age, are not irreconcilable conflict so as to defeat a general verdict against the company. Hammond, W. & E. O. Electric St. Ry. Co. v. Blockie, 82 N. E. 541, 543, 40 Ind. App. 497.

APPREHEND—APPREHENSION

"Apprehend" is defined as "to take or seize (a person) by legal process; to arrest; as to apprehend a criminal." "Arrest" is defined as "the taking or apprehending of a person by authority of law; legal restraint; custody." The words "apprehension" and "arrest," as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 2474, providing that any two judges of the county court may offer, for the county, a reward for the apprehension and arrest of a person committing a felony, are synonyms, and a reward offered for the apprehension of a felon is within the authority of the judges of the county court. Cummings v. Clinton County, 79 S. W. 1127, 1129, 181 Mo. 162 (quoting Webster's Dict.).

A., knowing of a murder and of a reward for the apprehension, arrest, and conviction of the murderer, became suspicious that a certain party was guilty, took steps to locate him, and, having done so, telegraphed to a sheriff to arrest such party, which the sheriff did, without knowing of what such party was suspected, telegraphing the fact of the arrest to A., at his expense, receiving a fee for the arrest, and turning the suspected person over to A., who elicited a confession from him on which he was convicted. Held, that A. was the "apprehender" of the criminal, and entitled to the reward. Ralls County v. Stephens, 78 S. W. 291, 292, 104 Mo. App. 115.

Rev. St. 1899, § 2474, authorizes the county court to offer a standing reward for the "apprehension and arrest" of any person committing a felony in the county, but prohibits the payment of the reward until the final conviction of the felon. A county court offered a reward for the "apprehension and conviction" of a felon. Held that, construing the offer with the statute under which it was made, it constituted an offer to pay a reward after conviction for the apprehension of the felon, and was complied with by a claimant who made such apprehension on his own initiative, and at his own expense and hazard, and put him in the hands of the proper officer, and gave evidence at the trial from which a conviction resulted. Smith v. Vernon County, 87 S. W. 949, 950, 188 Mo. 501, 70 L. R. A. 59, 107 Am. St. Rep. 324.

APPREHENSION AND CONVICTION

Rev. St. 1899, § 2474, authorizes the county court to offer a standing reward for the "apprehension and arrest" of any person committing a felony in the county, but prohibits the payment of the reward until the final conviction of the felon. A county court offered a reward for the "apprehension and conviction" of a felon. Held that, construing the offer with the statute under which it was made, it constituted an offer to pay a reward after conviction for the apprehension of the felon, and was complied with by a claimant who made such apprehension on his own initiative, and at his own expense and hazard, and put him in the hands of the proper officer, and gave evidence at the trial from which a conviction resulted. Smith v. Vernon County, 87 S. W. 949, 951, 188 Mo. 501, 70 L. R. A. 59, 107 Am. St. Rep. 324.

APPRISED

Under Const. art. 10, § 27, authorizing any incorporated city by a majority vote of the qualified property taxpaying voters to become indebted for the purchase or construction of public utilities to be owned exclusively by the city, a proposition, referring to the qualified property taxpaying voters of a city the question, "Shall the city of W. * * * incur an indebtedness by issuing its negotiable coupon bonds to the amount of $30,000 for the purpose of providing funds for the construction of an electric light plant, in and to be owned exclusively by said city?" sufficiently "apprised" the voters of the nature of the utility. City of Woodward v. Raynor, 119 Pac. 964, 966, 29 Okl. 493.

APPROACHES

The use of the word "approaches," in an instruction that it was the railroad company's duty to exercise ordinary care to keep its approaches to the track in a safe condition, meant those places where employes must approach the track to work, and not such an approach as a crossing. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Dickens, 118 S. W. 612, 618, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 637.

Of bridge or viaduct

As part of bridge, see Bridge.

Under the common law, and generally under the statutes in this country, a "bridge" includes the abutments and such approaches as will make it accessible and convenient to public travel. Ordinarily an "approach," as the term is used, is considered a part of a viaduct or bridge. The question what is a viaduct proper and what is an approach, where one begins and the other ends, and what is street or highway, as distinguished from an approach to a viaduct or bridge, are more questions of fact than law. For a block west of a viaduct over the tracks of defendant railroad company the approach was constructed of planking, with a substructure of woodwork and iron, and for another short block west of this the street was filled to its full width, according to the grade established for the approach, and the surface of the fill was paved, manholes provided, curbing set, and sidewalks built; the street, except for the slope or grade of six or seven feet for such blocks, having all the appearances of a city street. Held, that that part of the grade so filled and improved did not constitute a part of the "approach" to the viaduct, and that the city had no power to require that the same be repaved and improved at the expense of the railroad company. City of Chicago v. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. Ry. Co., 93 N. E. 307, 308, 247 Ill. 319, 139 Am. St. Rep. 329; Id., 93 N. E. 309, 248 Ill. 100.

APPROACHING

St. 1903, p. 360, c. 473, § 7, requires that the driver of an automobile, approaching any vehicle drawn by a horse, shall operate such automobile so as to exercise every reasonable precaution to prevent the frightening of such horse, and declares that every automobile shall be provided with a suitable bell or horn or other means of signaling. Held, that an automobile coming up behind a vehicle drawn by horses is "approaching" the same, and that the operator thereof was bound to give signals of his approach. Gifford v. Jennings, 76 N. E. 233, 190 Mass. 54.

APPROBATION

The word "approbation" means the act of approving; an assenting to the propriety of a thing with some degree of pleasure or satisfaction; approval; sanction; commendation. Long v. Needham, 96 Pac. 731, 733, 37 Mont. 408.

APPROPRIATE—APPROPRIATION

See Debt Incurred After Appropriation Exhausted; Misappropriation; Notice of Appropriation; Original Appropriation; Prior Appropriation; Unappropriated.

To "appropriate" money, or anything else, is to set apart or assign it to a particular use or purpose. Kelley v. Sullivan, 87 N. E. 72, 201 Mass. 34.

APPROPRIATE REMEDY

The words "appropriate remedy," in Greater New York Charter (Laws 1907, p. 188, c. 378, § 537), providing that, in the event of the removal of any member of the clerical or uniformed force of street cleaning, he shall have the right to sue out a writ of certiorari or other appropriate remedy for the purpose of reviewing the action of the commissioner or his deputy, means some remedy by which the proceedings taken by the commissioner can be brought before the court for review, and not by a proceeding independent of it, which commands the commissioner to do either one thing or the other. People ex rel. Holden v. Woodbury, 85 N. Y. Supp. 161, 163, 88 App. Div. 593.

APPROPRIATION OF LAND

Webster defines "appropriation" as "the act of setting apart or assigning to a particular use, in exclusion of all others; application to a special use or purpose, as of a piece of ground for a park." Kimball v. Salisbury, 56 Pac. 973, 975, 19 Utah, 161 (citing Kimball v. Salisbury, 56 Pac. 1040, 17 Utah, 331; Beecher v. Baldy, 7 Mich. 488).

The words "condemn or appropriate," used in the Constitution of Arkansas, mean a taking of private property under the right of eminent domain and not by contract. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Foltz, 52 Fed. 627, 629.

Where a town wrongfully built a road over the land of an owner, but it and the owner treated the act as a permanent taking, notwithstanding the illegality of its inception, and the court found that the town appropriated the land to itself for a highway, the owner could recover the full value of the land without deductions for benefits resulting from the improvement, and such compensation would bar any future action by the owner; an "appropriation" of land being more than a mere entry thereon, and including a setting apart, or applying the land to the use of a particular person for a particular purpose. Pinney v. Town of Winchester, 76 A. 994, 995, 83 Conn. 411.

Occupy as synonyms

As used in a deed relating to the occupation of a coal bed, the word "occupy" is synonymous with "work" or "appropriate." Boysradt v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 151 Fed. 321, 330.

APPROPRIATION OF MINING CLAIM

"Appropriation" of a mining claim is accomplished by the posting of notice at or near the point where the ledge is exposed, followed by the recording of notice and the marking of boundaries. McCleary v. Broadus, 111 Pac. 125, 126, 14 Cal. App. 60.

By the law of Colorado, the location of a riparian gold placer claim is not in itself a valid appropriation of water to beneficial use, es, but the actual application of the water to a beneficial use is the true test of "appropriation." Snyder v. Colorado Gold Dredging Co., 181 Fed. 62, 66, 104 C. C. A. 136.

APPROPRIATION OF PUBLIC MONEY

By "appropriations" is meant the setting apart of public moneys by legislative vote or enactment, to be applied to specific objects and public expenditures. Trustees of Rutgers College v. Morgan, 60 Atl. 205, 207, 71 N. J. Law, 663. See Rap. & L. Law Dict. ad verbum, § 6; Century Dig.

An "appropriation" of state funds is a setting apart from the public revenue of a certain sum of money for a specified object, in such a manner that the executive officers are authorized to use that money, and no more, for that specific object. Jobe v. Caldwell, 125 S. W. 423, 428, 93 Ark. 503.

An "appropriation" is an authority of the Legislature, given at the proper time and in legal form to the proper officers, to apply a distinctly specified sum from a designated fund out of the treasury in a given year for a specified object or demand against the state. Menefee v. Askew, 107 Pac. 159, 161, 25 Okl. 623, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 537.

The action of the council of the city in ordering the payment out of its general fund of an indebtedness represented by a warrant is not an "appropriation" within the charter prohibiting the payment of money except in pursuance of a previous appropriation specifying the purpose. Niles Bryant School of Piano Tuning v. Bailey, 126 N. W. 116, 118, 161 Mich. 193.

An objection to a bridge tax, on the ground that the county board adopted a resolution for issuing warrants to pay certain expenses connected with building the bridges against funds previously "appropriated" for that purpose, the resolution showing that there was no money in the treasury, was of no merit in not being essential to the validity of an "appropriation" that funds to meet the same should then be in the treasury. People v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 94 N. E. 57, 58, 249 Ill. 170.

An "appropriation" of "the proceeds of the one mill tax" for the years 1907, 1908 (Laws 1907, p. 465, c. 151), is an appropriation of the whole amount of the tax, and not that portion only actually collected during such time. State ex rel. Ledwith v. Brian, 120 N. W. 916, 917, 84 Neb. 30.

Acts 1869, c. 44, is entitled "An act to authorize aid in the construction of railroads by counties and townships taking stock in and making donations to railroad companies." The two methods of aiding railroads by taking stock or donating money are recognized all through the system of laws referring to such aid, but the generic word most frequently used is "appropriation." It is plain in practically every instance where this word is made use of that it is designed to cover both the taking of stock and the making of donations. State ex rel. Western Const. Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Clinton County, 76 N. E. 986, 990, 166 Ind. 162.

Constitutional provisions

Under the Constitution, a legislative act, to constitute an "appropriation" authorizing the payment of funds, or the drawing of a warrant, must fix a limit on the amount which may be paid out under the subject covered by the act. State v. Holmes, 123 N. W. 884, 886, 19 N. D. 286.

Webster defines an "appropriation" as the act of setting apart or assigning to a particular use or person, in exclusion of all others; application to a special use or purpose, as the money to carry out some public object. Laws 1907, p. 408, c. 185, created the state industrial and publicity commission, and provided (section 3, p. 409) that the chairman should receive from the state treasury $2,500 a year in monthly installments, and that the members of the commission should be allowed necessary mileage and traveling expenses on affidavit of the members claiming the same that the mileage and expenses were actually incurred in official business, etc. Held, that the act constituted a sufficient appropriation of the salary of the chairman; but, as it failed to prescribe any maximum expenditure for traveling expenses, the act was void in so far as it authorized payment of such expenses by the state, under Const. art. 4, § 19, providing that no money shall be drawn from the state treasury except under appropriations made by law. State ex rel. Davis v. Eggers, 91 Pac. 819, 823, 29 Nev. 469, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 630 (quoting and adopting the definition in People ex rel. McCauley v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 11; quoted in Proll v. Dunn, 80 Cal. 220, 22 Pac. 143).

Acts 1884, No. 11, granting aid from the state to a town excessively burdened in building its highways and bridges, appropriated no specific sum therefor, but directed the auditor to draw orders on the State Treasurer for the amount required by judgments rendered by the courts against the state in proceedings under the act; and at the same session a general appropriation act was passed "for the purpose of paying such demands against the state as may be allowed by the auditor of accounts." Held, that there was an "appropriation by act of Legislature" within the contemplation of the Constitution providing that "no money shall be drawn out of the treasury, unless first appropriated by act of the Legislature." Highgate v. State, 7 Atl. 898, 900, 59 Vt. 39.

The Barge Canal Act (Laws 1903, c. 147), providing for the improvement of a canal and requiring the replacement of railway bridges at state expense, is not a law "appropriating public moneys for private purposes," within Const. art. 3, § 20, requiring the assent of two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the Legislature to every bill making such appropriations. Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Canal Board, 125 N. Y. Supp. 227, 236, 237, 69 Misc. Rep. 251.

Disbursement distinguished

The appropriation of public money and its disbursement are two different and separate acts. Webster's definition of "appropriation," so far as here pertinent, is: "The act of setting apart or assigning to a particular use or person in exclusion of all other; application to a special use or purpose, as of money to carry out some object." "Disbursement" is, of course, the same as "payment." In our systems of government, federal and state, the appropriation and the payment of public moneys are always kept distinct, and appropriations are often coupled with some condition whose performance is to come after the appropriation, but before the actual payment. Brown v. Honiss, 68 Atl. 150, 158, 74 N. J. Law, 501.

Issue of bonds

Where a village charter authorizes the trustees to call a special tax meeting to vote on appropriations for special purposes, the word "appropriations" does not, on natural construction, well describe a proposed issue of bonds extending over a period of years. Village of Canandaigua v. Hayes, 85 N. Y. Supp. 488, 493, 90 App. Div. 336.

APPROPRIATION OF WATER

What constitutes valid "appropriation" of water to beneficial uses is a question of local law. Snyder v. Colorado Gold Dredging Co., 181 Fed. 62, 66, 104 C. C. A. 136.

A diversion of water not applied to some beneficial use does not constitute an "appropriation." Town of Sterling v. Pawnee Ditch Extension Co., 94 Pac. 339, 341, 42 Colo. 421, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 238.

"To constitute a valid 'appropriation of water' there must be (1) an intent to apply it to some beneficial use, existing at the time or contemplated in the future; (2) a diversion thereof from a natural stream; and (3) an application of it within a reasonable time to some useful industry." Beers v. Sharpe, 75 Pac. 717, 720, 44 Or. 386 (citing Simmons v. Winters, 27 Pac. 7, 21 Or. 35, 28 Am. St. Rep. 727; Hindman v. Rizer, 27 Pac. 13, 21 Or. 112; Low v. Rizer, 37 Pac. 82, 25 Or. 551; Nevada Ditch Co. v. Bennett, 45 Pac. 472, 30 Or. 59, 60 Am. St. Rep. 777).

The diversion of a definite quantity of water from the channel of a stream by the owner of land on the stream claiming right thereto as against other users not prior in time is a claim by "appropriation," regardless of whether the water is diverted from the channel on his riparian land or beyond its boundaries. Little Walla Walla Irr. Co. v. Finis Irr. Co., 124 Pac. 666, 670, 62 Or. 348.

An "appropriation" consists of an actual diversion of water from a natural stream, followed within a reasonable time thereafter by an application thereof to some beneficial use. Windsor Reservoir & Canal Co. v. Lake Supply Ditch Co., 98 Pac. 729, 731, 44 Colo. 214.

To constitute an "appropriation of water" there must not only be a diversion from the stream and a carrying of it to the place of use, but it must be beneficially applied, and the measure of appropriation does not depend alone upon the amount diverted and carried, but the amount which is applied to a beneficial use must also be considered. Woods v. Sargent, 95 Pac. 932, 933, 43 Colo. 268.

Under Comp. Laws, § 1288x et seq., prescribing procedure for the appropriation of public water, an inceptive right to use such water upon or within an Indian reservation can be initiated or acquired after issuance of a proclamation restoring the lands to the public domain but before they are subject to entry, if the application be made in good faith to appropriate the water for a beneficial use, and not for speculation or monopoly. To constitute a valid "appropriation of water," there must be intent to apply it to a beneficial use, a diversion from the natural channel by a ditch, canal, or other structure, and an application of it to a useful industry within a reasonable time; the last-mentioned element being the most essential. An application to the state engineer for permission to appropriate public water is merely notice of intent to appropriate, and does not establish an "appropriation." Sowards v. Meagher, 108 Pac. 1112, 1115, 1116, 1117, 37 Utah, 212.

"Appropriation," in respect to water rights, is a much abused word. It is often loosely spoken of as the preliminary step, such as filing a notice, making a claim to water, or the like, but in its legal significance is embodied not only the claim to the water, but the consummation of that claim by actual use. Morris v. Bean, 146 Fed. 423, 426.

An "appropriation" of waters, under Act Feb. 25, 1899 (Laws 1899, p. 380), is initiated by posting the required notice, and an inchoate right thereby arises which may ripen into a complete appropriation upon the final delivery of the waters to the place of intended use. Sand Point Water & Light Co. v. Panhandle Development Co., 83 Pac. 347, 349, 11 Idaho, 405.

An "appropriation" of water is a grant by the general government to a settler on public land of the right to its use from a non-navigable stream, to the injury of all public land above the point of diversion, which may be within or beyond the boundaries of the settler's claim. Morgan v. Shaw, 83 Pac. 534, 535, 47 Or. 333.

That a riparian owner has been using the water of a stream for more than 17 years for "domestic, culinary and household purposes, and for the use of his live stock," and that the water of the stream has continuously flowed through his land, "moistening the same," does not amount to an "appropriation" within the Constitution and statutes of the state. Hutchinson v. Watson Slough Ditch Co., 101 Pac. 1059, 1061, 1062, 16 Idaho, 484, 133 Am. St. Rep. 125.

The general government has power to reserve the waters on the public domain and exempt them from appropriation under state laws. Conrad Inv. Co. v. United States, 161 Fed. 829, 831, 88 C. O. A. 647.

The word "appropriation," as used in Const. Cal. art. 14, § 1, and Act March 12, 1885 (St. 1885, c. 115), providing that the use of all waters appropriated for sale, rental, or distribution is a public use, is not limited to water appropriated under the provisions of the Civil Code, but is general in its meaning, and includes all water, however acquired, which is devoted to public use, but where a number of persons owning the land are each entitled to take water from a common source for use on their land, either by authority of appropriation under the Code or by prescription, or as riparian owners, and they make a joint diversion and carry the water from that point in a common conduit, they still remaining owners in common of the works, but the water rights remain several and private, and not public, and, although they delegate the diversion and distribution to a corporation, they did not thereby dedicate the water to a public use. Hildreth v. Montecito Creek Water Co., 72 Pac. 395, 398, 139 Cal. 22.

APPROVAL

See Disapprove; On Approval.

Sale on trial or approval, see Sale on Trial.

The very act of "approval" imports the act of passing judgment, the use of discretion, and the determination as a deduction therefrom unless limited by the context of the statute. Fuller v. Board of University and School Lands of State of North Dakota, 129 N. W. 1029, 1032, 21 N. D. 212 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 474).

To give "approval" is in its essential and most obvious meaning to confirm, ratify, sanction, or consent to some act or thing done by another. State v. Rhein, 127 N. W. 1079, 1081, 149 Iowa, 76.

The act of the school board of a district on the state line, which maintained no high school, in paying for the tuition of a child at a school outside the state, was a sufficient "approval" of her attendance there, within Laws 1909, c. 100, requiring such approval to charge the board for subsequent tuition not paid for. Pushee v. Lyme School Dist., 82 Atl. 718, 719, 76 N. H. 369.

Const. art. 7, § 21, providing that no general law shall be in force until published, and St. 1898, § 329, providing that publications shall be made immediately after the passage and approval of general laws, do not require publication of a statute after its "approval" by a vote of the people where the statute was complete when approved by the Governor, and published subject to the submission to the people for adoption or rejection; the word "approval" in the statute referring to executive approval. State ex rel. Van Alstine v. Frear, 125 N. W. 961, 967, 142 Wis. 320, 20 Ann. Cas. 633.

The instrument signed by the trial judge, reciting, "This statement of facts, filed as of * * * in accordance with an agreement of the counsel * * * at the time the above statement was agreed to by them," is not an "approval" of the statement of facts. Watkins v. Hale, 84 S. W. 386, 387, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 243.

Where a city council authorized the city treasurer to borrow money "from time to time with the approval of the committee on finance," the word "approval," as so used, contemplated the exercise of discretion by the committee as a whole, investigating and sanctioning according to their own independent judgment each separate loan made under its order; and hence it could not legally delegate such duty to the mayor as chairman of the committee. Brown v. City of Newburyport, 95 N. E. 504, 507, 209 Mass. 259, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 495.

Confirm synonyms

In Act June 2, 1887 (P. L. 306), relating to proceedings for condemnation of a turnpike road, providing (section 6) that exceptions may be filed to the report of the jury of view within 30 days from filing of such report, and the court, after considering such exceptions, may refer the report back to the jury or may set it aside or confirm it, and if no exceptions are filed to any such report, unless appeal is taken as provided for in section 8 (and in such case the final confirmation of the proceedings shall await the result of the appeal from the assessment within 30 days from the filing thereof), then such report shall be confirmed or dismissed by the court, and providing (section 8) that an appeal to the common pleas for the assessment of damages may be taken within 80 days after the approval of the report, the word "approval," as used in section 8, is synonymous with the word "confirm" in section 6. Chestnut Hill & Spring House Turnpike Road Co. v. Montgomery County, 76 Atl. 726, 727, 228 Pa. 1.

APPROVE

To "approve" is in its essential and most obvious meaning to confirm, ratify, sanction, or consent to some act or thing done by another. State v. Rhein, 127 N. W. 1079, 1081, 149 Iowa, 76.

The highest lexicographic authority exists for the interchangeable use of the terms "approve" and "ratify." Baker v. Hammett, 100 Pac. 1114, 1116, 23 Okl. 489.

To "approve" means to sanction officially; to ratify; to confirm. Long v. Needham, 96 Pac. 731, 733, 37 Mont. 408.

The word "approve" is "to regard or pronounce as good; think or judge well of; admit the propriety or excellence of; be pleased with; commend." Under such definition, the approval by the president of an insurance company provided for in the policy, reciting that after forfeiture the insured could be reinstated provided his application was first "approved" by the president of the company, was not a mere ministerial act, but involved the exercise of judgment and discretion, and hence the insurer was not liable for refusal to reinstate the insured, if such refusal was neither fraudulent nor purely arbitrary. Lane v. Fidelity Mut. Life Ins. Co., 54 S. E. 854, 855, 142 N. C. 55, 115 Am. St. Rep. 729 (quoting 1 Words and Phrases, p. 475, Webster's International Dict.).

The word "approve," as used in an instruction in a prosecution for murder to the effect that it was the duty of the jury to find defendant guilty as charged, if they believed her present with the design to give assistance, if necessary, to the person killing deceased, or present with the design to encourage, incite, or approve of such killing of deceased, conveys the meaning of a deed already accomplished and one committed by another party, and one who tacitly approves of or consents to the killing of any person cannot under any rule of law be held to have aided or abetted in such killing, and such an instruction is erroneous. Harper v. State, 35 South. 572, 574, 83 Miss. 402.

An indictment, alleging that the local option law had been legally "approved," did not allege that it had been legally "adopted," since one may approve, and at the same time fail to adopt, a thing. State v. Campbell, 119 S. W. 494, 495, 137 Mo. App. 105.

Under an ordinance requiring that the street committee of a village should certify to a bill of costs for the construction of a public improvement, the marking of the bill of costs "approved" did not amount to a certification of the bill. People v. Patton, 79 N. E. 51, 52, 223 Ill. 379.

APPROVED NOTE

An "approved note" is a note with a surety. Hale v. Jones, 48 Vt. 227.

APPROVER

An "approver" is defined as one charged with a felony who confessed the fact before pleading, and appeals, or accuses others as his accomplices in the same crime, in order to obtain his own pardon. Stevens v. People, 74 N. E. 786, 789, 215 Ill. 593.

One serving a term in state's prison for forgery against whom other unnamed indictments are pending is not an "approver" and incompetent as a witness under Gen. St. 1906, § 3975, against one being tried for larceny. Menefee v. State, 51 South. 555, 557, 59 Fla. 316.

APPROXIMATE—APPROXIMATELY

Land is "approximate" to a street in which is a pipe of the sewer, within Laws 1899, p. 244, c. 126, as amended by Laws 1903, p. 30, c. 27, authorizing a city to assess the expense of constructing a sewer on land contiguous or approximate to any street in which any pipe of the sewer is placed, only where the property is so situated as to be capable of using the sewer or of deriving from its construction a special advantage different in character from that enjoyed by the public generally. Monk v. City of Ballard, 84 Pac. 397, 399, 42 Wash. 35; McCurdy v. Same, 84 Pac. 399, 42 Wash. 697.

The word "approximately" is to be construed with reference to the subject-matter. The representation of an engineer on which complainants, who had contracted to do foundation work according to a certain plan, agreed to do it on another plan, that the cubical contents of the walls, to be filled with cement would be "approximately" the same under both plans, was not sustained by proof that under the substituted plan there was only an excess over the other plan of 1,049 feet in a total of 170,887 feet. An estimate of the cost of constructing a building, where uncertain factors enter into the estimate, might well be held to be approximately correct, although the actual cost exceeded the estimated cost by more than the difference in this case. But where, as in this case, the problem is a mathematical one of figuring the cubical contents of figures of definite dimensions admitting of accurate results, the representation cannot be said to be approximately correct. Vaughan v. Ford, 127 N. W. 280, 282, 162 Mich. 37.

A contract for street paving required the work to be done as a whole, and not in sections, according to specifications under the direction of the city's engineer. The notice to bidders and specifications alone provided for payment on semimonthly estimates as the work progressed, with a retention of 10 per cent. on each "approximate estimate." The contract also provided that the contractor should be responsible for any work until its completion and final acceptance, and that the acceptance should not relieve the contractor of any obligation to do reliable work previously described. Held, that the word "approximate" was tautologically used to accentuate the word "estimate," which was not to be construed as a final mathematical ascertainment of what was set forth, and hence the acceptance of sections of the work by the city engineer and issuance of approximate estimates thereon to the contractor did not bar the city's right to defend, when sued for the balance due under the contract, on the ground that the work in the sections estimated did not constitute a compliance with the specifications. City of Greensboro v. Southern Pav. & Const. Co., 168 Fed. 880, 886, 94 C. C. A. 292.

Proximate synonymous

An instruction on contributory negligence, in an action for death at an interurban railway crossing, was not defective in the use of the word "approximately," instead of "proximately"; the two words being so closely allied in meaning that the use of the former, in a clause requiring such negligence to have "approximately" contributed to the injury, could not have misled the jury. Brooks v. Muncie & P. Traction Co., 95 N. E. 1006, 1008, 176 Ind. 298.

Where, in an action for injuries to an employé, the court defined proximate cause and used in its instructions the word "proximate" several times, the use of the word "approximately" for "proximately" in a charge relating to proximate cause was not erroneous. Choctaw, O. & T. Ry. Co. v. McLaughlin, 96 S. W. 1091, 1093, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 523.

APPURTENANCE—APPURTENANT

Easement as appurtenant to land, see Easement.

An "appurtenance" is a thing belonging to and going with the transfer of a principal thing; used with, dependent upon the thing, and essential to it. Shrader v. Gardner, 74 S. E. 990, 991, 70 W. Va. 780, 40 L. B. A. (N. S.) 1145 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 478).

The word "appurtenant" means attached to, or belonging to, and in law the term "appurtenance" usually means something appertaining to another thing as principal, and passing as an incident to such principal. Whitlsey v. Porter, 72 Atl. 593, 595, 82 Conn. 95.

To gas pipe line

In a proceeding to condemn a right of way for a natural gas pipe line, where the conveyance to petitioner spoke of its use for laying its "gas pipe line and appurtenances," an argument by the owner on appeal to the circuit court that petitioner could lay pipe lines other than the one then maintained by it was not improper, since the term "appurtenances" might be held to include the laying of additional pipes if required, without a new condemnation proceeding. Cincinnati Gas Transp. Co. v. Cartee, 147 S. W. 925, 927, 149 Ky. 89.

To land

The term "appurtenance" includes everything necessary to the beneficial use of the property leased, and, where the business of a tenant requires a considerable amount of coal, it is essential that the tenant should have a suitable place for storing coal. Greenblatt v. Zimmerman, 117 N. Y. Supp. 18, 21, 132 App. Div. 283.

Same—Buildings

A storehouse erected on a lot purchased with the proceeds of a sale of a homestead was an "appurtenance" within Ky. St. 1903, § 1702, giving a homestead exemption in a quantity of land including the dwelling house and the appurtenances owned by debtors who are actual bona fide housekeepers with a family, and to exceed $1,000 in value, and hence was not subject to the payment of debts of the owner who was a bona fide housekeeper with a family, where the value of the lot and the buildings erected thereon, including the storehouse, did not exceed $1,000, though a small rental was obtained from the use of the storehouse. Green & Sons v. Pennington, 97 S. W. 766, 767, 30 Ky. Law Rep. 203.

Same—Easements

An "easement appurtenant" being one which inheres in the land, and is necessary to the enjoyment thereof, and is in the nature of a covenant running with the land, attached to the land to which it is appurtenant, an issue as to the existence of such an easement involves title; and the facts are not reviewable on appeal. Kershaw v. Burns, 74 S. E. 378, 379, 91 S. C. 129.

An easement of way is "appurtenant" if the dominant estate is clearly indicated, and the easement is beneficial to such estate, and it is not necessary that the dominant and servient estates should be contiguous, or that the right of way should terminate on the dominant estate. D. M. Goodwillie Co. v. Commonwealth Electric Co., 89 N. E. 272, 284, 241 Ill. 42.

A right of way for an irrigation ditch, and the right to receive water from or discharge the same on land, constitute easements which may attach to other lands as incidents or "appurtenances." A deed providing that the grantee should not use an irrigation ditch except to convey water to the north half of a certain section for use thereon, unless by the consent of the grantor, created an "easement" which by use became "appurtenant" to such section, and was not a mere easement in "gross" personal to the grantee. Jones v. Deardorff, 87 Pac. 213, 215, 4 Cal. App. 18 (citing Hopper v. Barnes, 45 Pac. 874, 113 Cal. 636).

Under the express terms of Civ. Code, § 662, a thing is deemed to be incidental or "appurtenant" to land when it is by right used with the land for its benefit, e. g., a way, water course, or passage for light, air, or heat from or across the land of another. Corea v. Higuera, 95 Pac. 882, 884, 153 Cal. 451, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1018.

Easements of light, air, and access, "appurtenant" to real property abutting on a public street or highway, are inseparable from the dominant estate, and on a conveyance of the latter such easements pass to the grantee, notwithstanding the grantor's attempted reservation of the same, or of any rights of action for the invasion or destruction thereof. McKenna v. Brooklyn Union Elevated R. Co., 77 N. E. 615, 616, 184 N. Y. 391.

A release by a mortgagee releasing and quitclaiming the lot conveyed, together with the "appurtenances" thereto belonging, was ineffectual to create a right of way over an adjoining lot or to extend the easement of a right of way to the legal estate belonging to the mortgagee. Hazeldine v. McVey, 63 Atl. 165, 166, 67 N. J. Eq. 275.

A right of way which had never existed as such previously to the lease, and over the remaining premises of the lessor, is not created by, and cannot pass under, the general word "appurtenances" in the lease. On severance of the premises, it may, as a way of necessity, pass with the lease of a portion of the premises by implication of law, as appurtenant to the premises, without the use of the word "appurtenances." George Co. v. Wadsworth, 68 Atl. 71, 73, 73 N. J. Eq. 448 (citing Stuyvesant v. Woodruff, 21 N. J. Law, 133, 57 Am. Dec. 156; Fetters v. Humphreys, 19 N. J. Eq. 475, 476; Hazeldine v. McVey, 63 Atl. 165, 67 N. J. Eq. 275; Newhoff v. Mayo, 23 Atl. 265, 48 N. J. Eq. 619, 27 Am. St. Rep. 455).

Same—Growing crops

In the absence of a reservation, growing and unmaturing crops upon lands conveyed by warranty deed pass with the land as "appurtenances," which are defined by Sess. Laws 1897, p. 101, c. 8, § 41, and Id. p. 94, c. 8, § 10, as all improvements and every right, of whatever character, pertaining to the premises described. Marshall v. Homier, 74 Pac. 368, 370, 13 Okl. 264.

Same—Heating plant

Where certain floors of a building were leased with the "appurtenances," a furnace, constituting the only means for heating the leased premises, was included in the word "appurtenances." Stevens v. Taylor, 97 N. Y. Supp. 925, 926, 111 App. Div. 561.

Same—Other lands

Lands under water adjacent to uplands are "appurtenant" to the uplands, within the condemnation law. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Mathews, 129 N. Y. Supp. 828, 830, 144 App. Div. 732.

Same—Timber

"Unless the right to the timber cut passed to the respondent by his patent, he had none, and it could only pass as a 'fixture' on or 'appurtenance' to the realty; but timber felled by the act of man, or wood cut, is personal property." Longino v. Wester (Tex.) 88 S. W. 445 (quoting and adopting definition in Peck v. Brown, 5 Nev. 51).

Same—Water right

A water right is an appurtenance to the land on which it is used, and a deed to the land, "together with appurtenances," carries with it the water right appurtenant to the land at the time of the conveyance, unless the same is excepted from the grant. Russell v. Irish, 118 Pac. 501, 502, 20 Idaho, 194.

A lease of a house "with the appurtenances," though giving the lessee the right to the use of water supplied to the house at the time of leasing from a water system owned by the lessor, does not obligate the lessor to keep the system in repair. Bradbury v. Higginson, 123 Pac. 797, 799, 162 Cal. 602.

A lease of premises and "appurtenances," supplied with water from a private main, which provides for the installation of a water meter and for the payment by the tenant of the water rent, covers the right to use the water from the private main as an appurtenant; the term "appurtenances" including incorporeal easements, rights, and privileges, though not land. Kahlen v. Davenport, 135 N. Y. Supp. 730, 731, 76 Misc. Rep. 454.

Where the owner of land, on selling a portion thereof on which there were springs, reserved the right of taking water from the springs, and conveying it to buildings on the remainder of the land, such right became an "appurtenance" to the remainder. Mason v. Thwing, 87 N. Y. Supp. 991, 995, 94 App. Div. 77.

A right of way for an irrigation ditch, and the right to receive water from or discharge the same on land, constitute "easements" which may attach to other lands as incidents or "appurtenances." A deed providing that the grantee should not use an irrigation ditch except to convey water to the north half of a certain section for use thereon, unless by the consent of the grantor, created an easement which by use became "appurtenant" to such section, and was not a mere easement in "gross" personal to the grantee. Jones v. Deardorff, 87 Pac. 213, 215, 4 Cal. App. 18 (citing Hopper v. Barnes, 45 Pac. 874, 118 Cal. 636).

Civ. Code, § 662, provides that a thing is "appurtenant" to land when it is by right used with the land for its benefit. Defendant, owning the waters of a creek, sold to plaintiff the right to receive and use one-fifth thereof with the right to convey them across defendant's land to plaintiff's land with the covenant, "that all the interest, rights, estate and privileges hereinabove described as passing or accruing to or vesting in" plaintiff "shall be deemed and treated as appurtenant to and as a part and for the benefit of said lands of" plaintiff "hereinabove described, and that" defendant "is bound by the terms of this instrument to all subsequent owners of said land of" plaintiff, "as well as to" plaintiff, "but to no other person or persons." Held that the agreement, while making the water rights appurtenant to plaintiff's land, did not limit the use of the waters thereto, so that he could sell, for limited periods, surplus water to which he was entitled and which had been carried to his lands. Calkins v. Sorosis Fruit Co., 88 Pac. 1094, 1096, 150 Cal. 426.

An "appurtenance" is a thing belonging to another thing as principal and which passes as incident to the principal thing. Plaintiff's grantor while the owner of an entire tract, including land subsequently conveyed to plaintiff, constructed an open ditch, in which water continually flowed which was of benefit, not only to the land conveyed, but to that conveyed by the grantor. At the time of the sale the drain ditch was pointed out to plaintiff, and he was charged $25 per acre additional for land purchased as a consideration for the right to use the water in such ditch to irrigate the land, in addition to water in another ditch also conveyed. Held, that the right to maintain such drainage ditch was a quasi easement, which passed to plaintiff under his deed conveying privileges and "appurtenances" to the land conveyed. Fayer v. North, 83 Pac. 742, 751, 30 Utah, 156, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 410 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 477; 3 Cyc. p. 565).

An "appurtenance" is that which belongs to another thing, but which has not belonged to it immemorially. The thing appurtenant need not be one of necessity. It may be one of convenience only; but it must be connected in use with the principal thing. In other words, "a thing is appurtenant to something else only when it stands in the relation of an incident to a principal, and is necessarily connected with the use and enjoyment of the latter. All that can be reasonably claimed is that the word 'appurtenance' will carry with it easements and servitudes used and enjoyed with the lands for whose benefit they were created." Only such easements as are directly necessary to the proper enjoyment of the land granted pass as appurtenant thereto. The necessity measures both the extent and duration of the right. The word "appurtenances" in a deed covers only what is legally appurtenant to the land described. It does not, without particular mention, convey any rights which do not naturally and necessarily belong to the thing granted in the hands of the grantor. Indeed, the word "appurtenance" is not necessary of anything that is merely incident to the land granted; for the incident follows the principal thing without words, and includes everything reasonably necessary to the enjoyment of the land. A grantee of a lot with all the rights and "appurtenances" thereto acquired by the conveyance the right to the use of a water main constructed in a public street by a former owner to supply the lot with water, but did not acquire any right to the main itself to the prejudice of others, to whom the former owner had sold rights to connect, as the title to the main remained in the former owner. Hunstock v. Limburger (Tex.) 115 S. W. 327, 329 (quoting and adopting definition in Humphreys v. McKissock, 11 Sup. Ct. 779, 140 U. S. 304, 35 L. Ed. 473; Green v. Collins, 86 N. Y. 246, 40 Am. Rep. 531; Tabor v. Bradley, 18 N. Y. 109, 72 Am. Dec. 498; Swazey v. Brooks, 34 Vt. 451).

To railroad

The phrases "connected with" and "appurtenant to" are not necessarily synonymous. A mortgage given by a railroad company limited the lien on after-acquired property to such property and to such rights, acquired by liens from other railroad companies, as should be connected with or appurtenant to the railroad of the mortgagor, specifically described in the mortgage. The lien of the mortgage embraces rights acquired by leases made after the date of the mortgage to the mortgagor by other railroad companies, owning railroads connected with the mortgagor's road and being operated by the mortgagor in connection with its own railroad and as a part of its railway system. These rights, if not appurtenant to, are, within the meaning of the language of the mortgage, "connected with," the mortgagor's railroad. Guaranty Trust Co. of New York v. Atlantic Coast Electric Ry. Co., 132 Fed. 68, 70.

To ship

A chronometer supplied on account of the owners of a schooner as a necessary part of her equipment for a special service, and necessary part of her equipment, is to be regarded as "appurtenant" to the "ship," and as included in the term "vessel." The Frolic, 148 Fed. 921, 922 (citing Abbott, Merchant Ships & Seamen [14th Ed.] pp. 33, 34, 280; Richardson v. Clark, 15 Me. 421; The Witch Queen, 3 Sawy. 201, 30 Fed. Cas. 396).

AQUEDUCT

L. O. L. § 5186, provides that the owner of a "ditch or mining flume, or water right appurtenant thereto," who fails to operate or exercise ownership over such property for a period of five years shall lose the title, claim, and interest therein, etc. Held that, as a "ditch" is an "aqueduct," which is a water carrier or leader, and "flumes" are usually portions of ditches, a reservoir is not included within the statutory provisions; and nonuser thereof for the period named would forfeit no right. Moore v. United Elkhorn Mines (Or.) 127 Pac. 964, 966.

ARABLE LAND

Swamp land is simply land that is too wet for cultivation; the characteristic by which it is distinguished from "arable land." McCarter v. Sooy Oyster Co., 75 Atl. 211, 215, 78 N. J. Law, 394.

ARBITRARILY

The word "arbitrarily" means in an arbitrary manner, and "arbitrary," as defined by the Standard Dictionary, means: "Fixed or done capriciously or at pleasure; without adequate determining principle; not founded in the nature of things; nonrational; not done or acting according to reason or judgment; depending on the will alone; absolutely in power; capriciously; tyrannical; despotic." Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Mote, 62 S. E. 164, 170, 131 Ga. 166.

An unreasonable exercise of discretion by a city license board in refusing a license is within the rule authorizing an appeal if discretion of the board has been "arbitrarily" exercised. Rehearing, 116 S. W. 745, denied. City of Louisville v. Gagen, 118 S. W. 947, 948, 132 Ky. 502.

A trade-name may be such as indicates the purpose of the association or may be arbitrary or fanciful, such fanciful or arbitrary words or phrases, as applied to an association organized for legitimate purposes, constituting a valid trade-name, and such words or phrases are deemed "arbitrary" or "fanciful" when they do not by their usual and ordinary meaning denote the purposes of the association, but come to indicate their purpose by application and association. Creswill v. Grand Lodge K. P. of Georgia, 67 S. E. 188, 191, 133 Ga. 837, 134 Am. St. Rep. 231, 18 Ann. Cas. 453.

Rev. Laws, c. 63, § 7, provides that no person or corporation shall issue, negotiate, or sell any bonds, certificates, or obligations of any kind which are by the terms thereof to be redeemed in numerical order, or in any arbitrary order, without reference to the amount previously paid thereon by the holder thereof, whether they are sold on the installment plan or otherwise. Held that the word "arbitrary" as used therein meant nothing more inflexible than a numerical order, or the order in which the applications were made. Attorney General v. Preferred Mercantile Co., 73 N. E. 669, 671, 187 Mass. 516.

A stipulation in a contract that a party for whom work is to be done, or to whom an article is to be furnished, may reject the work or article unless it is satisfactory to him, gives that party the right to reject it as unsatisfactory in any respect if he acts in good faith, but does not give him the right to reject it arbitrarily; and the words "good faith" and "arbitrarily" we take to mean that the rejecting party must find some substantial fault in the work or the article itself which renders it unsatisfactory, and not merely a reason for changing his mind regarding the project he had in view, and for which he ordered the work or the article. That such a term in a contract requires good faith and a just motive, in the party to be pleased, in declining the stipulated service, is the law. Cann v. Rector, Wardens & Vestrymen of Church of Redeemer, 85 S. W. 994, 1002, 111 Mo. App. 164.

ARBITRATION

See Compulsory Arbitration; Court of Arbitration.

See, also, Submission.

An "arbitration" is a reference to the decision of one or more persons, either with or without an umpire, of some matter or matters in difference between parties. City of Omaha v. Omaha Water Co., 30 Sup. Ct. 615, 617, 218 U. S. 180, 54 L. Ed. 991.

"Arbitration" is the investigation and determination of the matters of difference between the contending parties by the arbitrator chosen." Millsaps v. Estes, 50 S. E. 227, 228, 137 N. C. 535, 70 L. R. A. 170, 107 Am. St. Rep. 496.

To constitute an "arbitration," the matter submitted must be one in dispute between the parties, and not some matter which it is expected may arise between them or a matter of accounting or appraisal. Toledo S. S. Co. v. Zenith Transp. Co., 184 Fed. 391, 397, 106 C. C. A. 501.

An "arbitration" is a judicial proceeding, and the "arbitrators," being alike the agents of both parties, and not of one party alone, are bound to exercise a high degree of judicial impartiality, without the slightest regard to the manner in which the duty has devolved upon them. Produce Refrigerating Co. v. Norwich Union Fire Ins. Soc., 97 N. W. 875, 876, 91 Minn. 210.

An agreement to submit to arbitration the value of real estate sought to be acquired by a railroad company is not an agreement for a statutory "arbitration," within Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1281-1290, authorizing the submission to arbitration "of any controversy which might be the subject of an action" except a question of title to real property, but it is an agreement for a common-law arbitration to afford the parties a hearing and an opportunity to offer evidence to enable the arbitrators to adjudge the value on a consideration of the evidence as well as their own opinion. Dore v. Southern Pacific Co., 124 Pac. 817, 819, 168 Cal. 182.

Appraisement distinguished

Although the terms "appraisement" and "arbitration" are sometimes used interchangeably and frequently without any clear difference in meaning, there is a plain distinction between the two; "arbitrators" being appointed to settle a controversy and being required to observe certain rules of procedure as in a judicial inquiry, or their award will be void, while "appraisers" are selected to prevent disputes from arising and, unless restricted by the agreement under which they are appointed, are not required to give notice of hearings, hear evidence, or receive the statements of the parties, but are expected to act on their own knowledge and investigation, and have a wide discretion as to their methods of procedure and sources of information. Sebree v. Board of Education, 98 N. E. 981, 985, 254 Ill. 438.

ARBITRATOR

Board of Arbitrators as Court, see Court (Of Justice).

Where parties refer disputed or doubtful matters pending between them to the final decision and award of another party, the one to whom the reference is made is called an "arbitrator." Millsaps v. Estes, 50 S. E. 227, 228, 137 N. C. 535, 70 L. R. A. 170, 107 Am. St. Rep. 496.

"Arbitrators" are judges chosen by the parties to the controversy to decide the matter submitted to them finally and without appeal. Burrell v. United States, 147 Fed. 44, 48, 77 C. C. A. 308 (citing Burchell v. Marsh, 58 U. S. [17 How.] 344, 15 L. Ed. 96).

"Arbitrators" are instruments of the court appointed under statute to expedite its business, and their awards are not effective until approved by the court, but when so confirmed are as available in law as the verdict of a jury. The acts of arbitrators are subject to investigation by the court which may hear and determine any allegation of fraud and collusion practiced upon its arbitrators and investigate the manner in which any award was made. Pepper v. Pepper, 62 Atl. 232, 233, 5 Pennewill (Del.) 450.

While an "arbitrator" of loss by fire, appointed by a party in pursuance of an arbitration clause in a policy, is not the agent of the party selecting him, yet, where the proper act or conduct of such arbitrator prevents the selection of an umpire, the consequences of the failure of arbitration should be visited on the party who selected the arbitrator. Fowble v. Phoenix Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn., 81 S. W. 485, 487, 106 Mo. App. 527.

ARCHITECT

Plans and specifications as material, see Materials.

An "architect" is one who makes it his occupation to form or devise plans and designs and to draw up specifications for buildings or structures and to superintend their construction. People v. Lower, 96 N. E. 346, 347, 251 Ill. 527, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1203.

An "architect" is one skilled in practical architecture, one whose profession is to devise plans or ornamentation of buildings or other structures or to direct their construction. Pen and ink drawings of an artistic character, of a proposed building, produced by an architect, are within paragraph 703, Free List, § 2, c. 11, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 203, relating to "works of art, the production of American artists." Young v. Bohn, 141 Fed. 471, 472.

A building contract required the erection of the building in conformity with the plans and specifications made by the owner's authorized architect, and provided that when payment became due certificates in writing should be obtained from the architect. Held, that the contractor and builder who was employed by the owner to make the plans and specifications for the building and to superintend its construction, though not a professional architect, was the "architect" authorized to make the certificates upon which payments were made. Bacigalupi v. Phoenix Bldg. & Const. Co., 112 Pac. 892, 895, 14 Cal. App. 632.

ARCHIVE

Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4124, required the Land Commissioner to issue an unlocated balance certificate when the location of the original certificate is found to be in conflict with previous claims on the application and affidavit of the rightful claimant of the certificate so located. Held, that a letter written by a claimant of land located on the certificate, protesting against the floating of the certificate on other land so far as it affected the land located and awarded to him, but not objecting to the floating of the balance of the certificate, constituted an "archive" of the Land Commissioner's Office so that a certified copy of the same was admissible as provided by article 2308. Robertson v. Brothers (Tex.) 139 S. W. 657, 658.

ARDENT SPIRITS

"Ardent spirits" is a term applied to liquors obtained by distillation, such as rum, whisky, brandy, and gin. Burch v. City of Odilla, 62 S. E. 666, 668, 5 Ga. App. 65.

Under Acts 1908, p. 275, c. 189, § 1, declaring that all mixtures, preparations, and liquids which will produce intoxication shall be deemed "ardent spirits," within the meaning of the act, an indictment charging the sale of spirituous and malt liquors, whisky, brandy, wine, ale, beer, or mixtures thereof is insufficient to sustain a conviction, on proof of sale of cider which would produce intoxication, since while all spirituous liquors are intoxicating, and all intoxicating liquors are ardent by force of the statute, all ardent liquors are not spirituous liquors. Donithan v. Commonwealth, 64 S. E. 1050, 109 Va. 845.

An indictment, alleging that accused in a designated magisterial district unlawfully sold and delivered "intoxicating liquors and mixtures thereof," sufficiently charges a violation of Revenue Law (Acts 1904, p. 42, c. 20) § 141, forbidding the sale without a license of "wine, ardent spirits, malt liquors or any mixture thereof," and further providing that "all mixtures, preparations, and liquors (except pure apple cider) which will produce intoxication shall be deemed 'ardent spirits' within the meaning of this section." Fletcher v. Commonwealth, 56 S. E. 149, 151, 106 Va. 840.

ARGUE

"Argument" is a connected discourse based upon reason; a course of reasoning tending and intended to establish a position and to induce belief. Rahles v. J. Thompson & Sons Mfg. Co., 119 N. W. 289, 290, 137 Wis. 506, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 296.

ARGUMENTATIVE PLEADING

The statements that certain parties "conspiring to defraud," or "conspiring to appropriate unlawfully," or "further conspiring to defraud," did certain acts, were "argumentative" and not plain and direct pleading. Bliss v. Parks, 56 N. E. 566, 569, 175 Mass. 539, 546.

In an action for commissions claimed to have accrued under a certain contract, an answer setting up, in effect, that the sale in question was made under a different contract, constituted an "argumentative denial," and was subject to a motion to strike. Irwin v. Buffalo Pitts Co., 81 Pac. 849, 851, 39 Wash. 346.

ARID

In an action to determine the right to use irrigating waters, the question as to the quantity of water which might be used depended upon whether or not the land for which the water was to be used was in an arid portion of the state, and in determining such question the trial court instructed the jury that "by 'arid portions of the state' is meant those portions of the state where rainfall is insufficient for agricultural purposes, and irrigation, therefore, necessary. Where the rainfall is sufficient for agricultural purposes, that portion is not within the arid region, even though irrigation might or would increase the productiveness of the soil there." Appellant contended that an arid portion of the state should have been defined as one "in which, by reason of insufficient rainfall, irrigation is necessary for successful farming for successive years." The appellate court, in passing on the correctness of the instruction of the trial court, said: "The question whether this was an 'arid portion of the state' was, of course, an important one in this case. If it was not an arid portion of the state, then the use of water for irrigation was subordinate to the use for domestic purposes. In those portions of the state called 'arid,' by reason of the necessity for irrigation, the use is put upon an equal footing with such other necessary uses as water for stock, and domestic purposes. We realize the difficulty of framing an accurate definition. Irrigation might be necessary for some crops, and not for others. It might be necessary for one year, or a number of years, and not for other years. The jury cannot be instructed definitely with reference to all this. The prime question, however, seems to us to be whether the conditions are such that a jury can say that the use of water for irrigation is a necessity. We believe that this question was submitted about as clearly and accurately as possible in the charge given." Hall v. Carter, 77 S. W. 19, 21, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 230.

ARISE—ARISING

The words "originating" and "arising," as used in the section of the Constitution relating to the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court and the circuit court, refer to cases which the circuit and county courts, respectively, exercise original jurisdiction of and determine. Mugge v. Warnell Lumber & Veneer Co., 50 South. 645, 648, 58 Fla. 318.

Accrue distinguished

of any country where the defendant has previously resided, such law shall be the same in Iowa as if it had arisen under the provisions of the chapter, except that the sections shall not apply to a cause of action "arising within this state." Held, that a cause of action "accrues" when by maturity of the note and default in payment the holder may sue thereon, but it "arises" and has its origin in the transaction which brought the obligation into existence, the two words not being synonymous, so that where M., a resident of Michigan, executed a note which he sent to his father in Iowa by mail, on receipt of which the father mailed him a draft for the face of the note as a loan, the contract was made in Iowa, and the cause of action "arose" there within section 3452. Moran v. Moran, 123 N. W. 202, 204, 144 Iowa, 451, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 898.

Sand. & H. Dig. § 4124, requires insurance companies to annually give a bond to the state, conditioned for the prompt payment of all claims "arising and accruing" to any person during the term of the bond by virtue of any policy issued; section 4127 declares that a company failing to comply with the statute shall not be entitled to do business in the state; and section 4130 requires the Auditor to issue to companies complying with the statute a certificate of such compliance. Held, that a claim on a fire policy arises and accrues, within the meaning of the statute and of a bond issued in compliance therewith, when the loss by fire occurs, though the policy postpones the time for payment of the loss until 60 days after furnishing proofs of loss. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Fultz, 89 S. W. 93, 95, 76 Ark. 413.

The word "arise" is used in various senses with the words "begin, mount, appear, happen, proceed from, exist." It has not the same significance as the word "accrue," which signifies "result, add, acquire, receive, benefit." A cause of action "arises," within Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 4220, providing, where the cause of action has arisen in another state between non-residents of the territory, and by the laws of the state where the cause of action arose an action cannot be maintained thereon by reason of lapse of time, no action can be maintained thereon in the territory, when the obligation was created which gave rise to a right of action as soon as such right accrued thereon. Doughty v. Funk, 84 Pac. 484, 486, 15 Okl. 643, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1029.

Cause of action

The words "cause of action arising," as used in Rev. St. 1851, c. 2, § 38, providing that, when the court has jurisdiction of the parties it may exercise it in respect to any cause of action, wherever arising, except for the specific recovery of real property situated out of the territory or an injury thereto, and except as also provided by statute in relation to proceedings by foreign corporations, do not mean simply "cause of action accruing," but the word "arising" is also used in the sense of "originating"; that is, the court is given jurisdiction of any cause of action, wherever its subject-matter originated, except as therein stated. Powers Mercantile Co. v. Blethen, 97 N. W. 1056, 1058, 91 Minn. 339.

A cause of action on a contract for the payment of money "arises," within Code Civ. Proc. § 21 (Gen. St. 1909, § 5614), at the time of the maturity of the obligation, on default in payment, and in the state and county where the obligor at the time resides and may be summoned. Hays Land & Investment Co. v. Bassett, 116 Pac. 475, 477, 85 Kan. 48.

Plaintiff, from its office in G. county, by telephone, agreed with defendant's manager at its office in F. county to sell cotton seed delivered f. o. b. in G. county, payable in F. county by draft with bill of lading attached, the seller to pay the freight and to sell cotton seed from other points and divert it to F. county. Rev. St. 1895, art. 1194, subd. 23, provides that a suit against a private corporation may be commenced in any county in which the cause of action arose. Held, that the "cause of action" comprehended the agreement between the parties, its performance by one, and its breach by the other, and that the acts to be done under the agreement constituted a performance in F. county, so that no cause of action "arose" in G. county; and hence that the defendant was entitled to a change of venue. Planters' Cotton Oil Co. v. Whitesboro Cotton Oil Co. (Tex.) 146 S. W. 225, 226.

Counterclaim

In a suit in admiralty to recover for lighterage services rendered under a contract with respondent corporation, a claim by respondent for damages, based on alleged excessive charges paid libellant by respondent under a prior contract between them, made on behalf of respondent by a former officer who was also interested in libellant company, is not one "arising out of the same cause of action for which the original libel was filed," and cannot be set up as a counterclaim under the fifty-third admiralty rule. United Transportation & Lighterage Co. v. New York & Baltimore Transp. Line, 185 Fed. 386, 388, 107 C. C. A. 442.

In an action for the amount of a judgment against plaintiff and defendant for negligent injury to a third person, paid by plaintiff, a counterclaim for an amount paid by defendant in settlement of actions by others growing out of the same accident does not "arise out of the transaction set forth in the complaint" as a foundation of plaintiff's claim, and is not "connected with the subject of the action," within Code Civ. Proc. § 501, authorizing a counterclaim in either of such cases. Fulton County Gas & Electric Co. v. Hudson River Telephone Co., 93 N. E. 1052, 1054, 200 N. Y. 287.

Doubts in minds of jury

The use of the word "arises," in an instruction that if, from the testimony, there arises in the minds of the jurors a reasonable doubt as to defendant's guilt, they cannot find him guilty, was properly refused, since it implies that the reasonable doubt which will prevent a conviction is not that doubt that may come to a juror without careful weighing and considering of the evidence, and after full, fair, and free discussion with his fellows, but such reasonable doubt as may readily arise in his mind, be it only for a moment. Baldwin v. State, 35 South. 220, 222, 46 Fla. 115.

Arising in another state

Hurd's Rev. St. 1899, p. 1119, § 20, enacts that when a cause of action has arisen "in another state and by the laws thereof limitations have run against an action," an action cannot be maintained in the state. Held, that where a cause of action "arose" in Virginia, and subsequently the debtor moved to New York, and an action thereon became barred under the laws of New York, and subsequently the debtor moved to Illinois, no action could be maintained in the latter state; the phrase "when a cause of action has arisen" meaning when jurisdiction exists in the courts of a state to adjudicate between the parties upon the particular cause of action. Strong v. Lewis, 68 N. E. 556, 204 Ill. 35.

Rev. St. 1887, § 4079, provides that when a cause of action has arisen in another state or territory, and by the laws thereof an action cannot be there maintained against a person by reason of the lapse of time, an action thereon shall not be maintained against him in this state. Held, that the phrase "has arisen in another state" means the state in which the foreign contract is to be paid or discharged, and has no application to an intermediate state through which the debtor may subsequently travel, or in which he may reside long enough to raise the bar of the statute of limitations of such state prior to coming to this state. West v. Thels, 96 Pac. 932, 933, 15 Idaho, 167, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 472, 128 Am. St. Rep. 58.

Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 390a, which provides that "where a cause of action arises outside of this state" an action thereon cannot be maintained in a court of the state after the expiration of the time limited for bringing action thereon by the laws of the state or country where such cause of action arose, is not limited by the word "arises" to causes of action, which arose after its enactment or taking effect. Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Comar, 151 Fed. 559, 560, 81 C. C. A. 39.

The words, "when a cause of action has arisen," in a foreign state, as used in the statute of limitations (Code Civ. Proc. § 22; Gen. St. 1901, § 4450), mean when the plaintiff has a right to sue the defendant in the courts of such foreign state, and have no reference to the origin of the transaction out of which the cause of action "arose." Bruner v. Martin, 93 Pac. 165, 167, 76 Kan. 862, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 775, 123 Am. St. Rep. 172, 14 Ann. Cas. 39.

Arising in the state

A cause of action on a contract, executed in a sister state between a nonresident and a foreign corporation, which stipulated for the performance of work in North Carolina for the corporation, based on the nonpayment for work performed, arose in North Carolina within Revisal 1905, § 440, allowing suits against a foreign corporation on a cause of action "arising in the state." McDonald v. MacArthur Bros. Co., 69 S. E. 832, 833, 154 N. C. 122.

Arising under the Constitution or laws

"A case in law or equity 'arises under the Constitution or laws of the United States' whenever its correct decision depends upon the construction of either." Macon Grocery Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 30 Sup. Ct. 184, 186, 215 U. S. 501, 54 L. Ed. 800 (quoting Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 379, 5 L. Ed. 257, 285).

An original application in the state Supreme Court for a writ of mandamus to compel railroad companies owning and operating a bridge over a navigable river to replace it with another bridge according to plans and specifications to be approved by the court, is a case "arising under the laws of the United States," within Act Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, 25 Stat. 433, giving the United States Circuit Court jurisdiction of such cases. State ex rel. Clark v. White River Valley R. Co., 129 N. W. 1084, 1086, 27 S. D. 65.

"When a suit does not really and substantially involve a dispute or controversy as to the effect or construction of the Constitution or laws of the United States, upon the determination of which the result depends, it is not a suit 'arising under the Constitution or laws.' And it must appear on the record by a statement in legal and logical form, such as is required in good pleading, that the suit is one which does really and substantially involve a dispute or controversy as to a right which depends on the construction of the Constitution or some law or treaty of the United States, before jurisdiction can be maintained on this ground." The assertion, in a bill filed by a water company against a municipality and its common council, that the obligation of the municipality's rental contract with the company was impaired by an ordinance which, while denying the validity of the contract, allowed a claim for rentals, with a saving clause to prevent estoppel, is too clearly unfounded to present a case "arising under the Constitution or laws" of the United States. Defiance Water Co. v. City of Defiance, 24 Sup. Ct. 63, 66, 191 U. S. 184, 48 L. Ed. 140 (citing Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 20 Sup. Ct. 867, 178 U. S. 239, 44 L. Ed. 1052; Little York Gold Washing & Water Co. v. Keyes, 96 U. S. 199, 24 L. Ed. 656; Blackburn v. Portland Gold Min. Co., 20 Sup. Ct. 222, 175 U. S. 571, 44 L. Ed. 276; Shreveport v. Cole, 9 Sup. Ct. 210, 129 U. S. 36, 32 L. Ed. 589; New Orleans v. Benjamin, 14 Sup. Ct. 905, 909, 153 U. S. 411, 424, 38 L. Ed. 764, 769.

A direct appeal lies to the federal Supreme Court from a Circuit Court in a revenue case in which, in addition to an objection to the classification and the rate of duty, there is involved the construction of a federal law, or the validity or construction of a treaty, within the meaning of Act March 3, 1891, c. 517, § 5, 26 Stat. 826, 827, 828, governing such direct appeals, notwithstanding the provision of section 6 of that act, making the Circuit Courts of Appeals the proper and final tribunals in revenue cases, and the special provision of Act May 27, 1908, c. 205, 35 Stat. 403, amendatory of Revenue Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, 26 Stat. 131, for the review by the Circuit Courts of Appeals of decisions as to the construction of the tariff laws and the facts respecting the classification of merchandise, and the rate of duty imposed thereon under such classification. B. Altman & Co. v. United States, 32 Sup. Ct. 593, 596, 224 U. S. 583, 56 L. Ed. 894.

An action brought against a corporation created by an act of Congress and against two of its employees to establish a joint liability for negligence is, as to the individual defendants, as well as to the corporation, a suit "arising under the federal Constitution or laws," within the meaning of the removal provisions of Act Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, 25 Stat. 433, and is therefore removable to a federal Circuit Court on petition of all the defendants. In re Dunn, 29 Sup. Ct. 299, 302, 212 U. S. 374, 53 L. Ed. 558.

An action brought against a corporation chartered under an act of Congress and a local defendant, upon a joint liability, is a suit "arising under the laws of the United States," and, as such, is removable from a state court to a federal Circuit Court on petition of both defendants. Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Eastin & Knox, 29 Sup. Ct. 564, 566, 214 U. S. 153, 53 L. Ed. 946.

A suit to enjoin the diversion or intended diversion by a municipality of certain funds which, under legislative sanction, it had collected from taxpayers for a specific public object, but which were not applied to that object, on the theory that such failure of duty on the part of the municipality may ultimately cause increased taxation, and thereby deprive the taxpayers of their property without the due process of law guaranteed by Const. Amend. 14, if the full amount originally intended to be applied to the particular object named by the Legislature is to be collected, is not one "arising under the Constitution of the United States," of which a federal Circuit Court has original jurisdiction without regard to the citizenship of the parties. Owensboro Waterworks Co. v. City of Owensboro, 26 Sup. Ct. 249, 251, 200 U. S. 38, 50 L. Ed. 361.

A suit to enjoin the enforcement of state enactments regulating railroad rates, on the ground that the same are confiscatory and would deprive the railroad companies of their property without due process of law and deny them the equal protection of the laws, in violation of the fourteenth constitutional amendment, is a "suit arising under the Constitution of the United States," of which a federal court has jurisdiction on that ground. Perkins v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 155 Fed. 445, 450.

A suit against an insolvent national bank which has gone into voluntary liquidation to enforce a specific lien, or to enforce and judicially administer a trust previously created by contract, or arising from the insolvency and liquidation proceedings, is a suit "arising under the laws of the United States," within the jurisdiction of the federal Circuit Court, as prescribed by Act Cong. Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, § 1, 25 Stat. 434, and expressly excepted from the provisions of section 4 thereof. George v. Wallace, 135 Fed. 286, 291, 68 C. C. A. 40.

Arising upon contract

An action to recover damages for false and fraudulent representations whereby one was induced to enter into a certain contract to engage in a certain business is not a right of action "arising upon contract." In re Harper, 175 Fed. 412, 418.

Arising during course of trial

As to whether or not a view by a jury in a criminal case constitutes a part of the trial of the case there is a diversity of conclusions, which appears to be due largely to a restriction of the term "the trial" to the permanent proceedings in the courtroom, and an effort of the courts to evade the apparently inevitable result of that construction of the case under consideration. Every step taken in a criminal case by, or in, the court wherein the case is pending, from issue joined to verdict rendered, is a step or proceeding "arising during the course of the trial." In this extensive sense the trial would include many occasions when the judge need not be personally present exercising control or conducting the trial. This is the case where the jury are kept together during the entire trial. Between the sessions of the court they are under the control of the sheriff, and if they make an unauthorized visit in a body to the place where the crime was committed, while in charge of that officer, the error may be waived, and the court can consider whether or not the view influenced the minds of the jurors in ruling on a motion for a new trial. People v. White, 90 Pac. 471, 477, 5 Cal. App. 329 (citing People v. Turner, 39 Cal. 370; Warner v. State, 29 Atl. 505, 56 N. J. Law, 686, 44 Am. St. Rep. 475).

ARM

A policy insuring against an accidental breaking of a "leg or arm" covers fractures of bones of the limbs whether in the hands or feet or in the upper or central divisions of the limbs. Rogers v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 111 S. W. 518, 519, 181 Mo. App. 353.

ARMED

The word "armed," as used in a statute prohibiting one to organize, maintain, and employ an armed body of men, does not necessarily mean that all the men in the body were armed, but it would be sufficient, so far as the arming was concerned, if any considerable number of them were armed, and their purpose was unlawful, and the others were aiding and abetting those that were armed. State v. Gohl, 90 Pac. 259, 261, 46 Wash. 408.

Where the evidence showed that accused had a pocketknife, with a blade three to three and one-half inches in length, that he carried it in his coat pocket with the blade open, and made threats to use it on decedent, and stabbed decedent with it, an instruction that, if accused "armed himself" and went to the decedent for the purpose of provoking the decedent to make an attack on him, etc., was not erroneous for using the quoted words, on the ground that the knife was not a weapon, though not within Pen. Code, art. 838, punishing the carrying of arms. Lahue v. State, 101 S. W. 1008, 1010, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 159.

Within Const. Ga. art. 1, § 1, par. 2, providing that "the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed, but the General Assembly shall have power to prescribe the manner in which arms shall be borne," and within the Constitution of the United States, providing that, a well-regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed, "the word 'arms' evidently means the arms of a militiaman, the weapons ordinarily used in battle, to wit, guns of every kind, swords, bayonets, horseman's pistols, etc. The very words 'bear arms' had then, and now have, a technical meaning. The 'arms-bearing' part of a people were its men fit for service on the field of battle. That country was 'armed' that had an army ready for fight. The call 'to arms' was a call to put on the habiliments of battle, and I greatly doubt if in any good author of those days a use of the word 'arms,' when applied to a people, can be found, which includes pocket pistols, dirks, sword canes, toothpicks, bowie knives, and a host of other relics of a past barbarism or inventions of modern savagery of like character." The act of the General Assembly, approved August 12, 1910 (Laws 1910, p. 134), entitled "An act to prohibit any person from having or carrying a revolver without first having obtained a license from the ordinary of the county of said state, in which the party resides, and to provide how said license may be obtained and a penalty prescribed for a violation of the same and for other purposes," is not void because in violation of article 1, § 1, par. 22, of the Constitution of the state, or in violation of article 8, § 2, of the Constitution of the United States. Strickland v. State, 72 S. E. 260, 264, 137 Ga. 1, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1115, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 323 (quoting and adopting definition in Hill v. State, 53 Ga. 472).

The term "arms," as used in the Oklahoma Constitution providing that the right of a citizen to carry and bear arms, shall never be prohibited, when construed in connection with article 5, § 40, declaring that the Legislature shall provide for organizing, disciplining, maintaining, and equipping the militia of the state, applies solely to such arms as are recognized in civilized warfare, to wit, guns, swords, bayonets, horseman's pistols, etc., and not those used by a ruffian, brawler, or assassin, such as pocket pistols, dirks, sword canes, bowie knives, etc. Ex parte Thomas, 97 Pac. 260, 263, 1 Okl. Cr. 210, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1007.

ARMY

ARMY OFFICER

A West Point cadet is not an "officer in the army," within the meaning of a statute prohibiting dismissals from service in time of peace except after trial and conviction by court-martial; the word "officer" being limited by a subsequent section to commissioned officers. Hartigan v. United States, 25 Sup. Ct. 204, 206, 196 U. S. 169, 49 L. Ed. 434.

ARRAIGN

See Duly Arraigned.

The word "arraigned" means practically the same thing as being personally present at the time; for it could not be true that defendant was in fact arraigned and pleaded to the indictment, if not personally present. State v. Hunter, 80 S. W. 955, 959, 181 Mo. 316.

In Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 1023, providing that, whenever any person shall be arraigned for a direct contempt, no affidavit, charge in writing, or complaint shall be required to be filed against him, the word "arraigned" is used synonymously with "accused" or "charged," and not in the sense in which that term is used in criminal law. Mahoney v. State, 72 N. E. 151, 153, 33 Ind. App. 655, 104 Am. St. Rep. 276.

ARRAIGNMENT

According to the present prevailing practice, the "arraignment" is the mere calling of accused to the bar of the court and reading and explaining the indictment; its only purpose being to obtain from him his answer or plea thereto. Howard v. State, 50 South. 954, 958, 165 Ala. 18.

In an "arraignment" three steps are necessary: The information must be read to the defendant, he must be given a copy thereof, and he must be asked whether he pleads guilty or not guilty to the information. State v. De Wolfe, 74 Pac. 1084, 1085, 29 Mont. 415.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 2274, requiring a copy of the indictment to be delivered before arraignment to a person charged with a capital offense, and section 2272, defining "arraignment" as the reading of the indictment by the clerk to defendant, etc., failure of the defendant to object upon arraignment to a defect in the copy of the indictment furnished him waives the defect. Powell v. State, 85 S. W. 781, 782, 74 Ark. 355.

ARRANGEMENT

See Beneficial Arrangement; Common Arrangement; Family Arrangement.

The word "arrangements," as used in a lease providing that the lessee may make arrangements with the lessor for renewal for another term, etc., means the meeting of the parties for the execution of the necessary writing to effect such renewal. Christian Feigenspan v. Popowska, 72 Atl. 1003, 1005, 75 N. J. Eq. 342.

The word "arrangement" in the anti-monopoly act (Consol. Laws, c. 20, §§ 340-346), making every "contract, agreement, arrangement or combination" whereby a monopoly may be created, or whereby competition may be restrained, unlawful, has a broader meaning than either the word "contract," "agreement," or "combination," and it may include each and all of these things, and more, and means the disposition of measures for the accomplishment of a purpose, and a structure or combination of things in a particular way for any purpose, and one buying the business of his competitors under an agreement binding them not to engage therein for a specified time within specified territory, for the purpose of creating a monopoly, or whereby competition may be restrained, makes an "arrangement" prohibited by the act. *People v. ARREST

See Warrant of Arrest.

Probable cause for arrest, see Probable Cause.

An "arrest" is the seizing of a person and detaining him in the custody of the law; the officer being authorized to use such force as is necessary to accomplish the purpose. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Strube, 73 Atl. 697, 700, 111 Md. 119 (citing 1 Bouv. Law Dict. 166).

The apprehension of a person under a meane civil process to answer in a civil action is an "arrest." Town of Hamden v. Collins, 82 Atl. 636, 638, 85 Conn. 327.

To constitute an "arrest," there need not be an application of actual force, or such physical restraint as is visible to the naked eye. McAleer v. Good, 65 Atl. 934, 935, 216 Pa. 478, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 303, 116 Am. St. Rep. 782.

Technically, any detention of the person of another by the laying on of hands, or by the exercise of force or threats, may be an "arrest." At common law, a private person might make an arrest for a breach of the peace, or a misdemeanor committed in his presence, as well as an officer. This, however, has been changed by Cr. Code Prac. § 35, providing that an arrest may be made by a peace officer or by a private person, and section 87, declaring that a private person may make an arrest when he has reasonable grounds for believing that the person arrested has committed a felony. Rich v. Bailey, 97 S. W. 747, 748, 123 Ky. 827.

The term "arrest," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 9, 30 Stat. 549, providing that a bankrupt shall be exempt from arrest on civil process, applies to the continued detention of a person in custody, and not merely to the original taking of a person into custody; so that an adjudication in bankruptcy against a debtor after his arrest on civil process entitles him to be discharged. Turgeon v. Emery, 182 Fed. 1016.

Where defendant, as sheriff of a county, offered a reward "for the arrest of each of the parties convicted" of a certain bank robbery and murder, the reward was not accepted merely by the giving of information concerning the whereabouts of the suspect, but could only be accepted by the party assuming the personal danger and responsibility of either actually arresting the suspect or causing some other person to arrest him. Minnesota & D. Cattle Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 147 Fed. 463, 467, 77 C. C. A. 607.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 9, 30 Stat. 549, which provides that a bankrupt shall be exempt from civil "arrest," should be construed to exempt from arrest made after a bankruptcy petition is filed, and not to apply to an arrest on civil process properly made before filing of the petition. Turgeon v. Bean, 83 Atl. 557, 558, 109 Me. 189 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 501).

The "arrest" referred to in Rev. St. § 1624, art. 43, as the time when the person accused is to be furnished with a copy of the charges and specifications on which he is to be tried by a naval court-martial, is not the preliminary arrest or detention while awaiting the action of higher authority to frame charges and specifications and order the court-martial, but is the arrest resulting from the preferring of the charges by the proper authority and the convening of the court martial. United States v. Smith, 25 Sup. Ct. 489, 491, 197 U. S. 388, 49 L. Ed. 801.

Under Penal Law, § 1692, making it an offense to rescue a prisoner from lawful custody if the prisoner was held on a charge, commitment, arrest, conviction, or sentence of felony or misdemeanor, the terms "charge" and "arrest" relate to a case where an officer or other person holds a prisoner under lawful custody upon a charge of or arrest for a felony or misdemeanor. People v. Marks, 135 N. Y. Supp. 523, 525, 75 Misc. Rep. 404.

ARREST OF JUDGMENT

By Code, § 5423, a motion in "arrest of judgment" is an application to the court in which the trial was had on the part of the defendant that no judgment be rendered on a verdict against him or on a plea of guilty. State v. Heft (Iowa) 134 N. W. 950, 953.

ARREST OR RESTRAINT OF PRINCES, RULERS, OR PEOPLE

A clause exempting a carrier from liability for loss or damage occasioned "by arrest or restraint of princes, rulers, or people" in a contract of affreightment by a neutral to carry contraband of war, made when conditions of war exist and are known to both parties, must be construed as intended to apply only to actual arrest or seizure and confiscation and affords no ground for repudiation of the contract by the carrier because of the danger of seizure. Balfour Guthrie & Co. v. Portland & Asiatic S. S. Co., 167 Fed. 1010, 1014.

ARRESTER

See Lightning Arrestor.

ARRESTMENT

"Arrestment," a word derived from the English statute, is a word of Scotch origin, and derived from the Scottish law, and it is defined by Bouvier as "the order of a judge, by which he who is debtor in a movable obligation to the arrestor's debtor is prohibited to make payment or delivery till the debt due to the arrestor be paid or secured. Erskine, Inst. 3. 6. 1; 1. 2. 12." Where "arrestment" proceeds on a depending action, it may be loosed by the common debtor's giving security to the arrestor for his debt, in the event it shall be found due. And in the Century dictionary is defined to be: "A process by which a creditor may attach money or movable property which a third person holds for behoof of his debtor. It bears a general resemblance to foreign attachment by the custom of London." Neither of the words "attachment" or "arrestment," as used in Rev. St. § 4536, providing that no wages due or accruing to a seaman shall be subject to attachment or arrestment from any court, and declaring that payment of wages to seamen shall be valid notwithstanding any previous sale, or assignment, or any attachment, incumbrance, or arrestment, etc., when considered literally, has reference to execution or proceedings in aid of execution to subject property to the payment of judgment; but refers to process of holding property to abide the judgment, but, when liberally construed in the light of other provisions of the statute to affect the protection intended to be secured to seamen, will include proceedings in aid of execution. Wilder v. Inter-Island Steam Nav. Co., 29 Sup. Ct. 53, 61, 211 U. S. 239, 53 L. Ed. 164, 15 Ann. Cas. 127 (citing Thomson v. Baltimore & S. Steam Co., 33 Md. 818).

ARRHA—ARRHES

There is intended by the French word "arrhes" an amount which one of the parties hands to the other at the moment a contract is made. According to ancient usage at Rome, "arrhes" were given as a token of a concluded bargain, as an evidence on the price. The word is used as near as it can be to the common law term "earnest money." Capo v. Bugdahl, 42 South. 478, 479, 117 La. 992.

The original idea of "earnest," in the Roman law, signified the conclusion of the contract, and it is that idea which obtains in the common-law jurisdiction and under the statutes of fraud of England and of some of the states of this Union. But now, the giving and receiving of earnest money, though evidence of a completed bargain, is considered of no importance, or of the smallest importance, in ascertaining whether property has passed by virtue of such bargain; that question being determined by the nature of the bargain concluded by the giving of the earnest. Under Justinian, the effect of the giving and receiving of "arrha" was to enable the contractants to retain the privilege of withdrawing from the contract, on certain conditions, and the same effect is attributed to the giving and receiving of the equivalents "arrhes" and "earnest" by the codes of France and of Louisiana, respectively. An agreement for the sale of real estate, therefore, which contemplates the passing of property, not immediately and by virtue thereof, but by an act to be executed at a later date, and which in other respects contains the elements essential to a sale, is a "promise of sale," and when made with the giving of earnest may be receded from by either of the parties; "he who has given the earnest, by forfeiting it, and he who has received it, by returning the double," as expressly provided by article 2463, relating to when a "promise to sell amounts to a sale." Civ. Code, arts. 2462, 2463; Smith v. Hussey, 43 South. 902, 904, 119 La. 32 (citing Statutes of Fraud of Eng. [29] Car. 11, c. 3, § 17; Elgee Cotton Cases, 22 Wall. 195, 22 L. Ed. 863; Benj. Sales [2d Ed.] pp. 260, 262; Howe v. Hayward, 108 Mass. 55, 11 Am. Rep. 306; Gut. Brac. [Am. Transl.] 145; *Just. ARRIVE—ARRIVAL

See On Arrival; Selling To Arrive.

Date of arrival, see Date.

Subject to arrival, see Subject To.

Delivery of an interstate shipment of intoxicating liquors to the consignees is essential to constitute their "arrival in the state," within the meaning of Wilson Act Aug. 8, 1890, c. 728, 26 Stat. 313, subjecting all intoxicating liquors arriving in the state to the laws of such state enacted in the exercise of its police power. The mere placing of an interstate shipment of intoxicating liquors in the carrier's warehouse to await delivery to the consignees does not constitute their "arrival in the state," within the meaning of Wilson Act August 8, 1890, subjecting all intoxicating liquors arriving in the state to the laws of such state enacted in the exercise of its police power. Heymann v. Southern R. Co., 27 Sup. Ct. 104, 105, 203 U. S. 270, 51 L. Ed. 178, 7 Ann. Cas. 1130.

ARRIVE—ARRIVAL (Of Vessel)As arrival at place of discharge

Under a clause in a bill of lading which entitles the ship to "commence discharging immediately upon arrival," her "arrival" dates from the time she actually reaches a berth where she can unload, provided there has been no delay on the part of the consignee in providing such berth, and the lay days for discharging commence to run from that time. Tweedie Trading Co. v. Pitch Pine Lumber Co., 156 Fed. 88.

ARROWROOT IN ITS NATURAL STATE

The term "arrowroot in its natural state" is the equivalent of the term "arrowroot in a state of nature," and that description would hardly fit an article which had been subjected to various processes by which it is converted into starch. The words "arrowroot in its natural state," as used in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 478, 30 Stat. 195, relate to the tubers or roots of the arrowroot plant, and do not include the article commercially known as "arrowroot," consisting of starch made from arrowroot tubers. Leaycraft & Co. v. United States, 130 Fed. 106, 107, 64 C. C. A. 440.

ARSON

See, also, Burn.

"At common law to constitute 'arson' the house burned must be the house of another; * * * arson at common law being an offense against the house as a habitation and not as property. The house of another is the house of the occupant and not the owner of the fee." State v. Perry, 54 S. E. 764, 765, 74 S. C. 551.

"Arson," which is a felony at common law, is the unlawful and malicious burning of the house of another. At common law, an intent to injure or defraud is not an essential element of the offense, but under Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896, c. 38, par. 48, providing that whoever willfully and maliciously burns any building or goods which are at the time insured against loss by fire, "with intent to injure the insurer," whether such person is owner or not, shall be imprisoned, etc., the intent is the controlling element, and must be alleged and proven. Mai v. People, 79 N. E. 633, 634, 224 Ill. 414 (citing State v. McCarter, 4 S. E. 553, 98 N. C. 637).

Under an act making it "arson" to willfully set fire to a "corncrib, or corn pen containing corn," the firing of a corncrib is "arson," irrespective of whether it contains corn. Davis v. State, 44 South. 545, 546, 152 Ala. 82.

The corpus delicti consists, first, in the burning of a house described; and, second, in the fact that a criminal agency was the cause of the burning. West v. State, 64 S. E. 130, 6 Ga. App. 105.

To justify a conviction of "arson" under the statute, defining "arson" as the willful and malicious burning or setting on fire of any dwelling house in which there shall be at the time some human being the state must prove the burning, which is the entire destruction of the dwelling, or the setting of the dwelling on fire, and that the building was a dwelling in which at the time of the burning or the setting on fire, there was a human being, and that the act was committed willfully and maliciously. State v. Dinneen (Del.) 76 Atl. 623, 624, 7 Pennewill, 505.

At common law "arson" was the malicious burning of the house or dwelling of another. The offense was not against property, but against human life and safety. It was intended to protect the habitation of man. The offense has, however, been materially enlarged by the legislation of several cities so as to include in the term "arson" burning of structures other than dwelling houses. United States v. Cardish, 143 Fed. 640, 642.

Under the term "arson," as defined by the Code, the offense is against property, and it is not necessary that the "house, edifice, structure, vessel or other erection" should have been intended for or used as a habitation, but it is sufficient if it be "capable of affording shelter for human beings." State v. Lintner, 104 N. W. 205, 206, 19 S. D. 447.

In a prosecution for "arson," defined by statute as the willful and malicious burning of the property of another of the value of $20 or more, the question of occupancy or possession is immaterial. Hinkle v. State, 91 N. E. 1090, 1092, 174 Ind. 276.

"At common law 'arson' is the malicious burning of another's house." Rev. St. § 6831, declaring that whoever maliciously burns or attempts to burn any dwelling house, kitchen, smokehouse, shop, office, barn, stable, storehouse, etc., shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary for a specified term, or fined, extends the offense of arson at common law, and also comprises it, and does not make it an offense to burn one's own building. Jones v. State, 70 N. E. 952, 70 Ohio St. 36, 1 Ann. Cas. 618.

"Arson" at common law is a crime against the security of the dwelling house as such and not against the dwelling as property; thus, if the occupant is in possession rightfully and burns the house, he cannot, in a legal sense, be guilty of burning the dwelling of another, as he burns his own dwelling house. Williams v. State (Ala.) 58 South. 921, 922 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 509).

Under Cr. Code Prac. §§ 122, 124, providing that an indictment must contain a statement of the case constituting the offense in ordinary language, etc., an indictment, charging accused with the offense of arson, and alleging that he feloniously and maliciously set fire to and burned the storehouse of a person named, sufficiently charges a violation of Ky. St. § 1169, punishing the willful burning of a storehouse, and the defect therein, arising from designating in the accusative part one offense and describing another in the body, is not ground for reversal, within Cr. Code Prac. § 340, prohibiting the reversal of a judgment for error not affecting the substantial rights of accused; the word "arson" being commonly understood as meaning the unlawful burning of the property of another. Overstreet v. Commonwealth, 144 S. W. 751, 754, 147 Ky. 471.

A tenant who willfully and maliciously sets fire to and burns a storehouse, the property of his landlord, of which the tenant is in possession, is guilty of "arson," under Crim. Code, § 54, making it arson for one willfully and maliciously to burn any warehouse, the property of another. State v. Martin, 127 N. W. 896, 87 Neb. 529, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1125.

"Arson" at common law, as well as under the statute defining arson in the first degree, as it existed prior to Code 1907, § 6301, making the relation of husband and wife or landlord and tenant no defense to arson, was an offense against the possession rather than the property. Peinhardt v. State, 49 South. 831, 832, 161 Ala. 70.

ARSON IN THE SECOND DEGREE

There is a marked distinction between the terms "corncrib" and "barn," as used in a statute providing that "any person who willfully sets fire to or burns * * * any corncrib or corn pen containing corn, or any barn, * * * is guilty of arson in the second degree." The word "corncrib," as used in the statute, means a building or structure in its entirety and not a room or apartment in a building or structure. Therefore an indictment charging the burning of a corncrib is not sustained by proof that the building destroyed was a barn in which one room was partitioned off as a corncrib. Jackson v. State, 40 South. 979, 980, 145 Ala. 54 (quoting and adopting definition in Cent. Dict. and Webster's International Dict.).

ART

See New and Useful Art; Works of Art.

A system of transacting business, disconnected from the means for carrying out the system, is not, within the most liberal interpretation of the term, an "art," and, unless the means used are novel and disclose invention, such system is not patentable. Hotel Security Checking Co. v. Lorraine Co., 160 Fed. 467, 469, 87 C. C. A. 451, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 665.

"In the sense of the patent law, an 'art' is not a mere abstraction. A system of transacting business, disconnected from the means of carrying out the system, is not within the most liberal interpretation of the term 'art.' Advice is not patentable." It is further said that "the statute term 'art,' used as it is in the sense of the employment of means to a desired end or the adaptation of powers in the natural world to the uses of life, is perhaps a better term than the word 'method,' used by the patentee or the word 'process,' the term of description used by the experts. A process, eo nomine, is not made the subject of a patent in the act of Congress; an art may require one or more processes or machines in order to produce a certain result or manufacture. It is for the discovery or invention of some practical method or means of producing an essential result or effect that a patent is granted, not for the result or effect itself. 'Process' or 'method,' when used to represent the means of producing a beneficial result, are in law synonymous with 'art,' provided the means are not effected by mechanism or mechanical combination." A patent for a code message, but which is merely for a system of devising code messages, is not an "art" in the sense of the patent law, but is for an art only in the sense that one speaks of the art of painting or the art of curving the thrown baseball, and such arts, however ingenious, difficult, or amusing, are not patentable within any statute of the United States. Berardini v. Tocci, 190 Fed. 329, 332 (quoting Hotel Security Co. v. Lorraine Co., 160 Fed. 469, 87 C. C. A. 451, 453, 24 L. R. A. [N. S.] 665).

ART GALLERY

As educational corporation, see Educational Corporation.

ARTESIAN

The word "artesian" is sometimes used in reference to underground water which, by reason of pressure, will rise above its natural level, though not the surface of the ground; when the stratum in which it lies is pierced by a well. Burr v. MacIay Rancho Water Co., 98 Pac. 260, 262, 154 Cal. 428.

ARTFUL CONCEALMENT

"Artful concealment" is some unfair practice by which a party is intentionally deceived. Lake v. Gilchrist, 7 Ala. 955, 959.

ARTICLE

See Completed Manufactured Article; Crude Article; Family Article; Lienable Article; Patented Article; Smoker's Articles; This Article.

Any article or thing, see Any.

Other articles, see Other.

The term "article" is commonly accepted, in trade and elsewhere, as something different from bulky and heavy commodities. Harrison Supply Co. v. United States, 171 Fed. 406, 407, 96 C. C. A. 362.

Article of commerce

While a commodity may be an "article of interstate commerce," it does not become an article of trade from one state to another until it begins to move in its transportation from one state to another. Ware v. Mobile County, 41 South. 153, 155, 146 Ala. 163, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1081, 121 Am. St. Rep. 21 (citing Kidd v. Pearson, 9 Sup. Ct. 6, 128 U. S. 25, 32 L. Ed. 346; distinguishing Stratford v. City Council of Montgomery, 20 South. 127, 110 Ala. 619).

Article of manufacture

See Manufactures—Manufactured Articles.

Article of value

Money is comprehended by the term an "article of value," within an indictment of a railway postal clerk for secreting and embezzling a letter containing "articles of value." Shaw v. United States, 180 Fed. 348, 352, 103 C. C. A. 494 (citing Bromberger v. United States, 128 Fed. 346, 63 C. C. A. 76).

Articles of gold and silver manufacture

A gold watch and chain are not "articles of gold and silver manufacture," within Pub. Laws 1905, Act 42, § 2, exempting an innkeeper who has a safe or vault fit for the custody of money, jewelry, articles of gold and silver manufacture, personal ornaments, etc., and who keeps suitable locks on the sleeping rooms, from liability for the loss of a guest's property, where such guest does not offer to deliver it for custody in the metal safe or vault. Weadock v. Swart, 128 N. W. 734, 735, 163 Mich. 602, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 959.

Literary composition

The "headline" of a newspaper or other publication is a summary or index of that which follows. An "article" is defined to be "a literary composition on a specific topic, forming an independent portion of a book or literary publication, especially of a newspaper, magazine, review or other periodical." In a certain sense, the "headline" is a part of the "article" or chapter which follows, but strictly speaking it is separate, and the term conveys a different meaning than that of the "article" or chapter itself. Proof of a "headline" attached to a newspaper article is insufficient to sustain an allegation in an indictment charging that the "article" itself was libelous. Miller v. State, 99 S. W. 533, 534, 81 Ark. 359 (quoting from Webster's Dict. and Cent. Dict.).

ARTICLES WITHIN TARIFF ACT

The ordinary use of the word "articles" in tariff acts is a broad one; and there is nothing in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule L, par. 390, 30 Stat. 187, which would require the restriction of that term to completed articles. It may include woven fabrics in 25-yard pieces. United States v. A. A. Vantine & Co., 166 Fed. 735, 738, 92 C. C. A. 397.

The word "article," when used in a tariff law, should be given a broad, liberal meaning; and in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 179, 30 Stat. 186, relating to "laces, embroideries * * * or other articles" of metal threads, the doctrine of ejusdem generis does not operate to exclude fabrics in the piece from classification as "articles" under that provision. G. Hirsch's Sons v. United States, 167 Fed. 309, 811, 93 C. C. A. 61.

Articles appliqu  

Fabrics to which tinsel cord has been attached by an appliqu   process, resulting in goods which are fairly ornamental, durable, permanent, and salable, but not in the highest sense, are "articles appliqu  " within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule L, par. 390, 30 Stat. 187, though only 60 per cent. of the material imported was used in the form in which imported; the cord being removed from the remainder because the goods were more salable in that condition. A. A. Vantine & Co. v. United States, 155 Fed. 149, 150.

Articles commonly known as jewelry

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 434, 30 Stat. 192, for "articles commonly known as jewelry," does not include miniature frames composed of precious metals set with diamonds and pearls, which are not used as articles of personal adornment but for utility, but they are dutiable under paragraph 193. United States v. M. Knoedler & Co., 154 Fed. 928.

Women's silver hand bags or purses used for holding money, articles of wearing apparel, etc., are not dutiable as "articles commonly known as jewelry." Tiffany v. United States, 131 Fed. 398, 399.

Slides or buckles, made of steel or a base metal, some ornamented with rhinestones and some colored in imitation of precious metals, and used in ornamenting slippers, are not dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, 30 Stat. 192, as "articles commonly known as jewelry," but are dutiable as manufactures of metal, not specially provided for, under paragraph 193 of said act, Schedule C, 30 Stat. 167. E. H. Bailey & Co. v. United States, 135 Fed. 917, 918.

Loose drilled pearls, imported in separate packages, which had been assembled into a necklace abroad and tentatively worn by a person who contracted to purchase them, delivery to be made in the United States, and who, after receiving them here, added six more pearls and had them made into a necklace, were not "jewelry" within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 434, 30 Stat. 192, but were dutiable as "pearls in their natural state," by similitude, under paragraph 436. Citroen v. United States, 166 Fed. 693, 697, 92 C. C. A. 365.

In construing the provision in paragraph 434, Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, 30 Stat. 192, for "articles commonly known as jewelry," held, that it does not include so-called "millinery ornaments," used in trimming hats, which are flimsy articles, intended for ephemeral use, are not made by jewelers, and contain no gems or precious metals, but are made of base metal either wholly or in combination with imitation jet or imitation precious stones. United States v. S. Schiff & Co., 139 Fed. 549, 550, 71 C. C. A. 533.

Chatelaine purses of metal, gilded or plated in imitation of gold and silver, and set with imitation precious stones, which range in value from 34 marks per gross to 30 marks per dozen, are not within the provision in paragraph 434, Schedule N, § 1, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, 30 Stat. 192, for "articles commonly known as jewelry." A. Steinhardt & Co. v. United States, 148 Fed. 512.

Articles composed in part of steel

Needle cases in which steel needles constitute the element of chief value should be considered as "manufactures in chief value of needles," rather than as "articles composed in part of steel," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 193, 30 Stat. 167, and as needles are on the free list and there is no tariff provision for manufactures of needles, such articles are dutiable as unenumerated manufactured articles under section 6, 30 Stat. 205. Dieckerhoff, Raffoer & Co. v. United States, 151 Fed. 957, 958.

Articles composed of carbon

"Blood charcoal," a substance which, like bone char, is composed chiefly of carbon, and is used for decolorizing sugar, is not dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 87, 30 Stat. 156, as an "article composed of carbon," but either under paragraph 10, Schedule A, 30 Stat. 152, as "bone char" by similitude, or at the similar rate provided in section 6, 30 Stat. 205, for unenumerated manufactured articles. United States v. George Lueders & Co., 148 Fed. 398, 399.

Articles composed of gelatin spangles

Spangled hat crowns are in a general way of the same character as the class of materials considered under the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 408, 30 Stat. 189, for fabrics, wearing apparel, trimmings, etc., including "other articles * * * composed wholly or in part" of gelatin spangles, and are dutiable under said provision for "articles," rather than under paragraph 450 (30 Stat. 193), as manufactures of gelatin. Louis Metzger & Co. v. United States, 141 Fed. 381, 382.

Articles embroidered

Held, that embroidered woolen dress goods are dutiable as "dress goods * * * of wool, and not specially provided for," under paragraph 369, Schedule K, § 1, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, 30 Stat. 184, and not under paragraph 371 of said act (30 Stat. 185), as "articles embroidered, * * * made of wool." Hall v. United States, 136 Fed. 774, 775, 69 C. C. A. 494.

Articles in chief value of metal thread

Fabrics in the piece, composed chiefly of metal thread, but in part of silk, are more specifically enumerated in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 179, 30 Stat. 166, as "articles * * * in chief value of * * * metal threads," than under Schedule L, par. 387, 30 Stat. 186, as "woven fabrics in the piece, not specially provided for, * * * weighing not less than one and one-third ounces per square yard and not more than eight ounces per square yard, * * * dyed in the thread or yarn, and containing not more than thirty per centum in weight of silk, * * * if other than black." G. Hirsch's Sons v. United States, 167 Fed. 309, 311, 93 C. C. A. 61.

Articles in imitation of lace

Held, that certain woven flax articles, in portions of which ornamental effects have been produced by drawing out certain of the threads and interjecting different, independent threads, producing openwork effects, are not "articles * * * in imitation of lace," as enumerated in paragraph 339, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule J, 30 Stat. 181. United States v. B. Ulmann & Co., 139 Fed. 3, 4, 5, 71 C. C. A. 415.

Articles in part of metal

Millinery articles, made almost wholly of feathers, but containing a small quantity of wire, which was an important feature of their construction, are dutiable as "articles in part of metal," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 193, 30 Stat. 167, rather than as "feathers advanced or manufactured," under Schedule N, par. 425, 30 Stat. 191. United States v. Berlinger, Brown & Meyer, 167 Fed. 800, 801, 93 C. C. A. 190.

Articles in part of beads

Curtains in chief value of rice paste formed into regular-shaped particles are dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 408, 30 Stat. 189, relating to "articles * * * in part of beads," not being excluded by the doctrine of ejusdem generis, though the paragraph also enumerates laces, wearing apparel, ornaments, etc. Morimura Bros. v. United States, 169 Fed. 279, 280, 94 C. C. A. 555.

Ladies' hand bags in chief value of leather and ornamented with beads are dutiable as "articles * * * in part of beads," rather than as "manufactures of leather, finished or unfinished, * * * or of which [leather] is the component material of chief value," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, pars. 408, 450, 30 Stat. 189, 193. United States v. Guthman, Solomons & Co., 159 Fed. 273, 274.

Articles made of lace

Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule J, par. 339, 30 Stat. 181, relating to "articles made * * * of lace," includes goods made by sewing together pieces of lace produced in shapes designed to be used in making the articles; the term "lace" not being restricted to articles made up from lace that is bought and sold by the yard. Goldenberg Bros. & Co. v. United States, 152 Fed. 658, 659.

Articles manufactured from imported materials

Imported corks used in bottling beer for export are not "articles manufactured from imported materials," within the meaning of Act Oct. 1, 1890, 26 Stat. 617, c. 1244, § 25, allowing a drawback of duties on such articles when exported, although such corks are subjected to a special treatment after importation to make them fit for the purpose intended. Anheuser-Busch Brewing Ass'n v. United States, 28 Sup. Ct. 204, 205, 207 U. S. 558, 52 L. Ed. 336.

Articles manufactured from wire

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 137, 30 Stat. 161, the provision for "articles manufactured from * * * wire" cannot be restricted to manufactured articles which contain the round wire in its integrity; and "steel wool," consisting of filaments shaved from steel wire, and constituting a finished commercial article, is embraced in said provision. Buehne Steel Wool Co. v. United States, 159 Fed. 107, 109, 86 C. C. A. 297.

Held, that a cable used for making connections with a telephone switch board, consisting of 64 wires bound together, which, both individually and in the group, are covered with various materials for insulating and water-proofing purposes, is an "article," within the meaning of the second proviso in paragraph 137, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, 30 Stat. 161, relating to "articles manufactured from * * * copper wire," and is not dutiable under the provision in the same paragraph for "wire not specially provided for, * * * whether uncovered or covered," nor under paragraph 193 of said act, 30 Stat. 167, as a manufacture of metal not specially provided for. Salt v. United States, 127 Fed. 890, 891.

Articles of glass ornamented, decorated, etc.

Rachman*, 147 Fed. 769, 770.

Glass eyes for dolls, in which, in order to complete the resemblance to the human eye, the iris and the pupil have been skillfully painted or traced, are within the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 100, 30 Stat. 157, for "articles of glass, * * * painted * * * or otherwise ornamented, decorated," etc. R. Hoehn Co. v. United States, 139 Fed. 301, 302.

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 100, the provision for articles of glass ornamented, decorated, or ground is not limited to articles in which the grinding is done for ornamental or decorative purposes, but includes plain goods ground for utility purposes only. United States v. Hell Chemical Co., 178 Fed. 537, 540, 102 C. C. A. 47.

Articles of blown glassware

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 100, 30 Stat. 157, the term "blown glassware" includes articles blown in a mold as well as freehanded. Articles in chief value of blown glass, but in part of other glass or other material, are not within the provision for "blown glassware," but are dutiable as manufactures of glass under paragraph 112, 30 Stat. 158. The term "molded," as applied to glassware, is synonymous with "pressed." United States v. Hell Chemical Co., 178 Fed. 537, 540, 102 C. C. A. 47.

Articles of imported merchandise

Imported boxes containing lemons are "articles of imported merchandise" and a dutiable entity by themselves, subject to separate classifications from the lemons they contain, within Customs Administrative Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, § 7, 26 Stat. 134, and are therefore subject to the penalties provided for undervaluation. Phelps Bros. & Co. v. United States, 142 Fed. 218, 214.

Articles of iron

Iron castings, which by careful additional work have been fitted as parts of machines, are no longer dutiable as "castings," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 148, 30 Stat. 162, but have been advanced to the condition of "articles * * * of iron * * * partly * * * manufactured," under paragraph 193. John Bromley & Sons v. United States, 156 Fed. 958, 959, 84 C. C. A. 458.

Articles of metal

Small disks produced in the manufacture of tin cans, being a by-product in the process of cutting an aperture for filling, and being of much less value than the tin from which they were cut, are not articles "wholly or partly manufactured from tin plate," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 140, 30 Stat. 162, nor "waste" under Schedule N, par. 463, 30 Stat. 194, but are dutiable as "articles of metal, whether partly or wholly manufactured," under Schedule C, par. 193, 30 Stat. 167. Shallus v. United States, 162 Fed. 653, 656, 89 C. C. A. 445.

Articles of utility

Splash mats or screens, which have been crudely decorated at an expense of about 2½ cents apiece by stenciling and by hand painting, which are worth about 4 cents apiece, and which primarily are "articles of utility" rather than for decoration, are not dutiable as paintings in oil or water colors under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 454, 30 Stat. 194. F. W. Woolworth & Co. v. United States, 152 Fed. 483, 484.

C. Hazard & Co. v. United States*, 164 Fed. 907, 908.

ARTIFICE

The elements of the offense of devising an "artifice" to defraud, to be effected by means of the post office establishment of the United States, in violation of Rev. St. § 5480, are: (1) That defendant devised the "scheme" to defraud, as alleged; (2) that he intended to effect such "scheme" or "artifice" by opening correspondence or communication with the persons intended to be defrauded, by means of the post office establishment of the United States, or by inciting them to open correspondence with him respecting such "scheme" or "artifice"; and (3) that in the furtherance and execution of the "scheme," or in attempting to further the same, defendant deposited or caused to be deposited in the United States post office letters, papers, writings, or circulars, or took from the post office papers or writings connected with the furtherance of such "scheme." A "scheme" is a design or plan formed to accomplish some purpose. An "artifice" is an ingenious contrivance or device of some kind, and when used to defraud corresponds with "trick" or "fraud." Hence, a "scheme" or "artifice" to defraud, within the meaning of the statute, is to form some plan or device some trick to perpetrate the fraud upon another. United States v. Dexter, 154 Fed. 890, 893, 896.

ARTIFICER

"Artificer" commonly implies power of contrivance or adaptation in the exercise of one's craft. State v. City of Ottawa, 113 Pac. 391, 393, 84 Kan. 100.

ARTIFICIALARTIFICIAL COLORATION

See Free from Artificial Coloration.

The use of palm oil as an ingredient in the manufacture of oleomargarine to the extent of one-half of 1 per cent. for the sole purpose, from a business standpoint, of giving to the oleomargarine a yellow color in resemblance to butter, is an "artificial coloration" within the meaning of Act Aug. 2, 1886, c. 840, § 8, 24 Stat. 210, as amended by Act May 9, 1902, c. 784, § 3, 32 Stat. 194, and subjects the product to a tax of 10 cents per pound, and it is immaterial that palm oil is a substance not foreign to oleomargarine, and that incidentally, and in the proportions used in a very slight degree, it affects its quality. Moxley v. Hertz, 173 Fed. 728, 731.

ARTIFICIAL FLOWERS

Imitation roses of celluloid and metal, which are worn as boutonnieres, chiefly by children on occasions of frolic and fun, and are also used as gifts in prize packages, are not "toys" within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 418, 30 Stat. 191, but are dutiable as "artificial * * * flowers," under paragraph 425, 30 Stat. 191. Hamburger & Co. v. United States, 180 Fed. 632, 633.

Artificial shamrocks are not "toys," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 418, 30 Stat. 191, but are dutiable as "artificial leaves," under paragraph 425, 30 Stat. 191. United States v. Cattus, 167 Fed. 532, 98 C. C. A. 64.

Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 425, 30 Stat. 191, relating to "artificial or ornamental leaves," held to include leaves elaborately prepared so as to restore their natural appearance and prevent decomposition; also to include them when made up into wreaths and attached to wire frames. Kreshower v. United States, 152 Fed. 485.

ARTIFICIAL PERSONS

Corporation as, see Corporation.

"'Artificial persons' are such as are created and devised by human laws for the purposes of society and government, which are called corporations or bodies politic." John C. Orr Co. v. Cushman, 104 N. Y. Supp. 510, 511, 54 Misc. Rep. 121 (quoting and adopting Abbott's Law Dict. vol. 2, p. 151).

ARTIFICIALLY PRECIPITATED

The article produced by the "artificial precipitation" of chalk, and bolting and packing it in bags, is not "manufactures" of chalk, within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 13, 30 Stat. 152, but is chalk itself, and is dutiable under the provision in the same paragraph for "chalk artificially precipitated." United States v. P. E. Anderson & Co., 175 Fed. 981, 982, 99 C. C. A. 451.

ARTISAN

An "artisan" is one who is employed in an industrial or mechanic art or trade. State v. City of Ottawa, 113 Pac. 391, 393, 84 Kan. 100.

ARTIST

The term "artist" is broad enough to include an architect. Pen and ink drawings of an artistic character, of a proposed building, produced by an architect, are within paragraph 703, Free List, § 2, c. 11, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 203, relating to "works of art, the production of American artists." Young v. Bohn, 141 Fed. 471, 472.

AS

A verdict finding defendant guilty of embezzlement "by" bailee, instead of "as" bailee, is defective, if not bad. State v. Jones, 89 S. W. 366, 367, 114 Mo. App. 343.

As in same manner

V. S. 2532, as amended by Laws 1896, p. 32, No. 44, § 5 (P. S. 2025), provides that, where a husband's will makes provision for his widow, intended in lieu of dower, the widow may within eight months after the will is proved, or in such further time as the court allows, waive the provisions of the will, and take one-third as in other cases.

Section 2543 (2935), declares that if a married woman dies without issue, and leaving a will, her husband may waive its provisions "as" a widow may waive the provisions of her husband's will. Held, that the word "as" in section 2543 was used in the sense of "in the same manner with or in which," so that the probate court could extend the time for a husband to waive the provisions of his wife's will and elect to take under the law. In re Peck's Estate, 68 Atl. 433, 434, 80 Vt. 469.

P. S. 2935, provides that a husband may waive the provisions of his wife's will when she dies without issue "as a widow may waive the provisions of her husband's will." Section 2925 (3) requires that the widow shall notify the court in writing of her election under her husband's will within eight months after the will is proved, or after letters of administration have been granted. Held, that a verbal notification of waiver made to the probate court by the attorney for the husband where the will was presented for probate was insufficient, where it was not followed by the filing of a written waiver within the time allowed by the statute. In re Baker's Estate, 71 Atl. 190, 81 Vt. 505.

As when, importing a contingency

The word "as," in a will creating a trust to pay the income to beneficiaries until they have respectively reached a specified age, and providing that "as" each arrived at that age he should have his share, imports contingency, though the word may not be directly conditional. In re Blake's Estate, 108 Pac. 287, 294, 157 Cal. 448.

In an action against a street railroad for injuries received in a collision between plaintiff's wagon and a car, the petition alleged that plaintiff saw the car in question coming from the north "as" he turned off to cross from the east to the west track on which the car was approaching. Held, that "as" meant that he saw it "when," "at some time," or "while" he was driving across the track; and hence a contention that it meant that plaintiff saw the car coming from the north at the moment he turned to drive across the west track, and that he was thereby convicted of contributory negligence by his pleadings, and that his evidence that he looked and did not see the car should be rejected as contradicting his petition, was untenable. Schroeder v. St. Louis Transit Co., 85 S. W. 968, 972, 111 Mo. App. 67.

AS A BEVERAGE

See Beverage.

AS ABOVE DESCRIBED

The words "as above described," in a deed reciting that the owner granted to trustees of a church a parcel of land described, "to be used as a church location. * * * to have and to hold the said premises as above described unto the trustees and their successors," refer back to the description of the land, and not to words "to be used as a church location," and do not limit the use of the premises to a use for the purposes of a church location. Downen v. Rayburn, 73 N. E. 364, 365, 214 Ill. 342, 3 Ann. Cas. 36.

AS AFORESAID

In a declaration for negligence, an allegation that plaintiff was injured by reason of defendant's failure to give such signals, "as aforesaid," must be deemed to refer to signals previously mentioned in the declaration. Wabash R. Co. v. Bhymer, 73 N. E. 879, 881, 214 Ill. 579.

The phrase "rules established as aforesaid," within Civil Service Law, § 25, providing that no appointment within the rules established "as aforesaid" shall be affected by political opinions or affiliations, refers to the rules established by the preceding sections or to be established by the state or municipal civil service commission pursuant thereto. People ex rel. Garvey v. Prendergast, 132 N. Y. Supp. 115, 117, 148 App. Div. 129.

AS ALLEGED

A denial of the allegations of a complaint "as alleged" therein does not operate as a denial of the substance of the allegation and is a negative pregnant which is insufficient. Hutchinson v. Blen, 93 N. Y. Supp. 189, 190, 46 Misc. Rep. 302; Hutchinson v. Blen, 93 N. Y. Supp. 216, 217, 104 App. Div. 214.

AS BEING A CONVEYANCE

An instruction that possession of a part of a tract under a claim made under an invalid deed would give possession of the whole was correct, under Code Civ. Proc. § 102, providing that whenever the occupant, or those under whom he claims, entered under claim of title founded on a claim that a written instrument was a conveyance of the premises and there has been a continued possession of the premises included in such instrument, or some part thereof, under such claim for 10 years, the premises so included shall be deemed to have been held adversely; the words "as being a conveyance of the premises" indicating that the extent of the claim is not dependent on the validity of the instrument. Kennedy v. Kennedy, 68 S. E. 664, 669, 86 S. C. 483.

AS CHARGED

See Guilty As Charged.

AS CHARGED IN THE INFORMATION

In a prosecution under Rev. St. 1909, § 4729, charging defendant with unlawfully living and cohabiting with — in a state of open and notorious adultery, they not being married to each other, but defendant being a married man, a special verdict that defendant was "guilty as charged in the information, and assess his punishment at one year and $1,000," but failing to include the essential fact that defendant was a married man, was insufficient; and the defect was not cured by the use of the words "as charged in the information," since, where there is a special finding of a fact, those words mean as that fact was charged. State v. Holland, 145 S. W. 522, 524, 162 Mo. App. 678.

AS CONVENIENT

See Early As Convenient.

AS CUSTOMARY

The term "as customary," in contracts for the carriage of coal from San Francisco to Honolulu, which provided for the delivery "at the wharf" and "on wharf 'as customary'" meant the mode of discharging freight at Honolulu, and the custom at San Francisco cannot prevail against it. Moore v. United States, 25 Sup. Ct. 202, 203, 196 U. S. 157, 49 L. Ed. 428.

AS DIRECTED

Under the terms of a written contract in which it was agreed to furnish and to plant oak trees on the neutral ground of St. Charles avenue "as directed" by the board of commissioners, the words "as directed" refer to the particular places upon the neutral ground at which the trees were to be placed, and do not imply that the board was to supervise the mode of planting. La Groue v. New Orleans, 38 South. 160, 161, 114 La. 253.

AS DOWER

The expressions "as dower," and "in lieu of dower," are often used interchangeably. Perry v. Dance (Ky.) 112 S. W. 911, 918.

AS FAR AS

The duty of a passenger carrier to carry safely those whom they admit into their coaches, "as far as human care and foresight will go," means for the utmost care and diligence of very cautious persons, and of course they are responsible for any, even the slightest, neglect. Kline v. Santa Barbara Consol. Ry. Co., 90 Pac. 125, 127, 150 Cal. 741 (quoting Fairchild v. California Stage Co., 18 Cal. 604).

Where a party to a logging contract in response to a demand to perform the contract in a certain way stated, "I will comply with this as far as practicable," he did not thereby give an unqualified accedence to the demand. Des Allemands Lumber Co. v. Morgan City Timber Co., 41 South. 332, 344, 117 La. 1.

AS FAST AS

Where the owner of a sawmill agreed to saw a party's logs "as fast as I can," the quoted expression was not ambiguous, and it was the duty of the owner of the sawmill to put such party's logs through his sawmill without interruption except for cause making such progress substantially impossible, and hence evidence of a custom that, where the sawing of the logs of one party was interrupted for any cause and those of another taken up, the latter were completed before returning to the former, which custom was confined to cases where the contract did not provide for continuous sawing, was incompetent. Mowatt v. Wilkinson, 85 N. W. 661, 662, 110 Wis. 176.

AS HEREIN PROVIDED

The phrase "as herein provided," as used in a statute imposing a fine on persons who shall hunt without being in possession of a license "as herein provided," means that the hunter must have in his possession a hunting license issued in pursuance of the other provisions of the statute. Ex parte Helton, 93 S. W. 913, 914, 117 Mo. App. 609.

AS HERETOFORE

The words "as heretofore enjoyed," as used in Const. art. 2, § 28, providing that the right of trial by jury is limited to the right "as heretofore enjoyed," refers to the right of trial by jury as it existed prior to the adoption of the Constitution in 1875, and, there being at that time no right to a jury trial accorded to a widow to determine her interest in her husband's personal property, she is accorded no such right by the Constitution. Howard v. Strode, 146 S. W. 792, 795, 242 Mo. 210, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1057.

The phrase "as heretofore provided," in a city ordinance providing in section 1 that it shall be unlawful for any one to sell intoxicating liquors within the limits of two miles of the city, and prescribing in section 2 the procedure for obtaining a liquor license, and declaring in section 3 that any person who shall within the limits of the city or within two miles thereof sell intoxicating liquors, without having first taken out a license "as heretofore provided," shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be fined, should be construed as heretofore lawfully and legally provided, and only embracing such portions of section 2 as are within the powers of the mayor and council to enact, and as thus construed section 3 contains a valid prohibition against the sale of intoxicating liquors within the city without a city license. Territory v. Robertson, 92 Pac. 144, 146, 19 Okl. 149.

AS HIGH AS

An electrical company contracted to furnish a cement company with electrical power. The contract provided that the cement company should have an equipment of motors and transformers guaranteed to have a power factor and efficiency "as high as any obtainable in the market." The manufacturers of the equipment which the cement company procured guaranteed the apparatus "to be one of our highest standard manufacture, both mechanically and electrically." Held, that this did not constitute sufficient performance of the terms of the contract. Hudson River Water Power Co. v. Glens Falls Portland Cement Co., 95 N. Y. Supp. 421, 425, 107 App. Div. 548.

AS IN OTHER CASES

Rev. St. 1899, § 2932, provides that no petition for review of any judgment for divorce shall be allowed, but there may be review of any order or judgment touching the alimony and maintenance of the wife, and the care, custody, and maintenance of the children, or any of them, as in other cases. Held, that the phrase "as in other cases" refers to a petition for review, the sole matter with which the section is concerned, and not to a writ of error, and the section means that there shall not be a petition for review of a divorce judgment, but may be a petition for review of the alimony and custody of children, as in ordinary cases where the petition may be had under sections 777-783 (pages 752-754). Elliott v. Elliott, 115 S. W. 486, 487, 135 Mo. App. 42.

AS INTEREST MAY APPEAR

A rider or mortgage clause attached to a policy of insurance at the time it was delivered, and upon the request of a mortgagee's agent, by its terms made the loss or damage under the policy payable to the mortgagee "as interest may appear." The mortgagee afterwards took a second mortgage on the property without notice to the insurer. Held, that the words "as interest may appear" should be construed to mean such interest as by proper proofs was shown to appear at the time of loss, so that the second mortgage was not a breach of a condition in the policy calling for notice of any change of ownership or increase of hazard, etc. Fenton v. Cascade Mut. Fire Ass'n of Washington, 111 Pac. 343, 344, 60 Wash. 389.

In an indorsement made upon a policy of fire insurance by the agents of the insurer at the request of the insured as follows, "Subject to all the conditions of the policy, loss, if any, payable to D. & S., etc., as their interest may appear," the words "as their interest may appear" were plainly prospective, and referred, not to an interest existing at the time when the indorsement was written, but to such interest as might appear at the time of the loss, if any, without regard to the character of the interest or the time when it may have arisen. The interest referred to is not an interest in the property insured, but is an interest in the payment of the loss, whether predicated upon an interest in the property or otherwise. In this respect the terms of the indorsement may be properly said to be broad and embracive. Atlas Reduction Co. v. New Zealand Ins.

Co., 138 Fed. 497, 504, 71 C. C. A. 21, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 433.

AS IS REQUIRED

To give bond and security or make affidavit in one case "as is required" in another is to give the same kind of a bond or make the same kind of an affidavit. Brown v. State, 52 S. E. 745, 747, 124 Ga. 411 (citing Memmler v. State, 75 Ga. 576).

AS IT ACCRUES

See Payable As It Accrues.

AS IT MAY THEN BE

Where testator devised all of his property to his wife, with a provision that, if his son survived her, he should have one-half of all the property devised to his mother "as it may then be," his interest was not confined to the personal estate. Bailey v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 57 Atl. 58, 59, 208 Pa. 45.

AS JUSTICE MAY REQUIRE

Section 5 of the federal judiciary act (Act March 3, 1875, c. 137, 18 Stat. 472), as amended by Act March 3, 1887, c. 373, § 6, 24 Stat. 555, and Act Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, § 6, 25 Stat. 436, which provides that, if at any time it shall appear that a Circuit Court is without jurisdiction in a suit brought in or removed into such court, the court shall dismiss or remand such suit "as justice may require," does not give the court power to choose the forum for litigants and dispense with rights created by statute from motives of interest or sympathy with the litigants and, where the jurisdiction of a state court has been terminated by the action of a party under the removal statute and jurisdiction exclusively established in the federal court over the cause of action and the parties before it, such court cannot remand the cause for lack of an indispensable party, without whose presence it cannot be determined and which cannot be brought in, but must dismiss it, even though such dismissal may deprive the plaintiff of the right to maintain the suit in any forum because wherever brought it will be removable, and then subject to dismissal for the same reason. Lawrence v. Southern Pac. Co., 180 Fed. 822, 831.

AS LONG AS

The proper words to be used in creating a limitation upon the term granted by a lease are, "while," "as long as," "until," and "during." Vanatta v. Brewer, 32 N. J. Eq. 268, 270.

AS MODIFIED

The phrase "as modified by the provisions of this act," as used in the repealing section of the Elkin's Act, saving the rights of causes then pending and rights which had already accrued, by providing that such causes shall be prosecuted to a conclusion and such rights enforced in a manner heretofore provided by law and "as modified by the provisions of this act," being subjective rather than active in terminology, cannot operate to make the Elkin's Act relate backward, so as to vitalize an order which was a dead letter when made. United States v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 142 Fed. 176, 189.

AS MUCH AS

A deed, the parties to which are citizens of the Choctaw Nation, which conveys "as much as [grantees] can legally hold for themselves or others," together with all the privileges thereunto belonging, as fully and entirely, under the laws of the United States of America, and under the laws and by the customs and usages of the said Choctaw Nation, the grantor "may lawfully convey," conveys the amount the grantees were entitled for their allotments and those of their children under treaty, together with the right of occupancy and improvements and the right to select the allotments, which is equivalent to the equitable title to the land described; the phrase "as much as the grantees can legally hold for themselves or others" meaning their allotments and those of their children, and the phrase "together with all the privileges thereunto belonging as fully and entirely under the laws of the United States of America and under the laws and customs of the said Choctaw Nation, the grantor may lawfully convey" meaning that the grantees take the right of occupancy and improvements, and the right to select the allotments of themselves and their children therefrom. Taylor v. South-erland, 104 S. W. 874, 876, 7 Ind. T. 666.

AS NEAR AS MAY BE

An ordinance requiring tracks to coincide, "as near as may be," with the center of the street, means as nearly as practicable. Longenecker v. Wichita R. & Light Co., 102 Pac. 492, 493, 80 Kan. 413.

The purpose of Bill of Rights, § 9, prohibiting unreasonable searches or seizures, and providing that no warrant to search a place or seize anything shall issue without describing the same "as near as may be," is to define and limit the power to invade the premises of the citizen by a specification of that which he may search for and seize, and, though descriptions must necessarily vary according to the nature of the things on which process is to operate, all description cannot be dispensed with to meet the necessities of cases. It is not intended to prohibit reasonable searches and seizures nor to prescribe a test which shall make impracticable the legitimate use of the search warrant. Hence the phrase "as near as may be." Dupree v. State, 119 S. W. 301, 307, 102 Tex. 455.

The general election law (Comp. Laws 1897, § 3617) provides that the township clerk shall furnish a township election seal of a specified character, and that, after the ballots have been counted, they shall be replaced in the ballot box, which shall be securely sealed, so that it cannot be opened without breaking such seal. Pub. Acts 1909, No. 281, § 2, declares that all primary elections, except as otherwise provided, shall be conducted "as near as may be" as prescribed by law for the regulation of elections, and that the provisions of the general election law shall apply to primary elections as to the providing of ballot boxes, with the necessary equipment and supplies. Sections 36 and 37 declare that, after the close of the poles, ballots shall be counted and preserved as provided by the general election law. Held, that the words, "as near as may be," referred to the provisions of the general election law which could not for any reason be made applicable to primary elections, and that where the primary ballot box was sealed after the ballots were counted by a sealed paper over the opening and the keyholes, without impressing on the wax an election seal, no such seal having been furnished to the election officers, the ballots were not preserved so as to justify a recount. Ritze v. Vivian, 137 N. W. 964, 966, 172 Mich. 423.

A charter providing that on the opening of a street it shall be lawful for the city council to appoint five disinterested freeholders of the city residing "as near as may be," in different wards, commissioners, etc., is not complied with where a street is laid in the third of the city's six wards and two of the commissioners reside in the sixth ward, two in the fourth and one in the second, and where none were appointed from the first, third, and fifth wards. State v. City of Elizabeth, 32 N. J. Law, 357, 359.

Federal practice act

The conformity "as near as may be" to the state practice, enjoined upon the federal courts by Rev. St. § 914, does not prevent a federal court, under the broad powers conferred by section 716, from framing its process and writs so as to give the full relief in one action by way of the forfeiture and penalties prescribed by section 4965 in case of the infringement of a copyright in engravings, although the state practice may afford no form of action in which this double remedy may be enforced. Hills & Co. v. Hoover, 31 Sup. Ct. 402, 405, 220 U. S. 329, 55 L. Ed. 485.

The expression "as near as may be," in Rev. St. U. S. § 914, possesses elasticity, and the expression was doubtless intentionally employed to enable the national tribunal to reject such provisions as would unwisely incumber the administration of the law and tend to defeat the ends of justice. Especially in the matter of the amendment of pleadings has plenary power been conferred by Congress upon those courts, and whether amendments when authorized and made work a waiver of substantial rights or a release of errors should be determined by the principles which obtain in those jurisdictions, and not those which prevail in the state tribunals. Williamson v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co., 141 Fed. 54, 58, 72 C. C. A. 542, 5 Ann. Cas. 402.

The federal conformity statute (Rev. St. § 914) does not require the federal court in the district of Connecticut, in an action against a town, to deviate from its long-established practice, under which service is made by the marshal by having copies of the process made and attested by the clerk, and to follow Gen. St. Conn. 1902, § 571, which provides that in actions against towns a true and attested copy of the process, including the declaration or complaint, shall be served on the clerk or a selectman of the defendant, and which, under the decisions of the state courts, requires the copies to be attested by the officer making the service. Elson v. Town of Waterford, 135 Fed. 247.

AS NEARLY EQUAL AS MAY BE

The Constitution requiring that taxes be "as nearly equal as may be" does not mean as nearly equal as a mathematical calculation can make them, but as nearly equal as is consistent with the general welfare of the people, and an equitable distribution of the public burdens. Such Constitution does not require a theoretical equality at the expense of substantial equity. Tekoa v. Reilly, 91 Pac. 769, 771, 47 Wash. 202, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 901 (quoting State v. Ide, 77 Pac. 961, 35 Wash. 576, 67 L. R. A. 280, 102 Am. St. Rep. 914, 1 Ann. Cas. 634).

AS NOW CONSTITUTED

A town was incorporated by uniting two old towns; the incorporation act providing that the location of the town house should not be changed "unless a majority of each town 'as now constituted' shall otherwise decide." Held, that the phrase "as now constituted" was intended to apply, not to the inhabitants, but to the geographical limits of the two old towns. Anderson v. Parker, 64 Atl. 771, 772, 101 Me. 416.

AS NOW PROVIDED

Rem. & Bal. Code, § 7504, provides that on petition of qualified voters of any municipality having adopted a charter under the laws of the state asking for adoption of a specific charter amendment, providing for any matter within the realm of local affairs, the amendment shall be submitted to the voters at the next regular election occurring thirty days or more after the petition is filed, etc. Section 7506 provides that the act shall not be construed to deprive the city council from submitting proposed charter amendment to the voters "as is now provided," but shall be held to offer a concurrent and additional method for proposing and submitting charter amendments. Held, that the words "as is now provided" related to the charter of a city, not as it was at the time the act was passed, but at the time the amendment was proposed; and hence, where the charter of a city provided for the submission of amendments at a special election to be called for that purpose, such city was exempted from the operation of the requirements that the amendments should be submitted at a general election. State ex rel. Hindley v. Superior Court for Spokane County, 126 Pac. 920, 923, 70 Wash. 352.

AS NOW USED

Where the owner of a water privilege and dam used to work the wheels of a tannery, deeded a part of the land with a right to take water and machinery from his dam, reserving sufficient water at all times to work the tannery wheels "as now used," the water reserved was the quantity and (no more than the quantity) actually used by the tannery at the time when the deed was given. Wyman v. Farrar, 35 Me. 64, 71.

See Costs as of Course.

AS OUR OWN

The words "as our own," in a statement for adoption made by husband and wife reciting that they thereby voluntarily adopted a child "as our own" and agreed to maintain, clothe, and educate the child, must be given a natural meaning, and, so construed, the statement supports a decree of adoption rendered under Rev. St. 1866, tit. 25, c. 2, p. 536, conferring on the child full rights, privileges, and immunities of children born in lawful wedlock. Ferguson v. Herr, 94 N. W. 542, 545, 64 Neb. 649.

AS PER

Plaintiff agreed to sell defendants a half interest in mining property, advances to be made by defendants for litigation and improvements to be applied on the purchase price. By a subsequent contract the advances were to be repaid to defendants, and by a third contract a corporation to which the property had been conveyed assumed and agreed to pay the moneys advanced "as per" the first contract. It was held that the phrase "as per" referred to the advancements and did not qualify "assume and agree to pay," and hence did not abrogate the provisions of the second contract providing for repayment of the advancements. Gisborn v. Milner, 79 Pac. 556, 558, 28 Utah, 438.

AS PRESCRIBED

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1013, providing that the court may of its own motion or on the application of either party direct a trial of the issues of fact by a reference where the trial will require the examination of a long account, etc., and that in an action triable by the court without a jury a reference may be made "as prescribed in this section," etc., the words "as prescribed in this section" refer to where the trial will require the examination of a long account; and in actions in equity, as well as at law, there can be no compulsory reference, unless the trial involves such determination. Roome v. Smith, 107 N. Y. Supp. 1088, 1089, 123 App. Div. 416.

AS REPRESENTED

An instruction relating to an inspection of goods to be made before trade, limiting the right to ascertaining whether the goods were such as were stipulated for, had substantially the same meaning as "as represented," used in the contract, and hence was not erroneous; to "represent" meaning to "describe or portray," and to "stipulate" meaning to "bargain or to contract." Beck v. Budd, 88 N. E. 785, 786, 44 Ind. App. 145.

AS REQUIRED

A finding, reciting that a certain work was not done "as required," may well mean that it was not done properly, or in the manner required by the contract, and cannot be construed to mean that the work was not done at all. Siebert v. Roth, 95 N. W. 118, 119, 118 Wis. 250.

AS SHE MAY NEED

Where a will gave testator's widow the income of certain moneys, with the right to use the principal "as she may need it," she was the sole judge of such necessity. In re Trelease, 96 N. Y. Supp. 318, 319, 49 Misc. Rep. 205 (citing In re Grant, 16 N. Y. Supp. 716, 61 Hun, 624, Id., 83 N. Y. Supp. 193, 86 Hun, 617; In re Parsons, 78 N. Y. Supp. 975, 39 Misc. Rep. 126; Swarthout v. Ranier, 88 N. E. 726, 143 N. Y. 499).

AS SHE MAY WISH

The words "as she may wish," as used in a will providing that testator's property, real and personal, should go to his wife to have, to hold, and to use as she may wish, modify not only the words "to use" but also the words "to have and to hold," and did not restrict the wife's interest to a life estate. Scott v. Scott (Ky.) 105 S. W. 896, 897.

AS SHE THINKS PROPER

A devise of testator's property to his wife, to will to his children "as she thinks proper," vests in the wife a discretion in the exercise of the power conferred, which includes the right of unequal distribution. Allder v. Jones, 56 Atl. 487, 488, 98 Md. 101.

AS SOON AS ABLE

"Some of the cases seem to recognize a difference between the expressions 'as soon as I am able' and 'as soon as I can.' The latter form, being more informal and colloquial, may perhaps be regarded as a shade less definite; but the difference is too slight to justify a refusal to give it the same effect as the former." A written instrument by which the maker acknowledges an indebtedness and agrees to pay it "as soon as I can" is to be considered as a promissory note payable within a reasonable time. Benton v. Benton, 97 Pac. 378, 379, 78 Kan. 366, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 300, 180 Am. St. Rep. 876 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, 7744).

AS SOON AS POSSIBLE

Where a notice is required to be given "as soon as possible," it will meet the requirements, if given with due diligence under the circumstances of the case, and without unnecessary and unreasonable delay, of which the jury are ordinarily to be the judges. Routt v. Dills, 90 Pac. 67, 69, 40 Colo. 50 (quoting 2 May, Ins. [3d Ed.] § 462).

"At once" synonymous

"At once" is synonymous with the words "as soon as possible," and is usually construed to mean within such reasonable time as shall be required under all circumstances for doing the particular thing. It is doubtful whether the same vigilance should be exacted in the acceptance of an offer to exchange or purchase real estate as in transactions relating to the transfer of chattel property. Lucas v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 109 N. W. 191, 193, 131 Iowa, 669, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1016.

Manufacture and delivery of goods

The words "as soon as possible," in a contract for the manufacture of certain specified goods, mean "with all reasonable diligence" or "without unreasonable delay." S. D. Childs & Co. v. Omaha Paraphernalia House, 114 N. W. 941, 942, 80 Neb. 673.

The phrase "as soon as possible," which is equivalent to "with as little delay as possible," means within a reasonable time. A contract requiring plaintiff to fill defendant's orders for lumber "with as little delay as possible" meant within a reasonable time. Wm. Cameron & Co. v. Matthews (Tex.) 124 S. W. 192, 193 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 528).

The phrase "as soon as possible," in a written contract for the delivery of certain bicycles "by April 1st or as soon as possible," had a definite legal meaning, and bound the vendor to fill the order within a reasonable time after April 1st if not then filled. Williams v. Gridley, 96 N. Y. Supp. 978, 980, 110 App. Div. 525; Id., 96 N. Y. Supp. 978, 980, 110 App. Div. 525 (citing Brink v. Hanover Fire Ins. Co., 80 N. Y. 112; Atwood v. Emory, 1 C. B. [N. S.] 110).

A manufacturer, who received an order for a soda fountain to be sent by freight, with "as soon as possible" written on the order form requesting an exact diagram of how the edges were to be finished and where it was to be placed, was not bound to ship it forthwith, but was "entitled to a reasonable time after receiving the order to procure or prepare the apparatus conformable to the order, not to manufacture an entire new one throughout; for it is quite clear from the order itself that many and most of its parts were, or might be, already prepared and equally adapted to an apparatus of any size and for any place, but a reasonable time for procuring or manufacturing the parts necessary to adapt it to the place for which it was ordered, and make it conform to the specifications of the order as given by the defendants." Tufts v. McClure Bros., 40 Iowa, 317, 318.

Defendants ordered a safe from plaintiff to be shipped "as soon as possible." Upon receipt of the order plaintiff had no finished safes on hand, but rushed to completion one in process of manufacture, using all proper diligence, and shipping it 19 days after receipt of the order. It appeared that the customary time for filling an order by the manufacture of a new safe was 30 days. Held, that the shipment was a substantial compliance with the order. Victor Safe & Lock Co. v. O'Neill, 93 Pac. 214, 215, 43 Wash. 176.

Notice of loss

A requirement that proofs of loss must be furnished "as soon as possible" after loss means that they must be presented within a reasonable time, having due regard to all the circumstances. What is a reasonable time is generally a question for the jury. Great American Co-op. Fire Ass'n v. Jenkins, 76 S. E. 159, 160, 11 Ga. App. 784 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 528).

Where an accident policy provided that notice should be given insurer "as soon as possible" after the accident, the phrase "as soon as possible" was equivalent to "immediately" or "forthwith," which means that notice should be sent with reasonable promptness. Insured was injured in a lonely camp in New Brunswick in the early morning by such a burning of his hand as to require amputation two days later. He was far from home and kindred, and the notice of the accident was not sent till the fourth day thereafter. Held, that whether the notice was sent "as soon as possible," pursuant to the policy, was a question for the jury. Everson v. General Accident Fire & Life Assurance Corp., Limited, of Perth, Scotland, 88 N. E. 658, 660, 202 Mass. 169.

If the notice be required to be "forthwith," or "as soon as possible," or "immediately," it will meet the requirement if given with due diligence under the circumstances of the case, and without unnecessary and unreasonable delay, of which the jury are ordinarily to be the judges. To give the word a literal interpretation would in most cases strip the insured of all hope of indemnity, and policies of insurance would become practically engines of fraud. A provision in a policy of life insurance requiring proof of death to be furnished within two months from the date of insured's death, in default of which all claims under the policy should be forfeited, is a condition subsequent, and is fulfilled by a submission of proofs within a reasonable time after insured's death under all the circumstances of the case. Munz v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 72 Pac. 182, 183, 26 Utah, 69, 62 L. R. A. 485, 99 Am. St. Rep. 830 (quoting and adopting 2 May, Ins. § 462, and citing and adopting Kentzler v. American Mutual Accident Ass'n, 60 N. W. 1002, 88 Wis. 589, 43 Am. St. Rep. 934; Solomon v. Continental Fire Ins. Co., 55 N. E. 279, 160 N. Y. 595, 46 L. R. A. 682, 73 Am. St. Rep. 707; Woodmen Accident Ass'n v. Pratt, 87 N. W. 546, 62 Neb. 678, 55 L. R. A. 291, 89 Am. St. Rep. 777; McElroy v. John Hancock Life Ins. Co., 41 Atl. 112, 88 Md. 137, 71 Am. St. Rep. 400; Trippie v. Provident Fund Society, 35 N. E. 316, 140 N. Y. 23, 22 L. R. A. 432, 37 Am. St. Rep. 529).

On a bond being given to secure the performance of a contract by the principal in the bond providing that notice of his failure to perform the contract shall be given to the bonding company "as soon as possible," the notice will meet the requirements if given after due diligence under the circumstances of the case and without unnecessary and unreasonable delay of which the jury are ordinarily to be the judges. To give the notice a literal interpretation would in most cases strip the insured of all hope of indemnity, and policies of insurance would become practically engines of fraud. Routt v. Dils, 90 Pac. 67, 69, 40 Colo. 50.

"The phrases 'immediate notice,' 'notice forthwith,' 'as soon as possible,' 'as soon as practicable,' used in policies of guaranty insurance providing that notice of loss shall be given to the insurer by the insured within a certain designated time, have practically the same meaning, to wit, that the insurer shall, with all promptitude considering the probable amount of the loss, and the probability of the 'risks' endeavoring to escape, give notice to the insurer of the occurrence of the loss." Fidelity & Guaranty Co. of New York v. Western Bank (Ky.) 94 S. W. 3, 5 (quoting and adopting the definition in Frost, Guaranty Ins. § 104).

Order for cars

Under Rev. St. 1895, arts. 4498, 4499, imposing a penalty on a carrier for failure to furnish cars on application, and requiring the application to state the time when they are desired, an application for a car "as soon as possible" was not sufficient to bring the applicant within the statute, since such words specified no time whatever. Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Hughes, 91 S. W. 567, 568,

The phrase "as soon as possible" specifies no time whatever. Where, in an action to recover a penalty, under the statute, for the failure of a railroad company to furnish cars to plaintiff on demand and for damages for the delay, it appeared that the order requested that the cars be delivered "as soon as possible," plaintiff was not entitled to recover the penalty or to recover damages based only on the failure of the company to furnish the cars on such order within the time specified by the statute. Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Shipman (Tex.) 98 S. W. 449.

Promise to pay

A promise to pay "as soon as possible," made after a discharge in bankruptcy, is not a conditional promise, and as such insufficient to support an action on the original demand. Sundling v. Willey, 103 N. W. 38, 40, 19 S. D. 293, 9 Ann. Cas. 644.

AS SOON AS PRACTICABLE

"It is well settled that 'immediately' means 'as soon as practicable,' and, conversely, it is proper to construe 'as soon as practicable' to mean 'immediately.'" The statute relating to a meeting of the state board of equalization and assessment of railroad property provides a day on which the railroad companies shall make returns. It provides a place where the meeting of the state board shall be held, and provides expressly that such meeting shall take place as soon as practicable after the returns are filed. The statute must be construed to furnish notice of the time and place of the meeting of the state board, and where the statute names the time and place personal notice is not necessary. Chicago, B. & Q. R. R. v. Richardson County, 100 N. W. 950, 952, 72 Neb. 482.

An imperative power in executors to sell the residue of the estate "as soon as practicable * * * having in mind the interest of all concerned," does not warrant its compulsory exercise though three years have elapsed, though the land could be sold "without difficulty," and though the executors have refused to sell to beneficiaries at the "fair and reasonable value" of the property; the will permitting purchase at the market value at testator's death as valued by the executors. Walbridge v. Brooklyn Trust Co., 128 N. Y. Supp. 686, 689, 143 App. Div. 502.

"The phrases 'immediate notice,' 'notice forthwith,' 'as soon as possible,' 'as soon as practicable,' used in policies of guaranty insurance providing that notice of loss shall be given to the insurer by the insured within a certain designated time, have practically the same meaning, to wit, that the insurer shall, with all promptitude considering the probable amount of the loss, and the probability of the 'risks' endeavoring to escape, give notice to the insurer of the occurrence of the loss." Fidelity & Guaranty Co. of New York v. Western Bank (Ky.) 94 S. W. 3, 5 (quoting and adopting the definition in Frost, Guaranty Ins. § 104).

AS STIPULATED FOR

An instruction as to inspection, to be made before a trade, limiting the right to ascertaining whether goods were such "as stipulated for," meant substantially the same as "as represented" used in the contract, and was not erroneous. Beck v. Budd, 88 N. E. 785, 786, 44 Ind. App. 145.

AS SUCH

Crimes Act 1905, § 392, denounces as embezzlement the purloining, secreting, etc., of money deposited with or held by a person, firm, corporation, or association, by its officer, agent, or employé, who has access to or possession of the money converted. An affidavit purporting to present a charge of embezzlement alleged that a certain person was treasurer of an Odd Fellows Lodge, "and as such treasurer * * * had control and possession" of a sum of money, "the property of the said * * * order of Odd Fellows," and while such treasurer and so possessed of the money converted it. Held that, although the affidavit does not allege that the money was in possession of such defendant "by virtue of his employment," a "treasurer" is one who is intrusted with money, and "as such" means "in that particular character," so that the allegation that the defendant was a treasurer, and as such had control of the funds which he converted, means that the character of his possession was in his trust relationship, and renders the affidavit sufficient to charge the offense denounced. Frost v. State (Ind.) 99 N. E. 419, 421.

An affidavit, founded on Acts 1905, p. 671, c. 169, § 392, providing that every employé, who, having access to, control, or possession of any money, to the possession of which his employer is entitled, shall, while in such employment, appropriate the same to his own use, shall be guilty of embezzlement, which avers that accused was the employé of a designated association, and "as such employé" had possession of money of the association, which he appropriated to his own use, is fatally bad for failing to aver that he obtained possession of the money by virtue of his employment. Wright v. State, 81 N. E. 660, 168 Ind. 643.

AS THE CASE MAY BE

The statute (Rev. St. 1895, art. 3996) which governs in elections for independent school districts declares, as above shown, that the order for the election shall "state the amount of the tax to be levied or the amount of the bonds to be issued, as the case may be." This does not mean the amount of the tax "or" the amount of the bonds, when the election is to determine, as in this case, whether or not both the bonds shall be issued and the tax levied. The words "as the case may be" mean that, if the purpose is to levy the tax alone, then the amount of the tax shall be stated; if the issuance of the bonds alone, then the amount of the bond; but if the purpose is to determine both, then both the amount of the tax and the amount of the bonds shall be stated in the order. Parks v. West (Tex.) 108 S. W. 466, 471.

AS THE DIRECT AND PROXIMATE CAUSE

The use of the words "by reason of" instead of "as the direct and proximate cause of," was not misleading to the jury, as the words first quoted were the equivalent of the last and perhaps would have been more easily understood by the average jury. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Anglin, 99 S. W. 897, 898, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 41.

AS THEIR INTEREST MAY APPEAR

See As Interest May Appear.

AS THEIR NECESSITIES MIGHT REQUIRE

A will created a trust of $5,000 of the residue of testatrix's estate for five grandchildren, share and share alike, directing the trustee to pay such portion of the principal or interest for the maintenance and education of such children as he in his judgment and discretion might think necessary for them from time to time "as their necessities might require." Held, that the words quoted limited the trustee's discretion to the payment of such items as the wards should need, the intent being that each should receive $1,000 diminished by whatever was necessary for his maintenance and education, and that the trustee therefore did not have discretion to expend for the wards such portion of the total fund as he might deem necessary irrespective of the purpose of the expenditure. Elias v. Loeb, 65 S. E. 724, 725, 83 S. C. 518.

AS THEY SHALL DEEM BEST

See Deem Best.

AS TO

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 2302, providing that neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with, or statement by, testator, intestate, or ward, in an action to recover plaintiff's interest in the community property of their mother, her alleged husband was incompetent to testify that he had never been married to decedent. The phrase "as to" means "so far as it concerns," "as regards," "as respects," "in regard to," "in respect to." Edelstein v. Brown, 100 S. W. 129, 100 Tex. 408, 123 Am. St. Rep. 816.

AS UPON THE TRIAL

Code Civ. Proc. § 2444, providing that on an examination in supplementary proceedings either party may be summoned as a witness in his own behalf, and may produce and examine other witnesses "as on the trial of an action," relates to the manner in which the examination shall be had after the witness has been properly summoned, and not to the manner of summoning the witness to appear by subpoena. Lowther v. Lowther, 100 N. Y. Supp. 965, 967, 115 App. Div. 307.

ASCERTAIN—ASCERTAINMENT

To "ascertain" a matter is to make a thing certain to the mind; to free from obscurity, doubt, or change; to make sure of, to fix, to determine. Wicecarver v. Mercantile Town Mut. Ins. Co., 117 S. W. 698, 702, 137 Mo. App. 247.

Since according to Webster's Dictionary to "ascertain" means "to find out," a reference to a commissioner to "ascertain" in what property, real and personal two persons "were jointly interested," did not amount to a final adjudication as to the existence or nonexistence of joint property, but was a mere direction to the commissioner to ascertain and find out whether there was such property and to report the findings to the court. Coons v. Coons, 56 S. E. 578, 578, 106 Va. 572.

The word "ascertain" is defined as "to make certain to the mind; to free from obscurity, doubt, or chance; to make sure of; fix; to determine;" and also as "to make certain; determine; establish; to establish with certainty; to fix." Under Illinois Central Railroad Charter (Priv. Laws 1851, p. 71) § 18, requiring the company to file accounts of gross receipts to the state, and declaring that, for the purpose of verifying and ascertaining the accuracy of such accounts, full power is vested in the Governor to examine the corporate books and papers and the officers, agents, and employees of the company, under oath, etc., the Governor was not only authorized to fix and determine whether the accounts were correct, but to correct them, if found erroneous, and finally to adjust and settle them. State v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 92 N. E. 814, 832, 246 Ill. 188 (citing Webster's Dict. and Cent. Dict.).

In Code Civ. Proc. § 2472a, as added by Laws 1910, c. 576, providing that the Surrogate's Court has jurisdiction, on a judicial accounting or proceeding for the payment of a legacy, to ascertain the title to any legacy or distributive share, to set off a debt against the same, and for that purpose to ascertain whether the debt exists, the word "ascertain" is used as equivalent to "hear, try, and determine," though in its commonly accepted signification it means simply to become apprised of the existence of an undisputed fact. In re Cary's Estate, 138 N. Y. Supp. 682, 685, 77 Misc. Rep. 602.

A contract of employment which specified a definite salary ascertained the amount payable, within Sayles' Ann. St. 1897, art. 3101, providing that interest shall be allowed at 6 per cent. per annum on written contracts "ascertaining the sum payable," when no rate is specified, and the interest due under the employment contract does not enter into the "amount in controversy," as constituting damages, as affecting the jurisdiction of the county court of a suit on the contract. Carter Grocer Co. v. Day (Tex.) 144 S. W. 365, 366.

ASCERTAINMENT

As used in a petition in an action on an insurance policy averring that under the policy the amount of the loss shall be due and payable 60 days after the "ascertainment" thereof, it signifies that the loss was payable 60 days after its character, amount, and extent had been ascertained by the plaintiff; that is, after plaintiff had determined the character, amount, and extent of the loss. Wicecarver v. Mercantile Town Mut. Ins. Co., 117 S. W. 698, 702, 137 Mo. App. 247.

Code 1896, § 2069, provides that, if an estate is not insolvent, the widow takes only a life estate in the homestead set apart; but, if the estate is ascertained to be insolvent, the absolute fee vests in her. A bill to set aside a judicial sale of land, deeded to complainant by his deceased wife, alleged that no administration was had on the estate of the former husband of the wife, but that after complainant's marriage to her she had the land in controversy set off from her former husband's estate as a homestead by commissioners appointed by the probate court, whose report showed that the estate was insolvent. There was no averment that the lands set apart as the homestead constituted all the real property owned in the state by the deceased husband, or that the homestead was at the time less in value than the amount exempted by law. Held, that the "ascertainment" necessary was a judicial ascertainment, so that the bill did not show the insolvency contemplated by section 2069, and hence did not show that the wife had a fee in the land under that section, but at most only a life estate, which left complainant with no interest in the land after her death. Carroll v. Draughon, 45 South. 919, 922, 154 Ala. 430.

Where defendant by trespass obtains complete possession and control of property belonging to another with the felonious intent to deprive the owner thereof, and carries it or removes it in the slightest degree from the place where he found it, the "asportation" is complete, and the crime of larceny has been committed. *State v. An "assault" is any unlawful attempt by force or violence to do injury to the person of another. State v. Truitt, 62 Atl. 790, 791, 5 Pennewill (Del.) 466.

Under Snyder's Comp. Laws 1909, § 2332, an assault is defined as any willful and unlawful attempt or offer, with force or violence, to do a corporal hurt to another. Clark v. State (Okla.) 106 Pac. 803, 804.

An assault is an intentional infringement on the absolute right of personal security. William Small & Co. v. Lonergan, 105 Pac. 27, 29, 81 Kan. 48, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 976.

In law the term "assault" is a willful attempt to do bodily harm to another and involves a wrongful purpose. In its mere lexiconic sense it means the doing of violence by one to another which may or may not include the element essential to criminality. Holmes v. State, 102 N. W. 321, 323, 124 Wis. 133.

The offense of "assault with intent to murder" is an "assault," which is an attempt with force and violence to do injury to the person of another, inspired or accompanied by an intent to murder. State v. De Paolo (Del.) 84 Atl. 213, 214.

The term "assault" implies an attempt or offer by force or violence to do injury to another. It has been defined as an unlawful setting upon one's person, and assault with intent to commit an offense is sometimes spoken of as an attempt to commit such an offense. State v. Custer, 116 Pac. 507, 85 Kan. 445 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 532).

An "assault" is defined to be any willful and unlawful attempt or offer, with force or violence, to do a corporal hurt to another. To charge this offense, the averments must show that some force or violence was attempted or offered by the accused, and that it was with the purpose to do a corporal hurt or injury to another. Baysinger v. Territory, 82 Pac. 728, 729, 15 Okl. 386.

An "assault" implies repulsion, or at least want of consent on the part of the one assaulted. People v. Dong Pok Yip, 127 Pac. 1031, 1032, 164 Cal. 143.

Where an intoxicated passenger, on being requested by a brakeman to deliver up a pistol which he was brandishing, gave it to his wife, who placed it under her, whereupon the brakeman reached under her for it, it did not constitute an "assault" upon her. Friar v. Orange & N. W. Ry. Co., 101 S. W. 274, 276, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 564.

An "assault" is an attempt, with unlawful force, to inflict bodily injuries on another, accompanied with the apparent present ability to effectuate the attempt if not prevented, the apprehension created in the mind of the assaulted person being more important in determining whether there was an assault than the undisclosed intention of the assaulter; and an instruction that an assault is an action or conduct on the part of defendant, and, for instance, if the jury believe plaintiff's testimony that defendant shook his fist in front of her face angrily and unlawfully, when he was in such proximity to her, as that he could, or might have, struck her, also near enough to produce a feeling on her part that she might be struck, that would be an assault, substantially defined an assault. Howell v. Winters, 108 Pac. 1077, 1078, 58 Wash. 436.

Where the court charged that an assault was an unlawful physical force, partially or fully put in motion, creating a reasonable apprehension of immediate physical injury to a human being, the refusal of a portion of an instruction that any demonstration with a deadly weapon which puts another in fear is an assault, as well as any act done which constitutes menace and the beginning of violence toward another, was not error. Ball v. United States, 147 Fed. 32, 41, 78 C. C. A. 126.

That a police officer came between complainant and another officer who was assaulting him, whether for the purpose of separating them or not, did not constitute an "assault" on complainant. People ex rel. Clinton v. Bingham, 107 N. Y. Supp. 1055, 1057, 123 App. Div. 286.

After a person on private premises has raised a disturbance and been requested to leave, he may be lawfully ejected from such place and no assault is committed if no unnecessary force is employed in such ejection. Hayes v. People, 146 Ill. App. 596, 599.

Battery distinguished

An "assault" is simply an attempt to hurt with the power to hurt, as distinguished from battery, which is where the hurt is done pursuant to the assault. Montgomery v. State, 37 South. 835, 836, 85 Miss. 330.

An assault is an attempt or offer, coupled with present ability, to do hurt to the person of another; while a battery includes an assault, and is the actual striking or shooting of another. State v. Handy (Del.) 66 Atl. 336.

An "assault" is an unlawful attempt, with violence, to do injury to the person of another; and a "battery" is the actual accomplishment of such attempt. State v. Brittingham (Del.) 80 Atl. 242, 243.

By the common law an "assault" must be accompanied by physical force creating a reasonable apprehension of immediate physical injury to a human being, and a "battery" was not committed unless the act alleged to constitute it was committed against the will of the injured party. Ross v. State, 93 Pac. 299, 301, 16 Wyo. 285 (citing 2 Bish. New Crim. Law, §§ 23, 28, 70).

The words "assault" and "battery" each have a clear popular significance as well as statutory definition; an "assault," as defined by statute, being an attempt to commit a violent injury on the person of another, and a "battery" being an unlawful beating of another. So that the charge of an offense of assault and battery necessarily charges accused both with an attempt to commit violent injury on the person and with an unlawful beating of another. Badger v. State, 63 S. E. 532, 533, 5 Ga. App. 477.

Intent

Though defendant was not as considerate and gentle in assisting a person who had become helpless as one more humane or tender might have been, this will not authorize a conviction of "assault" in the absence of evidence of intent to injure. Jordan v. State (Tex.) 84 S. W. 823.

"An 'assault' is an intentional attempt by violence to do an injury to another. If there is no such intention—no present purpose to do such injury—then there is no assault. The intention to do harm is of the essence of an assault, and this intent is to be collected by the jury from the circumstances of the case. In the case of a mere assault, the quo animo is material, as without an unlawful intention there is no assault. St. 1898, § 4222, subd. 5, provides that no action for damages for a personal injury shall be maintained unless within one year after the event causing such damages notice in writing shall be served on the person by whom the damage was caused, stating the time and place of damage, description of the injuries, manner in which they were received, the ground on which the claim is made, and that satisfaction is claimed of such person; and the amendment of 1899 (Laws 1899, p. 540, c. 307) provides that, when an action is brought and a complaint actually served within one year, the notice need not be served. Held, that an action to recover for injuries sustained by being accidentally struck with a beer glass is governed by section 4222, subd. 5, and not by section 4224, subd. 2, providing a limitation of two years for actions for libel, slander, assault, battery, or false imprisonment, and will be barred where such notice of claim was not served nor action begun within one year. Donner v. Graap, 115 N. W. 125, 127, 134 Wis. 523 (quoting and adopting definition in Degenhardt v. Heller, 68 N. W. 411, 93 Wis. 662, 57 Am. St. Rep. 945).

Present ability to commit

By Pen. Code, § 240, an "assault" is an unlawful attempt, coupled with the present ability, to commit a violent injury on the person of another. People v. Wells, 78 Pac. 470, 471, 145 Cal. 138.

An assault is an unlawful attempt, by violence, to do injury to the person of another; the person making the attempt having the present ability to commit the injury. State v. Wilson (Del.) 62 Atl. 227, 230, 5 Pennewill, 77; State v. Truitt (Del.) 62 Atl. 790, 791, 5 Pennewill, 466; State v. Honey (Del.) 80 Atl. 240.

Under the provisions of section 6727, Rev. Codes, an "assault" consists, not only in an unlawful attempt to commit a violent injury upon the person of another, but such unlawful attempt to commit a violent injury must be coupled with the present ability to commit such injury. State v. Yturaspe, 125 Pac. 802, 809, 22 Idaho, 360.

A charge to convict if accused feloniously, willfully, and with malice aforethought, with a deadly weapon, to wit, an ax, did strike at prosecuting witness with intent to murder and kill him, was erroneous, since the acts recited would not be an assault unless, when accused struck at or made an effort to strike prosecuting witness, he was in striking distance; Kirby's Dig. § 1583, defining an assault as an unlawful attempt, coupled with present ability, to commit a violent injury on the person of another. Jones v. State, 116 S. W. 230, 231, 89 Ark. 213.

An "assault" is an inchoate violence to the person of another with present means of carrying the intent into effect. Luther v. State, 98 N. E. 640, 641, 177 Ind. 619.

An actionable "assault" is a wrongful threat to do bodily violence to another, with present ability of the one who threatens to carry such threat into effect. Cressy v. Republic Creosoting Co., 122 N. W. 484, 108 Minn. 349 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 532).

An assault is an attempt to do violence to the person of another, with the means at hand of carrying the intention into execution. State v. Dyer, 58 Atl. 947, 948, 5 Pennewill (Del.) 88.

"It is not always necessary, to constitute an assault, that the person whose conduct is in question should have the present capacity to inflict injury; for if, by threats or a menace of violence, which he attempts to execute, or by threats and a display of force, he causes another to reasonably apprehend imminent danger, and thereby forces him to do otherwise than he would have done, or to abandon any lawful purpose, he commits an assault. It is the apparent imminent danger that is threatened, rather than the present ability to inflict injury, which distinguishes violence menaced from assault." A mere threat or violence menaced, accompanied by insulting or abusive words, as distinguished from violence begun to be executed, is insufficient to constitute an assault. State v. Daniel, 48 S. E. 544, 545, 136 N. C. 571, 103 Am. St. Rep. 970.

Putting in fear of violence

Mere words of solicitation or persuasion do not constitute an "assault." State v. Sullivan, 84 S. W. 105, 109, 110 Mo. App. 75.

At common law "an 'assault' is any unlawful physical force, partly or fully put in motion, creating a reasonable apprehension of immediate physical injury to a human being; as raising a cane to strike him, pointing in a threatening manner a loaded gun at him, or the like." Anderson v. State, 90 S. W. 846, 77 Ark. 37 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Bish. New Crim. Law, § 23).

A conditional threat of injury, accompanied by an act calculated to put the person assailed in fear, and with present ability to inflict the threatened injury, is sufficient to constitute an assault. State v. Mitchell, 116 N. W. 808, 811, 139 Iowa, 455.

To constitute an assault, defined by Rev. Pen. Code, § 310, as any willful and unlawful attempt or offer, with force or violence, to do a corporal hurt to another the attempt or offer to do a corporal hurt to another must be without the consent of the latter, and under such circumstances as to cause a well-founded apprehension of immediate peril. State v. Archer, 115 N. W. 1075, 1076, 22 S. D. 137.

"An 'assault' is an intentional offer or attempt by violence to do an injury to the person of another. There must be an offer or attempt. Mere words, however insulting or abusive, will not constitute an assault; nor will a mere threat or violence menaced, as distinguished from violence begun to be executed. * * * If therefore the defendant had threatened the prosecutor with violence, and the threat had been accompanied by any show of force, such as drawing a sword or knife, or if he had advanced towards the prosecutor in a menacing attitude, even without any weapon, and had been stopped before he delivered the blow, and the prosecutor had been put in fear, and compelled to leave the place where he had the lawful right to be, the 'assault' would have been complete, although he was not at that time in striking distance." State v. Garland, 50 S. E. 853, 855, 138 N. C. 675 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. Daniel, 48 S. E. 544, 136 N. C. 571, 103 Am. St. Rep. 970).

An assault is any attempt or offer with force or violence to do a corporal hurt to another, whether from malice or wantonness, with such circumstances as denote a present intention to do it, coupled with a present ability to effectuate such intention; any unlawful physical force partly or fully put in motion creating a reasonable apprehension of immediate injury to a human being. An assault may be committed without actually touching the person of the one assaulted. People v. Carlson, 125 N. W. 361, 160 Mich. 426, 136 Am. St. Rep. 447.

An "assault" consists of an offer to do great bodily harm, made by a person who is in a position to inflict it; an essential element being a reasonable apprehension of imminent physical injury, so that any movement, however threatening, which does not produce fear of physical harm, is not an assault. Henry v. Cherry & Webb, 73 Atl. 97, 109, 80 R. I. 13, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 991, 18 Ann. Cas. 1006 (citing State v. Hunt, 54 Atl.

937, 25 R. I. 75; Tuberville v. Savage, 1 Mod. 3; 1 Ames, Cas. Torts, 2).

In an action against a sleeping car company for injuries to a passenger assaulted and robbed while asleep in her berth, a charge that the law does not allow a recovery of damages for mental suffering, in the absence of bodily injury, that the passenger could recover such damages as she actually sustained by reason of the assault, that it was not necessary to touch a person to constitute an assault, which was an attempt to apply even the least actual force causing apprehension of immediate peril, and that the amount of damages for mental suffering depended on the circumstances, was not objectionable as making a well-founded apprehension of immediate peril elements of damage, irrespective of whether they were caused by physical injury, or the result of "assault," as technically defined. Calder v. Southern Ry. Co., 71 S. E. 841, 846, 89 S. C. 287, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 894.

An "assault" is an attempt in a rude, insolent, and angry manner unlawfully to touch, strike, beat, or wound another person, coupled with an attempt to carry such attempt into execution. While it is true that under this definition of an assault, as under the common-law definition of that offense, there must be some physical effort to carry into execution the violence menaced before it can be said an assault has been committed, it is also true that the question does not depend upon the degree of effort put forth, nor upon how far the defendant had gone towards the accomplishment of his purpose. The line between violence menaced and violence actually begun may be a narrow one, yet when it is apparent that the defendant's acts, if not stopped or diverted, will lead to the corporal hurt of another, the execution of the purpose has begun and there is a sufficient attempt to satisfy the definition. Consequently, one making threats of violence, advancing towards the person threatened and proceeding to draw a revolver, and ceasing only from the expressed purpose of killing the person threatened when interfered with by third persons, is guilty of "assault." State v. McFadden, 84 Pac. 401, 42 Wash. 1.

Unlawful arrest

Arrest of a person accused of an offense by police officers, after he had been admitted to bail, and the taking of his photograph and measurements by the Bertillon system, constituted an assault, for which those participating therein might be prosecuted under Pen. Code, § 219, defining such offense. People ex rel. Gow v. Bingham, 107 N. Y. Supp. 1011, 1018, 57 Misc. Rep. 66.

Use of dangerous weapon

The pointing of a loaded gun at another by accused in range and shooting distance would constitute an "assault" if nothing more followed; but clearly the pointing of a loaded gun with threatening attitude at one a few feet away by an intruder in one's home, who persistently refuses to leave when requested to by the occupant, is more than a simple assault. O'Neal v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 85 S. W. 745, 746.

"The pointing of a loaded revolver at another, if within range, is an assault; and the same is true if it is not loaded, if the person aimed at is not aware of the fact." Where one points a loaded pistol at another, although he has some reason to think it is not loaded, and he pulls the trigger, causing the pistol to be discharged, and the person assaulted is killed thereby, he is guilty of manslaughter. Ford v. State, 98 N. W. 807, 808, 71 Neb. 246, 115 Am. St. Rep. 591.

2 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 7055 (Pierce's Code, § 1572), defines assault as an attempt in a rude, insolent, and angry manner to touch, strike, beat, or wound another, coupled with the present ability to carry such threat into execution; and Const. art. 1, § 22, provides that in criminal prosecutions accused may demand the nature and cause of the accusation against him. Held, that a complaint charging that defendant on a certain day did commit the crime of assault with a deadly weapon, with intent, etc., and did assault S. with a shotgun, thereby showing a willful and abandoned heart, contrary, etc., did not sufficiently charge a simple assault; the term "to assault" being a conclusion of the pleader, and not an averment of a material fact. State v. Heath, 106 Pac. 756, 757, 57 Wash. 246.

Self-defense

In a prosecution for simple "assault," where defendant's evidence was that he was unlawfully assaulted by a person of greater strength, who had him around the neck and was likely to produce great bodily injury, and there was nothing to show that defendant used extreme means or violence, it was error to charge that one is guilty of an "assault" if, in necessary self-defense, he resorts to extreme means or uses excessive violence. Harmon v. State (Tex.) 84 S. W. 831.

ASSAULT IN THE FIRST DEGREE

Pen. Code, § 217, provides that "assault in the first degree" is an assault with intent to effect death. People v. Huson, 79 N. E. 835, 187 N. Y. 97.

ASSAULT IN THE SECOND DEGREE

Laws 1909, c. 249, § 162, defines an "assault in the second degree" as an assault with an intent to commit a felony. State v. Kruger, 111 Pac. 769, 770, 60 Wash. 542.

ASSAULT IN THE THIRD DEGREE

"Assault in the third degree" is the offense formerly known as "assault and battery." Ex parte Bartholomew, 94 N. Y. Supp. 512, 514, 106 App. Div. 871 (citing Pen. Code N. Y. § 219).

Laws 1909, c. 249, § 163, defines an "assault in the third degree" as an assault not amounting to one in the first or second degree. State v. Kruger, 111 Pac. 769, 770, 60 Wash. 542.

ASSAULT AND BATTERY

See, also, Battery.

Any touching by one person of the person or clothes of another in rudeness or in anger is an assault and battery. Hyde v. Cain, 47 South. 1014, 159 Ala. 364; Seigel v. Long, 53 South. 753, 754, 169 Ala. 79, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1070.

Any application of unlawful force to another is an assault and battery. Luttermann v. Romey, 121 N. W. 1040, 1041, 143 Iowa, 233.

Merely laying one's hand upon another's person does not constitute assault and battery; it being essential that the act be accompanied by anger or other circumstances evincing hostility. Courtney v. Kneib, 110 S. W. 665, 667, 131 Mo. App. 204.

The unlawful striking of one with a hard substance is an "assault and battery." Miles v. United States, 103 S. W. 598, 599, 7 Ind. T. 11.

An instruction that a battery is any unlawful or willful use of force or violence on the person of another is incorrect, as the force or violence must be both willful and unlawful. State v. Magill, 122 N. W. 330, 331, 19 N. D. 131, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 666.

Assault is included in the specific offense of assault and battery, and judgment may follow for the minor offense, though the verdict finds the defendant guilty of assault and battery; for the word "battery" may be rejected as surplusage. State v. Henry, 57 Atl. 891, 893, 98 Me. 561.

In a trial for assault with intent to murder another, the evidence tended to show that accused shot such person intentionally, or that he intentionally discharged the rifle at a place where it was likely some one would be hurt, or that he intentionally pointed the rifle at such person, in violation of Code 1896, § 4342, or that the discharge of the rifle resulted from his gross negligence in handling it, or that he discharged it along or across a public road, in violation of section 5354. Held that, if the battery resulted from any one or several of such acts, accused was guilty of "assault and battery with a weapon." Medley v. State, 47 South. 218, 220, 156 Ala. 78.

An essential element of assault and battery, defined by Kirby's Dig. § 1584, as the unlawful striking or beating of the person of another, is a battery, and the material fact of the battery must be alleged in the indictment. Jones v. State, 139 S. W. 1126, 1128, 100 Ark. 195.

"Battery" is defined by Pen. Code 1895, § 102, as the unlawful beating of another. A charge of "assault and battery" is a charge of an attempt to commit a violent injury on the person of another, and an unlawful beating of another, and every assault and battery is presumed to be unlawful. An accusation of the offense of assault and battery, charging after the formal statutory beginning that on a day named accused "with force and arms did assault and beat" a person named contrary to the law, good order, peace, and dignity of said state, charges an assault and battery, though the word unlawful is not used. Badger v. State, 63 S. E. 532, 533, 5 Ga. App. 477.

Intent

Generally, the intent to injure is an essential element of the offense of assault and battery; an "assault" being an attempt or offer with force and violence to do a corporal hurt to another, and the touching of another in an angry, revengeful, rude, or insulting manner being a "battery." McGee v. State, 58 South. 1008, 1009, 4 Ala. App. 54.

ASSAULT ON A WOMAN

It is an "assault on a woman" to fondle or to lay hands on her without her consent. Combs v. State, 116 S. W. 595, 596, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 332.

ASSAULT TO COMMIT OTHER OFFENSE

"An assault to commit another offense," within Pen. Code 1895, art. 611, providing that an assault to commit any other offense is constituted by facts which bring it within the definition of an assault coupled with intent to commit such other offense, is an assault that is intended to be or is in its nature the procuring or instrumental means of accomplishing or carrying out the completed act. Cromeans v. State (Tex.) 129 S. W. 1129, 1131.

ASSAULT WITH DANGEROUS OR DEADLY WEAPON

To constitute an "assault with a dangerous weapon," the only specific intent necessary is the intent embraced in the act of making an assault with a dangerous weapon, which is merely an intentional and unlawful use of a dangerous weapon by means of which an assault is committed with such weapon. State v. Erickson, 110 Pac. 785, 786, 57 Or. 262.

Holding a loaded pistol within a few inches of another's face, pointed directly at him, where the act is accompanied by threatening language, warrants a conviction of an "assault with a deadly weapon," although defendant's intention was to assault a different person. People v. Wells, 78 Pac. 470, 471, 145 Cal. 138.

The pointing of an unloaded gun at another, accompanied by a threat to shoot him, without any attempt to use it otherwise, does not constitute an "assault with a deadly weapon." People v. Montgomery, 114 Pac. 792, 793, 15 Cal. App. 315.

A verdict of assault and battery may be based upon evidence showing personal violence under circumstances in aggravation or mitigation of the offense, relevant to the penalty, which need not be averred. One was indicted for felonious assault with intent to kill, being armed with a dangerous weapon. The jury rendered a verdict of guilty of "assault and battery with a dangerous weapon." The words in the verdict meant no more than assault and battery. State v. Henry, 57 Atl. 891, 893, 98 Me. 561.

On an indictment for feloniously, maliciously, and unlawfully beating and wounding with a dangerous weapon called a club, with intent to maim, disable, and kill, the jury returned a verdict finding that defendant is "not guilty of the felonious and malicious assault charged in the within indictment with the intent therein charged, but we do find him guilty of the unlawful assault therein charged with the intent therein also charged." Held, that the word "assault" in the verdict refers to the beating and wounding charged, and does not mean the common-law offense of assault. State v. Arbruzino, 68 S. E. 269, 270, 67 W. Va. 534.

In a prosecution for assault, where the weapon used was not a deadly one in itself, the question whether the assault was one with a deadly weapon depends on its use; and an assault with an ordinary saw was not an "assault with a deadly weapon," where the injuries inflicted were very slight. Fisher v. State (Tex.) 151 S. W. 544, 545.

ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO COMMIT FELONY

Under Rev. Pen. Code, §§ 297, 298, 310, defining an "assault" as any willful and unlawful attempt, with force or violence, to do a corporal hurt to another, and providing that an "aggravated assault" must be perpetrated with the intent to commit a felony, an information that accused feloniously assaulted a married woman with intent to have unlawful voluntary sexual intercourse with her, does not charge an assault with intent to commit a felony, since, if the unlawful act had been committed, both parties would have been guilty of adultery, under section 338, which requires the concurrence of consenting parties. State v. Archer, 115 N. W. 1075, 1076, 22 S. D. 137.

ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO COMMIT MANSLAUGHTER

To constitute an assault with intent to commit manslaughter the assault must be made with intent to commit manslaughter on the person of the assaulted person, and, if such intent was directed against a third person not named in the indictment, the conviction of assault with intent to commit manslaughter will be set aside. Johnson v. State, 43 South. 779, 780, 53 Fla. 45 (citing Williams v. State, 26 South. 184, 41 Fla. 295, 302).

If an assault be committed unlawfully and with intent to take life, but not from a premeditated design, and not from any act imminently dangerous to another, and evincing a depraved mind regardless of human life, it would be an assault with intent to commit manslaughter. Feagle v. State, 46 South. 182, 183, 55 Fla. 13.

ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO COMMIT MURDER

In order to constitute an assault to murder, it must be made with the specific intent to kill, as well as upon malice aforethought. Williams v. State (Tex.) 77 S. W. 447.

The offense of "assault with intent to murder" is an "assault," which is an attempt with force and violence to do injury to the person of another, inspired or accompanied by an intent to murder. State v. De Paolo (Del.) 84 Atl. 213, 214.

To constitute the offense of assault with intent to murder, there must be an assault with a specific intent to kill actuated by malice; but many cases may arise where there is a specific intent to kill, and yet where the assault would not be an assault with intent to kill where no killing resulted. Young v. State (Tex.) 151 S. W. 1046, 1047.

The gist of the offense of the crime of "assault with intent to commit murder" in the first degree consists in the intent with which the alleged assault is made. Lindsey v. State, 48 South. 87, 89, 53 Fla. 56 (citing Williams v. State, 26 South. 184, 41 Fla. 295, text 297; Gray & Hopkins v. State, 33 South. 295, 44 Fla. 436; Drummer v. State, 33 South. 1008, 45 Fla. 17; McDonald v. State, 35 South. 72, 46 Fla. 149).

The offense of "assault with intent to murder" embraces an "assault," which is an attempt with force and violence to do injury to the person of another, and also embraces an intent to commit murder. State v. Moore (Del.) 74 Atl. 1112, 1114, 1 Boyce, 142; State v. Johnson (Del.) 78 Atl. 605.

The crime of "assault with intent to murder" embraces not only an assault, viz., an attempt with force and violence to do injury to the person of another, but in addition an intent to commit murder. State v. Lee (Del.) 74 Atl. 4, 5, 1 Boyce, 18.

To constitute an "assault with intent to murder," the assault must be such that, if successful, the crime would be murder. State v. McGuire, 80 Atl. 761, 765, 84 Conn.

470, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1045; State v. Mills (Del.) 69 Atl. 841, 842; 6 Pennewill, 497; Burris v. State, 58 S. E. 545, 2 Ga. App. 418.

The essentials of an "assault with intent to commit murder" are an assault which is an attempt with force to do injury to the person of another and also which must be committed with intent to murder, so that, if the injured party had died, his assailant would have been guilty of murder. State v. Stockley (Del.) 82 Atl. 1078, 1079.

An assault which, if it had been completed by the death of a victim, would have been murder in either the first or second degree, constitutes the crime of "assault with intent to commit murder." State v. Pepe (Del.) 76 Atl. 367, 369, 1 Boyce, 232.

Under the Code, defining assault with intent to murder, such offense includes all lesser degrees of personal violence, so that, under an indictment for that offense, the court, in submitting aggravated assault, may submit either ground that may be developed by the evidence directly growing out of the assault charged, including assault by an adult male on a female, though not specifically alleged in the indictment. Lofton v. State, 128 S. W. 384, 385, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 270.

An "assault," as included within the offense of assault with intent to murder, is an attempt by force and violence to do injury to another's person. State v. Hill (Del.) 82 Atl. 221, 222.

An assault accompanied with the specific intent to kill is an "assault with intent to murder" if malice is present, and the infliction of injury on the person assaulted is not necessary to a conviction. Olds v. State, 113 S. W. 272, 273, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 411.

Whoever unlawfully assaults another with intent to kill, but not from a premeditated design to effect his death, and the assault is accompanied by an act imminently dangerous to another, and evincing a depraved mind regardless of human life, is guilty of an assault with intent to commit murder in the second degree. Feagle v. State, 46 South. 182, 183, 55 Fla. 13.

The offense of "assault with intent to murder" was held to be properly defined in an instruction as "an assault with a weapon likely to produce death, with intent unlawfully, willfully, feloniously, and by malice aforethought to kill and murder." Napper v. State, 51 S. E. 592, 593, 123 Ga. 571.

An "assault with intent to murder" is an assault with intent to commit a felony, and an indictment charging the commission of an assault with intent to commit the highest degree of unlawful homicide likewise includes the charge of an assault with intent to commit the same felony in all its degrees, as the degrees do not constitute separate and distinct offenses, but merely degrees of the same offense, or lesser offenses of the same nature, but necessarily included in the higher. Pyke v. State, 36 South. 577, 578, 47 Fla. 93.

The intent essential to constitute an "assault with intent to murder" relates to the condition of the mind of accused, and it may arise from improper motives, as from hatred toward the person assaulted, or from an evil design in general, a wanton and depraved spirit, a mind devoid of social duty and fatally bent on mischief. To constitute an "assault with intent to murder" within Gen. St. § 1146, the assault must be made with intent to kill, and when an assault is actuated by malice, no matter how short a time it existed previous to the forming of the intent to kill, the assault committed is assault with intent to murder. State v. McGuire, 80 Atl. 761, 765, 84 Conn. 470, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1045.

To constitute an "assault with intent to murder" within Gen. St. § 1146, the assault must be made with malice aforethought, and when an assault is actuated by malice, no matter how short a time it existed previous to the forming of the intent to kill, the malice is "malice aforethought." State v. McGuire, 80 Atl. 761, 765, 84 Conn. 470, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1045.

Evidence that defendant entered prosecutor's house at night, under circumstances showing burglary, and that prosecutor discovered him therein and attempted to make him get out, whereupon he assaulted prosecutor with a large knife, cutting him severely, is sufficient to sustain a conviction of "assault with intent to murder." Martins v. State (Tex.) 84 S. W. 827.

To shoot at another is not necessarily an "assault with intent to murder." Cooper v. State, 132 S. W. 355, 356, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 411.

Shooting at an officer without killing him to prevent an illegal arrest is prima facie not an assault with intent to murder, but the crime of shooting at another defined by Pen. Code 1895, § 113, or assault and battery. Jenkins v. State, 59 S. E. 435, 436, 3 Ga. App. 146.

Where, if death had resulted from the assault of accused, the crime would have been manslaughter, and not murder, accused is not guilty of assault with intent to commit murder. State v. Johnson (Del.) 78 Atl. 605.

Defendant was not guilty of assault with intent to murder his wife if the assault was committed so that, if death had occurred, the homicide would have been manslaughter, or if he struck her in defense of his person to protect himself from death or serious bodily injury. Bagley v. State (Tex.) 103 S. W. 874, 875.

Under Rev. St. 1892, § 2403, and Gen. St. 1906, § 3230, providing that whoever commits an assault on another with intent to commit any felony punishable with death or imprisonment for life shall be punishable by imprisonment in the State Prison, not exceeding 20 years, it is not necessary to the crime of assault with intent to murder that assault be made with a deadly weapon. Lindsey v. State, 43 South. 87, 89, 53 Fla. 56.

Where two persons join in a fight with another who stabs one of them and runs away, and the two others pursue him, at a time when they are in no immediate danger, real or apparent, of loss of life or great bodily harm, and fall upon him, stabbing him until they are separated by bystanders, they are guilty of assault and battery with intent to kill and murder. Canterbury v. State, 43 South. 678, 679, 90 Miss. 279.

ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO COMMIT RAPE

See Attempt to Commit Rape.

"The word 'assault' as used in Pen. Code, § 220, providing that every person who assaults another with intent to commit rape, etc., implies force by the assailant and resistance by the one assaulted." People v. Collins, 91 Pac. 158, 159, 5 Cal. App. 654.

The gravamen of the offense of assault with intent to rape is the intent with which the assault was made, which intent must be shown to have so possessed accused that his determination was to consummate the rape, regardless of resistance and want of consent. Bell v. State, 54 South. 799, 61 Fla. 6.

"The crime of assault and battery is not an essential element of assault with intent to commit rape; for the latter offense may be committed without actual violence to or contact with the person assaulted, and upon trial for assault with intent to rape the accused can be convicted of assault and battery only where the indictment, in addition to the charge of assault, sets forth facts amounting to a battery." State v. Miller, 100 N. W. 334, 335, 124 Iowa, 429 (citing State v. Hutchinson, 64 N. W. 610, 95 Iowa, 566, 569).

"Assault" does not convey the idea that the act of sexual intercourse was against the will of the female. A man may put his arms around a woman or lay his hands on her unlawfully and against her will, intending to arouse her passions and to secure her consent to sexual intercourse. She may resist for a time and finally yield. In such case there would be no rape, though at any moment prior to the time of consent he would be guilty of an assault on her. Moreover, the term "assault," used in connection with rape, is a generic term used to describe what the prisoner did. Beard v. State, 97 S. W. 667, 671, 79 Ark. 293, 9 Ann. Cas. 409.

By Kirby's Dig. § 1583, "assault" is an unlawful attempt, coupled with present ability, to commit a violent injury on the person of another. Held, that where defendant, meeting a female child in a railroad station, kissed her and tried to pull her into an alley, but on her commencing to cry released her, there was no "assault with intent to rape." Anderson v. State, 90 S. W. 846, 847, 77 Ark. 37.

Pen. Code, § 240, defines assault to be an unlawful attempt, coupled with a present ability to commit a violent injury on the person of another. Held that, where defendant, charged with assault with intent to commit rape, was shown to be sexually impotent, he might be convicted of assault on evidence that his acts were such as to create a well-founded fear on the part of prosecutrix that he intended to rape her. People v. Bradbury, 91 Pac. 497, 151 Cal. 675.

Under the statutes of Arizona, defining rape as "an act of sexual intercourse accomplished with a female not the wife of the perpetrator * * * where she resists, but her resistance is overcome by force or by violence," an indictment in a prosecution for assault with intent to commit rape charging defendant with making an assault on prosecutrix with intent to commit rape upon her, and without her consent, by force, threats, and violence attempting to have sexual intercourse with her, was defective in failing to charge that the intent was to accomplish the act of sexual intercourse without prosecutrix's consent, and against her resistance, since it was not sufficient that defendant attempted sexual intercourse with the woman without gaining her consent, but he must have accompanied the attempt with the intention of pressing his threats or violence to the point of overcoming her active resistance. Daggs v. Territory, 94 Pac. 1106, 11 Ariz. 446.

Under Pen. Code 1911, art. 1063, defining "rape" as the carnal knowledge of a female person under the age of 15 years other than the wife of the person, with or without her consent, and article 1008, defining "assault" as any unlawful violence on the person of another with intent to injure him and that any attempt to commit a battery or any threatening gesture showing an immediate intention coupled with an ability to commit a battery, an assault to rape a child under 15 may be committed without force, and proof that accused lay in wait for prosecutrix, a child under 15, as she was going to school, and after making an indecent proposal to her chased her until she outran him, was sufficient to sustain a conviction of assault with intent to rape. Gage v. State (Tex.) 151 S. W. 565, 567.

A solicitation or demand by a man that a woman submit to sexual intercourse with him, with the intention of enforcing his demand by violence, while a heinous moral offense, did not constitute the crime of an assault with intent to ravish; where he made no demonstration or effort to carry out his intention, but fled at the prospect of resistance; no "assault" having taken place. State v. Sanders, 75 S. E. 702-704, 92 S. C. 427, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 424.

Under Pen. Code 1895, § 633, providing that "rape is constituted by the carnal knowledge of a woman without her consent, obtained by force, threats or fraud," and section 634, providing that the force "must have been such as might reasonably be supposed sufficient to overcome resistance, taking into consideration the relative strength of the parties and other circumstances of the case," where prosecutrix was a passenger in a sleeping car occupied by 18 white people, and during the night had arisen and was sitting in her berth, awaiting transfer to another car, acts of the porter of the car in catching hold of a watch pinned on her breast and laying his hand on her wrist and asking her to follow him to the ladies' dressing room would not constitute force sufficient to authorize conviction of assault with intent to commit rape. Collins v. State, 107 S. W. 852, 854, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 455.

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 21, providing that the word "woman" includes a female of any age, and article 608, punishing a person assaulting a woman with intent to rape, and article 611, providing that an assault to commit any other offense is constituted by the existence of facts which bring the offense within the definition of an assault coupled with an intention to commit such other offense, solicitation accompanied by the expectation of consent and laying on of hands without the use of such force as indicates a purpose to obtain intercourse at the very time is not an assault with intent to rape a female under the age of consent, but where a man puts his hand on a female child and at the time intends instantly to have intercourse with her without suspension of action, and without waiting to ascertain whether or not she will consent, and thereby places her in such attitude that the final act may be performed, whether the purpose is to place her in such attitude by force alone or by her free co-operation, he has gone far enough to commit an assault with intent to rape. The word "assault," in Pen. Code 1895, arts. 608, 611, punishing an assault with intent to rape, but declaring that an assault to commit any other offense is constituted by facts which bring it within the definition of an assault coupled with an intention to commit such other offense, means the commission of unlawful violence with an intent to injure, and any violence except that permitted by article 490, defining violence not amounting to an assault, is unlawful, and an "assault with intent to rape" is the use of violence forbidden by law, coupled with an immediate intent to have present carnal intercourse forbidden by law, and when the female is under the age of consent she cannot consent to the use of unlawful violence so as to prevent the act from amounting to an assault with intent to rape. Accused, 16 years of age, met prosecutrix, 14 years of age, and solicited her to have intercourse with him. She refused. He then placed his hand on her hand, and she jerked it away. He then took hold of her arm; she again jerked loose and left him. He made no attempt to pursue her. The parties had known each other for years. Held not to constitute an assault with intent to rape. Cromeans v. State (Tex.) 129 S. W. 1129, 1132.

Rape distinguished

"Assault with intent to rape" may justly be termed an incompleated rape. If there is a complete entry of the private parts of the male into those of the female, it is rape. If there is not a complete entry, the other steps having taken place, it is an assault with intent to rape. Bourland v. State, 93 S. W. 115, 116, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 197.

ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO DO GREAT BODILY INJURY

In a prosecution for assault with intent to commit great bodily injury, the form of the verdict prepared by the court read "assault with intent to commit great bodily injury," and the verdict, as actually returned, read "assault with intent to do great bodily injury." The form of the verdict was sufficient, as no one could possibly be misled by the variation in terms. State v. Leuhrman, 99 N. W. 140, 142, 123 Iowa, 476.

ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL

To constitute the crime of assault with intent to kill, there must be malice, either express or implied. Satterwhite v. State, 100 S. W. 70, 73, 82 Ark. 64.

The gravamen of the offense of assault with intent to kill is the intent with which the assault was made, and evidence that the accused shot at one person and that the shot took effect upon another is not sufficient. State v. Williamson, 102 S. W. 519, 520, 203 Mo. 591, 120 Am. St. Rep. 678.

To justify a conviction of "assault with intent to kill," the state must prove that the assault was made with such intent, and not accidentally, and with malice, and not as a result of a sudden heat of passion caused by a provocation sufficient to make the passion irresistible, so that if death had ensued the crime would have been murder in the first or second degree. Clardy v. State, 131 S. W. 46, 47, 96 Ark. 52.

Ind. T. Ann. St. 1899, § 4352, provides that every white person who shall make an assault on an Indian or other person within the Indian country with a gun, pistol, or other deadly weapon with intent to kill or maim shall be punishable, etc. Held that, to sustain a conviction for assault with intent to kill, it was only necessary to show facts sufficient to have convicted defendant of some degree of homicide had death ensued: the prosecution not being required to es-establish the elements of murder. Tyner v. United States, 108 Pac. 1057, 1058, 2 Okl. Cr. 689.

A publication charging a person with a statutory offense, designating it as "assault and battery with intent to kill," is actionable, though the offense was not charged in the words of the statute as "assault with intent to kill," since the words, construed according to their plain and natural import, convey to readers the idea that the person charged has committed the offense. Gordon v. Journal Pub. Co., 69 Atl. 742, 744, 81 Vt. 287.

See Felony.

ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO ROB

Pen. Code, § 950, requires an information to contain "a statement of the acts constituting the offense, in ordinary and concise language, and in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended"; and section 952, subd. 3, provides that "the particular circumstances of the offense charged, when they are necessary to constitute a complete offense" must be stated. Section 211 defines robbery as "the felonious taking of personal property in the possession of another, from his person or immediate presence, and against his will, accomplished by means of force or fear." Section 240 defines an assault as "an unlawful attempt, coupled with a present ability, to commit a violent injury on the person of another." Held, that an information under section 220, providing that "every person who assaults another with intent to commit * * * robbery * * * is punishable," etc., need not allege how or by what means the assault was made, nor set forth the means used to constitute force or excite fear, nor that the prosecuting witness was in possession of personal property, and that an information was sufficient which charged that the assault was made with force and violence, and that the intent was to feloniously, and by force, violence, and intimidation, steal, take, and carry away the property of the prosecuting witness, and against his will. People v. Holden, 109 Pac. 495, 496, 13 Cal. App. 354.

Evidence held not to show an "assault with intent to rob," within Pen. Code 1895, art. 611, providing that an assault with intent to commit any other offense is constituted by the existence of facts which bring the offense within the definition of an assault, coupled with an intent to commit such other offense. Walters v. State, 118 S. W. 543, 544, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 10.

ASSEMBLAGE—ASSEMBLY

See General Assembly; Unlawful Assembly.

Member of assembly as city officer, see City Officer.

See, also, Public Gathering.

A political convention is an assemblage within Const., Bill of Rights, art. 1, § 19, declaring that the right of assembly shall never be abridged. State ex rel. Ragan v. Junkin, 122 N. W. 473, 474, 85 Neb. 1, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 839.

Defendant, who, by loud talking, disturbed a sleight of hand performance given at a schoolhouse under an arrangement with the trustees, is not guilty of violating Pen. Code 1910, § 424, such a meeting not being "a public school, private school, or Sunday school, or any assemblage or meeting of any such school," within the statute. Harwell v. State, 72 S. E. 936, 10 Ga. App. 115.

Where a congregation "assembled" for divine worship after the morning service had adjourned for dinner to be served on the church grounds, with the intention of returning after the meal to the churchhouse for an afternoon service, in contemplation of the statute the congregation had not dispersed while partaking of their dinner, but were still "assembled" for the purpose of divine worship. Folds v. State, 51 S. E. 305, 307, 123 Ga. 167.

ASSENT

See Mutual Assent.

An assent is evidenced by a proposition emanating from one side and acceptance of it on the other, such proposition and acceptance together constituting what is called a meeting of the minds, and, where a meeting of the minds does not appear, there is no contract. Wm. J. Lemp Brewing Co. v. Secor, 96 Pac. 636, 639, 21 Okl. 587.

Const. art. 8, § 6, declares that no city shall become indebted for any purpose in excess of 1½ per cent. of the taxable property without the assent of three-fifths of the voters voting at an election held for that purpose. Held, that the word "assent" as there used implies a vote cast with his approval of the object sought, and to require that the election shall be held in such a way as to obtain a free expression of the voter's approval or disapproval of the object of the contemplated indebtedness. Blaine v. City of Seattle, 114 Pac. 164, 165, 62 Wash. 445, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 315.

Act March 29, 1907, penalizing every officer of any bank who "receives any deposits" knowing that the bank is insolvent, does not penalize the act of assent to the reception of a deposit, and, where a receiving teller of an insolvent incorporated bank received a deposit, the president, though knowing of the insolvency, cannot be punished on the theory that he assented to the reception of the deposit; the word "receives" involving an affirmative act, and does not include an assent to the reception involving only a mere passive acquiescence. Ex parte Rickey, 100 Pac. 134, 139, 31 Nev. 82, 185 Am. St. Rep. 651.

An indictment charging the accused with assenting to the receipt of bank deposits was framed under Act March 13, 1909 (St. 1909, c. 92), which by section 1 makes it a crime for a bank officer to receive deposits or to assent to the receipt of deposits when the bank is known to be insolvent, and by section 2 provides that any officer of an incorporated bank, having authority to close the bank or to prevent the receipt of deposits, who shall not exercise such authority when he knows that the bank is insolvent, shall be deemed to have assented to the receipt of deposits. The indictment contained no allegations that the accused had any authority to close the bank, or to prevent the receipt of deposits, or that the accused personally received deposits knowing the bank to be insolvent. Held that, under section 2, considered with the direct definition of section 1 as to the offense of assenting to the receipt of deposits, the "assent" required by the statute implied permission, and presupposed some inherent power to withhold assent. Ex parte Smith, 111 Pac. 930, 938, 33 Nev. 466; Ex parte Griffin, 111 Pac. 939, 33 Nev. 490.

ASSERTION OF TITLE BY THE COMMONWEALTH

The issuance of a patent at the instance of a patentee is not an "assertion of title by the commonwealth," but her mere grant or her right as it exists, so that, if one has acquired title by right of possession and lapse of time, he cannot be ousted by the patentee. Asher v. Howard, 91 S. W. 270, 272, 122 Ky. 175.

ASSESS

See Duly Assessed; Erroneously Assessed; Legally Assessed; Persons Assessed.

"Assess" means "to adjust or fix a proportion of a tax which each person of several liable to it has to pay; to apportion a tax among several; to distribute taxation in a proportion founded on the proportion of burden and benefit; to place a value upon property for the purpose of apportioning a tax." State v. Camp Sing, 44 Pac. 516, 519, 18 Mont. 128, 32 L. R. A. 635, 56 Am. St. Rep. 551 (quoting and adopting definition in Black's Law Dict.; citing Rap. & L. Law Dict.; Cent. Dict.; Anderson's Law Dict.).

The word "assessed," used in the notice under Section 17, which sets forth the method by which the list of persons not returning an inventory is made up, is not to be construed in a technical sense, but is to have the meaning that "plain people give it in dealing with questions touching the making of a grand list." Meserve v. Folsom, 20 Atl. 926, 927, 62 Vt. 504.

For land to be "assessed" within the act of 1889 for dissolution of a drainage district (Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 42, § 191), authorizing dissolution on petition of the owners of a certain proportion of the "assessed" land of the district, it is not necessary that the costs and benefits shall have been apportioned under Farm Drainage Act, § 26 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 42, § 100); but it being clear, from sections 21, 22, and 59 of said act (sections 95, 96, 134), in connection with the remainder thereof, that it was intended that the classification of the lands should be treated as the special assessment thereof, all land classified above zero, as to which no appeal has been taken, is "assessed" land. Cosby v. Barnes, 96 N. E. 282, 283, 251 Ill. 460.

The term "assessed" means the amount to be imposed on the property and collected. To assess is to rate or to fix the proportion which every person has to pay of any particular tax; the determination by the taxing body of the tax to be paid by each individual, and adjustment of the shares of a contribution by several toward a common beneficial object according to the benefit received; to set, fix, or charge a certain sum upon, by way of tax, as to assess each individual in due proportion—the tax being regarded as assessed when it is apportioned. Risley v. City of Utica, 168 Fed. 737, 751.

While ordinarily the terms "assess" and "assessment" apply only to ad valorem taxation, when used in respect of tax laws, as used in an act providing that the clerk of the county court shall collect all privilege taxes, declaring that any property or properties included in the act shall be back-assessed or reassessed for the period provided by law, when the same have been omitted from or escaped taxation, or when the owner or his agent fails or refuses to list the property to the assessor, as required by law, and requiring the assessor to make and return to the clerk of the county court the name of each person engaged in any business liable to a privilege tax, the word "assess" means simply the listing of names of persons exercising privileges subject to taxation, and the clerk of the county court is entitled to back-assess or reassess privilege taxes that have escaped listing and collection. Fopplano v. Speed, 82 S. W. 222, 223, 113 Tenn. 167.

As fixing value

In Const. art. 18, § 5, vesting in municipal corporations power to assess and collect taxes, the term "assess" includes the valuation of property, as well as the levying of the rate of taxation. State v. Eldredge, 76 Pac. 337, 340, 27 Utah, 477.

To "assess property" is to place a value on it for taxation. While an action against the Louisiana state board of appraisers to reduce an assessment must be brought at Baton Rouge, the domicile of that body, still an action to have an assessment made by it, declared a nullity, may be brought in the parish where the property sought to be exempted is situated. New Orleans Great Northern R. Co. v. Thomas, 55 South. 737, 788, 129 La. 128.

When valued by the assessor, personal property is "assessed," within the meaning of Sess. Laws 1903, p. 74, c. 59, § 8, providing that personal property taxes shall be a lien upon all real estate and personal property from the date the assessment is made. City of Puyallup v. Lakin, 88 Pac. 578, 579, 45 Wash. 368.

As levy

In Const. art. 13, § 5, authorizing the vesting in municipal corporations power to "assess" and collect taxes for all the purposes of the corporation, the term "assess" has a comprehensive meaning and includes the levying of the rate of taxation. State v. Eldredge, 76 Pac. 337, 840, 27 Utah, 477.

The word "assessed," as used in a franchise granted by a municipality to a company to construct and operate a waterworks system within the municipality, which provides that the municipality shall pay in municipal taxes which may be assessed against the company for the first ten years of the franchise, is used in the sense of a levy of taxes, rather than the mere determination to raise money by taxation—the proceedings requisite to charge property or the owners thereof with the payment of taxes, not the assessment of property for taxation. The term "assess taxes" is commonly used as synonymous with the levying of taxes, as descriptive of the steps in their entirety necessary to charge specific property with taxes, or the owner with the payment thereof. There is no such thing as the assessment of a tax in the mere sense of assessment of property for taxation. Town of Washburn v. Washburn Waterworks Co., 98 N. W. 539, 541, 120 Wis. 575 (citing Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Forest County, 70 N. W. 77, 95 Wis. 80).

Levy distinguished

To "assess" a tax is to adjudge and determine what proportion of his property the taxpayer shall contribute to the public. To "levy" a tax is to make a record of this determination, and to extend the assessment against the taxpayer's property. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Klein, 71 N. W. 1069, 1071, 52 Neb. 258.

As used in Code Civ. Proc. § 325, requiring an adverse occupant to pay all the taxes which have been levied and assessed upon the land, the word "levied" refers to the act of the board of supervisors in making the levy, and the word "assessed" refers to the act of the assessor in making the assessment. The statute does not require the payment of taxes assessed before the occupancy, and levied afterwards, but only such taxes as were both levied and assessed during the occupancy. Allen v. McKay, 52 Pac. 828, 829, 881, 120 Cal. 332.

List distinguished

"The words 'list' and 'assess' are used in the chapter relating to taxation in a somewhat different sense, but always as a part of the same process of getting the property upon the tax roll. * * * The title of the act says 'to list and collect taxes thereon,' and surely this phrase includes an assessment." Beresheim v. Arnd, 90 N. W. 506, 508, 117 Iowa, 83.

Tax synonymous

The words "assessed" and "taxed," in Sess. Laws 1903, c. 73, § 29, were used interchangeably by the Legislature, and were intended to express the same meaning. State v. Fleming, 97 N. W. 1063, 1070, 70 Neb. 529.

ASSESSED VALUE

The term "assessed value," in a city charter, providing that no improvement shall be made when the estimated cost thereof shall exceed 50 per cent. of the assessed value of the property, refers to the value of the property as assessed for general taxation at the time next prior to that when the improvement is ordered. Ferry v. City of Tacoma, 76 Pac. 277, 279, 34 Wash. 652.

The words "debt" and "liability," as used in Const. art. 8, § 1, forbidding the Legislature to create any debt or liability, singly or in the aggregate, exceeding 1½ per cent. of the assessed value of taxable property in the state, are not employed in a technical sense, but have special reference to the basic legislative authority on which a state contract must rest, and in which alone a state debt must find its sanction. Such constitutional provision limits the Legislature to the assessed valuation at the time of the passage of any measure creating a debt, and does not refer to the date at and after which a legislative act authorizes a sale of state bonds. Under such constitutional provision, the Legislature, in creating a debt, must be governed by the assessed value as the same has been ascertained and then exists, and cannot anticipate the future and leave the ascertainment of the assessed valuation to the future acts of ministerial and executive officers. Lewis v. Brady, 104 Pac. 900, 902, 17 Idaho, 251, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 149.

ASSESSMENT

As charges on benefit certificate

"While it must be conceded that the mere designation of payments made upon a policy of insurance or a benefit certificate bearing all the marks of regular or old time insurance, as 'assessments,' does not make them assessments," there is a distinction between policies upon which fixed premiums are paid and benefit certificates in fraternal beneficiary associations in which insurance is dependent on the payment of monthly assets and dues; and Rev. St. § 7897, providing that no policies issued by any life insurance company shall be forfeited for nonpayment of premiums after the payment of three annual premiums, and section 7898, providing for the issuance of paid-up policies, are not applicable to fraternal beneficiary associations doing business on the assessment plan and under the laws of which assessments and the liability of the association are not permanently established. Westerman v. Supreme Lodge, Knights of Pythias, 94 S. W. 470, 485, 196 Mo. 670, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1114.

Where a mutual benefit insurance policy provided that the rate of "assessment" should be fixed by the board of directors of the company, the fact that the executive committee took part with such board in fixing assessments did not render the same illegal. Barrows v. Mutual Reserve Life Ins. Co., 151 Fed. 461, 463, 81 C. C. A. 71.

As calls on corporate stock

As suit, see Suit.

The word "assessment" and the words "call" or "installments" are used interchangeably in the statute; yet, strictly speaking, the word "assessment" means a demand upon stockholders for payments above the par value of their stock to meet the money demands of creditors of the corporation, while the word "call" or "installments" means the action of the board of directors of the corporation demanding the payment of all or a portion of unpaid subscriptions. The word "assessments" as used in Rev. Codes, § 2769, granting power to a corporation to admit stockholders or members, and to sell the stock or shares for the payment of assessments or installments, is distinguished from "calls" or "installments," and means assessments upon full-paid stock, as distinguished from calls or installments for portions of unpaid subscriptions. Wall v. Basin Mining Co., 101 Pac. 733, 736, 16 Idaho, 313, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1013.

The word "assessment," in Const. art. 6, § 4, conferring appellate jurisdiction on the Supreme Court in cases at law in which the demand amounts to $2,000 or more, or which involve the legality "of any tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine," and giving appellate jurisdiction to the District Court of Appeal of cases where the demand amounts to $300, and does not amount to $2,000, when considered in connection with section 5, conferring original jurisdiction on the superior court of cases involving the legality of any "tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine," refers to assessments for public taxation or for the raising of funds for local public improvements, and does not include assessments by a private corporation to compel stockholders to contribute to its treasury additional sums in proportion to their ownership of paid-up stock; and the Supreme Court does not have appellate jurisdiction of an action by a private corporation for $350 for an assessment by it on paid-up stock held by a stockholder, but the appeal lies to the District Court of Appeal. Bottle Min. & Mill. Co. v. Kern, 97 Pac. 25, 154 Cal. 96.

ASSESSMENT (In Taxation)

See Double Assessment; Illegal Assessment; Last Assessment; Local Assessments; New Assessment; Raise Money by Taxes or Assessment; Reassessment; Special Assessment; Subsequent Assessment; Supplemental Assessment; Time of Assessment; Uniform Assessment.

Before assessment, see Before.

Substantial statement of assessment, see Substantial Statement.

"Assessment in a general sense denotes the process of ascertaining and adjusting the shares respectively to be contributed by the several persons toward a common beneficial object according to the benefit received. Assessment, in taxation: The listing and valuation of property for the purpose of apportioning a tax upon it, either according to value alone or in proportion to benefit received. Also, determining the share of a tax to be paid by each of many persons, or apportioning the entire tax to be levied among the different taxable persons, establishing the proportion due from each." When a tax levying officer, levying a tax for the construction of a drainage ditch, knows the proportionate benefit to each tract and the amount of money necessary to be raised, and when he has determined the number of payments in which it shall be paid and the time of payment of the same, and has ordered his determination placed upon the tax list for collection by the proper officers, he has made an assessment. Morris v. Washington County, 100 N. W. 144, 148, 72 Neb. 174 (quoting Black, Law Dict.).

The word "assessment," as used in tax statutes, does not mean merely the valuation of the property for taxation, but includes the whole statutory mode of imposing the tax, embracing all of the proceedings for raising money by the exercise of the power of taxation from their inception to their conclusion. Jackson Lumber Co. v. McCrimmon, 164 Fed. 759, 763, 764 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, pp. 551, 552).

"Assessment" is, from its legal requirement, and the necessity of preserving its evidence, a written entry, and must depend upon the records of the commissioners' office, and not upon parol testimony, or the private duplicate of the assessor. * * * It is the 'assessment' which confers the power to sell,

In the same manner as a judgment on which an execution is issued. It is the 'assessment,' therefore, which must contain the means of identification of the ownership in order that the proprietor may pay his tax, or redeem if he fails to pay in time." Norris v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 66 Atl. 1122, 1125, 218 Pa. 88 (quoting and adopting the definition in Philadelphia v. Miller, 49 Pa. 440).

The word "assessment" in tax laws has a double significance. It may mean the appraisal of property for the purpose of taxation, or it may mean the apportioning of the tax to the taxable property. First Nat. Bank v. City of Binghamton, 76 N. Y. Supp. 526, 527, 72 App. Div. 354.

The word "assessment" as used in a contract for the purchase of real property, which provided that the purchaser should pay all taxes and assessments imposed on the premises after the date of the contract, means "local assessment." Clizer v. Krauss, 106 Pac. 145, 146, 57 Wash. 26.

"The word 'assessment' is equivocal and may mean either the act of apportioning the burden to be borne by the persons or property chargeable, or the particular burden assigned to each." The agreement by property owners to pay counsel 15 per cent. of the amount of any assessment on their property which may be set aside by the courts, or 15 per cent. of any reduction if not entirely set aside, used the word "assessment" in the sense last stated, and the attorney's right to compensation would not accrue until it was determined that there should be no charge on the property or the assessment should be reduced. Milton v. Stell, 62 Atl. 1133, 1134, 73 N. J. Law, 261.

Every system of taxation consists of two parts, one relating to "assessment" or the designation of the persons or things which shall be the subject of taxation and the apportionment of taxation among such persons or things in the ratio prescribed by law, the other to the collection of taxes by the enforced payment thereof. The constitutional provision relative to uniformity of taxation relates only to the assessment, and in that respect concerns only such equalization of the burden of taxation as would result from the designation of the property which shall be the subject of taxation and the apportionment of the taxes under general laws and by uniform rules according to its true value. The mere machinery by which taxes shall be assessed or collected is left in legislative discretion. Central R. Co. v. State Board of Assessors, 67 Atl. 672, 682, 75 N. J. Law, 120 (citing State Board of Assessors v. Central R. Co., 4 Atl. 578, 48 N. J. Law, 146).

As levy

Under Sess. Laws 1903, p. 74, c. 59, § 3, providing that personal property taxes shall be a lien upon all real estate and personal property from the date the "assessment" is made, the word "assessment" means the valuation of property for taxation by the assessor, and not the levy of taxes by the commissioners. City of Puyallup v. Lakin, 88 Pac. 578, 579, 45 Wash. 368.

The term "assess taxes," as commonly used, is synonymous with the levying of taxes, as descriptive of the steps in their entirety necessary to charge specific property with taxes or the owners with the payment thereof. There is no such thing as the assessment of a tax in the mere sense of the assessment of property for taxation. In a contract between a municipal corporation and a waterworks company by which the municipality promised to pay a specific rental together with any town or municipal tax "which may be assessed" against the company as compensation for the use of certain hydrants, the word "assessed" was used in the sense of a levy of taxes rather than the mere determination to raise money by taxation and included the proceedings requisite to charge property or the owners thereof with the payment of taxes and not the assessment of property for taxation. It plainly referred to the actual creation of an obligation upon the owner of the waterworks property to pay taxes and the actual extension upon the tax roll of the tax apportioned its property. Town of Washburn v. Washburn Waterworks Co., 98 N. W. 539, 541, 120 Wis. 575.

As listing and valuation

The word "assessment" as used in the Kansas Constitution means valuation of property by the proper officers for the purposes of taxation; in other words, it is the official listing of property for the purpose of constituting a basis upon which taxes are to be levied. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Howe, 180 Fed. 44, 52, 103 C. C. A. 398.

The word "assessment," used in its restricted sense, means an official listing of persons and property with an estimate of the value of the property of each for the purpose of taxation. The word, used in its general and more extended sense, implies the completed tax list; that is to say, the names and lists of the persons to be taxed, with the valuations of their property and the taxes set down under their several headings, and properly extended and carried out. There being no statute providing that a simple listing of real estate for taxation gives the county a lien for taxes to be subsequently levied thereon, a county from which lands are taken to form a new county can have no lien for taxes on such lands unless levy was made thereon before the formation of the new county. Wason v. Major, 50 Pac. 741, 743, 10 Colo. App. 181.

As incumbrance

See Incumber—Incumbrance.

Though the word "assessments," as applied to taxation, ordinarily implies an official listing of the persons and property to be taxed, and a valuation of the property of each person as a basis of apportionment, usually performed by officials specially appointed for the purpose, in the case of taxes laid on solvent securities, the nominal or face value of which is identical with the actual value, the assessment may be made by the Legislature without the intervention of the assessing officer. State v. Clement Nat. Bank, 78 Atl. 944, 950, 84 Vt. 167, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 22.

The word "assessment," as used in Laws 1903, p. 73, c. 59, § 3, declaring that taxes assessed on personal property shall be a lien on the property of the person assessed from and after the date of such assessment, means the listing of the property for taxation by the county assessor, so that a lien for taxes assessed on personal property attaches immediately on the listing and valuing of the property by the county assessor. Klickitat Warehouse Co. v. Klickitat County, 84 Pac. 860, 861, 42 Wash. 299.

An assessment of property for taxation includes a list of the property to be taxed in some form and an estimate of the sums which are to guide in apportioning the tax. Sullivan v. Bitter, 113 S. W. 193, 195, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 604.

While the words "assessment" and "valuation" may be properly used to designate certain acts of the assessor, they are as properly and more frequently used to designate the official estimate of the value of property subject to taxation. While the assessor makes such official estimate, it is not conclusive, but is subject to revision by the board of equalization, which body frequently substitutes its own estimate of the value of a particular portion of the property for that of the assessor. State ex rel. Mellor v. Grow, 105 N. W. 898, 899, 74 Neb. 850.

An "assessment" means the listing or valuation of a man's property for the purpose of levying a tax; an official listing of persons and property with an estimate of the value of the property of each for the purpose of taxation. Whedon v. Lancaster County, 107 N. W. 1092, 1093, 76 Neb. 761 (quoting and adopting definition of Chief Justice Holcomb in Hacker v. Howe, 101 N. W. 255, 72 Neb. 385).

The two essentials to a valid "assessment" are a listing of the property to be taxed in some form, and an estimate of the sums which are to guide in the apportionment of the tax, and the fact that an assessment made by the treasurer of discovered property does not specifically conform to the exactions of one made by an assessor will not invalidate it. In re Seaman, 113 N. W. 354, 356, 135 Iowa, 543.

"An 'assessment' is simply a valuation, or a valuation and listing, of property for purposes of taxation." Under Code Pub. Gen. Laws, art. 81, § 89, providing that the city register of Baltimore shall on each 1st day of May, July, and September make out and deliver to the appeal tax court of the city a full and accurate list of the holders of the city's stock loans, the interest of which is payable on such dates, and section 90, requiring such court to carefully examine and correct the list, by striking off the holders who are exempt from taxation on said stock, and to annually deliver, on or before the 1st day of September, to the city register one copy and to the State Comptroller another copy of the corrected list, "setting forth distinctly in said copy the assessed values of the stock mentioned therein," there is a valid provision for assessment of the stock. State v. City of Baltimore, 65 Atl. 369, 372, 105 Md. 1 (citing 3 Cyc. p. 1111; Bouv. Law Dict. vol. 1, p. 177).

Rev. St. 1892, § 1542, provides a proceeding to have an "assessment" declared not lawfully made. "Keeping in mind, then, the narrow scope of the statute, we are called upon to define the word 'assessment' therein used. 'Valuation,' as an incident to the term, has been eliminated by our decisions, and it seems to us there is nothing left but the clerical act of extending in the assessment rolls the name of the party assessed, the description of the property, the value as fixed by the proper tribunal, the millage for various purposes, and the total amount of the tax. For mistakes in these clerical duties the circuit judge is made a reviewing officer, with power merely to 'declare the assessment not lawfully made.'" Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Board of Public Instruction for Jackson County, 39 South. 480, 481, 50 Fla. 222.

An "assessment" for taxation is "an official estimate of the sums which are to constitute the basis of an apportionment of a tax between individual subjects of taxation within the district. As the word is more commonly employed, an 'assessment' consists in the two processes of listing the persons, property, etc., to be taxed, and of estimating the sums which are to be the guide in an apportionment of the tax between them." Consolidated Gas Co. of Baltimore v. City of Baltimore, 61 Atl. 532, 538, 101 Md. 541, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 263, 109 Am. St. Rep. 584 (citing Cooley on Taxation, 258; New York v. Weaver, 100 U. S. 539, 25 L. Ed. 705; 3 Cyc. 1111).

While an action against the State Board of Assessors to reduce an assessment must be brought at the capital, the domicile of that body, an action to have an assessment made by it declared a nullity may be brought in the parish where the property sought to be exempted is situated, the whole duty of such board being confined to the assessment of property, which is to place a value upon it, while claim that property is exempt presents an issue not within its jurisdiction. New Orleans Great Northern R. Co. v. Thomas, 55 South. 737, 739, 129 La. 128.

Local improvement assessment

The term "assessment," as used in Gen. St. 1906, §§ 950-960, is a tax specially levied against the property benefited. Roesch v. State ex rel. Wyman, 56 South. 562, 564, 565, 62 Fla. 263, 270.

The word "assessment" as used in Acts 1901, c. 231, authorizing local improvements, means a local or special imposition placed on property to pay for a public improvement on the theory that such property thereby derives special benefit. Brownell Improvement Co. v. Nixon, 92 N. E. 693, 695, 48 Ind. App. 195.

The word "assessment," as used in the title of Act March 24, 1892 (P. L. p. 255), which reads, "An act concerning assessments for local improvements in the cities of the first class," providing for the appointment of boards of commissioners to make all such assessments, defining the duties of such commissioners, and affixing their compensation, cannot be construed to mean the ascertainment of benefits only, so that it would not be broad enough to support the enactment authorizing the assessment of damages as well as benefits, since there is no reason why such purely arbitrary distinction should be made for the purpose of frustrating the plain object of the act. Morris v. City of Newark, 62 Atl. 1005, 73 N. J. Law, 268.

No better name than "assessment" can be found for an imposition on lands adjoining a public street in which is laid a pipe for the distribution of water for the use of a city and its inhabitants of a fixed definite sum per front foot for the expense of such pipe. Doughten v. City of Camden, 63 Atl. 170, 72 N. J. Law, 451, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 817, 111 Am. St. Rep. 680, 5 Ann. Cas. 902.

The constitutional provisions against the release and commutation of taxes do not apply to special "assessments" to pay for local improvements; and municipal authorities have power to compromise suits involving the validity of such assessments notwithstanding those provisions. An "assessment" to reimburse a municipality for benefits conferred by improvements is not an exercise of the power to tax in the generally accepted meaning of the term. Farnham v. Lincoln, 106 N. W. 666, 668, 75 Neb. 502.

In proceedings to acquire property to widen a street, an assessment of benefits upon abutting property and award of damages in excess of benefits were an "assessment for local improvements," under the city's power of taxation, within Laws 1879, p. 397, c. 310, § 1, exempting lands actually used for cemetery purposes from assessment for local improvements, though the proceeding was instituted under its power of eminent domain to acquire the land. In re Jerome Ave., 85 N. E. 755, 757, 192 N. Y. 459.

St. 1911, p. 1686, amending the charter of the city and county of San Francisco, adds to article 6 a chapter numbered 8, which by section 1 empowers the board of supervisors to order the construction of a tunnel and levy the expenses thereof upon private property "in the manner and under and subject to the proceedings, powers, * * * and limitations of chapter 2, of this article, providing for street work and street improvements." Chapter 2 of the charter, by section 5 (St. 1899, p. 295), authorized the board of supervisors to define the districts benefited by a proposed improvement and to be assessed to pay its expense, and St. 1911, p. 1691, added to chapter 2, art 6, of the charter, a section numbered 33, which provides the methods of procedure for constructing tunnels and "for the assessment of expenses thereof * * * on private property." Held, that the charter provisions authorized the assessment of the cost of construction of a tunnel upon a special district; the word "assessment," as here involved, meaning a burden imposed upon property to pay the cost of the improvement made with reference to the supposed benefit. Mardis v. McCarthy, 121 Pac. 389, 392, 162 Cal. 94.

ASSESSMENT DISTRICT

As used in Code, § 1313, providing that if personal property not consisting of monies, credits, corporation or other shares of stock or bonds has been kept in another assessment district the greater part of the year preceding the first of January or portion of that period which it was owned by the person subjected to taxation therefor, it shall be taxed where it has been so kept, it is doubtful, to say, the least, whether by "assessment districts" is meant any subdivision less than those having an assessor and a local board of review. Indeed, it would seem that within the township personal property might well be assessed to the owner in the school district where he resides, as such district must have the burden of furnishing school facilities for the members of his family of school age. Independent School Dist. of McCowen v. Local Board of Review, 108 N. W. 220, 221, 131 Iowa, 195.

ASSESSMENT POLICY

A policy, which provides for the payment of fixed sums at fixed intervals, and which authorizes an assessment on persons holding similar policies, if necessary, is an assessment policy within Rev. St. 1909, § 6950, defining a contract of insurance on the "assessment plan." Moran v. Franklin Life Ins. Co., 140 S. W. 955, 958, 180 Mo. App. 407.

Where a policy provided that the price of the insurance was calculated on the American Tables of Mortality, and that a certain sum should be laid aside from the premiums for the first two years to make an emergency fund required by Rev. St. 1899, § 7905, and that if the death rate should exceed that estimated in the American Tables an assessment might be made to meet the emergency, it was an old line life insurance policy, and not an "assessment policy," defined by section 7901 as one where the amount is dependent on the collection of an assessment on persons holding similar contracts, and hence the policy in question was within section 7890, declaring that no misrepresentation should avoid a policy unless the matter represented should have actually contributed to the contingency or event on which the policy was to become payable. Williams v. St. Louis Life Ins. Co., 8 S. W. 499, 503, 189 Mo. 70.

A contract of life insurance which does not unalterably fix the payments to be made by the insured, and which makes the benefit to be paid dependent upon the collection of such assessments as may be necessary, is an assessment policy, an old line policy being one in which the premiums and the liability incurred by the insurer are fixed and unalterable. Knott v. Security Mut. Life Ins. Co., 144 S. W. 178, 183, 161 Mo. App. 579.

ASSESSMENT PROCEEDING

As proceeding, see Proceeding.

ASSESSMENT ROLL

The term "assessment roll," as used in Gen. St. 1901, § 3796, requiring the original jury list to be selected from the "assessment roll," does not refer exclusively to the personal property roll, but includes the real estate roll as well. State v. Gereke, 86 Pac. 160, 161, 74 Kan. 196 (citing State v. Reed, 37 Pac. 174, 53 Kan. 767, 42 Am. St. Rep. 322).

Where assessment lists originally made by the assessor and his assistant were sworn to by the assessor, and his oath was attached thereto as required by Code, § 1365, such lists, and not the books or lists thereafter required to be made up for other purposes, are the "assessment roll" required by section 1366 to be laid before the local board of review for correction. Reed v. City of Cedar Rapids, 116 N. W. 140, 141, 138 Iowa, 366.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 617c, provides that at an election relating to the abolition of the corporate existence of a town all persons may vote who are legally qualified voters of the state and county in which such election is ordered, and resident property taxpayers in the city or town where such election is held, as shown by the last assessment roll. Rev. St. 1895, arts. 5120, 5127, provide that the commissioners' court shall make up an assessment roll from the list rendered by assessors, and return the list to the assessors for making up the general rolls. The town assessors made up a tax roll, compiled from the county assessor's rolls, which was adopted by the council, and thereafter they made assessments, shown by assessment lists, against residents who had rendered property for taxation, but whose names were not on the tax roll. Held, that the assessment list was not an "assessment roll," within the meaning of the statute; and hence that such residents were not qualified voters, and their votes were properly refused. Warrener v. Lambrecht (Tex.) 146 S. W. 633, 634.

ASSESSMENT WORK

Rev. St. U. S. § 2324, provides that, on the failure of any one of several co-owners to contribute his proportion of the expenditure for assessment work on a mining claim for any year, the co-owners who have performed the labor or made the improvements at the expiration of the year may give the delinquents personal notice in writing that, if the delinquent fails or refuses to contribute his proportion required within ninety days after the notice, his interest will become the property of his co-owners who have made the required expenditures. Held, that where notice to contribute for annual assessment work was addressed personally to the individuals supposed to be the co-owners in default and was personally served on them, and was delivered immediately to their grantee under a prior unrecorded deed, it was sufficient to forfeit the rights of their grantee; the co-owners serving the notice having neither actual nor constructive notice of the conveyance. Work done on a mining claim to withdraw water from the mine so that it could be examined by a prospective purchaser, not operating to develop or improve the mine, or to enable the co-owners performing the work to work the mine, was not assessment work required by Rev. St. U. S. § 2324, to preserve the co-owners' right to the claim. Evalina Gold Mining Co. v. Yosemite Gold Min. & Mill. Co., 115 Pac. 946, 949, 15 Cal. App. 714.

Under the statute requiring $100 worth of assessment work to be done annually on a mining claim each year, "the question is not what it cost to do the assessment work, but was it worth $100? The work may all have been contributed gratuitously and still it would constitute assessment work under the law. Anderson v. Caughey, 84 Pac. 223-225, 3 Cal. App. 22.

Independent of the statute, work done outside of a mining claim, if done for furthering the development thereof, is as available as assessment work as if done within the boundaries of the claim itself, and, where there is no organized mining district, the building of a road to be used in the general development of the mining property is a doing of assessment work within the meaning of the law. Sexton v. Washington Mining & Milling Co., 104 Pac. 614, 618, 55 Wash. 380.

Of bankrupt or insolvent

"The word 'assets' is derived from the French 'assez,' meaning sufficient, and originally signified a sufficiency of property to pay the decedent's debts. Its meaning has been enlarged, and it now signifies any property available for the payment of debts, as the 'assets' of a partnership, of a corporation, of a decedent, or of a bankrupt. The word represents something over which a man has dominion, and can transfer with or without consideration, and may be reached by execution process. It has been held that a general power of appointment is not an interest in property which can be transferred to another or sold on execution or devised by will, or a chose in action, and hence does not constitute 'assets' of a bankrupt which passes to an assignee." The husband's power of election, under the statute providing that any surviving husband may against his wife's will elect to take such interest in her property as she could have elected to take against his will or otherwise take only her real estate as tenant by the curtesy, is not an "asset" for the discharge of his debts. In re Fleming's Estate, 66 Atl. 874, 875, 217 Pa. 610, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 379, 10 Ann. Cas. 826.

A bank is insolvent or in failing circumstances, within Acts 25th Leg. c. 100, punishing any officer of any bank who receives any deposit with knowledge that the bank is insolvent or in failing circumstances, when the bank does not have sufficient "assets," consisting of real or personal property, bills receivable, notes, obligations to the bank of every character, considering the solvency of the makers, indorsers, guarantors, thereof, and the value of the securities thereon, if any, and stocks and bonds held by the bank as its property, to pay its debts.

Of corporation

The word "funds," as used in Rev. St. §§ 3821—85, relating to embezzlement by bank officers, means permanent investment for income, stock of convertible use, or, perhaps in its broadest sense, it is merely synonymous with "assets," but a certificate of stock is not an asset when the real thing of which the certificate is only evidence of title is within complete control of the creditor company. State v. Davis, 96 N. E. 1022, 1025, 85 Ohio St. 43.

Of decedent's estate

The term "assets," as applied to decedents' estates, means property, real or personal, tangible or intangible, legal or equitable, which can be made available for, or may be appropriated to, payment of debts. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Nat. Bank of Cadiz, Ohio, 173 Fed. 390, 897.

Under Rev. Code 1892, § 1881, providing that the goods and chattels of decedent and the rent of lands accruing during the year of his death, whether he died testate or intestate, shall be "assets"; and section 1882, providing that the court may, on the application of the personal representative, decree the sale of the crop growing at the time of decedent's death; and section 1892, authorizing the personal representative to sell the cotton raised on the farm of deceased, or any other commodity raised for market, and to account for the proceeds as "assets"—rents accruing during the year of testator's death, and crops remaining on the lands at the date of his death, whether gathered or still in the field, matured or unmatured, are "assets" of decedent, whether testate or intestate, and as such pass into the hands of his personal representative for the payment of his debts and expenses of administration. Gordon v. James, 39 South. 18, 22, 86 Miss. 719, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 461.

A husband and wife executed a trust deed, authorizing the trustee to pay over the income to the wife for life, and after death to pay the income to the husband for his life, and after his death the principal to be paid to their children in such sum as the husband by his last will should appoint, and in default of any appointment to be divided equally. The wife died before the husband. Held that, except as to creditors existing at the time of the settlement or those in immediate contemplation, the principal was free from the attack of creditors, but the income payable to the husband was "assets for the payment of his debts." Egbert v. De Solms, 67 Atl. 212, 213, 218 Pa. 207 (citing Mackason's Appeal, 42 Pa. 330, 82 Am. Dec. 517).

Where a mutual benefit certificate was payable to the member's "legal heirs," the beneficiaries took by virtue of the contract, and not by succession; and hence the certificate was not an "asset of the estate" of the member and a bequest of the proceeds of the certificate to the member's wife was ineffectual to entitle her to the entire proceeds of the certificate, notwithstanding the by-laws of the society authorized a change of beneficiaries where it did not permit of a change by the member's will. Burke v. Modern Woodmen of America, 84 Pac. 275, 276, 2 Cal. App. 611.

Same—Right of action for decedent's death

A claim against a railroad company for negligent death is not an "asset," or "debt," within Code 1858, § 2203, authorizing letters of administration upon the estate of a non-resident in a county where he had assets or where any debtor resides, etc. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Herb (Tenn.) 143 S. W. 1138, 1139, 1140.

A cause of action for decedent's negligent death constitutes "assets," within Revised 1905, § 16, providing for administration in the county where decedent left assets. Fann v. North Carolina R. Co., 71 S. E. 81, 82, 155 N. C. 138.

Ky. St. 1909, § 6, authorizing the maintenance of an action against a corporation for death of a servant due to negligence, provides that the action shall be prosecuted by the decedent's personal representative, and that the amount recovered, less funeral expenses and the cost of administration and such cost above the recovery including attorney's fees as are not included in the recovery from defendant, shall be for the benefit of and go to the kindred of deceased in a specified order. Held that, under such act, a claim for wrongful death constituted assets of the decedent's estate sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the probate court to appoint an administrator to enforce such liability, and this without reference to the fact that decedent was an alien. Southern Pac. Co. v. De Valle Da Costa, 190 Fed. 689, 693, 111 C. C. A. 417.

St. § 3365, amended by Laws 1903, p. 125, relating to formation of new school districts and division of assets, and providing that assets shall include all school property and moneys belonging to the district at the time of division, the proceeds of a special tax for building and repairing collected before the division is included in the assets to be divided, and it is immaterial whether the amount due the new district is paid from the proceeds of the tax or from other funds. School Dist. No. 61, Polk County, v. School Dist. No. 32, Polk County, 98 Pac. 523, 524, 53 Or. 33.

ASSIGN

See Day Assigned; Duly Assigned; Transferred and Assigned.

The words "sell, transfer or assign," as used in section 83, added to chapter 54 of the Code of 1899, by chapter 35, p. 93, Acts 1901, authorizing a corporation to sell, transfer, or assign corporate property, do not authorize the corporation to trade or barter away for anything other than money. The word "sell" usually applies to tangible property. It is a technical term applicable to the alienation of that kind of property and especially to personal property. "Transfer or assign" are applicable to choses in action, rights and privileges, rather than tangible property, and are almost, if not quite, identical in meaning. None of these terms, except the word "sell," indicates what the nature of the consideration shall be. Neither "assign" nor "transfer" is broad enough to cover the consideration. They in no sense define the contract under which they pass title, but simply define the nature of the act by which the title passes. They are more limited than the word "sell," which necessarily involves a price or consideration, but they stop short of indicating whether the property may be disposed of by sale or barter, and hence do not confer a power to trade. Germer v. Triple-State Natural Gas & Oil Co., 54 S. E. 509, 519, 60 W. Va. 143.

ASSIGNABILITY

Where a right of action is so entirely personal that the party in whom it exists cannot by contract place it beyond his control, it will not survive, and hence as a general rule "assignability" and "survivability" of causes of actions are convertible terms. Selden v. Illinois Trust & Savings Bank, 87 N. E. 860, 863, 239 Ill. 67, 130 Am. St. Rep. 180.

ASSIGNED

In an allegation that the claims upon which liens were asserted were assigned, the word "assigned" included everything necessary to a valid assignment. Hence, since such assignments are valid only when in writing, it was in effect an allegation that the assignment was in writing. Small v. Foley, 47 Pac. 64, 68, 8 Colo. App. 435.

Rev. St. 1899, § 2983, provides that dower in a leasehold estate for a term of 20 years or more shall be granted and assigned as in real estate, and for a less term than 20 years shall be granted and assigned as in personal property. Held, that the words "granted" and "assigned," as so used, were synonymous, and mean only that the widow shall have the same dower in a leasehold estate of 20 years or more that she is entitled to in real estate, and that if the lease is for less than 20 years she has dower in it as she has in other personal property; the term of such leasehold being determined by the term named in the lease, and not by the portion of the term remaining at the husband's death. Orchard v. Wright-Dalton-Bell-Anchor Store Co., 125 S. W. 486, 497, 225 Mo. 414, 20 Ann. Cas. 1072.

ASSIGNEE

See Voluntary Assignee.
See, also, Assigns.

An "assignee" is one to whom an assignment has been made, so that a second mortgagee is an "assignee" of the mortgagor within the meaning of the statute providing for redemption of mortgage property. Brown v. Smith, 102 N. W. 171, 173, 13 N. D. 580 (citing Bouv. Law Dict. [Rawle's Revision] p. 834).

"Assignees" are of two classes, depending upon the manner of their creation: First, assignees who are created by act of the parties; and, second, assignees created by operation of law. Whether an assignee belongs to the first or second class depends upon the purpose for which he was created, the object to be attained by his creation, and the language of the statute or other instrument from which he derives his powers. A "voluntary assignee is ordinarily invested with all the rights which his assignor possessed with respect to the property, while the rights of an assignee by operation of law are such only as are necessarily incident to the complete possession and enjoyment of the things assigned." Hoffeld v. United States, 22 Sup. Ct. 927, 928, 186 U. S. 273, 46 L. Ed. 1160.

The word "assignee," as used in Rev. St. § 4919, which provides that damages for the infringement of any patent may be recovered by action on the case in the name of the party interested, either as patentee, assignee, or grantee, is used in a limited sense, as meaning an assignee of patent rights, and does not cover a mere assignee of a claim for infringement. Webb v. Goldsmith, 127 Fed. 572 (citing Waterman v. MacKenzie, 11 Sup. Ct. 334, 138 U. S. 255, 34 L. Ed. 923; Moore v. Marsh, 74 U. S. [7 Wall.] 515, 19 L. Ed. 37; Gayler v. Wilder, 51 U. S. [10 How.] 477, 13 L. Ed. 504; Hayward v. Andrews, 12 Fed. 786; 3 Robinson, Patents, § 937).

One to whom the purchaser from a broker assigns his contract is an "assignee," within Rev. Laws 1902, c. 173, § 4, making the rights of an assignee subject to all defenses to which defendant would have been entitled, had the action been brought in the name of the assignor. Kurinsky v. Lynch, 87 N. E. 70, 71, 201 Mass. 28.

Where a note payable to order was indorsed to plaintiff, he was the "assignee" thereof within a power of attorney contained in the note authorizing any attorney to appear for the maker and confess judgment in favor of the payee or assigns. Halfhill v. Mallick, 129 N. W. 1086, 1091, 145 Wis. 200.

Rev. Laws 1905, § 4460, provides that a notice of sale to foreclose a mortgage shall specify the name of the mortgagor, mortgagee, and the assignee of the mortgage, if any. Held that, in view of section 5513, subd. 2, providing that in the construction of statutes words purporting the singular number may extend and be applied to several persons or things, and in view of the rule that the construction must be favorable to persons seeking to redeem, the word "assignee" will be taken as if in the plural, necessitating that the name of each assignee be specified in the notice. Moore v. Carlson, 128 N. W. 578, 579, 112 Minn. 433.

An "assignee" of a painting within Rev. St. § 4952, as amended by Act March 3, 1891, c. 565, 26 Stat. 1107, providing that the author, inventor, designer, or proprietor of any book, map, chart, painting, etc., and the executors, administrators, or assigns of any such person shall, upon complying with the provisions of this chapter, have the sole liberty of printing, reprinting, publishing, completing, copying, executing, finishing and vending the same, contemplates one who receives a transfer not necessarily of the painting but of the right to multiply copies of it, which right does not depend alone upon the statute, but which is rather derived from the painter and secured by the statute to the assignee of such painter's right. Bong v. Alfred S. Campbell Art Co., 29 Sup. Ct. 628, 630, 214 U. S. 236, 53 L. Ed. 979, 16 Ann. Cas. 1126.

A substituted beneficiary in a life policy is not an assignee of decedent, the insured, within Code, § 4604, prohibiting a party testifying to a personal transaction or communication with deceased against his assignee. Crowell v. Northwestern Nat. Life Ins. Co. of Minneapolis, 118 N. W. 412, 413, 140 Iowa, 258.

An assignment of a patent to two persons named "and to their legal representatives," to be held and enjoyed by them for their own use and behoof, "and for the use and behoof of their legal representatives," is not a mere personal license to the two persons named, but they were authorized to assign their right, and the words "legal representatives" must be held to mean "assignees" as well as "executors and administrators." Hamilton v. Kingsburg, 11 Fed. Cas. 346, 347, 15 Blatchf. 69.

A corporation which constructs a railroad, in consideration of receiving from the railroad company certain lands, to which it is entitled by a grant from the state of Florida and a contract with the trustees of the Florida Internal Improvement fund, is an "assignee of a chose in action," within the meaning of the judiciary acts (Rev. St. 1899, § 2983, provides that dower in a leasehold estate for a term of 20 years or more shall be granted and assigned as in real estate, and for a less term than 20 years shall be granted and assigned as in personal property. Held, that the words "granted" and "assigned," as so used, were synonymous, and mean only that the widow shall have the same dower in a leasehold estate of 20 years or more that she is entitled to in real estate, and that if the lease is for less than 20 years she has dower in it as she has in other personal property; the term of such leasehold being determined by the term named in the lease, and not by the portion of the term remaining at the husband's death. Orchard v. Wright-Dalton-Bell-Anchor Store Co., 125 S. W. 486, 497, 225 Mo. 414, 20 Ann. Cas. 1072.

ASSIGNEE

See Voluntary Assignee.
See, also, Assigns.

An "assignee" is one to whom an assignment has been made, so that a second mortgagee is an "assignee" of the mortgagor within the meaning of the statute providing for redemption of mortgage property. Brown v. Smith, 102 N. W. 171, 173, 13 N. D. 580 (citing Bouv. Law Dict. [Rawle's Revision] p. 834).

"Assignees" are of two classes, depending upon the manner of their creation: First, assignees who are created by act of the parties; and, second, assignees created by operation of law. Whether an assignee belongs to the first or second class depends upon the purpose for which he was created, the object to be attained by his creation, and the language of the statute or other instrument from which he derives his powers. A "voluntary assignee is ordinarily invested with all the rights which his assignor possessed with respect to the property, while the rights of an assignee by operation of law are such only as are necessarily incident to the complete possession and enjoyment of the things assigned." Hoffeld v. United States, 22 Sup. Ct. 927, 928, 186 U. S. 273, 46 L. Ed. 1160.

The word "assignee," as used in Rev. St. § 4919, which provides that damages for the infringement of any patent may be recovered by action on the case in the name of the party interested, either as patentee, assignee, or grantee, is used in a limited sense, as meaning an assignee of patent rights, and does not cover a mere assignee of a claim for infringement. Webb v. Goldsmith, 127 Fed. 572 (citing Waterman v. MacKenzie, 11 Sup. Ct. 334, 138 U. S. 255, 34 L. Ed. 923; Moore v. Marsh, 74 U. S. [7 Wall.] 515, 19 L. Ed. 37; Gayler v. Wilder, 51 U. S. [10 How.] 477, 13 L. Ed. 504; Hayward v. Andrews, 12 Fed. 786; 3 Robinson, Patents, § 937).

One to whom the purchaser from a broker assigns his contract is an "assignee," within Rev. Laws 1902, c. 173, § 4, making the rights of an assignee subject to all defenses to which defendant would have been entitled, had the action been brought in the name of the assignor. Kurinsky v. Lynch, 87 N. E. 70, 71, 201 Mass. 28.

Where a note payable to order was indorsed to plaintiff, he was the "assignee" thereof within a power of attorney contained in the note authorizing any attorney to appear for the maker and confess judgment in favor of the payee or assigns. Halfhill v. Malick, 129 N. W. 1086, 1091, 145 Wis. 200.

Rev. Laws 1905, § 4460, provides that a notice of sale to foreclose a mortgage shall specify the name of the mortgagor, mortgagee, and the assignee of the mortgage, if any. Held that, in view of section 5513, subd. 2, providing that in the construction of statutes words purporting the singular number may extend and be applied to several persons or things, and in view of the rule that the construction must be favorable to persons seeking to redeem, the word "assignee" will be taken as if in the plural, necessitating that the name of each assignee be specified in the notice. Moore v. Carlson, 128 N. W. 578, 579, 112 Minn. 433.

An "assignee" of a painting within Rev. St. § 4952, as amended by Act March 3, 1891, c. 565, 26 Stat. 1107, providing that the author, inventor, designer, or proprietor of any book, map, chart, painting, etc., and the executors, administrators, or assigns of any such person shall, upon complying with the provisions of this chapter, have the sole liberty of printing, reprinting, publishing, completing, copying, executing, finishing and vending the same, contemplates one who receives a transfer not necessarily of the painting but of the right to multiply copies of it, which right does not depend alone upon the statute, but which is rather derived from the painter and secured by the statute to the assignee of such painter's right. Bong v. Alfred S. Campbell Art Co., 29 Sup. Ct. 628, 630, 214 U. S. 236, 53 L. Ed. 979, 16 Ann. Cas. 1126.

A substituted beneficiary in a life policy is not an assignee of decedent, the insured, within Code, § 4604, prohibiting a party testifying to a personal transaction or communication with deceased against his assignee. Crowell v. Northwestern Nat. Life Ins. Co. of Minneapolis, 118 N. W. 412, 413, 140 Iowa, 258.

An assignment of a patent to two persons named "and to their legal representatives," to be held and enjoyed by them for their own use and behoof, "and for the use and behoof of their legal representatives," is not a mere personal license to the two persons named, but they were authorized to assign their right, and the words "legal representatives" must be held to mean "assignees" as well as "executors and administrators." Hamilton v. Kingsburg, 11 Fed. Cas. 346, 347, 15 Blatchf. 69.

A corporation which constructs a railroad, in consideration of receiving from the railroad company certain lands, to which it is entitled by a grant from the state of Florida and a contract with the trustees of the Florida Internal Improvement fund, is an "assignee of a chose in action" within the meaning of the judiciary acts (Rev. St. § 629, and Act March 3, 1887), and cannot maintain in a federal court a suit to compel a conveyance to it by such trustees, unless the railroad company itself could have maintained the action in such court. Plant Investment Co. v. Jacksonville, T. & K. R. Co., 14 Sup. Ct. 483, 485, 152 U. S. 71, 38 L. Ed. 358.

A suit by a corporation to rescind a contract for the building of a steamship by defendant, made between defendant and complainant's promoters acting as trustees for complainant, and assumed by complainant on its organization, on the ground that the contract was fraudulent and procured by defendant by paying a secret commission to the promoters, is not one in which complainant sues as "assignee" within the meaning of Judiciary Act March 3, 1875, c. 137, § 1, 18 Stat. 470, as amended by Act March 3, 1887, c. 373, § 1, 24 Stat. 552, corrected by Act Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, § 1, 25 Stat. 433, which provides that no federal court shall have cognizance of any suit to recover the contents of any chose in action "in favor of any assignee * * * unless such suit might have been prosecuted in such court to recover the said contents if no assignment or transfer had been made," for in such case complainant is asserting no right derived from its promoters or which they could have asserted. Commonwealth S. S. Co. v. American Ship-building Co., 197 Fed. 780, 785.

Donee

A donee is an "assignee," within the meaning of Code, § 4604, providing that no party to any action shall be examined as a witness in regard to any personal transaction or communication between such witness and a decedent, against an assignee of decedent, and hence, in an action to recover a sum of money alleged to have been delivered by decedent to defendant for plaintiff, defendant was disqualified to testify as to the transaction with decedent. McAleer v. McNamara, (Iowa) 112 N. W. 85.

In an action to quiet title, by one alleging that he had conveyed land by absolute deed to his wife to secure a debt, which he paid off; that she had destroyed the deed, supposing that the act reinvested plaintiff with title, and had subsequently made to him a conveyance in the form of a deed of bargain and sale, but without an order of court approving it; that afterwards she had conveyed the land to her daughter by deed of gift, which last deed was sought to be canceled—the grantee in the deed of gift was an assignee or transferee of the title, within Civ. Code 1910, § 5858, par. 1, providing that, where a suit is defended by an indorsee or transferee of a decedent, the opposite party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor against such decedent as to transactions with decedent, plaintiff's wife being deceased, and plaintiff could not testify as to the transaction between him and his wife. Turner v. Woodward, 71 S. E. 418, 419, 136 Ga. 275.

Receiver

A receiver appointed in an action to foreclose, on allegation that the property is insufficient to satisfy the debt, as expressly authorized by Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 1236, subd. 4, is neither an "assignee" nor "receiver," within section 7051, providing that where a property owner's business shall be put into the hands of any assignee, receiver, or trustee, the debts owing to laborers or employes by the property owner shall be treated as preferred debts; nor is such receiver an "assignee" or "receiver" within section 7058, providing that all debts due any person for manual or mechanical labor shall be preferred claims in all cases where property shall pass into the hands of an "assignee" or "receiver," and shall be first paid in full. McDaniel v. Osborn (Ind.) 72 N. E. 601, 603.

ASSIGNEE FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS

An assignee under the act of this state concerning "voluntary assignments for benefit of creditors" is, in effect, a statutory receiver; that is, he receives and holds in trust the property of the assignor under the conditions, with the powers and duties possessed under the common law by receivers, modified and controlled by the provisions of such act. Danforth v. Stone, 128 Ill. App. 57, 60.

ASSIGNEE IN FACT

An "assignee in fact" is one to whom an assignment has been made in fact by the party having the right. Blakemore v. Cooper, 106 N. W. 566, 567, 15 N. D. 5, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1074, 125 Am. St. Rep. 574 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.).

ASSIGNEE IN LAW

An "assignee in law" is one in whom the law vests the right as an executor or administrator. Blakemore v. Cooper, 106 N. W. 566, 567, 15 N. D. 5, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1074, 125 Am. St. Rep. 574 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.).

ASSIGNMENT

See Colorable Assignment; Common-Law Assignment; Equitable Assignment; General Assignment; Preferential Assignment.

Assignment or otherwise, see Otherwise. Interested in assignment, see Interest.

An "assignment" is a transfer or making over to another of the whole of any property.

real or personal, in possession or in action, or of any estate or right therein. Brown v. Smith, 102 N. W. 171, 173, 13 N. D. 580 (citing Bouv. Law Dict. [Rawle's Revision] p. 834).

An "assignment" is a transfer or setting over of property, or of some right or interest therein, from one person to another; the term denoting not only the act of transfer, but also the instrument effecting it. Noble v. Ft. Smith Wholesale Grocery Co., 127 Pac. 14, 18, 34 Okl. 462.

"An 'assignment' is substantially a transfer, actual or constructive, with the clear intent at the time to part with all interest in the thing transferred and with a full knowledge of the rights so transferred." No particular form of words is essential to effect an assignment of a policy of insurance. Ormond v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 58 S. E. 997, 998, 145 N. C. 140 (citing May, Ins. § 388, 390).

The word "assignment" has several meanings. In a broad sense it signifies the act by which one person transfers to another the entire right or property which he has in any realty or personalty in possession or in action or some share or interest therein, and is more particularly applied to a written transfer as distinguished by a transfer by mere delivery. Johnson v. Brewer, 68 S. E. 590, 591, 134 Ga. 828, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 832.

To constitute a valid assignment, there must be a perfect transaction between the parties intended to vest in the assignee a present right in the thing assigned, and an agreement to pay a certain sum out of a fund one is entitled to receive, when received, does not operate as a legal or equitable assignment. Holmes v. Bell, 124 N. Y. Supp. 301, 306, 139 App. Div. 455.

An instrument which does not purport to convey any present interest in an existing patent, or one for which an application is pending, is not an "assignment," within Rev. St. § 4898. National Cash Register Co. v. New Columbus Watch Co., 129 Fed. 114, 116, 63 C. C. A. 616.

To constitute a valid "assignment," there must be a perfected transaction between the parties, intended to vest in the assignee a present right in the thing assigned. An agreement to pay a certain sum out of, or that one is entitled to receive the same from, a designated fund when received, does not operate as a legal or equitable assignment, since the assignor in either case retains control over the subject-matter. Donovan v. Middlebrook, 88 N. Y. Supp. 607, 608, 95 App. Div. 365.

An instrument denominated an "assignment," and which referred to the property assigned as household furniture, wearing apparel, etc., "in and about the residence at number ———," and which did not contain allegations in aid of the instrument tending to show in what house or in what place the property was to be found, and which purported to sell and assign all the salary and wages of some person that were due and to become due from some unnamed person, was not an "assignment." State v. Cordray, 98 S. W. 1, 2, 200 Mo. 29, 9 Ann. Cas. 1110.

An agreement by a beneficiary in a benefit certificate, reciting that she was the beneficiary and was desirous of seeing certain children of her deceased husband, the insured, receive a portion of the insurance money, and that she agreed to divide the proceeds of the certificate when received, etc., among such children, was not an "assignment," either legal or equitable, but merely an executory contract to assign. Banholzer v. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W., 95 S. W. 953, 954, 119 Mo. App. 177.

Where the mortgagee of lands in the state died out of the state and his foreign executors, who had not qualified in the state, executed a deed for the premises, their deed amounted to no more than an "assignment" of the debt and mortgage, and did not deprive the executors of the right to sell under the power of sale in the mortgage. Scott v. Blades Lumber Co., 56 S. E. 548, 549, 144 N. C. 44.

The part of an indictment alleging falsity of testimony given is technically called the "assignment," and must be direct and specific, not uncertain in meaning or by way of implication. Fudge v. State, 49 South. 128, 129, 57 Fla. 7, 17 Ann. Cas. 919.

A patent secures the exclusive right to make, the exclusive right to use, and the exclusive right to vend the invention it protects. A grant of all these exclusive rights throughout the United States, a grant of an undivided part of all these exclusive rights, or a grant of all these exclusive rights throughout a specified part of the United States, is an "assignment of an interest in the patent," by whatever name it is designated. Paulus v. M. M. Buck Mfg. Co., 129 Fed. 594, 596, 64 C. C. A. 162.

Draft as assignment

Where a creditor drew a draft on his debtor, and, after attaching a statement of account thereto, procured a bank to discount the draft, such transaction operated as an "assignment" of the claim to the bank independent of any unexpressed intention of the assignor. Provident Nat. Bank v. C. D. Hartnett & Co., 100 S. W. 1024, 1025, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 273.

Indorsement distinguished

The writing on the back of a negotiable note signed by the payee: "I hereby assign my interest in this note to G."—is not a legal indorsement, necessary to enable G. to bring action thereon in his own name, but is merely an "assignment," within Comp. Laws, §

10,054, providing that the assignee of a chose in action "not negotiable under existing laws" may sue thereon in his own name; which changes, merely as to nonnegotiable instruments, the common-law rule that the assignee of a chose in action may not sue thereon in his own name. Gale v. Mayhew, 125 N. W. 781, 784, 161 Mich. 96, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 648.

Lease or sublease distinguished

Whenever a lessee grants or transfers the whole term for which the premises are leased to him, leaving no reversionary interest in himself, it amounts to an assignment and is not a sublease. Cameron Tobin Baking Co. v. Tobin, 116 N. W. 838, 839, 104 Minn. 333.

A covenant in a contract of sale of land against assigning will be strictly construed and will not be held to embrace a subletting. James J. Stevinson v. Joy, 128 Pac. 751, 754, 164 Cal. 279.

An instrument whereby a lessee for a fixed term "sublets, assigns and transfers" the premises to a third person, subject to a contingent reversionary interest in the estate, on the failure of the third person to pay rent, and whereby the lessee reserves the right to pay the rent to the lessor, thereby reserving the right to forestall the lessor, on the failure of the third person to pay rent, from exercising the right to re-enter, is a subletting and not an "assignment"; an assignment being properly a transfer or making over to another of the right one has in any estate. Davis v. Vidal (Tex.) 151 S. W. 290, 292, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1084.

License distinguished

A conveyance by a patentee to another of the sole and exclusive right and license to use and to build for use within territory described the machines of the patent, with certain express exceptions, and also reserving to the patentee the right to build machines in said territory for use outside thereof, is a mere "license," and not an "assignment." Bowers v. Atlantic G. & P. Co., 162 Fed. 895, 902.

A patent secures the exclusive right to make, the exclusive right to use, and the exclusive right to vend the invention it protects. A grant of all these exclusive rights throughout the United States, a grant of undivided part of all these exclusive rights, or a grant of all these exclusive rights throughout a specified part of the United States, is an "assignment of an interest in the patent," by whatever name it is designated. A grant of any interest in or right under a patent less than these is a "license." Paulus v. M. M. Buck Mfg. Co., 129 Fed. 594, 596, 64 C. C. A. 162.

Lien

Subrogation distinguished

If one person, not a mere interloper, but having an interest in the matter, pay the note and satisfy the mortgage of another, the question whether he becomes an assignee of the note and mortgage is one of fact and intention of the parties. If, however, overriding equities so require, one who satisfies an incumbrance upon his land may be subrogated to the rights of the lienholder, or may be entitled to an equitable assignment of such rights. Subrogation and equitable assignment are acts of the law as distinguished from assignment by acts of parties. We must be careful to distinguish between an assignment of the mortgage debt and a mere right of subrogation to the lien of the mortgage creditor. "Assignment" is the act of the parties, and depends generally upon intention. Where the nature of the transaction is such as imports a payment of the debt and a consequent discharge of the mortgage, there can, of course, be no assignment, for the lien of the mortgage is extinguished by the payment. A mortgage creditor cannot be compelled to assign the debt and mortgage upon receiving payment. All that he can be required to do is to give an acquittance and release. The exception to this rule, if it can be so termed, is found in those cases where the party making the payment occupies the position of surety of the debt, or is in some way personally bound for its payment. Such a person may, in equity, require an assignment or transfer, not only of the mortgage itself, but of all the securities held by the creditor, for his protection and indemnity, and, although no such assignment or transfer is actually made, a court of equity will treat it as having been done. But, if the party making the payment does not occupy the position of surety for the debt, as a general rule he cannot claim to be entitled as assignee unless by agreement with the creditor. "Subrogation" is, however, a very different thing from an "assignment." It is the act of the law, and the creature of a court of equity, depending not upon contract, but upon the principles of equity and justice. It pre-supposes an actual payment and satisfaction of the debt secured by the mortgage. But, although the debt is paid and satisfied, a court of equity will keep alive the lien for the benefit of the party who made the payment, provided he as security for the debt has such an interest in the land as entitles him to the benefit of the security given for its payment. Lynds v. Van Valkenburgh, 98 Pac. 615, 620, 77 Kan. 24 (citing Binford v. Adams, 3 N. E. 753, 104 Ind. 41; Gatewood v. Gatewood, 75 Va. 407, 410).

Working contract distinguished

A covenant in a coal lease against assigning or subleasing without the consent of the lessor, when relied on as a ground of forfeiture, will be given a strict construction.

n equity, and a contract between such a lessee and a mining company, by which the latter was given possession of the lessee's plant and equipment and agreed to mine the property and load the coal in cars for the lessee, which retained the ownership and paid for the work, was merely a working contract, and not an "assignment" or sublease within the meaning of such a covenant. St. Louis Union Trust Co. v. Galloway Coal Co., 193 Fed. 108, 115.

By lessee

An "assignment by a lessee" is that whereby he transfers his entire interest without retaining any reversionary interest, and the mere fact that he is to receive a surrender of the premises on the last day of the term precludes the transfer from being an assignment. Where a lessee executed an instrument which reserved rent at a different rate and time of payment from the original lease, and a right of re-entry on nonpayment and on breach of other conditions, and which provided for the surrender of the premises to him on the expiration of the term, there was no assignment of the original lease. Murdock v. Fishel, 121 N. Y. Supp. 624, 626, 67 Misc. Rep. 122.

Of policy

A provision in a mortgage given by a corporation to secure bonds requiring the mortgagor to keep the property insured for the benefit of the mortgagee, and that "this section shall be construed and taken to be an assignment of the said first party's interest in and to any and all insurance policies thereon for the use and benefit of the holders of said bonds in case of loss," is not an assignment of a policy of insurance on the property, in contravention of a provision therein that any assignment thereof before a loss shall work a forfeiture. Humboldt Fire Ins. Co. v. W. H. Ashley Silk Co., 185 Fed. 54, 60, 107 C. C. A. 274.

ASSIGNMENT FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS

An "assignment for the benefit of creditors" is an assignment whereby a debtor, generally insolvent, transfers his property to another in trust to pay his debts or apply the property on their payment. Johnson v. Brewer, 68 S. E. 590, 591, 134 Ga. 828, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 332.

The word "assignment," in a statute providing that an assignment for the benefit of certain creditors by a person in contemplation of insolvency shall be void, does not contemplate only cases where the entire assets of the debtor are assigned, but also where a part is assigned, and the effect is to prefer any creditor to others, or secure or pay to any creditor a greater proportion of his debt or demand than to all the creditors; the object of the statute being to prevent any such preference, though it does not mean that a failing debtor may not honestly prefer a bona fide creditor by giving a bond or by making a bona fide sale. Brown v. Wilmington & Brandywine Leather Co. (Del.) 74 Atl. 1105, 1111.

"When it is said of a merchant that he has 'made an assignment,' it is understood, not that he has made a transfer of some specific article or portion of property to this or that particular creditor in payment or as security, but that he has made a general disposition of his property, and suspended his whole business in consequence." Maloney & Co. v. Gonthue, 116 N. W. 436, 438, 152 Mich. 325 (quoting United States v. Clark, 1 Paine, 629, 640, 25 Fed. Cas. 447).

Deed of trust or mortgage distinguished

An "assignment for benefit of creditors" is more than a security for the payment of debts; it is an absolute appropriation of property to their payment. It does not create a lien in favor of creditors upon property which in equity is still regarded as the property of the assignor, but it passes both the legal and equitable title beyond the control of the assignor, and there remains in him no equity of redemption, and the trust which results to the assignor in the unemployed balance does not indicate such an equity. The assignment is voluntary on the part of the debtor, and no authority can exact it, and it therefore, partakes of the nature of a private contract. Miller v. Swihler, 79 N. E. 1092, 1093, 40 Ind. App. 465 (citing Burrill, Assign. § 6, distinguishing O'Neil v. Beck, 69 Ind. 239; Robinson v. Hughes, 20 N. E. 220, 117 Ind. 293, 3 L. R. A. 383, 10 Am. St. Rep. 45; Graves v. Hinkle, 21 N. E. 328, 120 Ind. 157).

"If the intention of the debtor is merely to secure his debt to one or more of his creditors, and the conveyance is not intended as an absolute disposition of his property, but he reserves to himself a right therein, the conveyance will be treated as a mortgage, even though the debtor is insolvent at the time, and it covers all his property, and but a portion of his debts are secured by it." Civ. Code, §§ 3449-3473, provide that an "assignment for the benefit of creditors" is void against any creditor of the assignor not assenting thereto, in case it gives a preference of one debt or class of debts over another, and that the assignment must be made to the sheriff of the county where the property is situated. A debtor executed a deed of a portion of her property to a trustee, who was to pay certain creditors from the profits, but it was provided that the surplus of profits should inure to the use of the grantor during her life, and that, after payment of the debts and the grantor's death, the property should be transferred to her children. Any surplus from the proceeds of any sale or mortgage by the trustee was to be invested by him, and he was empowered to exchange the property for other property to be held subject to the trust. Held, that the deed was not intended as an absolute disposition of the property, or as an "assignment for the benefit of creditors" within the meaning of the statute, and hence was not invalid for failure to comply therewith. Heath v. Wilson, 73 Pac. 182, 185, 139 Cal. 362 (quoting and adopting definition in Cadwell's Bank v. Crittenden, 23 N. W. 646, 66 Iowa, 240).

A mortgage or deed of trust in the nature of a mortgage is intended as security for the payment of money, or for the performance of some collateral act, and becomes void upon such payment or performance. A "mortgage" does not invest the mortgagee with an absolute and indefeasible title. The equitable title, called the "equity of redemption," remains in the mortgagor. The mortgage is a security for the debt, and creates a lien upon the property in favor of the creditor. There is no difference in legal effect between a mortgage with a power of sale and a deed of trust executed to secure a debt, where the power of sale is placed in a third person. Both are securities for a debt. Both create specific liens on the property; and in both the equitable title or right of redemption remains in the debtor, and is an estate or interest in the property that the debtor may sell, or that may be seized and sold under judicial process by his other creditors, subject to the lien created by the mortgage or deed of trust. "An assignment for the benefit of creditors" is well defined to be "a transfer by a debtor of some or all of his property to an assignee in trust, to apply the same, or the proceeds thereof, to the payment of some or all of his debts, and to return the surplus, if any, to the debtor." The owner of a sawmill property, including the mill, machinery, and logs and lumber, the personalty being subject to a chattel mortgage, entered into a contract with the chattel mortgagee by which he purported to convey and transfer to said mortgagee all of the property, both personal and real, with authority to take possession and to operate the mill and to sell any and all of the property, the owner agreeing to execute conveyances of the same as required by him. In consideration of such contract, the grantee agreed to pay certain indebtedness of the owner, including his own, and to apply to that purpose all sums received from the operation of the mill or sales of the property, after deducting expenses; the surplus, if any, to be paid over to the grantor. Held, that such contract was not a mortgage, but a trust agreement or deed, which vested the absolute title to the property in the grantee, and that it avoided a policy of insurance previously issued to the grantor on the property containing a provision that it should be void if his interest in the property should be or become other than unconditional and sole ownership. Brecht v. Law Union & Crown Ins. Co., 153 Fed. 452, 455 (quoting and adopting definitions in Ladd v. Johnson, 49 Pac. 753, 32 Or. 195, 200; Bartlett v. Teah, 1 Fed. 768; Burrill, Assign. § 2, and citing *Appolos v. ASSIGNMENT IN FRAUD OF CREDITORS

A transfer by an insolvent husband to his wife of a policy of insurance on the life of the husband is not an assignment of property in fraud of creditors within Rev. St. §§ 3628, 3629, 6343, permitting a transfer to a wife of a policy of insurance then in force on the life of the husband. Lytle v. Baldinger, 95 N. E. 389, 391, 84 Ohio St. 1, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 894.

ASSIGNMENT OF DOWER

"Assignment of dower" is ascertaining a widow's right of dower by laying out or marking off one-third of her deceased husband's lands and setting off the same for her use during life. "'Dower' is one thing, and the 'assignment of dower' is essentially a different thing. One is an estate, the other smacks of the remedy for segregating the estate. When the statute therefore says that no dower shall be assigned, it falls far short of saying that the widow's right of dower is lost or drowned in a greater estate. In our opinion all the statute means is this: Given a homestead greater in extent than common-law dower, then the courts shall remain passive, and refuse to assign, that is, admeasure and mark off the dower interest while the homestead exists in the widow. To mark out dower in the homestead in such case would be a vain and useless thing. Albeit, the dower right is left latent merely—covered up, as it were—and its assignment cannot be enforced in the homestead while the widow's homestead exists. But if we may be allowed a trope, as the stars come out when the sun goes down, so, when such homestead right disappears, the right to assignment of dower reappears—suspended during widowhood, it revives again on remarriage, at the precise time assignment of dower would have any meaning or vitality in the case in hand." Chrisman v. Linderman, 100 S. W. 1090, 1095, 202 Mo. 605, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1205, 119 Am. St. Rep. 822.

ASSIGNMENT OF ERROR

An "assignment of errors," in a strict common-law sense, amounts to the complaint or declaration of the plaintiff in error, and resembles in every material respect the initial pleading in a court of original jurisdiction. Scott v. Great Western Coal & Coke Co., 79 N. E. 53, 54, 223 Ill. 271.

"An 'assignment of errors' is in the nature of a pleading, and, in the court of last resort, it performs the same office as a declaration or complaint in a court of original jurisdiction. The object of an assignment of error is to point out the specific errors claimed to have been committed by the court below, in order to enable the reviewing court and opposing counsel to see on what points plaintiff's counsel intends to ask a reversal of the judgment or decree, and to limit discussion to those points." First Nat. Bank of Richmond v. Wm. R. Trigg Co., 56 S. E. 158, 163, 106 Va. 327, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 744.

An assignment of errors, made on a separate piece of paper attached at the upper edge to a page of the transcript, is not an assignment of errors on the record, and cannot be considered. Pugh v. Hardman, 44 South. 389, 390, 151 Ala. 248.

An assignment of errors differs from exceptions taken at the trial, and includes all the points duly taken as exceptions, which the appellant thus notifies the appellee and the appellate court that he intends to rely upon, embracing the exceptions taken during the trial, the exceptions to the charge of the court, and also exceptions to the court's jurisdiction and to the sufficiency of the complaint. Jones v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 69 S. E. 427, 428, 153 N. C. 419.

There can be no such thing as cross-assigning to affirm a decree or judgment, and it therefore results that the right of appeal, after dismissal of the appeal, to invoke the review on appeal of asserted erroneous rulings in the reception or rejection of evidence, cannot be determined by the fact that such rulings are not assigned as error by them. Freeman v. Blount, 55 South. 293, 295, 172 Ala. 655 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 577).

ASSIGNOR

The federal courts will accept as controlling the decision of the Land Department that the use of the word "assignors" in the amendment of Act March 3, 1891, c. 561, § 2, 26 Stat. 1096, to Desert Land Act March 3, 1877, c. 107, 19 Stat. 377, evidenced the intention of Congress to remove the restrictions of the earlier act upon the assignment of a desert land entry, and was not merely in recognition of the right that every entryman has under the public land laws of the United States to make an assignment after he has acquired the equitable title to the land embraced within his entry. United States v. Hammers, 31 Sup. Ct. 593, 595, 596, 221 U. S. 220, 55 L. Ed. 710.

"An 'assign' or assignee is one to whom an assignment has been made. Assignees are either assignees in fact or assignees in law." Blakemore v. Cooper, 106 N. W. 566, 567, 15 N. D. 5, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1074, 125 Am. St. Rep. 574.

The word "assigns," as used in Rev. St. § 4952, as amended by Act March 3, 1891, c. 565, 26 Stat. 1106, authorizing the copyrighting of a painting by the author or proprietor, or by the "assigns" of any such person, is not confined to a person to whom the thing copyrighted has been transferred, excluding a person to whom the copyright itself has been transferred, and the assignee of the copyright of a painting is within the term and may obtain a statutory copyright, although not the owner of the painting itself. Werckmeister v. American Lithographic Co., 142 Fed. 827, 831.

A contract executed by property owners on a street imposing restrictions upon the lots for building purposes which recited that, "in consideration of the mutual covenants herein contained, we do hereby agree to and with each other and for our and each of our heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns," bound the successors in title of the signers as well as themselves personally, so that the covenant may be enforced by or against the grantee of an original signer, the word "assigns" including all who take immediately or remotely from the assignor, whether by conveyance, devise, or descent. Erichsen v. Tapert, 138 N. W. 330, 332, 172 Mich. 457.

The federal courts will accept as controlling the decision of the Land Department that the use of the word "assigns" in the amendment of Act March 3, 1891, c. 561, § 2, 26 Stat. 1096, to Desert Land Act March 3, 1877, c. 107, 19 Stat. 377, evidenced the intention of Congress to remove the restrictions of the earlier act upon the assignment of a desert land entry, and was not merely in recognition of the right that every entryman has under the public land laws of the United States to make an assignment after he has acquired the equitable title to the land embraced within his entry. United States v. Hammers, 31 Sup. Ct. 593, 595, 596, 221 U. S. 220, 55 L. Ed. 710.

A written contract between T., in whose name all the capital stock of an irrigation company stood, and a new company, provided that T. should cause the old to convey all its property to the new company on the express condition that the new company should convey to T. for the stockholders of the old company certain water rights, such rights to be free from all assessments until such rights should be used by T. or his assigns, or should be sold by him. Held that, while the ordinary meaning of "assigns" is any person to whom property is transferred by any title, oral evidence that the word as used was intended to be restricted to a certain investment company, the real owner of the stock, and that the contract was made for the benefit of such investment company, which was the real party in interest, was admissible. Farmers' Pawnee Canal Co. v. Henderson, 102 Pac. 1063, 1065, 46 Colo. 37.

A stipulation in a contract of sale of real estate that no assignment thereof shall be valid without the written consent of the vendor, following a provision that, on the purchaser or his assigns performing his part of the agreement, the vendor shall execute to the purchaser or assigns a warranty deed, is valid, and an assignee under an assignment without the vendor's consent cannot compel specific performance after tendering the amount due in the manner prescribed by the contract on the theory that the stipulation is designed only to insure payment of the price; the word "assigns" meaning such assignees as the vendor accepts. Lockerby v. Amon, 116 Pac. 463, 64 Wash. 24, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1064, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 228.

The word "assigns," in a will reciting, "I give, devise and bequeath unto my daughter A., and to her heirs, lawfully from her body begotten, and assigns forever, all my whole estate, both real and personal," was not sufficient to control the previous words of limitation; and under the will she took an estate tail in the premises. Den ex dem. Doremus v. Zabriski, 15 N. J. Law, 404, 409.

The word "assigns," as used in Rev. St. § 4952, as amended by Act March 3, 1901, 26 Stat. 1107, providing that the author, inventor, or proprietor of any painting or the assigns of such person shall have the sole liberty of reprinting the same, does not relate to any estate which the author may acquire, but refers to one who receives the transfer of the right to multiply copies of the work. Bong v. Alfred S. Campbell Art Co., 29 Sup. Ct. 628, 630, 214 U. S. 236, 53 L. Ed. 979, 16 Ann. Cas. 1126.

Real Property Law (Laws 1896, c. 547) § 193, provides that the assignee of the lessor has the same remedies for the nonperformance of any agreement in the assigned lease as the lessor would have had. Code Civ. Proc. § 2235, includes the assignee of a lease as well as the landlord within those by whom summary proceedings may be instituted. The language of the last section is substantially taken from 2 Rev. St. (1st Ed.) pt. 3, c. 8, tit. 10, § 29, which provided that the landlord, as well as his "assigns," might make and present the oath, under which it was always held that a new lessee was not an "assign," and could not maintain summary proceedings against the former lessee to recover the premises. Held, that one whose lease begins at the termination of a prior lease cannot, when the prior lessee holds over maintain summary proceedings to recover the leased premises, since the substantial adoption of a former term of description in a statute on its recodification indicates the intention of the Legislature to adopt its settled judicial construction. Eells v. Morse, 121 N. Y. Supp. 617, 618, 67 Misc. Rep. 125.

As affecting alienability

The use of the word "assigns" in the granting clause and habendum of a deed imports an intention to give the grantees the power to sell and dispose of the property. Teague v. Sowder, 114 S. W. 484, 491, 121 Tenn. 182.

A contract for personal services is not assignable because it recites that it is made between the parties and "assigns." Swarts v. Narragansett Electric Lighting Co., 59 Atl. 111, 112, 26 R. I. 436 (citing Arkansas Valley Smelting Co. v. Beldeu, 8 Sup. Ct. 1306, 127 U. S. 379, 32 L. Ed. 246).

The fact that a will uses the phrase "to assign" to his daughter, her heirs and assigns forever, is not indicative of an intent that the absolute title should be vendible by her, as the word "assigns" is generally used where the fee is determinable as well as it is intended to be absolute. Chrystie v. Phyle, 19 N. Y. 344, 352.

A will, reciting that the testator devises all his property to his wife, "for her sole use and comfort during her natural life and to her heirs and assigns forever," gives her a fee in the property. The words "heirs and assigns" are the usual technical words in a deed to signify a fee, and, although unnecessary for that purpose in a will, are commonly used in wills with the same meaning. The use of the word "assigns" implies power of disposal. Kendall v. Clapp, 39 N. E. 773, 774, 168 Mass. 69.

Between man and man the only office that can be assigned to the word "assigns" in a will whereby testator devised lands to his two sons and to their heirs and "assigns" forever, and providing that the same should not be sold before the younger of the two should become of age, and that, should either of them die without issue, the survivor, his heirs and "assigns," should take the part bequeathed to the son so dying, and that, in the event both should die without issue, the land should pass to testator's surviving heirs, is that testator contemplated that the devised land might be transferred, and testator granted his acquiescence in such a transfer. The language used bears the further construction that not only did the testator contemplate that the land might be sold, but he contemplated that it might be sold by his two sons. Gannon v. Pauk, 98 S. W. 471, 475, 200 Mo. 75.

Where property was bequeathed to have and to hold to him, his heirs and assigns forever, the word "assigns" implies, ex vi termini, the right to sell, give away, or dispose in any other manner of the estate given to him. It is defined by Bouvier to mean those to whom the right has been transferred by particular title, such as sale, gift, legacy, transfer, or cession. McRee v. Means, 34 Ala. 349, 356.

The term "assigns" is not necessary in a deed, either as a word of limitation denoting the quantity of the estate granted or to give the grantee authority to dispose of the same. Salem Capital Flour Mills Co. v. Stayton Water-Ditch & Canal Co., 33 Fed. 146, 155.

Administrators

An administrator is an "assign" of his intestate by act of law, if such a construction comports with the character and intent of the instrument, and a sale of land under foreclosure is not invalid because the administrator of the mortgagee signed the notice of sale, "C., Assignee of the Mortgagee," and did not state in the notice that he was such assignee by virtue of his office as administrator. Thurber v. Carpenter, 31 Atl. 5, 18 R. I. 782.

Covenants running with land

The use of "assigns" as a technical word has never been essential to the running of a covenant with the land at common law. Sexauer v. Wilson, 113 N. W. 941, 942, 136 Iowa, 357, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 185, 15 Ann. Cas. 54.

Under the rule that a covenant binding the assigns will be considered as running with the land, the word "assigns" is not used in a technical sense, and as the only word appropriate for the purpose, but that equivalent words or any clear manifestation of intent will suffice to make the covenant one running with the land. Masury v. Southworth, 9 Ohio St. 341, 351.

Grantees and purchasers of land

The grantee of the grantee in a tax deed is his "assign" within Laws 1859, c. 22, § 35, giving a right of action to such grantee, "his heirs, executors or assigns." Finney v. Ford, 22 Wis. 173, 175.

The term "assigns" is a more equivocal word than "grantees," and indicates rather the successor in title to real property than the assignee to a personal right. Bouvier's Dictionary states that it is now seldom used except in the phrase in deeds "heirs, executors and assigns." Southworth v. Per-ring, 82 Pac. 785, 71 Kan. 755, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 87, 114 Am. St. Rep. 527.

The word "assigns," in Pol. Code, § 3477, authorizing repayment to original purchasers or their "assigns" all money expended in reclaiming swamp lands, refers only to those to whom the indebtedness may have been assigned or transferred by the owner and not to a purchaser of the land. Carpenter v. San Francisco Sav. Union, 61 Pac. 92, 94, 128 Cal. 516.

The term "assigns," in the statute providing that "any person, his heirs, or assigns, having at any time obtained a grant from the state for any swamp lands, which have been surveyed or taken possession of by the state board of education or their agents, and shall not have regularly listed the same for taxation and paid the taxes due thereon to the persons entitled to receive same, such grantee and his heirs and assigns shall forfeit all right, title," etc., does not mean purchasers of the land from the grantee or his heirs after the grant had issued, but persons to whom the grantee had assigned his right to have the grant before the same issued and to whom it was issued by virtue of such assignment. Under the provisions of the statute that such of those lands which have been surveyed by or for the state board of education or of which they have taken possession shall, upon such default, revert to the state, a survey made in 1887 cannot adversely affect those claiming under a purchase from the heirs of the original grantee without notice of the unperfected forfeiture and who for 14 years have paid all taxes against the land. Eastern Land, Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. State Board of Education, 7 S. E. 573, 578, 101 N. C. 35.

Rev. Codes 1905, §§ 7494, 7495, provide how executory contracts for sale of land may be declared forfeited, and require that written notice be given "to the vendee or purchaser, or his assigns." Held, that such written notice should be served on all persons known by the vendor to have acquired, by purchase or otherwise, the purchaser's interest in the property; the word "assigns" being used in its broad meaning and not restricted to mere assignees of the written contract. Williams v. Corey, 131 N. W. 457, 460, 21 N. D. 509, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 731.

The corporate grantee in a quitclaim deed to public coal land, executed by a person who, having then no interest therein, afterwards made an entry avowedly for his sole use and benefit, but actually at the instance of the corporation, with its money and for its benefit, is his "assign" within the meaning of the act of June 16, 1880, § 2, providing for the repayment of the purchase price in case of subsequent cancellation of the entry "to the person who made such entry, or to his heirs or assigns." United States v. Colorado Anthracite Co., 32 Sup. Ct. 617, 619, 225 U. S. 219, 56 L. Ed. 1063.

Holder of negotiable note

The word "assigns," as used in Rev. Codes 1899, § 3265, providing that every contract made by or on behalf of any corporation doing business in the state without first having complied with the law shall be wholly void on behalf of such corporation and its assigns, does not include the indorsee of negotiable paper, who takes the same before maturity, for value and without notice of defenses thereto. National Bank of Commerce v. Pick, 99 N. W. 63, 65, 13 N. D. 74.

Legal representatives

Where a testator devised all of his estate of which he died seised to his son to have and to hold the same to him, his heirs and assigns, executors and administrators, the son took an estate in fee; the expression "assigns" being equivalent to "legal representatives" and not cutting down the estate from a fee-simple to a life estate. Smith v. Rice, 66 N. E. 806, 183 Mass. 251 (citing Briggs v. Shaw, 91 Mass. [9 Allen] 516, 518).

An assignment of a patent to two persons named, "and to their legal representatives," to be held and enjoyed by them for their own use and behoof, "and for the use and behoof of their legal representatives," is not a mere personal license to the persons named, but the words "legal representatives" mean "assigns," as well as "executors and administrators." Hamilton v. Kingsbury, 11 Fed. Cas. 346, 347, 15 Blatchf. 69.

Mortgagees

The word "assigns," as used in Act Cong. June 16, 1880, c. 244, § 2, 21 Stat. 287, providing for the repayment of the purchase price to a person making an entry of public land, or to his heirs or assigns, in case of the cancellation of such entry for conflict, means one who derives from the original entryman by the voluntary act of the latter, and a mortgagee who has foreclosed his mortgage and purchased the mortgaged property at sheriff's sale under a decree of the court is an assign. United States v. Commonwealth Title Ins. & Trust Co., 24 Sup. Ct. 546, 547, 193 U. S. 651, 48 L. Ed. 830.

"The term 'assigns' is of sufficiently broad signification to include a second mortgagee and has been deemed to comprehend all those who take either immediately or remotely from or under the assignor, whether by conveyance, devise, descent, or act of law." Brown v. Smith, 102 N. W. 171, 173, 13 N. D. 580 (quoting and adopting definition in Brown v. Crookston Agricultural Ass'n, 26 N. W. 907, 34 Minn. 545).

ASSIGNATION HOUSE

A "bawdyhouse" is a house kept for the purpose of prostitution; that is, for men and women to have unlawful, illicit sexual intercourse together therein. The statute uses the words "bawdyhouse or brothel, or house of assignation." A "bawdyhouse" is a house of ill fame. An "assignment house" is a house resorted to for purposes of prostitution, and is synonymous with "bawdyhouse" or "brothel." State v. Keithley, 127 S. W. 406, 408, 142 Mo. App. 417.

ASSIST

The word "abet" is not synonymous with "aid" and "assist." It may import presence with instigation or encouragement towards the commission of the criminal offense but without aid or assistance therein. The furnishing by the defendant of a machine that happened afterwards, without his privity, to be used for gambling, does not constitute either the aiding, abetting, or assisting in the keeping of a gambling resort. State v. Flynn, 72 Atl. 296, 297, 76 N. J. Law, 473.

ASSISTANCE

See Writ of Assistance.

The word "assistance," as used in Ky. St. 1903, § 114, authorizing employment of special assistance to the Attorney General in collecting claims due the commonwealth, means "assistants." Ray v. James (Ky.) 112 S. W. 641, 642.

ASSISTANT

See First Assistant.

The word "assistance," as used in the statute authorizing employment of special assistance to the Attorney General in collecting claims due the commonwealth, means "assistants." Ray v. James (Ky.) 112 S. W. 641, 642.

As a deputy

The designation deputy county attorney, while not accurate, will be sufficient designation of an "assistant county attorney," so that notwithstanding Acts 22d Leg. c. 72, authorizing a county attorney to appoint not more than three assistant county attorneys, the fact that one, if so appointed as an assistant, signed an information as deputy county attorney, would be no ground for quashing the information. Murray v. State, 87 S. W. 349, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 219.

"Assistant deputy sheriffs" are not "deputies" within Civil Service Law New York (Laws 1899, c. 370) § 12, exempting certain positions, including in subdivision 1, the "deputies of principal executive officers authorized by law to act generally for and in place of their principals." People ex rel. Scanlon v. Milliken, 111 N. Y. Supp. 551, 552, 127 App. Div. 468.

The word "deputy" does not mean the same as "assistant," and hence under White's Ann. Code, art. 125, denouncing the bribing of an officer, which term, under article 127, includes all city officials, there can be no conviction of bribing an "assistant city attorney" of a city, the charter of which makes no provision for such an officer, but by Loc. & Sp. Laws 30th Leg. c. 5, § 26, only authorizes the city attorney to appoint a "deputy." Naill v. State, 129 S. W. 630, 631, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 484, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1288.

ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL

As state officer, see State Officer.

ASSISTANT AUDITOR

Ky. St. 1903, § 4258, authorizes the auditor of public accounts to appoint revenue agents, whose term of office shall be four years. Section 4259 requires revenue agents to take the oath required of other officers, and to execute a bond to the commonwealth. The duties of such agents are prescribed by law, and in many matters they may act independently of the auditor, as in assessing omitted property under section 4241. Held, that a revenue agent, though an appointee of the auditor, is an officer of the commonwealth, holding for a fixed term, and is not subject to removal by the auditor under section 140 of the statutes, authorizing the auditor to remove the "assistant auditor" and "auditor's clerk." Hager v. Lucas, 86 S. W. 552, 553, 120 Ky. 307.

ASSISTANT CASHIER

As clerk, see Clerk.

ASSISTANT DISTRICT ATTORNEY

As court officer, see Court Officer.

As officer of United States, see United States Officer.

ASSISTANT SOLICITOR

Private counsel, who aid in prosecution of a case as the solicitor may permit, are not "assistant solicitors," within Gen. St. 1906, § 3880. Clinton v. State, 50 South. 580, 58 Fla. 23.

ASSISTANT SURGEON

A passed assistant surgeon in the navy, with the rank of lieutenant, is entitled to the pay of a captain in the army, mounted, in view of the respective provisions of Rev. St. U. S. § 1466, assimilating in rank lieutenants in the navy with captains in the army, of Navy Personnel Act March 3, 1899, c. 413, § 13, 30 Stat. 1007, entitling commissioned officers of the line of the navy to the same pay and allowance as officers of corresponding rank in the army, and of Act June 7, 1900, c. 859, 31 Stat. 697, declaring that assistant surgeons shall rank with assistant surgeons in the army, who are mounted, since Congress must have used the words "assistant surgeons" as descriptive of the whole class of assistant surgeons, passed as well as those not passed. United States v. Farenholt, 27 Sup. Ct. 629, 631, 206 U. S. 226, 51 L. Ed. 1036.

ASSOCIATE

quirement that the road should be constructed within two years, the grantee named had an implied right to transfer or assign certain interests in the franchise, since he could not otherwise associate persons with him; the term "and such persons as he may associate with him" not meaning persons employed to assist in the construction and maintenance of the road but persons in whom he might vest an interest and franchise. People ex rel. Spliers v. Lawley, 119 Pac. 1089, 1093, 17 Cal. App. 331.

The word "associated," as used in Act March 2, 1893, c. 196, §§ 1, 2, 8, 27 Stat. 531, 532, as amended by Act March 2, 1903, c. 976, 32 Stat. 948, § 2, providing that "whenever * * * any train is provided with power air brakes, not less than fifty per centum of the cars in such train shall have their brakes used and operated by the engineer; * * * and all power braked cars in such train which are associated together with said fifty per centum shall have their brakes so used and operated," means the cars immediately connected with the 50 per cent. equipped with power brakes and operated from the engine; and those associated cars are also required to be operated from the engine. Lyon v. Charleston & W. C. Ry., 58 S. E. 12-16, 77 S. C. 328.

The term "association" is generic, and may comprehend the whole body of men, like the stockholders, who unite in forming the body politic of a banking institution. An averment in an indictment under Rev. St. § 5206, charging that defendants, as director and cashier of a national bank, by means of a draft, drawn by them or by other stated means, misapplied the moneys, funds, and credits "of said association without the knowledge and consent thereof" is not equivalent to an averment that the act was done without the knowledge and consent of the directors as required by the statute and is insufficient. United States v. Martindale, 146 Fed. 280-284.

Cr. Code, § 82, provides that in a prosecution for embezzlement of the property of any person, bank, incorporated company, or co-partnership by an agent, servant, etc., it shall be sufficient to allege, generally, an embezzlement of the funds of the person, incorporated company, etc., to a certain amount, without specifying the particulars of the embezzlement. The indictment charged accused, as agent in the employ of "A. Express Company, an association," with embezzlement of the money of said company. Held, that the indictment was bad for not alleging ownership of the money in any person, or any corporation, joint-stock company, or other entity which could legally own property, the term "association" meaning a body of persons acting together without incorporation for a particular object, and being applied to partnerships and unincorporated companies as well as to corporations not recognized for profit; and the statute did not make the averment of ownership sufficient, its primary purpose being to obviate the necessity of specifying the particular manner in which the funds were held by an agent, etc. People v. Brander, 91 N. E. 59, 60, 244 Ill. 26, 135 Am. St. Rep. 301, 18 Ann. Cas. 341.

An "unincorporated, voluntary association" is not a partnership or a corporation, although it has some of the elements of both. By becoming a member of it one takes an interest in the property owned by it, but by leaving it he leaves this interest behind him in those who continue as members of the organization. Richardson v. Harsha, 98 Pac. 897, 903, 22 Okl. 405.

An unincorporated association of farmers organized to provide themselves with a telephone line, each member to pay his proportionate share of the expense of construction and operation, which is not a partnership, nor a joint-stock company, is a voluntary association, since an "association" is a body of persons acting together without a charter, but on the methods and forms used by incorporated bodies and in the prosecution of some common enterprise. Branagan v. Buckman, 122 N. Y. Supp. 610, 613, 67 Misc. Rep. 242.

Code, § 1820, provides that no stipulation or condition in any policy of insurance, issued by any company or association referred to in the chapter, limiting the time to less than a year after knowledge by the beneficiary within which notice or proofs of death must be given, shall be valid. Section 1784 of the chapter provides that corporations, organized upon the stipulated premium plan or assessment plan to insure lives or furnish benefits to widows, etc., of deceased members, shall be styled "associations," and corporations doing business under the chapter which provides for payment of policy claims, accumulation of a reserve or emergency fund, and the expense of management and prosecution of the business by payment of stipulated premiums, assessments, or periodical calls, and wherein the insured's liability to contribute to the payment of policy claims is not limited to a fixed amount, shall be deemed to be upon the stipulated premium plan or assessment plan, and shall be subject to the provisions of the chapter. Section 1798 provides that the chapter shall not apply to any association organized solely for benevolent purposes, and composed wholly of members of any one occupation, guild, etc., but that such an association may, by complying with the provisions of the chapter, become entitled to its privileges, and be amenable to its provisions so far as applicable. The business of an association was to collect from its members, a fixed membership fee, annual dues, and an assessment upon the death of a member in good standing. The amount in the treasury was not to be reduced below a certain amount, and an assessment might be made when necessary to carry out the business of the association. The money, after meeting expenses, was paid to members in case of disability or to their beneficiaries in event of death. Held, that the association was not organized solely for benevolent purposes, but was a mutual assessment association, and an association, within sections 1784, 1820, and hence a provision in its by-laws that written notice of a member's death should be given within 15 days after its occurrence was void. Connell v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Ass'n, 116 N. W. 820, 821, 139 Iowa, 444.

Board of health

Medical Practice Act, §§ 9, 10, providing for the recovery of a penalty for the use of the state board of health against persons practicing medicine without a license, are not in violation of Const. art. 4, § 22, prohibiting the General Assembly by local or special law from granting to any "corporation," "association," or "individual" any special or exclusive privilege, immunity, or franchise, for, as the state board of health is a branch of the state executive department and its members officers of the state, the board is neither a corporation, association, nor individual within such constitutional provision. People v. Dunn, 99 N. E. 577, 578, 255 Ill. 289.

Corporation

A "corporation" has a definite legal meaning differing essentially from an "association," which may or may not be incorporated. In re Graves' Estate, 63 N. E. 787, 789, 171 N. Y. 40.

St. 1898, § 1038, subd. 3, exempting personal property owned by any religious, scientific, literary, or benevolent "association" from taxation, includes corporations. St. John's Military Academy v. Edwards, 128 N. W. 113, 114, 143 Wis. 551, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1123.

A "corporation" is an "association of persons" within the meaning of the coal land laws, confining every association of persons to the entry of not exceeding 640 acres. United States v. Munday, 32 Sup. Ct. 53, 56, 222 U. S. 175, 181, 56 L. Ed. 149 (citing United States v. Trinidad Coal & Coking Co., 11 Sup. Ct. 57, 137 U. S. 160, 169, 34 L. Ed. 640).

By Code, § 1620, fraud in deceiving the public or individuals as to a corporation's condition is a misdemeanor, and section 1621 makes the diversion of corporate funds, if any person is injured, and payment of dividends leaving insufficient funds, a fraud within the preceding section. Section 1622 provides that the intentional violation of the two preceding sections shall work a forfeiture of the corporate privileges. Section 1640 empowers courts of equity to close up the business of any corporation on good cause shown and to appoint a receiver therefor. Acts 30th Gen. Assem. 1904, pp. 57, 58, c. 66, § 1, provides that the term "association" as used in the act shall mean any corporation, etc., which issues stock on the installment plan, and the term "stock" shall mean contracts, etc., of any kind upon the installment plan. Section 2 prohibits such an association from issuing stock unless it has procured from the state auditor a certificate and requires it to file with him a statement to procure the certificate, which statement shall be laid before the executive council, which body, by section 3, may direct the issuance of the certificate. Section 4 requires compliance with the act within 60 days after it takes effect. Section 6 requires such association, before doing business, to deposit a bond or securities for performance of contracts, and at the end of the year to deposit with him securities equal to the amount of its liabilities. Section 7 makes any member of such association guilty of a misdemeanor who transacts business without complying with the act. Defendant corporation issued a large number of installment land contracts without complying with chapter 66, and also published false and misleading statements as to its capital and assets, and falsely advertised that it had deposited securities with the state auditor. The money received under the contracts was not invested according to its advertised plan, and its expenses were very largely out of proportion to its revenue. Defendant had no substantial business other than the land contract business, and, while it bought and sold some land, it did not have enough funds to pay its outstanding land contracts, and it did not appear that creditors and stockholders could not be protected upon the dissolution of the corporation. Held, that chapter 66 contemplated the dissolution of an association not complying with its provisions, and, in view of the violations of Code, §§ 1620, 1621 shown, and its failure to comply with chapter 66, the business of the association should be wound up in a suit for that purpose by the state. State ex rel. Mullan v. Syndicate Land Co., 120 N. W. 327, 329, 142 Iowa, 22.

ASSOCIATION FOR PECUNIARY PROFIT

An association organized for pecuniary profit is one organized to carry on some business in which a profit is looked for, in which case the members become in fact copartners, and the liability of the individual members rests on rules governing the liability of partners and the liability of principals for the acts of the agent. Ranken v. Probey, 115 N. Y. Supp. 832, 835, 181 App. Div. 323.

ASSOCIATION THEORY

The "association theory," that a master will not be excused from liability for injury to one servant by the negligence of a fellow servant unless the servants are so engaged and situated as that each by carefulness and attention in the performance of his duties may protect himself from injury caused by the negligence of a person with whom he is working, obtains in Kentucky. Louisville R. Co. v. Hibbitt, 129 S. W. 319, 321, 139 Ky. 43, 139 Am. St. Rep. 464.

ASSUME

The word "assume," in Rev. Laws, c. 102, § 1, providing that whoever assumes to be a common victualer, without being licensed as such, shall forfeit a specified sum, is synonymous with the word "presume," as used in Gen. St. 1860, c. 88, § 1, and Pub. St. 1882, c. 102, § 1, which are the same as Rev. Laws, c. 102, § 1, with the exception that the word "presume" is used instead of "assume." Commonwealth v. Lavery, 73 N. E. 884, 188 Mass. 13.

Defendant obtained permission from the government to alter the course of a river and promised to "assume all responsibility for damages" by reason of the alteration of the current in the river, but the court held that this was an indemnifying contract purely between the parties, and not an undertaking by defendant to pay to outsiders damages for which otherwise they would have no cause of action. Defendant's obligation was to pay or fight all claims for damages on account of the current, and save the federal government harmless. Corrigan Transit Co. v. Sanitary Dist. of Chicago, 137 Fed. 851, 855, 70 C. C. A. 381.

A lease by a railway company of a part of its right of way stipulated that the lessee covenanted to "assume all the risks" of loss of any building, improvements, or property on or near the premises, occasioned by fire from locomotives, etc., and that the lessee released and discharged the company from any claim on account thereof. The lease provided that if, on termination of the lease, the lessee or owner of any of the buildings on the ground should fail to remove any buildings or other property from the leased premises, the company might remove the same at the cost of the lessee. Held, that the lessee assumed only risk of loss of its own buildings and property, the words "assumes all the risks" applying, in common acceptance, to an employé entering the service of the master, who "assumes all the risks" of injury to himself incident to his employment, and the words "release and discharge" not being used in ordinary parlance in relation to insurance, guaranty, or indemnity, but applying to a claim owned or controlled by the party undertaking to release and discharge another from such claim. W. A. Morgan & Bros. v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas, 110 S. W. 978, 983, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 420.

As agree to pay

An allegation that grantees of mortgaged premises "assumed" the mortgage debt meant only that they promised to pay it. Southern Indiana Loan & Savings Inst. v. Roberts, 86 N. E. 490, 492, 42 Ind. App. 653.

A finding that "defendant 'assumed the mortgage'" is to be construed as meaning that defendant assumed payment of the mortgage debt. Kastner v. Fashion Livery Co., 85 Pac. 120, 121, 10 Ariz. 23.

Where a deed to land provides that the grantee "assumes" all incumbrances then of record, the effect of the word "assumes" is equivalent to "assumes and agrees to pay" and imposes a personal liability on the grantee to pay the incumbrance which may be enforced against her estate. Thomas v. Home Mut. Bldg. Loan Ass'n, 90 N. E. 1081, 1084, 248 Ill. 550.

Where a person agreed to "assume" certain incumbrances, this meant that he was to pay them when due, and it was immaterial whether one of them was a lien on more than one of the properties involved. Olsen v. Sortedahl, 121 N. W. 559, 562, 143 Iowa, 166.

The limitation on municipal indebtedness prescribed by Act April 29, 1902 (95 Ohio Laws, p. 321), being "that no municipal corporation shall hereafter create or assume an aggregate indebtedness of outstanding and unpaid bonds under the authority of this act in excess of 8 per cent. of the total value of all the property in it as listed and assessed for taxation," has only a prospective operation, and indebtedness created or "assumed" prior to the passage of the act may not be considered in ascertaining whether the prescribed limit of indebtedness has been reached. City of Tiffin v. Griffith, 77 N. E. 1075, 1076, 74 Ohio St. 219.

Where defendants were deeded certain property on which plaintiff held a vendor's lien, evidenced by notes, and asked for an extension of time, for which they executed a trust deed, which contained the recital that the defendants "are justly indebted to the plaintiff, as evidenced by certain notes assumed" by the defendants, an indebtedness was created on the part of the defendants, although the ordinary office of a trust deed is to furnish security for a debt already created; the expression "notes assumed" meaning that payment was assumed. Peterson v. Kerbey (Tex.) 151 S. W. 321, 323 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, pp. 586, 587).

ASSUMED RISK

See Assumption of Risk.

ASSUMPSIT

See General Assumpsit; Special Assumpsit.

"Assumpsit" is but another word for an undertaking or a promise. It does not lie except there be an express or implied promise. A claim for the conversion by plaintiff of corn in which defendant had a valid landlord's lien gives rise to an implied assumpsit in defendant's favor, irrespective of whether or not plaintiff sold the corn and received the proceeds. Crane v. Murray, 80 S. W. 280, 281, 106 Mo. App. 697.

The distinction between "assumpsit" and "case" is that the one is a breach of a contract, and the other a breach of a duty growing out of a contract express or implied. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Norris, 52 South. 891, 892, 167 Ala. 311.

A promise express or implied is the basis of every cause of action enforceable in "assumpsit"; and every promise to amount to a cause of action, must be supported by a valuable consideration. Ivy Coal & Coke Co. v. Long, 36 South. 722, 724, 139 Ala. 535.

By common-law procedure, the appropriate form of an action at law to recover an amount due upon a judgment is an action of debt. Such an action lies for the recovery of a fixed and definite sum due upon a contract, whether it be a contract of record like a judgment, or a contract by specialty, or a simple contract. In such a form of action, therefore, the plaintiff must declare on a contract and must claim the amount alleged to be due on the contract. It differs from an action of "assumpsit" in that the latter is for recovery of damages for the nonperformance of a parol or simple contract. Du Bois v. Seymour, 152 Fed. 600, 602, 81 C. C. A. 590, 11 Ann. Cas. 656.

The word "assumpsit" is derived from the Latin "assumere," meaning to assume or undertake. In the law of contracts, it is understood as an undertaking, either express or implied, to perform a parol agreement. At common law, it was divided into express and implied assumpsit; the former being an undertaking, made orally, by writing not under seal, or matter of record, to perform an act or to pay a sum of money to another; while an implied assumpsit was an undertaking presumed in law to have been made by a party from his conduct, although he had not made an express promise. The action of assumpsit was also divided into special assumpsit, or an action brought on an express promise, and general assumpsit or an action brought on an implied contract. Board of Highway Com'rs, Bloomington Tp., v. City of Bloomington, 97 N. E. 280, 283, 284, 253 Ill. 164, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 471.

The form of the action of "assumpsit" known as general or indebitatus assumpsit is founded on what the law terms an implied promise on the part of the defendant to pay what in good conscience he is bound to pay the plaintiff. Assumpsit is the proper remedy against one who acquiesces in and implicitly sanctions an act of another, which act, if done by himself, would amount to an undertaking in law. Meager v. Linder Lumber Co., 57 S. E. 1004, 1005, 1 Ga. App. 426 (citing 1 Wait, Act. & Def. 382; Miller v. Greyson, 2 Brev. [S. C.] 108).

"Assumpsit" is nomen generalissimum, under which a great variety of special cases are embraced. It includes every case by simple contract, whether in the nature of a warranty, a promise to pay money, or an undertaking to do or perform any act, from whence a promise, either express or implied, can arise. The damages to be recovered must always depend upon the nature of the action and the circumstances of the case. The difference of opinion which seems to exist on the subject, I apprehend, has arisen from confounding the distinctions between the different forms of assumpsit. In an action for money had and received, the actual amount of money received (with interest in some cases) should be the measure of damages. In an action for goods or any specific chattel sold and delivered, the value of the thing sold; and so on in all other cases which furnish a standard by which the jury can be governed. But in cases of fraud, and other cases merely sounding in damages, the jury may give a verdict to the whole amount of the injury sustained or imaginary damages. * * * In Bacon it is said: 'If there are any circumstances of hardship, fraud, or deceit, the jury may consider of them, and proportion and mitigate the damages as they please.' 2 Bacon, tit. 'Damages.' And Lord Mansfield says 'that fraud alone may be ground for an assumpsit where there is no express undertaking, as where a person sells property as sound, knowing it to be otherwise.' Stewart v. Wilkins, Doug. 18." Welborn v. Dixon, 49 S. E. 232, 235, 70 S. C. 108, 3 Ann. Cas. 407 (quoting and adopting the definition in Rose & Rodgers v. Beattie [S. C.] 2 Nott & McC. 538).

ASSUMPSIT FOR MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED

"Assumpsit for money had and received" is of an equitable character and lies, in general, whenever the defendant has received money which in equity and good conscience he ought to pay to plaintiff. Henderson v. Koenig, 91 S. W. 88, 91, 192 Mo. 690.

ASSUMPTION

See, also, Assume.

ASSUMPTION OF FACTS

A fact is not "assumed" by the charge when it is left to the jury to be found or believed by the evidence. In an action against a railroad for injuries to a switchman caused by a handhold on a box car giving way while plaintiff was descending from the car, a charge that plaintiff had a right to presume that defendant had exercised ordinary care to furnish a reasonably safe handhold for his use, and was not required to inspect such handhold before using it, but if the fact that the handhold was insecurely fastened was open and obvious to plaintiff, or if he knew of the same or must necessarily have discovered the same while engaged in the discharge of his duties, he would assume the resulting risk, was not subject to the objection of assuming that the handhold was insecurely fastened. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Box (Tex.) 93 S. W. 184, 187.

ASSUMPTION OF RISK

See Imputed Appreciation of Risk.

"Assumption of risk" is a form of contributory negligence, or want of ordinary care. Anderson v. Chicago Brass Co., 106 N. W. 1077, 1080, 127 Wis. 273.

"Assumption of risk" in its true sense is the assumption of the risks arising out of the negligence of the master when such negligence is known to the servant, and the danger therefrom is appreciated by him. Duffey v. Consolidated Block Coal Co., 124 N. W. 609, 610, 147 Iowa, 225, 30 L. E. A. (N. S.) 1067.

By the common expression that the servant "assumes" certain risks is meant the statement that the law casts them on him and the master is not responsible. Bria v. Westinghouse, Church, Kerr & Co., 117 N. Y. Supp. 195, 196, 128 App. Div. 346.

An employé may not take chances, and, in case of ill results following the risks thereby assumed, charge them to the master. Such conduct, resulting in injury, constitutes the "assumption of risk" that prevents recovery. McConnell v. Alpha Portland Cement Co., 67 Atl. 346, 347, 74 N. J. Law, 727 (citing Gill v. National Storage Co., 56 Atl. 146, 70 N. J. Law, 53; Dwojakowski v. Central R. Co., 55 Atl. 100, 69 N. J. Law, 601; Schwanewede v. North Hudson County Ry. Co., 51 Atl. 696, 67 N. J. Law, 449).

The term "assumption of risk," as used in the books, is applied to two very different conditions or states of fact. One has reference to the risks naturally incident to work which the servant undertakes to do, and the other has reference to risks or dangers arising from the employer's negligence, the peril of which the servant assumes when he remains in the employment after he knows, or as a reasonably prudent person ought to know, the dangers to which he is thus exposed. Vohs v. A. E. Shorthill & Co., 107 N. W. 417, 419, 130 Iowa, 538.

"The doctrine of 'assumption of risk' is of comparatively recent origin, and when first introduced the decisions of the courts were far from uniform, and in some cases illogical. With fuller discussion and clearer analysis, the doctrine has been repudiated that mere knowledge on the part of the servant of defective appliances, when taking employment or afterwards, is an 'assumption of risk' which relieves the employer of the duty of furnishing reasonably safe appliances and a reasonably safe place in which to work. That rule ignored the fact that the employé was not on equal terms with the employer. It ignored the duty of the state to protect the welfare of a deserving and meritorious class of its citizens, who should not be exposed to unnecessary risks in the search for bread, and cynically made the necessities of the laborer condone and pardon the neglect of duty on the part of the employer." Pressly v. Dover Yarn Mills, 51 S. E. 69, 73, 138 N. C. 410.

Application of doctrine

"The doctrine of 'assumption of risk' is only applicable to cases arising between master and servant." Conrad v. Springfield Consol. R. Co., 88 N. E. 180, 182, 240 Ill. 12, 130 Am. St. Rep. 251 (citing Schoninger Co. v. Mann, 76 N. E. 354, 219 Ill. 242, 8 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1097).

The doctrine of "assumed risk" in its application to carrier and passenger involves the doctrine of contributory negligence, since, unless the position voluntarily taken by the passenger exposes him to obvious and patent dangers or such as he is required to anticipate, he cannot in case of injury be charged with negligence or to have assumed the risk. United Rys. & Electric Co. v. Riley, 71 Atl. 970, 974, 109 Md. 327.

"The doctrine of 'assumption of risk' generally pertains to controversies between masters and servants, although litigation, attended by circumstances which make the defense available, may arise between parties not sustaining that relation. Arise where it may, the defense is one which must rest on contract; or, if not exclusively on contract, then on an act done so spontaneously by the party against whom the defense is invoked that he was a volunteer, and any bad result of the act must be attributed to an exercise of his free volition, instead of to the conduct of his adversary. The word 'assumption' imports a contract, or some kindred act of an unconstrained will. Whenever a man does anything dangerous, he faces risk, but it by no means follows that, legally speaking, he assumes the risk." It has no application to the case of a passenger injured while attempting to alight from an electric car at a dangerous place selected by the carmen, though she made no demands to have the car returned to a safe place for alighting. Fillingham v. St. Louis Transit Co., 77 S. W. 314, 316, 102 Mo. App. 573.

As a general rule, the doctrine of "assumption of risk" pertains to controversies between masters and servants, though circumstances may arise between parties other than masters and servants when the doctrine may apply; but such defense is never available unless it rest upon contract, or, if not exclusively on contract, then on an act done so spontaneously by the party against whom the defense is invoked that he was a volunteer, and any bad result of the act must be attributed to an exercise of his free volition, instead of to the conduct of his adversary. The word "assumption" imports a contract, or some kindred act of an unconstrained will. Whenever a man does anything dangerous, he encounters the risk; but it by no means follows that, legally speaking, he assumes the risk. One employed by the foreman of a bridge crew of a railroad company to cook for the men in cars furnished by the company for the purpose and paid by the men for the services rendered does not assume the risk of an injury while the cars are hauled by the company from one place to another. Tinkle v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 110 S. W. 1086, 1093, 212 Mo. 445 (citing Fillingham v. St. Louis Transit Co., 77 S. W. 314, 102 Mo. App. 573).

Agreement or consent

"Assumption of risks" rests on contract; 'negligence' rests in tort." George v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 125 S. W. 196, 209, 225 Mo. 364 (quoting and adopting the rule in Chariton v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 98 S. W. 529, 535, 200 Mo. 413, 433, citing Dale v. Hill-O'Meara Construction Co., 82 S. W. 1092, 108 Mo. App. 97).

"Assumption of risk" involves an implied agreement by the employé to assume the risks ordinarily incident to his employment or a waiver, after full knowledge of extraordinary risk, of his right to hold the employer for a breach of duty in that regard. Hall v. Northwestern R. Co., 62 S. E. 848, 850, 81 S. C. 522 (quoting and adopting definition in Bodie v. Charlestown & W. C. Ry. Co., 39 S. E. 715, 61 S. C. 468); James v. Fountain Inn Mfg. Co., 61 S. E. 391, 393, 80 S. C. 232 (citing Bodie v. Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co., 39 S. E. 715, 61 S. C. 468).

"Assumption of risk" is a contractual incident implied by law from the very nature of the contract itself. Brown v. Rome Ma- chine & Foundry Co., 62 S. E. 720, 724, 5 Ga. App. 142.

"Assumption of risk" is based, not upon the contract, but on the maxim "Volenti non fit injuria." Rase v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co., 120 N. W. 360, 363, 107 Minn. 280, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 188.

"Assumption of risk" is the voluntary contract of an ordinarily prudent servant to take the chances of the known or obvious dangers of his employment and to relieve his master of liability therefor. It rests in contract. In an action for injuries to a servant, the defense of "assumption of risk" must be pleaded. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wilhoit, 98 S. W. 341, 343, 6 Ind. T. 534.

"Assumption of risk" is a term of the contract of employment, express or implied, by which the servant agrees that dangers of injury obviously incident to the discharge of his duty shall be at his risk. Sans Bois Coal Co. v. Janeway, 99 Pac. 153, 156, 22 Okl. 425.

In an action by an employé for injuries, the term "assumption of risk" usually refers to those risks arising from the contract, either express or implied, but may include risks voluntarily assumed by the employé in attempting to do something unnecessary. King v. Woodward Iron Co. (Ala.) 59 South. 264, 269 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 589).

"Assumption of risk" by an employé is contractual, and becomes immaterial when the negligence of the employer is the producing cause of the injury. Mack v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 101 S. W. 142, 144, 123 Mo. App. 531.

"Assumption of risk" is a matter of contract. If a servant is defeated by the rule of assumed risk, it must be because he agreed, long before the accident happened, that he would assume the very risk from which his injury arose. Diamond Block Coal Co. v. Cuthbertson, 76 N. E. 1060, 1067, 166 Ind. 290 (citing D. H. Davis Coal Co. v. Pollard, 62 N. E. 492, 158 Ind. 607, 92 Am. St. Rep. 319).

"Assumption of risk" is a matter of contract. A servant assumes such a risk as a part of his contract of service. He agrees to the risk in order to be employed and paid. In an action for personal injuries to a laborer in a factory, due to defendant's neglect to properly guard machinery, where there was no contract relation between the parties, it was proper to refuse to submit to the jury the question of the "assumption of the risk" by plaintiff. Poole v. American Linseed Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 1047, 1048, 119 App. Div. 136.

"Assumption of risk" rests on agreement of the servant with the master, express or implied, from the circumstances of the employment, that the master shall not be liable for any injury incident to the service, resulting from a known or obvious danger arising in the performance of the service. Buena Vista Extract Co. v. Hickman, 62 S. E. 804, 806, 108 Va. 665.

The "assumption of risk" by a servant is based on the notion that one who consents to the doing of an act cannot maintain an action in respect of the damage which results from that act. The consent may be either express or implied. Huggard v. Glucose Sugar Refining Co., 109 N. W. 475, 481, 132 Iowa, 724.

"Assumed risk" involves no act of negligence of the injured party, but arises out of the contractual relations between the master and servant, and involves an injury from some danger incident to the servant's employment, or of which he had knowledge, actual or constructive, when he entered on the performance of the things he was doing when the injury occurred, the risk of which he is presumed to have agreed to assume. Columbia Creasoting Co. v. Beard, 89 N. E. 321, 324, 44 Ind. App. 310.

"Assumption of risk" rests on contract. The servant, when he enters his master's employ, impliedly agrees with him, for the compensation named, to assume the risk of usual dangers incident to the work. But the servant does not assume the risk of the master's negligence. In the assumption of risks by a servant, it must be considered that the master impliedly contracts with the servant that he will exercise ordinary care to protect such servant from injury by providing a reasonably safe place for him to work. The risks assumed by the servant are those risks alone which remain after the master has exercised ordinary care. Charlton v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 98 S. W. 529, 535, 200 Mo. 413.

A servant by his contract of hire "assumes the risks" of injury which are the ordinary dangers of the employment. He assumes all of the ordinary risks pertaining to the business, and if the employer should be negligent in supplying him imperfect machinery, and the employé becomes aware of the defect, or by ordinary care may know of it, it is his duty either to inform the employer or quit work, and if he continues in the employment he assumes the risks that may result therefrom. Atoka Coal & Mining Co. v. Miller, 104 S. W. 555, 561, 7 Ind. T. 104.

"Assumption of risk" is a waiver of defects and dangers by an employé, and a consent under an express or implied contract to assume them, whether he is careful or negligent in his conduct; the doctrine being based on the maxim, "Volenti non fit injuria." Miller v. White Bronze Monument Co., 118 N. W. 518, 523, 141 Iowa, 701, 18 Ann. Cas. 957.

"Assumption of risk" rests for its support upon the expressed or implied agreement of the employé that, knowing the danger to which he is exposed, he agrees to assume all responsibility for resulting injury. The protection vouchsafed to employés by statute against the negligence of their employers cannot be contracted away, and in an action by an employé for injury caused by the employer's failure to comply with the factory act, requiring manufacturers to safely guard their machinery, assumption of risk is not available as a defense. Western Furniture & Mfg. Co. v. Bloom, 90 Pac. 821, 822, 76 Kan. 127, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 225, 123 Am. St. Rep. 123.

"Assumption of risk" is a term of the contract of employment, express or implied from the circumstances of the employment, by which the servant agrees that dangers of injury obviously incident to the discharge of the servant's duty shall be at the servant's risk. In such cases the acquiescence of the servant in the conduct of the master does not defeat a right of action on the ground that the servant causes or contributes to cause the injury to himself; but the correct statement is that no right of action arises in favor of the servant at all, for, under the terms of the employment, the master violates no legal duty to the servant in failing to protect him from dangers the risk of which he agreed expressly or impliedly to assume." The defense of assumption of risk is not based on contract, but is based on the doctrine of volenti non fit injuria (one who, knowing and appreciating a danger, voluntarily assumes the risk of it), and is recognized by Rev. Codes, § 6183, declaring "he who consents to an act is not wronged by it"; and hence the doctrine of assumed risk was not abrogated by Const. art. 15, § 16, and Rev. Codes, §§ 5052, 5053, declaring that a contract releasing an employer from liability for his negligence is void. Osterholm v. Boston & Montana Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 107 Pac. 499, 504, 40 Mont. 508.

An early, if not the earliest, application of the phrase "assumption of risk," was the establishment of the exception to the liability of a master for the negligence of his servant when the person injured was a fellow servant of the negligent man. The defense of "assumed risk" is said to rest on contract, which is generally implied by the circumstances of the case; it being a term which the law imports into the contract, when nothing is said to the contrary, that the servant will assume the ordinary risks of the service for which he is paid. Johnson v. Mammoth Vein Coal Co., 114 S. W. 722, 725, 88 Ark. 243, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 646 (citing Schlemmer v. Buffalo, R. & P. Ry. Co., 27 Sup. Ct. 407, 205 U. S. 1, 51 L. Ed. 681; Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. Jones,

"Assumption of risk" does not arise from the contract of employment, but is based on the ground that the employment creates a status or relationship to which the law attaches certain reciprocal duties, obligations, and disabilities which are not matters of agreement between the parties. Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Gannon, 90 Pac. 853, 859, 40 Colo. 185.

The law regarding "assumption of risk" is the law governing the relation of master and servant and is independent of the will of either. It is not a term of the contract of employment. It is a principle of the common law. It is over and above the contract and depends in no manner for its existence upon the agreement of the parties. It is founded upon public policy, the status assumed by master and servant, and upon the maxim, "Volenti non fit injuria." Laws Colo. 1897, p. 258, c. 69, requiring all railroad companies to securely block all frogs and switch rails, does not deprive a railroad company, when sued for injury to an employé resulting from its failure to observe such law, of the right to defend on the ground of "assumption of risk." Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Norgate, 141 Fed. 247, 253, 72 C. C. A. 365, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 981, 5 Ann. Cas. 443.

Where the use of the terms "risk" and "acceptance of risk" is involved, the question is whether, in incurring the particular danger, an employé accepted the risk in the sense that, by continuing at his work, he agreed to relieve defendant from the possible results; and hence the employé not only must be shown to have known the risk, but by implication from his conduct must be found to have voluntarily assumed it. Jellow v. Fore River Shipbuilding Co., 87 N. E. 906, 906, 201 Mass. 464.

"The doctrine of the 'assumption of the risks' of his employment by an employé has usually been considered from the point of view of a contract, express or implied; but, as applied to actions of tort for negligence against an employer it leads up to the broader principle expressed by the maxim, 'volenti non fit injuria;' one who, knowing and appreciating a danger, and voluntarily assumes the risk of it, has no just cause of complaint against another who is primarily responsible for the existence of the danger. As between the two, his voluntary assumption of the risk absolves the other from any particular duty to him in that respect, and leaves each to take such chances as exist in the situation, without a right to claim anything from the other. In such a case there is no actionable negligence on the part of him who is primarily responsible for the danger." Drake v. Auburn City Ry. Co., 66 N. E. 121, 123, 173 N. Y. 466 (quoting and adopting definition in O'Maley v. South Boston Gaslight Co., 32 N. E. 1119, 158 Mass. 135, 47 L. R. A. 161).

The doctrine of "incurred risk" or "taking the risk" or "running the risk," as applied to master and servant, may be said to rest upon, or be, in its nature, effect, and import, the equivalent at least of the principle expressed by the maxim volenti non fit injuria, and is not founded on the theory of an implied agreement or contract, as is usually asserted in suits by a servant against the master. Indiana Natural Gas & Oil Co. v. O'Brien, 65 N. E. 918, 920, 160 Ind. 266.

Contributory negligence distinguished "Assumption of risk" and "contributory negligence" are not synonymous. Parks v. St. Louis & S. R. Co., 77 S. W. 70, 73, 178 Mo. 108, 101 Am. St. Rep. 425.

The defenses of "assumed risk" and "contributory negligence" are separate and independent; the former arising out of contract relations, and the latter not. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Brogan (Ark.) 151 S. W. 699, 704.

"Assumption of risk" is a form of contributory negligence, but is not the equivalent of contributory negligence where other forms, phases, or species of contributory negligence are shown. Campahure v. Standard Mfg. Co., 118 N. W. 633, 634, 137 Wis. 155.

"Assumption of risk" and "contributory negligence" are separate and distinct defenses: The one is based on contract, the other on tort; the former is not conditioned or limited by the existence of the latter, and is alike available whether the risk assumed is great or small, and whether the danger from it is imminent and certain, or remote and improbable." Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. O'Neaky, 90 S. W. 300, 302, 6 Ind. T. 180 (quoting and adopting St. Louis Cordage Co. v. Miller, 126 Fed. 495, 508, 61 C. C. A. 477, 63 L. R. A. 551).

The distinction between "assumed risk" and "contributory negligence," as defenses, is that, if assumption of risk is the issue, knowledge of defective conditions and acquiescence therein are fatal to the plaintiff's case, while, if contributory negligence is the issue, knowledge of defective conditions and acquiescence therein may be fatal or may not be, dependent upon whether a person of ordinary prudence under the circumstances would have done what the injured person did. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Hanson (Tex.) 125 S. W. 63, 68 (citing St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Mathis, 107 S. W. 530, 101 Tex. 342; Southern Pac. Co. v. Allen, 106 S. W. 441, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 66; St. Louis Cordage Co. v. Miller, 61 C. C. A. 477, 126 Fed. 495, 63 L. R. A. 551; Davis Coal Co. v. Pollard, 62 N. E. 492, 158 Ind. 607, 92 Am. St. Rep. 319; Rase v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S.

"Assumed risk" and "contributory negligence" are distinct doctrines of law. The distinction, briefly and generally stated, is, where negligence or want of proper care on the part of a person brings about injury which he suffers, then "contributory negligence" could be applied to his act; where a servant is injured from one of the mere known dangers ordinarily incident to his service, without negligence on his part, then his injury is ascribed to one of the ordinary risks of employment which he assumed in entering upon the service. Louisiana & Texas Lumber Co. v. Brown, 109 S. W. 950, 954, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 482.

"The two defenses of 'assumption of risk' and 'contributory negligence' are unlike because of the different states of mind in which they are rooted. Negligence is the result of inattention or oversight, whereas consent to a risk implies knowledge of the danger of the act to be performed, and the performance of the act understandingly and without constraint." Lee v. St. Louis, M. & S. E. R. Co., 87 S. W. 12, 15, 112 Mo. App. 372 (quoting and adopting language of Dean v. St. Louis Woodenware Works, 80 S. W. 292, 106 Mo. App. 167, citing Adolff v. Columbia Pretzel & Baking Co., 73 S. W. 323, 100 Mo. App. 206).

"Assumption of risk" and "contributory negligence" are entirely distinct. One has to do with contract and the other rests in tort. "Assumption of risk" is the voluntary contract of an ordinarily prudent servant to take the chances of the known or obvious dangers of his employment and to relieve his master of liability therefor, while "contributory negligence" is the casual action or omission of the servant without ordinary care of the consequences, or the omission to use those precautions which ordinary prudence requires. Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Ponn, 191 Fed. 682, 687, 688, 112 C. C. A. 228.

"The doctrine of 'assumption of risk' by the employé is distinct from the doctrine of contributory negligence, although there may arise a certain condition of facts capable of supporting either inference. This has given rise to a great deal of confusion of statement when dealing with these defenses. 'Assumption of risk' rests in the law of contract and involves an implied agreement by the employé to assume the risks ordinarily incident to his employment, or a waiver, after full knowledge of extraordinary risk, of his right to hold the employer for a breach of duty in this regard. The law as to waiver applies because the relation between the employer and employé is contractual and waiver is the voluntary relinquishment of a known right. When, therefore, a case arises in which it is shown upon proper pleading that the employé has assumed the risk from which the injury arose, or, what is in effect the same thing, has waived his right to hold the employer responsible for risk, his action is defeated because of his agreement and not because of his negligence." Montgomery v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 53 S. E. 987, 988, 73 S. C. 503 (quoting and adopting definition in Bodie v. Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co., 39 S. E. 715, 718, 61 S. C. 468, 478).

Many cases seem to confuse an agreement to "assume the risk" of an employment, as it is known to be to the servant, and his "contributory negligence." That under certain circumstances the one sometimes comes very near the other, and cannot easily be distinguished from the other, may be conceded; but in most cases there is a broad line of distinction, and it is so in this case. For years employes worked in railroad yards in which blocks were not used, and yet no one would charge them with negligence in so doing. The switches and rails were mere perils of the employment. "Assumption of risk" is in such cases the acquiescence of any ordinarily prudent man in a known danger, the risk of which he assumes by contract. "Contributory negligence" in such cases is that action or nonaction in disregard of personal safety by one who, treating the known danger as a condition, acts with respect to it without due care of its consequences. The distinction has been organized by the Supreme Court of the United States. Swick v. Aetna Portland Cement Co., 111 N. W. 110, 115, 116, 147 Mich. 454.

The defenses of "assumption of risk" and "contributory negligence" must be regarded as distinct, and an injured servant who has not been guilty of contributory negligence may be precluded as a matter of law from recovery of damages from his master because he had assumed the risk. "Voluntary assumption negatives the idea of even prima facie liabilities. Contributory negligence displaces liability prima facie established. The former is mere passive subjection by the servant to risk of injury in known defective conditions. The latter is an act or omission on complainant's own part tending to add new danger to the situation not necessarily incident to conditions, and bringing upon himself a harm caused not solely by them, but created in part, at least, by his own misconduct. Contributory negligence is a breach of legal duty to take due care, imposed by law upon the servant, however unwilling or protesting he may be. Assumption of risk is not a duty, but is purely voluntarily upon the part of the servant. The doctrine of assumption of risk rests on intelligent acquiescence with knowledge of danger and appreciation of the risks. The distinction varies from being clear and vital at one extreme to being vague and insignificant at the other." Assumption of risk is based, not upon the contract, but on the principle expressed by the maxim, "Volenti

"There is a vast difference between the doctrines of 'assumption of risk' and 'contributory negligence'; the first rests in contract, and the second arises out of the negligence of the servant. The result to the person injured is the same in both cases, but the underlying principles are different and should be carefully borne in mind in every case. The maxim, 'volenti non fit injuria' cuts off a recovery where the injury is caused by one of the risks incident to the business which the servant assumes when he enters the employment. The right of recovery is cut off in the second case under the rule of law which prohibits a recovery where the negligence of the person injured contributes thereto." Obermeyer v. F. H. Logeman Chair Mfg. Co., 96 S. W. 673, 677, 120 Mo. App. 59 (quoting and adopting the distinction laid down by Judge Marshall in Blundell v. William A. Miller Elevator Mfg. Co., 88 S. W. 103, 105, 189 Mo. 552, 560).

"The doctrine of 'assumption of risks' by the employe is distinct from the doctrine of 'contributory negligence,' although there may arise a certain condition of facts capable of supporting either inference. This has given rise to a great deal of confusion of statement when dealing with these defenses. 'Assumption of risk' rests in the law of contract, and involves an implied agreement by the employe to assume the risk ordinarily incident to his employment, or a waiver, after full knowledge of an extraordinary risk, of his right to hold the employer for breach of duty in this regard. Hooper v. Columbia & G. R. Co., 21 S. C. 547, 53 Am. Rep. 691. The law as to waiver applies because the relation between the employer and employe is contractual, and waiver is the voluntary relinquishment of a known right. By the contract, the employe and employer each assume certain risks; but, as in all contracts, either party may waive his right to insist upon strict performance of the other's contractual duty. When therefore a case arises in which it is shown (upon proper pleading) that the employe has assumed the risks from which the injury arose, or, what is the same thing in effect, has waived his right to hold the employer responsible for the risk, the employe's action is defeated because of his agreement, and not because of negligence. 'Contributory negligence,' on the other hand, rests in the law of torts as applied to negligence, and when such defense is established the plaintiff's action is defeated, not because of any agreement, express or implied, but because his own misconduct was a proximate cause of the injury." Wood v. Victor Mfg. Co., 45 S. E. 81, 82, 66 S. C. 482 (quoting and adopting Bodie v. Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co., 39 S. E. 715, 61 S. C. 478).

See, also, Chase v. Spartanburg Ry., 'Gas & Electric Co., 41 S. E. 899, 64 S. O. 212).

The rules of "assumed risk" and "contributory negligence" are dependent on widely separated tests and principles. Entering the employment of one who is known to furnish defective appliances might be assuming the risk arising therefrom, but it is not contributory negligence. The latter is the doing of some act or omission amounting to want of ordinary care, as, concurring with some negligent act of the defendant, is the proximate cause of the injury for which redress is sought. There must be some positive act of commission or omission that caused the injury or contributed thereto. To illustrate, if the explosion had been caused by allowing the water to get too low in the boiler, and it had been the duty of appellee to keep the water up to the safety mark, he might have been guilty of contributory negligence in failing to perform his duty, or if he had been working with the water glass at the time, and thereby caused the explosion, such act might have been contributory negligence. "Assumed risk" refers to a general course of action in connection with the master's way of doing business and the appliances furnished. "Contributory negligence" refers to the question as to whether the servant acted prudently in connection with a certain matter that arose for his consideration at a certain time and place. The first is an intelligent choice; the latter is carelessness. El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Foth, 100 S. W. 171, 173, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 275.

Assumption of risk and absence of contributory negligence may coexist; the former relating to assumption by an employé of a risk already in existence when assumed, and the latter to conduct on his part increasing an existing risk or creating or contributing proximately to a new one. Van Dinter v. Worden-Allen Co. 138 N. W. 1016, 1018, 153 Wis. 533.

While the doctrine of assumption of risk sometimes shades into that of contributory negligence, there is a clear distinction between the doctrines, an employé being held to assume the risk of ordinary dangers of his occupation, and also those risks which are known to him or are so clearly observable that he may be presumed to know of them, while contributory negligence constitutes omission of an employé to use those precautions for his own safety which ordinary prudence requires. Wright v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., 197 Fed. 94, 96.

The conscious negligence of a servant in doing or omitting an act is not "assumed risk," as used in the rule of law exempting a master in such a case from liability for injury to a servant, as such words relate to the risk of injuries resulting from dangers necessarily incident to the work, or due to conditions within the servant's knowledge, or of which he must have known had he exercised ordinary care. Houston, E. & W. T. Ry. Co. v. McHale, 105 S. W. 1149, 1154, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 360.

"Assumption of risk" is an element distinct from contributory negligence and is not affected by Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 362, providing that want of contributory negligence need not be alleged but shall be a matter of defense. "Assumption of risk" is a matter of contract, while contributory negligence is a matter of conduct. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Bossert, 87 N. E. 158, 159, 44 Ind. App. 245 (citing Cleveland, O., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Scott, 64 N. E. 896, 29 Ind. App. 519-531; Bowles v. Indiana Ry. Co., 62 N. E. 94, 27 Ind. App. 672, 87 Am. St. Rep. 279; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Hunsucker, 70 N. E. 556, 33 Ind. App. 27; Indianapolis & G. Rapid Transit Co. v. Foreman, 69 N. E. 669, 162 Ind. 85, 94, 102 Am. St. Rep. 185).

The "assumption of risk" and contributory negligence are regarded and treated as distinct defenses in this state. The servant may be guilty of contributory negligence in using a machine which he knows to be defective and dangerous, notwithstanding he has protested against such use, and received the master's promise to repair. Such protest and promise relieves him in continuing in the service with such knowledge of the imputation by law of such negligence. But, if the danger to the servant arising from the use of the defective appliance is so great that an ordinarily prudent person, under the circumstances, would not have incurred it, or the servant by his own negligence in performing his work increased the risk, and thereby contributes to his injury, a recovery will be denied. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Kern (Tex.) 100 S. W. 971, 973.

Assumption of risk and contributory negligence are distinct and separate defenses. Assumption of risk rests in contract. It is not conditioned or limited to the existence of contributory negligence, and the latter is not an element or attribute of it. Assumption of risk is alike available, whether the risk assumed is great or small, whether the danger from it was imminent and certain or remote and improbable, and whether or not the servant was guilty of contributory negligence in assuming the risk or in exposing himself to the danger. St. Louis Cordage Co. v. Miller, 126 Fed. 495, 499, 501, 61 C. C. A. 477, 63 L. R. A. 551.

"Contributory negligence" rests in the law of torts, as applied to negligence, and, when such defense is established, the plaintiff's action is defeated, not because of any agreement express or implied, but because his own misconduct was a proximate cause of the injury, and is distinguished from "assumption of risk," as it rests in the law of contract, and involves an implied agreement by the employé to assume the risks ordinarily incident to his employment, or a waiver, after full knowledge of an extraordinary risk, of his right to hold the employer for a breach of duty in this regard. Hall v. Northwestern R. Co., 62 S. E. 848, 850, 81 S. C. 522 (citing and quoting Bodie v. Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co., 39 S. E. 715, 61 S. C. 468).

Dangers incident to employment

A servant assumes all risk ordinarily incident to his work. Kenny v. Marquette Cement Mfg. Co., 90 N. E. 724, 726, 243 Ill. 390; Roberts v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co., 66 S. E. 298, 300, 84 S. C. 283; Alamo Dressed Beef Co. v. Yeargan (Tex.) 123 S. W. 721, 723; Goddard v. Interstate Telephone Co., Limited, 106 Pac. 188, 189, 56 Wash. 536.

"Assumption of risk" means the ordinary risks incident to the employment. Duffey v. Consolidated Block Coal Co., 124 N. W. 609, 610, 147 Iowa, 225, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1067.

As a rule, a servant "assumes all risks" ordinarily incident to the business. A risk which is extraordinary in that it is unusual may be in incident to the employment; and, if it is, and is known to the servant, he assumes it. Roberts v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co., 66 S. E. 298, 300, 84 S. C. 283.

"An employé 'assumes all the risks' naturally and reasonably incident to the service in which he engages, and those arising from defects or imperfections in the thing about which he is employed that are open and obvious, or that would have been known to him had he exercised ordinary diligence. By voluntarily continuing in the service with knowledge, or means of knowledge equal to his employer, of any defect in the appliances or the machinery used, and without objection or promise on the part of the employer to remedy the defect, the employé assumes all the consequences that result from such defect, and waives the right to recover for injuries caused thereby." Monarch Mining & Developing Co. v. De Voe, 85 Pac. 683, 36 Colo. 270 (quoting and adopting the definition in Denver Tramway Co. v. Nesbit, 45 Pac. 405, 406, 22 Colo. 408, 411, and citing Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co., 100 U. S. 224, 25 L. Ed. 612; Indianapolis & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Watson, 14 N. E. 721, 725, 114 Ind. 20, 27, 5 Am. St. Rep. 578).

"It has been the law all of the time that the servant, upon entering into a contract of employment, 'assumes' the hazards which result from such risks, as are ordinarily incident to the employment in which he engages. * * * This proposition is bottomed upon and grows out of the contract of employment, in which it is necessarily implied that the servant, having undertaken the services for a consideration, must also, and has for the same compensation undertaken and agreed to, assume such hazards as are ordinarily incident to such employment. * * * In addition to the risks assumed above mentioned, the servant, either by entering or continuing in the service, and using, without complaint, defective appliances and machinery, assumes the hazards, * * * providing he knew of both the defects and dangers liable to result therefrom. It is not enough for him to know the defects alone; he must also know, understand, and appreciate the dangers thereof. * * * The law will not charge the servant with knowledge nor will it presume him to have known of the defects, ordinarily, which could have been ascertained by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence on his part, for the law does not require him to search for latent defects in machinery." Only in case of patent and obvious dangers will it be presumed that he knew such dangers as were obvious from a given defect, and which were necessarily sequent therefrom. The proposition involving patent defects and obvious dangers results not alone upon a contract of hire, but upon the maxim volenti non fit injuria, which is defined by Black as, "He who consents cannot receive an injury," which, like the contract itself, involves the idea of assent on the part of the servant; that is, the free and open activity of the senses, the understanding of the situation, and the untrammelled consent to cope therewith. Lee v. St. Louis, M. & S. E. R. Co., 87 S. W. 12, 18, 112 Mo. App. 372.

A servant assumes the ordinary hazards incident to his employment and the hazards of which he has knowledge, either actual or constructive, arising after his employment, where, with a comprehension of the risk and without any promise that the unsafe conditions shall be removed, or other inducements from the master, he voluntarily continues his employment, and a servant employed to repair a defective and unsafe appliance assumes the risks incident thereto. Arnold v. Connecticut Co., 75 Atl. 78, 79, 83 Conn. 97.

A servant "assumes" the ordinary risks and dangers of his employment that are known to him and those that might be known to him by the exercise of ordinary care and foresight, and when he engages in the work of making a place that is known to be dangerous safe, or in a work that in its progress necessarily changes the character for safety of the place in which it is performed as the work progresses, the hazard of the dangerous place and the increased hazard of the place made dangerous by the work are the ordinary and known dangers of such a place, and by his acceptance of the employment the servant necessarily assumes them. Where a miner stood in the main slope of a mine while turning a room off from it, the portion of the slope occupied by him was his working place, in the sense that he was required to keep it safe from falling rock, loosened by his own efforts in turning the room, and the master was not liable for injury from such cause. Rolla v. McAlester Coal Co., 98 S. W. 141, 142, 6 Ind. T. 404.

The doctrine of "assumption of risk" is that the servant on entering the service of the master impliedly assumes by his contract of hire, for the same compensation, the hazards which result from such risks as are ordinarily incident to the employment in which he engages, and, in addition to these risks, ordinarily incident, etc., he also either by entering or continuing in the service and using, without complaint, defective machinery or appliances, or without complaint continuing to labor in an unsafe or dangerous place, assumes the risk of such defective machinery or appliances or unsafe or dangerous place, provided he knew not only that the machinery or appliances were defective or the place unsafe, but also knew and understood and appreciated the dangers which were liable to result therefrom, and that he understood and appreciated the dangers must be made to appear, first by either positive evidence to that effect, or else, second, the danger as well as the defect must have been obvious. Rigsby v. Oil Well Supply Co., 91 S. W. 460, 462, 115 Mo. App. 297 (citing Lee v. St. Louis, M. & S. E. Ry. Co., 87 S. W. 12-18, 112 Mo. App. 372; Zeigenmeyer v. Charles Goetz Lime & Cement Co., 88 S. W. 139, 142, 113 Mo. App. 330; Epperson v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 50 S. W. 795, 155 Mo. 346; Id., 55 S. W. 1050, 155 Mo. 346.

"The very expression 'risks naturally incident or inherent in the employment' exclude ex vi termini the idea of 'negligence,' while 'negligence' as applied to the master conveys with equal certainty the idea of a risk not incident but arising from the failure of the master to exercise the degree of care that the law requires of him for the safety of the servant. Now, generally speaking, the law never holds the servant to take upon himself the risk of injury from such failure on the master's part; but to this proposition there is a well-recognized exception. While the servant in entering upon and exercising the employment may rightfully take it for granted that the master's duty with reference to his safety has been and will continue to be performed, yet if he knows that the master is in fact negligent in any respect, or if such negligence is so patent or obvious that as a person of ordinary capacity he ought to know it, and to appreciate the danger therefrom, and with such knowledge he continues in the service without any promise on the part of the master to remedy or remove the defect, then he is said to have 'assumed the risk' of the master's negligence and cannot recover for injury resulting to himself therefrom." Martin v. Des Moines Edison Light Co., 106 N. W. 359, 363, 131 Iowa, 724.

Switchmen or brakemen whose duty requires them to be on or about the cars are fully advised as to, and assume, the risks ordinarily incident to their employment, such as arise from the more or less jerking or bumping of freight trains, and, if injury or death results therefrom, no recovery is allowed. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Greenwell's Adm'r (Ky.) 125 S. W. 1054, 1056.

An instruction that "plaintiff in becoming an employé of the defendant as a laborer assumed the ordinary risks, hazards, and dangers incident to the work in which he was engaged, and, if you believe from the evidence that the plaintiff was injured by reason of the caving in of the earth in a ditch in which he was working, and that the risks, hazard, or danger of such caving in was an ordinary one, incident to the work, then plaintiff cannot recover, and the jury must find the defendant * * * not guilty," correctly states the law as to assumed risk. Kennedy v. City of Chicago, 144 Ill. App. 25, 28.

Assumption of risk is not properly applicable to "ordinary risk," since it can mean no more than that the risk inhered in the contract of service, and, as applied to an extraordinary risk, assumption of risk means that the servant has by his own act waived the effect of the employer's negligence. Belevicze v. Platt Bros. & Co., 81 Atl. 339, 342, 84 Conn. 632.

It is the well-settled rule that a servant "assumes" all the ordinary risks which are naturally and reasonably incidental to his employment. This rule is based on the presumption that a person who enters a certain service appreciates the dangers normally incident thereto, and by accepting such employment impliedly relieves his employer from responsibility for such injuries as may result from such risks; the consideration for such implied agreement being the wages he receives. No risks, however, are the ordinary incidents of an employment which are caused by the negligent act or omission upon the part of the master, and the servant assumes the risk of injury only as to those matters which arise after the exercise of care and diligence on the part of the master. The servant does not assume risks arising from the negligence of the master. Ray v. Pecos & N. T. Ry. Co., 88 S. W. 466, 469, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 99.

Duty imposed by statute

A servant, who remained at work about an elevator shaft which was not guarded by barriers as required by law, assumed the risk of injury. Sabatino v. Roebling Const. Co., 120 N. Y. Supp. 956, 957, 136 App. Div. 217.

That a coal miner continued in his work, with knowledge that the operator has failed to furnish props to secure the roof of the mine, as required by statute, does not prevent a recovery for a personal injury suffered by the miner by reason of such breach, as the risks which a servant assumes are those only which occur after the master has discharged his statutory duty. Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 8580, requiring a coal mine operator to furnish props with which to secure the roof of the working place, is designed to protect miners from dangers apparent and remote, and, in the absence of notice to a miner of imminent danger, he need not quit work because the operator fails to comply with the statute, and where, while in the employment, he is injured because of the failure, it is no defense that the operator failed to perform its duty, and that the miner knew it. Miami Coal Co. v. Kane, 90 N. E. 13-15, 45 Ind. App. 391.

Knowledge of danger—Necessity and effect

A servant does not assume a danger of which he has no knowledge or means of knowledge. Malloy v. Kelly-Atkinson Const. Co., 144 Ill. App. 228, 229; Kaukola v. Oliver Iron Mining Co., 124 N. W. 591, 596, 597, 159 Mich. 689; Kenny v. Marquette Cement Mfg. Co., 90 N. E. 724, 727, 243 Ill. 396; Hamilton v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 124 N. W. 363, 364, 145 Iowa, 431; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Poole (Tex.) 123 S. W. 1176, 1179; El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Welter (Tex.) 125 S. W. 45, 47; Jones v. Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co., 50 South. 1017, 1018, 163 Ala. 266; Duluth Elevator Co. v. Wallin, 174 Fed. 955, 958, 99 C. C. A. 450.

A servant knowing of a danger is chargeable with knowledge of the injurious results naturally and proximately flowing from such danger. Nordstrom v. Spokane & Inland Empire R. Co., 104 Pac. 809, 812, 813, 55 Wash. 521, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 364.

Where a servant knows, or by ordinary care should have known, the risks to which he is exposed, he will as a rule be held to have assumed them, but where he does not know, or, knowing, does not appreciate such risks, and his ignorance or nonappreciation is not due to negligence, there is no assumption of risk. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Hanson (Tex.) 125 S. W. 63, 65.

A servant is not entitled to recover for injuries sustained while in the service of his master unless he has established that he did not know of the defects which caused his injury, and did not have equal opportunities with his master of knowing thereof at the time he was so injured. Bettis v. Chicago Coated Board Co., 145 Ill. App. 390, 393.

Where it was an employee's duty to put his hand under the die of a leather stamping machine and remove the leather after the ram plate had descended, and it would not have been hurt except for a secret danger, he was not guilty of contributory negligence where he neither knew, nor ought in the exercise of ordinary care to have known, of the danger. Berger v. Abel & Bach Co., 124 N. W. 410, 411, 141 Wis. 321.

"The doctrine of the law of master and servant that one who, knowing and appreciating a danger, voluntarily 'assumes' the risk of it, has no just cause of complaint against another who is primarily responsible for the existence of the danger. As between the two, his voluntary assumption of the risk absolves the other from any particular duty to him in that regard, and leaves each to take such chances as exist in the situation without a right to claim anything from the other." Hall v. West & Slade Mill Co., 81 Pac. 915, 925, 39 Wash. 447, 4 Ann. Cas. 587 (quoting and adopting O'Maley v. South Boston Gas Light Co., 32 N. E. 1119, 158 Mass. 135, 47 L. R. A. 161).

"Assumption" implies knowledge, and where a complaint by an injured employé averred that he had not at any time "notice, knowledge, or information" that the defendant had failed and neglected to have a watchman or a set of signals at said junction, but, on the contrary, believed during the entire time of his employment that defendant had taken the precaution to avoid collisions by having such watchman or signals, it sufficiently appeared from the complaint that plaintiff did not assume the risk. Coal Bluff Mining Co. v. Akers, 80 N. E. 545, 546, 39 Ind. App. 617.

A servant assumes the ordinary hazards incident to his employment and the hazards of which he has knowledge, either actual or constructive, arising after his employment, where, with a comprehension of the risk and without any promise that the unsafe conditions shall be removed, or other inducements from the master, he voluntarily continues his employment, and a servant employed to repair a defective and unsafe appliance assumes the risks incident thereto. Arnold v. Connecticut Co., 75 Atl. 78, 79, 83 Conn. 97.

Same—Appreciation of risk

Before an employé will be held to have assumed a risk, it must appear that he appreciated the danger, and voluntarily assumed it. Miller v. Camp Bird, 105 Pac. 1105, 1107, 46 Colo. 569; Barrett v. New England Telephone & Telegraph Co., 87 N. E. 565, 566, 201 Mass. 117; El Paso & S. W. Ry. Co. v. Vizard, 88 S. W. 457, 461, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 534; Pigeon v. W. P. Fuller & Co., 105 Pac. 976, 978, 156 Cal. 691.

Where a servant fully appreciating the nature and extent of perils from an unguarded machine at which he is required to labor, and continues in the service after learning of its unguarded condition, he waives performance of the employer's obligation to provide suitable guards, and assumes the risk of the employment. Wiley v. Batchelder, 75 Atl. 47, 48, 105 Me. 536.

A servant, though knowing of defects in appliances operated by him, may recover for injuries resulting therefrom, where he did not know of the danger in the use of the appliances. Muse v. Abeel (Tex.) 124 S. W. 430.

Ordinarily, if one of mature years knows of the dangers of a machine, he may be assumed to appreciate them. Kirchoff v. Hohnsbehn Creamery Supply Co., 123 N. W. 210, 212, 148 Iowa, 508.

"Assumption of risk" is not predicable from mere knowledge of conditions alone, but the circumstances must be such that no other inference than that the servant appreciated the danger is fairly deducible therefrom. Galvin v. Brown & McCabe, 101 Pac. 671, 677, 53 Or. 598.

"Assumption of risk" in its true sense is the assumption of the risks arising out of the negligence of the master when such negligence is known to the servant, and the danger therefrom is appreciated by him. Duffey v. Consolidated Block Coal Co., 124 N. W. 609, 610, 147 Iowa, 225, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1067.

The doctrine of "assumption of risk" is wholly dependent on the servant's knowledge, actual or constructive, of the danger incident to his employment, and where he knows, or should reasonably know, the risks to which he is exposed, he will as a rule be held to assume them, but where he does not know, or knowing, does not appreciate, such risks, and his ignorance or nonappreciation is not due to want of care on his part, he does not assume the risk. Millen v. Pacific Bridge Co., 95 Pac. 196, 198, 51 Or. 538.

An experienced operator of a circular saw in a lumber mill assumed the risk of being fatally injured by a piece of lumber being thrown back by the saw, due to want of a guard and to the fact that a device designed to prevent "pinching" of pieces being sawed was insufficient, especially where he is shown to have realized the danger through having made complaint about the defective condition before the accident occurred. Fulleton v. Henry Wrape Co. (Ark.) 151 S. W. 1005, 1006.

Same—Dangerous animal

Where a master negligently furnishes his servant with a mule of such a vicious nature that the servant is liable to be injured because of its viciousness, and the servant knew that the animal was dangerous, but continued to use it he assumes the risk. Arkansas Smokeless Coal Co. v. Pippins, 122 S. W. 113, 114, 92 Ark. 138, 19 Ann. Cas. 861.

Same—Dangerous mines

A servant, by entering or continuing in the employment of a master without complaint, "assumes the risks" and dangers of the employment which he knows and appreciates, and those which an ordinarily prudent person of his capacity and intelligence would have known and appreciated in his situation. An employé in a mine, who had knowledge of the defective condition of the roof of an entry for two or three weeks, and who always walked faster and watched the rock while passing the place, but who continued to work without objection, "assumed the risk" of injury by falling of the rock. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. O'Nesky, 90 S. W. 300, 302, 6 Ind. T. 180.

Same—Dangerous operations

A switchman on entering the service of defendant railroad company did not thereby assume to understand the established customs and usages of the company concerning the switching of locomotives and cars in the yard in which he was employed. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Walker (Tex.) 125 S. W. 99, 104.

Where the foreman of a switching crew knew that the engine used was operated without a proper headlight, and he continued to work without any complaint, and without any promise to repair the same, and was killed by a collision between his engine and cars to which it was attached, and another switch engine and cars, he assumed the risk by continuing at work. Ross v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 90 N. E. 701, 703, 704, 243 Ill. 440.

A brakeman whose duties did not limit his activities to any part of the right of way was not bound to know that the company had not provided a derailing or other safety device at a particularly dangerous point where a storage track connected with the main line on a descending grade to prevent a collision between trains on the main track and cars set out on the storage track which might run down the grade onto the main track because the defective brakes with which they were equipped were insufficient to hold them, and hence a brakeman in a train on the main track did not assume the risk of injuries sustained in such collision. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Corman, 122 S. W. 116, 118, 92 Ark. 102.

A party working on a tower erected on a flat car in putting up trolley wire, who was familiar with the work and knew all the dangers incident thereto, that the trolley wire often slipped and was liable to do so any time, and that he would be injured by grasping a live wire, cannot recover for injury due to the trolley wire slipping, and causing him to lose his balance, so that he involuntarily grasped a live wire, since he assumed the risk of such injury. Shore v. Spokane & I. E. R. Co., 106 Pac. 753, 754, 57 Wash. 212.

A brakeman, thrown from a freight car and injured by the pulling out of a defective handhold, was not charged with notice of its condition, unless he either had actual knowledge thereof, or must have necessarily obtained such knowledge in the ordinary discharge of his duties. The rule that a servant is negligent in voluntarily choosing a dangerous way when a safe way is open to him, precluding a recovery for injuries sustained, applies only when the way chosen is obviously unsafe, or the danger known to the servant. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Hawley (Tex.) 123 S. W. 726, 781.

Same—Dangerous or defective machinery, tools or appliances

Where a servant, with knowledge of the dangers arising from defects in a machine he is operating, continues in the service in consideration of an increase of wages, he assumes the risk from resulting from the defects. Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Walker, 51 South. 169, 175, 164 Ala. 33.

Where an employé lawfully in the vicinity of dangerous and unguarded machinery slips and falls into the machine and is injured, the fact that he knew the conditions does not of itself establish as a matter of law that he assumed the risk. Snyder v. Waldorf Box Board Co., 124 N. W. 450, 451, 110 Minn. 40.

"The doctrine of 'assumption of risk' has no application to a case where the injured person is not shown and cannot be presumed to have possessed the knowledge necessary to enable him to detect or realize the danger." An engineer and fireman did not assume the risk arising from corrosion of the boiler due to the corrosive action of chlorides contained in the water used in the boiler. Nelson v. City of New York, 91 N. Y. Supp. 763, 765, 101 App. Div. 18.

"Assumption of risk" is an element of a contract of employment. A servant assumes only those hazards as are natural incidents of the employment. Tools which are dangerously defective are not the natural incidents of any employment. It is the master's absolute and unassignable duty to supply safe ones. If defective tools are furnished, the servant may assume the risk attending their use, but he can be held to have done so only when he has knowledge, or the equivalent of knowledge, of the facts and of the danger. The flying of chips of metal from the casting the plaintiff was dressing was a natural incident of his work. He was bound to know that such a result would follow from the pounding of his chisel by the helper's sledge and was required to take all necessary precautions to protect himself from injury from that source. But he was not bound to take any steps to protect himself from a slivering sledge when he could assume that the master had given the helper a sound one. A skilled machinist, engaged in the work of chipping a casting, who held a handled chisel while the helper struck it with a plainly defective sledge hammer supplied by the employer so that a sliver of steel broke from the sledge and destroyed his eye, did not assume the risk of injury from the sledge. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v.

Quinlan, 93 Pac. 632, 636, 77 Kan. 126 (citing and adopting Kansas City, M. & O. R. Co. v. Loosely, 90 Pac. 990, 76 Kan. 103).

In an action for injuries to an employé operating a sausage machine, in consequence of his fingers being caught by the revolving worm, the evidence showed that he had been advised as to how to operate such a machine, and had been cautioned to be careful of his fingers, and not to put them into the machine. He knew that, if he got his fingers into the machine, they would be cut off. Held, that he was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Fortune v. Hall, 106 N. Y. Supp. 787, 789, 122 App. Div. 250.

Though a servant incurs the risks of place or machinery, which, though dangerous, is not so much so as to threaten immediate injury, or where it is reasonable to suppose that they may be safely used with great skill and care, the mere knowledge of the defects on the servant's part will not defeat a recovery for injuries. George v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 125 S. W. 196, 208, 225 Mo. 364.

A servant assumes the risk of a danger of which he has actual knowledge and of such hazards as he would have learned by the exercise of that ordinary circumspection which a prudent man would use in the particular employment. Where a brakeman, injured by the defective construction of a coupling lever on a caboose, had been in the company's employ for a year and had used the same coupling lever frequently in the same condition it was in when the injury occurred, he assumed the risk incident to the operation of the coupler, and could not recover. Trinity & B. V. R. Co. v. Perdue, 101 S. W. 485, 487, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 659.

Same—Duty to inspect and discover defects

Where an experienced lineman working for a telephone company, whose rules required linemen to inspect poles before climbing them, knew that there had been no inspection of a pole on which he had a right to rely, he assumed the risk of injury from its falling when he had climbed it. De Frates v. Central Union Telephone Co., 90 N. E. 719, 721, 243 Ill. 356.

An experienced and properly instructed employé of an electric light and power company, employed to discover and repair defects in the system, and furnished with proper appliances for doing the work, assumes the risk of injury while repairing the defect and replacing a lamp burnt out. White v. Thomasville Light & Power Co., 66 S. E. 210, 211, 212, 151 N. C. 356.

Same—Experience of servant

Where a fireman of six months' experience and average intelligence knew that about one-third of the engines were equipped with screens on the lubricator feed glasses, which were immediately in front of him on the boiler, and there was no defect or anything inherently dangerous in the glass, except that it might occasionally break, as any other implement or tool might, he assumed the risk of injury from the breaking of the glass. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Wells, 124 S. W. 524, 525, 93 Ark. 153.

Plaintiff, a man of ordinary intelligence and experience, 60 years of age, had worked in defendant's mill for many years, and from May, 1905, to October 17th following, the day of his injury, had operated a mixing woolen picker. By the removal of a lever it became necessary, when the machine clogged, for plaintiff to stop it and reach through the discharge spout and past a fan, and remove the clogged material. While doing this on the occasion of his injury, the machine suddenly started, and he was injured. Held, that plaintiff was charged with knowledge of the danger incident to putting his hand into the machine in that manner and assumed the risk as a matter of law. Lillis v. Beaver Dam Woolen Mills, 124 N. W. 1011, 1014, 142 Wis. 128.

A servant of ordinary intelligence and of experience in sawmills and steel roller mills, and of six years' experience as a lineman on electric current wires, is chargeable with knowledge that sawing iron lugs creates iron dust, which will fly with the wind, or which will be thrown by the movement of the saw, and that such flying dust will enter the eyes when sufficiently near, and that such dust, entering the eyes, may result in serious injury, and he assumes the risk of any injury to the eyes caused by such dust flying into them when sawing the lugs on insulators carrying a trolley wire. A lineman employed in constructing a trolley wire was engaged with a fellow servant in sawing lugs on insulators. In doing the work the linemen worked in pairs, standing on tower cars and using a hack saw. Owing to the unevenness of the track, the car would be at different heights, so that the eyes of the linemen would sometimes be above, sometimes on a level with, and sometimes below, the lug. The lineman knew the facts, and made no complaint, but continued to use the car. Held, that he assumed the risk of injury resulting from iron dust flying into his eyes. Nordstrom v. Spokane & Inland Empire R. R. Co., 104 Pac. 809, 812, 813, 55 Wash. 521, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 364.

Same—Failure to complain or require safeguards

A section hand, who, long before the time when he lost his balance on a hand car from its lurching because of a wheel on one of the axles being loose and the axle having too much play, knew of such condition of the car and had not complained of it, will be held to have "assumed the risk" incident thereto. Foster v. Chicago, R. I. &

P. R. Co., 102 N. W. 422, 423, 127 Iowa, 84, 4 Ann. Cas. 150.

If a servant does not require further safeguards to machinery, or so conducts himself as to assure the master that he is content with the machinery as it is, and will take the chance of injury, he cannot recover for an injury therefrom. A servant injured by a laundry mangle had worked at the master's laundry at different times for more than a year, and for about four weeks before the accident had constantly operated the mangle. Prior to the month of steady work, she had occasionally operated it with the assistance of another person, and during her entire service in connection with the mangle no guard rails had been used upon it. She fully appreciated the extent of the danger of operating it without a guard rail. Held, that she assumed the risk. Wiley v. Batchelder, 75 Atl. 47, 48, 105 Me. 536.

Where the foreman, of a switching crew knew that the engine used was operated without a proper headlight, and he continued to work without any complaint, and without any promise to repair the same, and was killed by a collision between his engine and cars to which it was attached, and another switch engine and cars, he assumed the risk by continuing at work. Ross v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 90 N. E. 701, 703, 243 Ill. 440.

Negligence of fellow servant

"An early, if not the earliest, application of the phrase 'assumption of risk,' was the establishment of the exception to the liability of a master for the negligence of his servant, when the person injured was a fellow servant of the negligent man." Lyon v. Charleston & W. C. Ry., 58 S. E. 12, 19, 77 S. C. 328 (quoting, with approval, from Schlemmer v. Buffalo, R. & P. R. Co., 27 Sup. Ct. 407, 205 U. S. 1, 51 L. Ed. 681).

A servant does not, by his contract, assume the risk of his superintendent's negligence, unless, after the danger becomes obvious, he knows of the conditions creating it and appreciates the degree of danger resulting therefrom. Silvia v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 89 N. E. 1061, 1062, 203 Mass. 519.

Negligence of master

"Assumption of risk," is the risk which is ordinarily incident to the service in which a servant is engaged, not arising out of the negligence of the master, unless the danger is obvious or known to the servant or would be known to him by the exercise of ordinary care, and under Act 1906, c. 163, a servant engaged in railway service does not assume the risk of a defect and danger arising out of the negligence of the railroad though known to him, where a person of ordinary care would continue in the service with knowledge thereof. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Schubert (Tex.) 130 S. W. 708, 709.

A servant does not assume the risk of his master's negligence, unless he knows or is charged with knowledge thereof, and of the danger arising therefrom. Where the place where a servant was injured did not become dangerous during the progress of the work he was doing, but was dangerous when his master put him there to work, and the servant did not know of the danger, he did not assume the risk. Buchanan & Gilder v. Murayda (Tex.) 124 S. W. 973, 975.

Where a servant enters into the employ of another, he "assumes the risks" ordinarily incident to the business, but the willful violation by an employer of his obligation to furnish appliances which are safe (particularly those with which he will have necessarily to come in contact) and the results to flow from such violation are not risk ordinarily incident to the business, which the employé assumes. Roff v. Summit Lumber Co., 44 South. 302, 306, 119 La. 571.

A servant does not assume the risk of the master's negligence, but, where there are no hidden agencies or unknown conditions, it is not negligence to put a servant to perform work on the master's plan, known to him. Saversnick v. Schwarzschild & Sulzberger, 125 S. W. 1192, 1193, 141 Mo. App. 509.

A servant assumes the risk of a danger incident to his employment, but he never assumes the risk of his master's negligence. If the master furnishes unsafe implements, and the servant uses them, knowing them to be unsafe, a question of contributory negligence arises, but not of assumption of risk. Cole v. St. Louis Transit Co., 81 S. W. 1138, 1142, 183 Mo. 81.

An employé does not assume such risks as arise from the negligence of the employer in failing to furnish him a reasonably safe place in which to work and reasonably safe instrumentalities and materials with which to work. Brents v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 104 S. W. 961, 962.

Obvious dangers

The rule that an employé "assumes the obvious risks" of his employment does not rest wholly on his implied agreement, but on an independent act of waiver, evidenced by his continuing in the employment with knowledge of the facts. An owner of a building in process of construction requested an independent contractor, having nothing to do with the keeping of fires in stoves to prevent the plaster from freezing, to put on one of his men to do the work and the owner would pay therefor. Pursuant to the arrangement, the independent contractor directed one of his employés to do the work. His entire time was occupied in doing it, and the owner paid for it. Held, that the relations between the owner and the employé were such that the owner was entitled to invoke the doctrine of the "assumption of risk" by the employé. Rooney v. Brogan Const. Co., 99 N. Y. Supp. 939, 940, 113 App. Div. 813 (citing Drake v. Auburn City Ry. Co., 66 N. E. 121, 173 N. Y. 466).

In an action for injuries to a servant, an instruction that if he knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have known, at the time of the injury, that the machine which he was repairing was not provided with a belt shifter, and that the belt was therefore liable to slip from the loose to the tight pulley, and plaintiff's act in attempting to repair the machine was so obviously dangerous that he knew he was taking an extra risk, then he "assumed" such risk, was proper. Pressly v. Dover Yarn Mills, 51 S. E. 69, 73, 138 N. C. 410.

The standard of care which the law requires of the servant is that which a reasonably cautious and intelligent person would exercise under the same circumstances, and the hazards and risks attendant upon his employment which he "assumes" are those which are open and obvious, of which he ought to have known by using reasonable care. Bryant v. Great Northern Paper Co., 68 Atl. 379, 380, 103 Me. 32.

An employé assumes obvious danger inherent in the nature of the work he is employed to do, as in the case of slippery floors in a department of a meat-packing house, which cannot be otherwise considering the nature of the work and the manner of operation. Saversnick v. Schwarzschild & Sulzberger, 125 S. W. 1192, 1193, 141 Mo. App. 509.

The doctrine of "assumed risk" must be limited to risks which are obvious and can be understood by a servant of ordinary intelligence, or at most to those dangers which should be anticipated by the servant, as a result of obvious conditions, or may reasonably be expected to be known by him. Dettering v. Levy, 79 Atl. 476, 481, 114 Md. 273.

The instruction, in an action for injury to a servant, that he assumed all the open, apparent, and obvious risks incident to his work, and if his injury resulted from such risks there would be no recovery, correctly states the law. Anastasakas v. International Contract Co., 107 Pac. 342, 344, 345, 57 Wash. 453.

Where an employé injured by the fall of a scaffold on which he was at work chose to enter into and continue in the service with full knowledge of the mode of carrying on the work he was doing, and with co-employés was intrusted with the placing of the brackets, and the construction of the scaffold, and was at full liberty and had ample opportunity, not only to exercise his judgment as to the safety or the sufficiency of the mode of hanging the brackets adopted, but also to brace up the bracket which gave way by such additional contrivances as common sense would suggest, including if necessary a scantling from the floor to the outside thereof, he assumed the risk, even if his employer neglected its duty as to the appliances. An employé who enters and continues in the service of an employer, knowing that the latter had laid out a particular mode of doing his work, assumes the ordinary risk of such service arising from such mode which he knows by ordinary observation. When an employé knowing that his employer has furnished particular appliances for doing his work enters and continues in the service of his employer, he assumes the risks arising from such appliances, which are simple in their construction, and not worn out, broken, or defective. Ladwig v. Jefferson Ice Co., 124 N. W. 407, 410, 141 Wis. 191.

A fireman who knows that the engine is running backward over a new and rough track does not assume the risk of injury therefrom, unless the danger is known or apparent to him. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Poole (Tex.) 123 S. W. 1176, 1180.

A complaint for injuries to an employé while oiling a rock crusher, which alleges that the employé's coat sleeve was caught in uncovered gearing over which it was necessary for him to reach in working as oiler, that the employer negligently failed to warn the employé, who was inexperienced, as to the danger, and negligently set the employé to work in a place of danger, but which does not intimate that the exposed gearing was not obvious, shows, as a matter of law, that the employé assumed the risk, within the rule recognized by Civ. Code, § 1970, that an employé, understanding the dangers incident to the defective condition of machinery, assumes the risk, where he continues in the use thereof. Bresette v. E. B. & A. L. Stone Co., 121 Pac. 312, 314, 162 Cal. 74.

A grain elevator owned by defendant when filled with grain settled and sagged over, causing a belt conveyor which extended from the ground through the center to tear loose some of the boards and shingles from the roof. Plaintiff, with others, was employed to load a car with grain on the south side of the building while a strong wind was blowing from the north, and was struck and injured by a board which fell upon him. There was evidence tending to show that, when the men went to work, there was a loose board on the roof flapping in the wind, and it was seen by defendant's superintendent. Held, that plaintiff did not assume the risk; it not appearing that he saw or knew of the loose board, or that it was plainly observable. Duluth Elevator Co. v. Wallin, 174 Fed. 955, 958, 99 C. A. 459.

"Assumption of risk" does not mean that in all cases where the plaintiff has knowledge of the defects of dangerous machinery and goes on with the work that he assumes the risk; but the law is that, where the defendant fails to perform its duty and furnish the plaintiff with safe and suitable methods of doing the work, the plaintiff will not be held to assume the risk in undertaking to perform a dangerous work, unless the act itself is obviously so dangerous that in its careful performance the inherent probability of the injury is greater than those of safety, or unless it is a danger ordinarily incident to the employment, or unless obvious, or one which the servant may discover by the exercise of ordinary care." Jones v. American Warehouse Co., 51 S. E. 106, 108, 138 N. C. 546.

"Assumption of risk" means that one entering a dangerous employment assumes the ordinary and usual risks incident thereto, not only those known, but those which he might have discerned in the exercise of reasonable care; but it does not cover the risk of latent defects, notwithstanding that his opportunity of discovering them is the same as that of his employer, nor risks arising from his employer's negligence which are not incidental to the business, when he has no actual knowledge of the same. Puget Sound Electric R. Co. v. Harrigan, 176 Fed. 488, 491, 100 C. C. A. 104.

Where a servant suing for injury by slipping on a greasy spot on an iron plate forming a part of the floor of a factory showed that for several years, during three of which he had been a servant in the factory, the machines threw out the lubricating oil on the iron plates placed back of the machines; that the oil had been permitted to accumulate; that the floor had not been cleaned; that various servants had at various times slipped on the oily surface; that he passed over the iron plates every day and knew all about the machines throwing out the oil—the testimony showed, as a matter of law, that he assumed the risk, though he stated that he had not seen any oil on the plate on which he slipped while he passed there before the accident. A servant who has had every opportunity to see and know what his fellow servants have seen and known, and who has been under such conditions for at least a year, may not give probative evidence that he has not seen the condition, especially where he shows that he was familiar with the details of the place. Welch v. Waterbury & Co., 120 N. Y. Supp. 1059, 1061, 136 App. Div. 315.

Promise to repair

An employer's promise to repair a defective appliance need not be in express words, but may be implied from the words spoken or the employer's subsequent conduct. An employer's promise to repair defective appliances is in effect an agreement to temporarily assume responsibility for any accident occurring by reason thereof, and the servant does not assume the risk of injury from such defect until the lapse of such time as precludes reasonable expectation that the promise will be performed. Alkire v. Myers Lumber Co., 106 Pac. 915, 917, 918, 57 Wash. 300.

A servant who has been induced to continue work by his master's promise to remedy dangerous conditions is not guilty of contributory negligence so long as he may reasonably expect the master's promise to be kept, unless the danger is so obvious that a reasonably prudent person would not continue the work. Benak v. Paxton & Vierling Iron Works, 124 N. W. 461, 462, 85 Neb. 836.

A master is not liable under his promise to repair if the danger of injury from the defective appliance is so great or imminent that a reasonably prudent person would not assume the risk. Comer v. Meyer, 74 Atl. 497, 498, 78 N. J. Law, 464, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 597.

A servant does not assume the risk of injury from a defective machine where he has continued at work not beyond a reasonable time under a promise of his master to repair. The servant has a right to rely upon such a promise when made with respect to a simple device if the machine as a whole was so dangerous that he would not have been justified in himself undertaking to make the repairs. Suchomel v. Maxwell, 144 Ill. App. 543, 547.

Where a master had promised to repair a dangerous place of work or machinery, the servant, using extra precaution commensurate with the enhanced hazard, although having knowledge of the conditions, may continue to work without assuming the risk from the defects until after a reasonable time has transpired for making the promised repairs. Price & Lucas Cider & Vinegar Co. v. Haley, 125 S. W. 720, 137 Ky. 305.

Where slight ruts existed in the floor of a warehouse made by wheels of trucks in hauling hogheads of tobacco over it, and the roof leaked so that, when it rained, the floor was always wet at a certain place, assurance of the master that the floor and roof would be repaired gave an employé injured thereafter by slipping on the floor during a rain while pulling a truck stalled at the ruts no right of recovery; the place not having been intrinsically dangerous to work, danger to employées from such conditions not being anticipated when the request for and promise of repairs were made, the employé not having continued at his work because of such assurance, and the assurance that the defects would be repaired when there was nothing else to do having been given two weeks before the accident, and the employées having had idle days after the assurance and before the accident. American Tobacco Co. v. Adams, 125 S. W. 1067, 1070, 137 Ky. 414.

Where a servant, knowing and appreciating the danger and risk, voluntarily elects to encounter them and is injured, he assumes the risk and cannot recover for the injury; but where the master undertakes expressly or impliedly to remove the danger within a reasonable time, his assurance is an "assumption" by the master "of the risk" incident to the duties of the employment during such reasonable time, and where the servant is injured in the meantime by reason of the danger the master is responsible therefor. Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Walker, 51 South. 169, 174, 164 Ala. 33.

Plaintiff, a head stone mason in charge of a stone gang, was injured by the fall of a stone by the breaking of a defective derrick chain. When chains needed repairs, or new ones were required, they were obtained from the blacksmith, frequently under plaintiff's direction, and at other times on motion of members of the crew. Plaintiff, on the day before the accident, in the absence of the general foreman, complained to H., in charge of ordinary supplies, of the defective character of the chain, and was told to go on with the work, and that H. would see that it was fixed. H. had no authority as to tools and appliances used. Both H. and plaintiff had authority to employ men. Held, that H. was not the vice principal, and that his promise to repair did not excuse plaintiff on assuming the risk of using the chain. Wolk v. Smith, 105 Pac. 138, 140, 58 Wash. 33.

The foreman not being the fellow servant of a switching crew in the performance of duties peculiar to his position, but the representative of the master, his promise to a member of a crew that a defective foot-board on an engine would be repaired is binding on the company. Berglund v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 128 N. W. 928, 929, 109 Minn. 317.

Reliance on care of master

A servant may assume that the master has performed his duty to provide and maintain a reasonably safe place in which to work and is not required to exercise care to ascertain such fact, but assumes the risk from an unsafe place only where he knows it to be unsafe, or its dangerous condition is obvious. Central Coal & Coke Co. v. Williams, 173 Fed. 337, 338, 97 C. C. A. 597.

A person entering the service of a corporation has a right to assume that it, as the master, has and will continue to discharge its obligations as master. The master is not called on to warrant the safety of the employé, who "assumes all risks" incident to the employment. The greater the danger of the employment, the greater the risk undertaken by the employé; but the risk of hazard so undertaken exists only so far as it is incident to the employment undertaken, and the employé does not "assume risks" of the negligence of the master. McCabe & Steen Const. Co. v. Wilson, 87 Pac. 320, 323, 17 Okl. 355.

"The employé is said to 'assume' all the ordinary risks incident to the employment, but it is as well established that dangers attributable to the negligence of the master, when material to be considered, are usually classed under the head of extraordinary risks, and these the employé does not assume. This last principle applies in full force where the conditions of increased hazard, attributable to the master's negligence, are not known to the employé, or could not be discovered in the exercise of reasonable care. The employé ordinarily has a right to assume that the employer has done his duty. This assumption is not absolute, however, nor held to obtain in the face of real and established facts, and where the defects and dangers attributable to the master's negligence have become known to the employé, and the risks appreciated under certain circumstances, these conditions may be classed with the ordinary risks which the employé does assume." Hicks v. Naomi Falls Mfg. Co., 50 S. E. 703, 706, 138 N. C. 319.

A master cannot plead assumed risk where the ground of the plea is knowledge, or means of knowledge, of the defect complained of, where the master has knowledge of the defect, or the superior of the employé, intrusted with the duty of repairing the defects, knows thereof, and the servant is not under duty to report the defect. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Clark (Tex.) 125 S. W. 959, 960.

An employé working on an upper floor assisting in hoisting materials by a rope and pulley, who knows that the guard rail about the shaft is fastened at one end only by being dropped into a slot, assumes the risk of a bundle, when hoisted, lifting the guard rail out of the slot, and precipitating him into the shaft. Kock v. Clinton Chair Co., 123 N. W. 172, 144 Iowa, 548.

Superior knowledge or equal means of knowledge

If the servant is skilled in the work required, and equally or better qualified than the master to know the danger and the danger is so obvious that he must have known it, but nevertheless undertakes it, he cannot complain if injured. Nicholas v. E. H. Abadie Co. (Ky.) 124 S. W. 325, 327.

"A servant 'assumes' the ordinary risks of his employment in cases where its dangers are open to common observation and are as fully known to him as to his employer, and where he is as capable of knowing and measuring the dangers of such employment, and is not induced to continue in the work by any promise of betterment or indemnity from his employer. In such a case the servant cannot recover from his employer damages for any injury that may come to him in the course of his employment." Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Click, 96 Pac. 796-798, 78 Kan. 419

(quoting and adopting definition in Walker v. Scott, 64 Pac. 615, 67 Kan. 814).

Where the injury was caused by a defective condition which plaintiff in the line of his duty was seeking to remedy and about which he knew as much as his employer, he assumed the risk. Archer v. Eldredge, 90 N. E. 525, 526, 204 Mass. 323.

A servant is not entitled to recover for injuries sustained while in the service of his master unless he has established that he did not know of the defects which caused his injury, and did not have equal opportunities with his master of knowing thereof at the time he was so injured. Bettis v. Chicago Coated Board Co., 145 Ill. App. 390, 393.

A master cannot plead assumed risk where the ground of the plea is knowledge, or means of knowledge, of the defect complained of, where the master has knowledge of the defect, or the superior of the employé, intrusted with the duty of repairing the defects, knows thereof, and the servant is not under duty to report the defect. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Clark (Tex.) 125 S. W. 959, 960.

Work tending to create danger

Where the work which the servant is doing tended to create the dangers from which he suffered his injury, the servant is held to assume the risk of such dangers. Gunszfsky v. People's Gaslight & Coke Co., 145 Ill. App. 255, 260, 261.

Where the work is of a character to render the place in which it is performed unsafe, or the place is rendered unsafe by the work in which the servant is engaged, the servant, when charged with knowledge of the peril, assumes the risk. Streicher v. Davenport Brick & Tile Co. (Iowa) 124 N. W. 327, 329.

ASSUMPTION OF SKILL

The proprietor of a business is conclusively presumed to know of the nature of the constituents and general characteristics of the substances used in his business, so that he can give directions for the conduct thereof with ordinary safety to his servants performing it with ordinary care, and such rule known as the doctrine of assumption of skill frequently makes the knowledge implied against the master superior to that implied against the servant as to things used in connection with the master's business. Beard v. Georgian Mfg. Co., 70 S. E. 57, 58, 8 Ga. App. 618.

ASSURANCE

The word "assurance" refers to the instrument itself, rather than to what it accomplishes. It is defined to be any instrument which confirms the title to real estate. It was anciently used to evidence and assure title to the grantor in a transfer of real estate previously made. A real estate mortgage is not a "conveyance or assurance," within the meaning of Gen. St. 1901, § 2092, providing that every person executing with intent to defraud a writing for a conveyance or assurance of lands or chattels which he had previously sold or assured to any other person shall on conviction be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor. State v. Rhodes, 93 Pac. 610, 612, 77 Kan. 202 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 591).

ASSURANCE OF TITLE

A deed purporting to convey the grantor's right, title, and interest to a specified tract, aided by proof of a deed purporting to convey title to the grantor, is "assurance of title" within Shannon's Code, § 4456. A tax deed, void on the ground that the taxes, to collect which the sale was had, were assessed against a deceased owner, is an "assurance of title" within Shannon's Code, § 4456. Under Shannon's Code, § 6301, providing that a decree may vest the title to realty out of any of the parties and vest it in the others, in which case it has the effect of a conveyance, a decree which merely declares that complainant is the owner in fee of the land in controversy, and that his title is superior to that claimed by defendant, but which does not purport to divest and vest title, is not an assurance of title within section 4456, vesting title in one who has had seven years' possession holding under an assurance of title. Southern Iron & Coal Co. v. Schwoon, 135 S. W. 785, 792, 124 Tenn. 176.

ASSURED

The words, "assured" and "insured" are so nearly synonymous that they are frequently used interchangeably. Certain policies provided that, after two annual premiums had been paid, the policy became nonforfeitable for an amount equal to one-tenth of the insurance for each and any premium so paid, and that if the amount of any annual premium or interest due on any note taken in part payment of a former annual premium was not fully paid as provided, then the policy should be forfeited, except as to annual payments for prior years which shall have been fully made, and that, if any note given in payment of any premium should not be paid according to its terms, the policy should become immediately void, except as respects prior payments. The policy called decedent the "insured," and the beneficiary the "assured," and declared that defendant might set off any demand against the "assured" arising in connection with the insurance against any claim for which it should be liable. Decedent gave notes in part payment for the first and subsequent premiums, until five premiums had accrued on one policy and four on another; none of such premiums ever having been paid. The clause relating to set-off did not limit the company's right to claims against the beneficiary only. Hoar v. Union Mut. Life Ins. Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 1059, 1062, 118 App. Div. 416.

The word "assured" is sometimes applied to the beneficiary, but, generally speaking, it is synonymous with "insured." Where a third party procures a policy on another's life, he is spoken of as the "assured," because the contract is with him; but, where a person procures a policy on his own life, he is both the insured and the assured, although he makes a third person the beneficiary. Chandler v. Traub, 49 South. 240, 241, 159 Ala. 519 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, pp. 591, 592; Hogle v. Guardian Life Ins. Co., 29 N. Y. Super. Ct. 567, 569; Ferdon v. Canfield, 10 N. E. 146, 104 N. Y. 143, 145).

"The 'beneficiary' of an insurance policy may be defined as the party to whom the proceeds are made payable by the terms of the contract, and 'beneficiary' and 'assured' are synonymous terms, though the former is the more commonly used." Union Fraternal League v. Walter, 34 S. E. 317, 322, 109 Ga. 1, 46 L. R. A. 424, 77 Am. St. Rep. 350.

A towing company, owner of a tug and barges, procured an open policy of insurance "for the account of whom it may concern" on all lawful goods on board barges owned by it "against any and all risks and perils of fire and inland navigation and transportation, property of the assured or held by them in trust or custody as freighter, forwarder, bailee or common carrier." In accordance with the provisions of the policy, the company procured a certificate thereunder covering the cargo of one of its barges, "loss if any payable only to the order of" the owner of such cargo. Under an agreement between them, it paid the premium on the certificate, and added the amount to the freight. The certificate also contained the following: "It is agreed that upon the payment of any loss or damage the insurers are to be subrogated to all the rights of the assured under their bills of lading or transportation receipts to the extent of such payments." While in tow of the company's tug the barge was sunk in a collision, and the cargo was a total loss; the tug and the second vessel both being held in fault for the collision. The insurer paid the loss to the cargo owner. Held, that within the meaning and intent of the certificate the cargo owner, which paid the premium, was the "assured," and that the insurer was entitled to be subrogated to its right of recovery as against both vessels. Merchants' & Miners' Transp. Co. v. Robinson-Baxter-Dissosway Towing & Transp. Co., 191 Fed. 769, 773, 113 C. C. A. 427.

A fire policy provided that it should be void if "the insured" should have or procure any other contract of insurance on the property covered. Plaintiff, having sold the property on time, assigned the policy with the insurer's consent, a rider being added providing that any loss ascertained and proven to be due "assured" under the policy should be payable to plaintiff as her interest might appear. Following the provision in the policy against additional insurance was a provision that if with the consent of the insurer an interest under the policy shall exist in favor of a mortgagee, or any other person, or corporation having an interest in the subject of the insurance other than the interest of the insured, the conditions "hereinbefore contained shall apply in the manner expressed in such provisions, and conditions of insurance relating to such interest as shall be written upon, attached, or appended to the policy." Held, that the conditions referred to in such provision were not those contained in the rider, but those contained in the policy, and the grantee of the property, and not the grantor, being the "assured" within the rider, plaintiff could only recover in case of loss such an amount as could be recovered by the grantee, and was therefore subject to the defense that the policy was void because of the grantee procuring additional insurance without the insurer's consent. Dumphy v. Commercial Union Assurance Co., Limited, of London (Tex.) 142 S. W. 116, 117.

ASYLUM

See Orphan Asylum.

An "asylum" is "an institution for the protection or relief of the unfortunate." The word is so used in Const. art. 5, § 3, which disables persons kept at any asylum at public expense from acquiring a residence there for voting purposes, and includes a state soldiers' home. Lawrence v. Leidigh, 50 Pac. 600, 601, 58 Kan. 504, 62 Am. St. Rep. 631 (quoting and adopting the definition in Webster's Dictionary as quoted in Wolcott v. Holcomb, 56 N. W. 838, 97 Mich. 363, 364, 23 L. R. A. 215).

An asylum is defined by Webster to be an institution for the protection and relief of the unfortunate. A soldier's home is included in the term "asylum," used in Const. art. 2, § 3, providing that no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the service of the United States, nor while kept in any almshouse or other asylum or institution wholly or partly supported at public expense. In re Smith, 89 N. Y. Supp. 1006, 1010, 44 Misc. Rep. 384.

The words "poor house or other asylum," as used in Const. art. 8, § 8, providing that "no person while kept at any 'poor house or other asylum' at public expense, nor while confined in any public prison, shall be entitled to vote at an election under the laws of this state," will not be held to include soldiers' homes, and therefore Rev. St. 1899, § 6904, providing that no person, while kept in any "poor house or other asylum" at public expense, "except at soldiers' homes," shall be entitled to vote, will not be held unconstitutional as excepting soldiers' homes from its operation. Hale v. Stimson, 95 S. W. 885, 890, 198 Mo. 134.

In a conveyance the words "to," "on," "by," "at," "along," a nontidal stream presumptively carry title as far into the stream as the grantor possesses. Leary v. Jersey City, 189 Fed. 419, 428.

A deed conveyed a strip of land on either side of the center line of a railroad commencing at a specified point and running in an easterly direction to a point where the G. cut-off line diverges from the old railroad, running thence easterly along the center line of both lines of railroad to their intersection with the easterly line of the Rancho San Pascuals, and also all the land lying between the two lines of railway from their junction at Garvanza depot to Pasadena avenue, where such avenue lies between such railway lines. There were two junctions of the cut-off and the main line; the easterly one being at the intersection of the easterly line of the Rancho San Pascuals, and the other being a considerable distance west of the depot mentioned, but much nearer to it than the easterly junction, and situated in the territory known as Garvanza, while the easterly junction was situated in another territory. Held, that in view of the fact that the westerly junction was in the same territory as the Garvanza depot and nearer to it, and that the easterly junction was referred to, in the deed immediately previous to the reference to the junction as "Garvanza depot," as the "intersection near the easterly line of the Rancho San Pascuals," and the fact that the word "at," when applied to a place, is not definitely locative, but primarily expresses the relation of presence, nearness in place, or time or direction toward, the description of the land lying between the two lines of railway from their junction at "Garvanza depot," etc., will be deemed to refer to the westerly junction of the railway line and to convey the land bounded by the triangle formed by the two lines of railway west of Pasadena avenue. Los Angeles County v. Hannon, 112 Pac. 878, 881, 159 Cal. 37, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1065.

As in neighborhood of

"At" means in the neighborhood of. Where a petition in an action against a telegraph company for negligently delivering a message announcing the increased illness of the recipient's mother alleges that plaintiff was at the home of her sister at H., a small village, there is no variance between such allegation and evidence that plaintiff's sister's house was two miles from the village. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Roberts, 78 S. W. 522, 524, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 76.

As in or within

A note payable "at" a designated bank in the state is negotiable within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 9076, declaring that a note payable in a bank in the state shall be negotiable; the word "at" meaning "in." Halstead v. Woods, 95 N. E. 429, 431, 48 Ind. App. 127.

The preposition "at" has a great relativity of meaning conforming readily to the nature of the thing which constitutes its grammatical object and to the principal notion in the mind of the person using it. It generally includes in its meaning all that "in" would, but not quite as much as "in and near" would. Jenkins alias Jinks v. State, 62 S. E. 574, 576, 4 Ga. App. 859 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 595; 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7585).

"Witnesses in testifying that no divine service was held 'at' the church upon the occasion named must evidently be understood as meaning that no such service was then held 'in' the church or its immediate proximity. The word 'at' is somewhat indefinite. It may mean 'in' or 'within,' or it may mean 'near.' Its primary idea is nearness, and it is less definite than 'in' or 'on.' At the house may mean in or near the house. * * * The word 'at' is used 'to denote near approach, nearness or proximity.' * * * It is a relative term, and its signification depends largely upon the subject-matter in relation to which it is used and the circumstances under which it becomes necessary to apply it to surrounding objects. * * * 'At' and 'near' may be considered synonymous." An indictment charging that accused disturbed a congregation of persons lawfully assembled for divine worship "at" a named church is sustained by proof that he disturbed a congregation so assembled at a bush arbor about 170 or 200 yards from such church. Minter v. State, 30 S. E. 989, 992, 104 Ga. 753 (quoting and adopting Rich. Eng. Dict., and citing and adopting Webster's Dict.; Williams v. Ft. Worth & N. O. Ry. Co., 18 S. W. 206, 82 Tex. 553; Frey v. Ft. Worth & R. G. Ry. Co., 24 S. W. 950, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 29; Fall River Iron Works Co. v. Old Colony & F. R. R. Co., 87 Mass. [5 Allen] 221; Bartlett v. Jenkins, 22 N. H. 53).

Where a statute provided for the location of a high school, on petition requesting that the school be established in the county "at a place" in said petition named, a petition, requesting the location of a school "in or near" a certain city, sufficiently designated the place in which it was desired to locate the school. No metaphysical distinction between the significance of the words "at" and "in" could have been in the minds of the legislators in the enactment of the law; but in using the expression "at a place," in said petition named, the Legislature purposely used an indefinite expression in order to leave a wide discretion in the high school board as to the final location of the building. Territory ex rel. McGuire v. Board of Trustees for High School of Logan County, 76 Pac. 165, 168, 13 Okl. 605.

An indictment charging that the offense was committed "at," instead of "in," the county is sufficiently definite after verdict. Augustine v. State, 20 Tex. 450, 452.

One who, while inside of an occupied dwelling, shoots a pistol at a floor thereof, is guilty of shooting "at" or "into" such dwelling, within the meaning of the act approved August 13, 1910 (Acts 1910, p. 137). English v. State, 74 S. E. 286, 10 Ga. App. 791 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 596; Blackwell v. State, 30 Tex. App. 416, 17 S. W. 1061).

As near as to place

The word "at" expresses the idea of nearness of place, and is less definite than "in" or "on." Lovin v. Hicks, 133 N. W. 575, 576, 116 Minn. 179.

The word "at," when used to designate a place, may, and often must, mean "near to." It is less definite than "in" or "on"; "at" the house may be "in" or "near" the house. The language of Acts 1903, c. 375, § 15, providing that a township board shall "begin road improvements at the courthouse on the four main roads in said township," may be sustained and given effect by beginning work on the roads at the boundary of the corporation leading to the courthouse where they merge into streets. Waynesville v. Satterthwait, 48 S. E. 661, 665, 136 N. C. 226, (citing Webster's International Dict. 95; Cent. Dict. vol. 1).

A complaint against a street railway company alleged that a passenger was injured while alighting "at" C., which appears to have been a shed station, and not a town or city. The evidence showed that the accident occurred about two car lengths from the station. Held, that there was no variance. Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co. v. McGinty, 48 South. 491, 492, 158 Ala. 410.

"At the town of L," in said county, where an act located the county seat, is equivalent to near or in proximity to that place; so that location of the courthouse 1,000 feet outside the limits of the original town plat is authorized. Murdoch v. Klamath County Court, 126 Pac. 6-8, 62 Or. 483 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, pp. 595, 598).

The preposition "at," when used to denote local position, may mean "in," "on," "near," "by," etc., according to the context; denoting usually a place conceived of as a mere point. A contract between a railroad and a person for whom it agreed to lay a side track to his mill, releasing the railroad from all liability for injury to stock killed on the tracks of the railroad "at" the spur track or upon the same, has no application to stock killed on the main line near the spur. St. Louis S. W. Ry. Co. v. Stringer, 86 S. W. 280, 281, 74 Ark. 425 (quoting and adopting the definition in Rogers v. Galloway Female College, 44 S. W. 454, 64 Ark. 627, 39 L. R. A. 636; and citing Stewart v. Patrick, 68 N. Y. 450; Proctor v. Andover, 42 N. H. 348, 362; Davis' Adm'r v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., 75 S. W. 275, 116 Ky. 144; 1 Words and Phrases, p. 593 et seq.).

The word "at" is a word of somewhat indefinite meaning, whose significance is generally controlled by the context and attending circumstances, denoting the precise sense in which it is used. Used in reference to place, it often means "in" or "within"; but its primary sense is "nearness" or "proximity," and it is commonly used as the equivalent of "in" or "about." The word denotes, primarily, nearness, presence, or direction towards. The word as used in a covenant not to engage in a certain business within ten miles of a certain town, so long as the other party to the agreement should operate such business "at" that place, prevents the party making the covenant, from engaging in the business, though the business operated by the other party was outside of the corporate limits of the town. Harris v. Theus, 43 South. 131, 134, 149 Ala. 133, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 204, 123 Am. St. Rep. 17 (citing 4 Cyc. p. 365; Rogers v. Galloway Female College, 44 S. W. 454, 64 Ark. 627, 39 L. R. A. 636, 639; Williams v. Ft. Worth & N. O. R. Co., 18 S. W. 206, 208, 82 Tex. 553; O'Conner v. Nadel, 23 South. 532, 117 Ala. 595, 598; Ray v. State, 50 Ala. 172, 173).

The proprietor of a produce business at R., a small unincorporated town, sold the business, the main part of which was with people around and outside of the town, by a contract providing that he would not engage in the produce business "at R." for five years. Within that time he purchased a store at H., an unincorporated town about 1½ miles from R., and engaged in the produce business and shipped through the railroad station at R., and lived and received his mail there, and bought produce from his old trade, delivered at H., and gained the business of persons who used to do business with him at R., and who had done business with the purchaser.

Held, that the seller was in open competition with the buyer of the business, construing the words "at R." to mean near and about that town, and would be enjoined. Counts v. Medley, 146 S. W. 465, 468, 163 Mo. App. 546.

In construing an instruction, in an action against a railroad company for loss of wheat by fire while in storage in a warehouse, that if there was a heavy grade "at the point" where the alleged fire occurred, and the train passing said point just prior to the discovery of the fire was so heavily loaded as to require the engines to be worked hard and to cause them to emit an unusual quantity of sparks, these are circumstances which the jury have a right to consider in determining whether or not the engines attached to said train were skillfully and carefully managed. It would be quite technical to construe the words "at the point" to means at the very or exact point, especially when the grade was in such proximity that the train had begun its ascent before it had cleared the warehouse. Anderson v. Oregon R. Co., 77 Pac. 119, 123, 45 Or. 211.

AT NOV. 15TH

A memorandum of sale provided that the goods should be delivered at specified dates thereafter designated as "June 15/30," "May 15/30," "July 1/15," and "at Nov. 15th." It was conceded that the phrase "at June 15/30" meant between June 15th and June 30th. Held, that, since "at," when used both as to time and place, often means "near," or "about," the phrase "at Nov. 15th" was ambiguous, and did not necessarily mean on Nov. 15th, and hence parol evidence was admissible to explain the same. Lorraine Mfg. Co. v. Oshinsky, 182 Fed. 407, 408.

AT OR AFTER

Civ. Code Prac. § 203, provides that, if property attached be stock in a corporation, the corporation may be summoned as garnishee, and section 223 declares that, in proceedings on such attachment, the garnishee may pay the debt owing to, or deliver the property held for, his debtor, to the sheriff, and to that extent be discharged from liability to the debtor, but section 224 declares that each garnishee summoned must appear, though he may have delivered the property or fund to the sheriff, and that, in case of a corporation, any shares of stock held therein by or for the benefit of the defendant "at or after the service of the order of attachment" shall be subject to the writ. Held, that the words "at or after" in section 224 related only to corporate stock, and that the writ did not cover other indebtedness which accrued after service. Boswell v. Citizens' Sav. Bank, 96 S. W. 797, 800, 123 Ky. 485.

AT OR BEFORE

The words "at or before the close of the evidence," in Revisal 1905, § 536, requiring that a request to put the instructions in writing shall be made "at or before the close of the evidence," if inserted in section 538, providing that counsel shall reduce their prayers for special instructions to writing, would mean that requested instructions could be made at some time not later than the beginning of the argument of counsel to the jury, and the refusal of requested charges because made too late, when made before the commencement of argument, is erroneous. Craddock v. Barnes, 54 S. E. 1003, 1005, 142 N. C. 89.

AT OR NEAR

The words "at or near," used in a railroad charter as the designation of the railroad's terminus, "are indefinite and must receive a reasonable construction." Collier v. Union R. Co., 83 S. W. 155, 158, 113 Tenn. 96 (citing Lewis, Em. Dom. § 257; Redf. Railways, vol. 1, p. 413; Fall River Iron Works v. Old Colony & F. R. R. Co., 87 Mass. [5 Allen] 221; Boston & P. R. Corporation v. Midland R. Co., 67 Mass. [1 Gray] 340, 367; Purifoy v. Richmond & D. R. Co., 12 S. E. 741, 108 N. C. 100).

The words "at or near," used in the proof with reference to the place of posting notices of a chattel mortgage foreclosure sale, are indefinite as to the place. Powell v. Hardy, 94 N. W. 683, 89 Minn. 229.

AT ANY STAGE

The words "at any stage of utero-gestation," as used in Cr. Code, § 6, punishing abortion, mean at any stage of pregnancy. Edwards v. State, 112 N. W. 611, 612, 79 Neb. 251.

AT ANY TIME

The phrase "at any time" means after a certain time, or after the fulfillment of a certain condition. Murray v. Barnhart, 42 South. 489, 491, 117 La. 1023.

The right given in an oil and gas lease to remove fixtures "at any time" was not unlimited, but the removal must be within a reasonable time after expiration of the lease. Perry v. Acme Oil Co., 88 N. E. 859, 861, 44 Ind. App. 207.

The words "at any time," in a deed by a corporation reciting that the conveyance is subject to the restrictions in the act of incorporation, and that the grantee, his heirs, and assigns agree not to violate any of the provisions in the act of incorporation, "by-laws, rules or regulations made by the said" grantor "at any time," refer to the date of the violation, and not to the date of the adoption of the by-laws, rules, or regulations. Newbery v. Barkalow, 71 Atl. 752, 754, 75 N. J. Eq. 128.

The power given a Court of Chancery by General Corporation Act, § 43, to appoint a receiver for a dissolved corporation "at any time," is not limited to the three years from expiration or dissolution, for which section 40 provides its corporate existence shall be continued for winding up its affairs. Slaughter v. Moore (Del.) 82 Atl. 963, 966; Harned v. Beacon Hill Real Estate Co. (Del.) 80 Atl. 805, 808.

A timber deed conveyed all timber standing and fallen, with the right to cut and remove it "at any time." Held, that the words "at any time" did not give the grantee the right to remove the timber at its own convenience, without regard to lapse of time, but meant a reasonable time without unnecessary delay, the same as if no time at all were specified. Fletcher v. Lyon, 123 S. W. 801, 803, 93 Ark. 5.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 59, cl. "f," 30 Stat. 562, provides that creditors, other than original petitioners, may "at any time" enter their appearance and join in the petition. Clause "d" declares that creditors, notified of the pendency of the petition as there provided, must join in it prior to or during the hearing. Held, that clause "d" deals only with cases in which the issue is whether the alleged bankrupt's creditors number less than twelve, and hence a creditor may intervene and join the original petitioners "at any time" prior to the dismissal of the petition. In re Lewis F. Perry & Whitney Co., 172 Fed. 744, 745.

A covenant by the grantee in a deed that the grantor "shall at any time have the right of pre-emption of the premises" at a stated price does not give the grantor a right to repurchase except when the grantee wishes to sell. Garcia v. Callender, 5 N. Y. Supp. 934, 935, 53 Hun, 12.

The words "at any time within twenty days," as used in Comp. Laws 1897, § 896, providing that the party appealing shall prepare and present the intended bill of exceptions to the trial judge "at any time within twenty days" before the first day of the Supreme Court in which the said cause shall be docketed, are to be construed as meaning at any time in not less than 20 days, so as to require presentation of the bill of exceptions to the trial judge at least 20 days before the first day of the term of this court to which the case is returnable. United States v. Sena, 106 Pac. 383, 385, 15 N. M. 187.

Rev. St. 1908, § 518, preserves the lien of a chattel mortgage for 30 days after maturity without possession taken, and section 520, subsequently enacted, provides that the lien of any recorded chattel mortgage to secure any indebtedness may "at any time within 30 days after the maturity of the last installment of the indebtedness secured thereby" be extended as to the unpaid portion thereof by filing a sworn statement of the total payments on the debt and the amount remaining unpaid, that it is "still due" the mortgagee or his assignee, and that the mortgagee consents to an extension. Held, in view of section 518, that the word "due" was used in the sense that the debt was subsisting or outstanding, that the words "still due" referred to a time subsequent to a time when the debt was known or taken to be due, and that the expression "at any time within 30 days after the maturity of the last installment of the indebtedness secured thereby" required that such sworn statement be filed within 30 days after the maturity of the indebtedness, and that a statement on the date of maturity was premature and did not extend the lien as against a purchaser after the expiration of the 30 days. Ferris v. Chambers, 117 Pac. 994, 995, 51 Colo. 368.

AT DEATH

Where a deed provided that the grantee should hold the property during her natural life, and at her death the property should belong to her daughter, her heirs and assigns, but, in the event of the daughter's dying without issue, then "at her death" all of the property should be divided between her two brothers, the quoted phrase refers to the death of the daughter, and not to the death of the mother. Sterling v. Huntley, 76 S. E. 375, 377, 139 Ga. 21.

Where testator devised to his son certain real estate during his natural life, and "at his death to his children," the word "at" designated the time of enjoyment merely, and not the time of the vesting of the estate; and hence the grandchildren acquired vested interests immediately on their birth, which they could alienate by mortgage or otherwise. Manhattan Real Estate & Bldg. Ass'n v. Cudlipp, 80 N. Y. Supp. 993, 995, 80 App. Div. 532.

Testator devised real estate to his son on condition that he pay testator's widow a specified annuity, "at his death to be divided among his living children as follows: $500 to M., a daughter of the son, the remainder to be equally divided among the other children." The son at the date of the will had five children. Another child was born before the death of testator, and two were born afterwards. Held, that the words "at his death" fixed the death of the son as the time for division, and that the words "living children" and "other children" were descriptive of the persons entitled to take, and, until the time for division was reached, such persons could not be ascertained. Day v. Thompson, 82 Atl. 935, 233 Pa. 550.

A devise to M. for life, "and at the decease of M. the premises shall vest in her heirs," gave to her an estate of inheritance by virtue of the rule in Shelley's Case; the use of the words "at the decease," instead of "after the decease," being immaterial. Pierce v. Pierce, 14 R. I. 514, 516.

AT HOME

In a wedding card announcement that the newly married couple would be "at home" at a certain place after a certain time, the phrase "at home" meant simply that at that time and place they would be ready to see and receive visits from their friends, and did not necessarily refer to a domicile. It had the same signification, no more and no less, as the society phrase put in the mouth of the servant who opens the door to the casual visitor and declares to that visitor that the lady of the house is not "at home," and which is understood by everybody to mean no more than that she is not ready to receive visitors. Duke v. Duke, 62 Atl. 466, 468, 70 N. J. Eq. 135.

AT ITS OWN COST

A policy, insuring against loss resulting from the injury or death of an employé of the assured through its negligence, limited the liability of the company for loss through the injury or death of one person to $5,000, but further provided that, "if any suit is brought against the assured to enforce a claim for damages on account of an accident covered by this policy, immediate notice thereof shall be given to the company and the company will defend against such proceeding in the name and on behalf of the assured, or settle the same at its own cost, unless it shall elect to pay the assured the indemnity provided for." An action was brought against the assured, resulting in a judgment against it for $5,000, which was affirmed on appeal, and then paid by the assured. Held, that the phrase "at its own cost," as used in such provision of the policy, meant the same as "at its own expense," and was not limited to the taxable court costs of the action, but included whatever expenditure was necessary in defending the suit, such as court costs, attorneys' and stenographers' fees, and the like, which the company was required by such provision to pay, although it might be in addition to the $5,000, limited in case it elected not to defend or settle; that as so construed the company was liable for the amount of the judgment, increased by whatever of such expense was paid by the assured, with interest thereon from the time of such payment, but was not liable for interest on the judgment pending the appeal, during which time the assured had the use of the money. Maryland Casualty Co. of Baltimore, Md., v. Omaha Electric Light & Power Co., 157 Fed. 514, 518, 85 C. C. A. 106.

AT LARGE

See Insane Person at Large.

To "suffer a ram to go 'at large,'" within the meaning of the statute imposing a penalty upon the owner therefor, implies consent or willingness of mind. Selleck v. Selleck, 19 Conn. 501, 504.

In a prosecution against a nonresident for herding, grazing, and permitting his cattle to "run at large" in this state, an instruction that if defendant's cattle were being herded or grazed or permitted to "run at large" in this state, and he, while in this state, participated in or assented to the same, the jury should convict him, was proper. Beattie v. State, 95 S. W. 163, 164, 77 Ark. 247.

As animals not under control of owner

"Running at large" means strolling without restraint, or confinement, as rambling, roving, or wandering at will, unrestrained; that is, without any one to hinder or direct them. Donley v. Fowler, 110 N. W. 1097, 1101, 147 Mich. 288.

"Going at large," as used in the statute prohibiting animals from running at large without a keeper (Pub. St. c. 36, §§ 20-40), means the unrestrained use of a highway by animals in the absence of a keeper or person to look after them. Leonard v. Doherty, 55 N. E. 461, 462, 174 Mass. 565.

Allowing a vicious horse to eat in the street unattended and unhitched while attached to a wagon was not a negligent permitting of the animal to run "at large." Corcoran v. Kelly, 113 N. Y. Supp. 686, 61 Misc. Rep. 323.

Under an ordinance prohibiting the running at large of animals in the city, or permitting them to graze or feed in the streets, except in such part of such streets as are in front of or adjoining lands owned by the owner of the animal, an animal who is unattended or untethered in the street is as much "at large" when in front of its master's premises as in any other part of the street. In order to be within the exception, the animal must not only be in front of its master's premises, but must be attended or securely tethered and not running "at large." Decker v. McSorley, 86 N. W. 554, 555, 111 Wis. 91.

A horse running through the streets of a city, returning to its stable, unattended, is "running at large," within the meaning of an ordinance making it unlawful for horses to run at large, notwithstanding that the horse has been accustomed and trained to return to the stable after being turned loose. Allen v. Hazzard, 77 S. W. 268, 269, 83 Tex. Civ. App. 523.

A horse trained to go straight home when turned loose at any distant part is not "running at large," within Gen. St. c. 100, § 29, while on its way home. Russell v. Cone, 46 Vt. 600, 604.

Section 24 of the act approved April 14, 1903 (P. L. p. 526), as such section was amended by the act approved April 5, 1904 (P. L. p. 406), not only provides that it shall be unlawful for any owner of any dog to permit such dog to run at large in woods or fields inhabited by rabbits or game birds, except only between the 1st day of October and the 1st day of February following, but it also provides a penalty therefor. The term "running at large," as used in the statutes imposing a penalty on one who suffers animals to run at large in public places, is used in the sense of strolling without restraint or confinement; wandering; roving; or rambling at will; unrestrained. Conner v. Fogg, 67 Atl. 338, 339, 75 N. J. Law, 245.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 1898, which provides that a person taking certain animals running at large in the range of woods, and which are not designated by brands or earmarks, shall not be guilty of larceny, but simply liable to the owner for the value of such animals, a cow, though not under the physical restraint of a halter or inclosure, which was, upon being turned out in the woods during the day to feed, accustomed to return to its home at night, did not run at large and, though unmarked, it was a subject of larceny; "range" meaning a sparsely populated and uninclosed tract of land over which stock and cattle are permitted to roam and feed without restraint, "in the woods" referring to uninclosed and unpopulated woodland, and "running at large" being applicable to animals which roam and feed at will, and which are not under the control and direction of any one. Jefferies v. State (Ark.) 144 S. W. 514, 515; Jordan v. Same, Id. 1197.

Under Kirby's Dig. §§ 5450, 5451, animals are "running at large" if they are within the corporate limits of the city without being within the control of any one, regardless of whether or not the owner was at fault in permitting their escape or in not making diligent search for them. McKenzie v. Newton, 117 S. W. 553, 554, 89 Ark. 564 (citing Clarendon v. Walker, 80 S. W. 883, 72 Ark. 8; Benton v. Willis, 88 S. W. 1000, 76 Ark. 443).

Where an incorporated town has declared by ordinance the "running at large" of hogs in the town to be a nuisance and prohibited the same and directed that hogs and pigs found running at large should be taken up by the police constable and impounded, it was held that the hogs of a party who resided near the town limits, and who suffered them to go at large, were subject to be impounded under the ordinance, if they were found at large within the town. Friday v. Floyd, 63 Ill. 50, 51.

A nonresident's horse, which is turned loose by the owner and strays into a city, is "running at large with the owner's permission," within the meaning of an ordinance prohibiting the same. Moore v. Crenshaw (Tex.) 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 264.

As animals within control of owner

An animal tied to a stake in a public street and permitted to graze is at large within an ordinance authorizing the removal of obstructions from the public streets and requiring the marshal to take up live stock running at large. Williams v. Sewell, 49 S. E. 732, 121 Ga. 665.

Where, in an action for injuries received by plaintiff's child by being hooked by a vicious cow, alleged to belong to the defendant and permitted by it to "run at large" on the public road in violation of an ordinance of the police jury, it was shown that the public road ran through defendant's plantation and at the time of the injury the cow was on the public road, but under charge of a keeper who was transferring it, with others, from a cow lot on one side of the road to a pasture on the other side belonging to defendant, the cow was not "running at large" on the public road. Stevens v. Mrs. E. D. Burguières Planting Co., 45 South. 601, 603, 120 La. 767.

A dog is not "running at large," within the meaning of the statute, when he is within calling distance and sight of the owner's family and under their control. Brown v. Graham, 114 N. W. 153, 154, 80 Neb. 281.

Animals escaping from control of owner

An ordinance of a town of Collinsville, prohibiting the "running at large" of certain animals within the corporate limits of the town, provides that any person being the owner of, or having the care of, any such animals, who shall suffer the same to "run at large," etc., shall be subject to a certain penalty therein specified. In an action to recover the penalty for a violation of this ordinance, the proof disclosed these facts: That the defendant resided on his farm outside the limits of the town; that he had allowed the animals to run in a piece of woods near by; but that he watched and cared for them daily, and would have prevented them from straying into the town, in the present instance, had it not been that he was suddenly called away to the bedside of a dying brother. Held, that this evidence clearly exonerated the defendant from the charge of suffering his animals to "run at large" within the corporate limits of the town. Town of Collinsville v. Scanland, 58 Ill. 221, 222.

Whether cattle killed on a railroad were "running at large" so as to make the company liable under Code, § 2055, is a question for the jury; there being evidence that after being driven over the railroad, while going along a highway, they got through a defective wing fence, and ran some distance down the track, and the owner pursued them and got them partway back, when they were killed. Morris v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., 110 N. W. 154, 155, 133 Iowa, 28.

An ordinance provided that "no horse shall be permitted to run at large in the city," and that any person "who shall permit the same" to so run at large shall be punished. Held, that negligence in not securing the horse from escape did not constitute a violation of the ordinance, but the horse must be at large with the knowledge and assent or permission of the owner. Decker v. McSorley, 93 N. W. 808, 809, 116 Wis. 643.

Animals escaping from inclosures

"The meaning of the words 'running at large' is different in different statutes, and should always be determined largely from the object and purposes sought to be accomplished by the particular statute wherein they are used." Within the meaning of the provisions, article 2, c. 2, St. Okl. 1893, animals trespassing on the premises of another than their owners, and not under the immediate control of their owner, are "running at large." Gilbert v. Stephens, 55 Pac. 1070, 1072, 6 Okl. 673.

An animal is "running at large," within the meaning of a city ordinance requiring the city officers to impound animals running at large and providing for their sale after reasonable notice, though it has escaped from the inclosure in which it was kept by the owner without his knowledge or fault. City of Paris v. Hale, 35 S. W. 333, 334, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 386.

Where a bull escaped from the owner's premises and broke into the pasture of an adjacent owner, and the owner of the pasture and of the bull agreed that the bull should remain in the pasture over night, during which time it killed the mare of a third person kept in the pasture for hire, the bull was running "at large" in the nighttime, within Comp St. 1893, c. 2, art. 3, § 14, prohibiting animals running at large during the nighttime, and making the owner liable in an action for damages done during such nighttime, and the owner of the mare could recover from the owner of the bull for the damages sustained. Duggan v. Hansen, 61 N. W. 622, 43 Neb. 277.

Under McLain's Code, § 2250, permitting any person to take possession of any bull found "at large," defendant had the right to take up a bull running "at large," though it escaped by breaking an insufficient division fence which it was the duty of the person taking up the animal to keep in repair. If the owner turned the bull out in a pasture improperly fenced and that would not restrain him, and he escaped into an adjoining field, he was running "at large." Conway v. Jordan, 81 N. W. 703, 704, 110 Iowa, 462.

Where the owner of domestic animals in a county where the herd law of 1872 was in force kept the same confined on his own farm, in a pasture inclosed with a good and lawful fence, and the animals, without fault of the owner, escaped from the pasture, in the nighttime, into a public highway, and wandered upon uninclosed land through which a railway runs, adjoining the farm of their owner, and are run over and killed by an engine at a place on the railway where it is wholly unfenced, and their escape from the pasture was not, and could not by the use of ordinary care have been, discovered by the owner until after they were killed, held, that such animals cannot be said to be allowed to "run at large." Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Johnston, 10 Pac. 103, 105, 35 Kan. 58.

Rev. St. 1898, § 1482, as amended by Laws 1903, p. 18, c. 14, provides that if the owner of any bull shall suffer such animal to "run at large" he shall be liable for all damages done by the animal while at large, although he escapes without the fault of the owner. Held, that diligence to prevent escape is not a defense, but diligence to recapture the animal after its escape is a defense, and, as so construed, the statute is not invalid as unreasonable because beyond the limits of the police power. Hadtke v. Grazyll, 110 N. W. 225, 226, 180 Wis. 275.

It has been held that where the owner of land adjoining a railroad turns stock into a pasture surrounded by a legal fence on all sides excepting along the right of way, which the company, in violation of its duty, leaves open, the animals are not deemed to be "running at large"; but under similar circumstances it was held that the owner had failed to "confine" his stock, a distinction being made between the two expressions, and it has been said that the words "confined" in one act, and "prohibited from running at large" in another act, mean substantially the same thing, but the difference has since been noted and acted upon. But decisions defining the phrase "running at large," made in railroad cases, necessarily apply whenever the statute is invoked in behalf of one whose injury has been occasioned by a failure in the performance of his own duty. Consequently, where a bull escapes from the land of the owner to that of a neighbor by reason of the failure of the latter to keep up a portion of the division fence in accordance with an agreement between them, no action for the resulting damages can be maintained under the statute

(Gen. St. 1901, § 7380) forbidding owners of animals to permit them to run at large. McAfee v. Walker, 107 Pac. 637, 638, 82 Kan. 182, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 226 (citing Gooding v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 4 Pac. 136, 32 Kan. 150; Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Landis, 24 Kan. 406; St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Mossman, 2 Pac. 146, 150, 30 Kan. 336; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Riggs, 3 Pac. 305, 31 Kan. 622, 630; Railroad Co. v. Jackson, 79 Pac. 662, 70 Kan. 791; Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Shumaker, 27 Pac. 126, 128, 46 Kan. 769, 772).

Hogs escaping from the owner's field onto the land of an adjoining owner through a defective partition fence, which it was the duty of the adjoining owner to keep in repair, were not "running at large," within Acts 1903, p. 315, c. 151, making it unlawful to allow live stock to run at large. Brown v. Sams, 109 S. W. 513, 514, 119 Tenn. 677.

Mules which broke loose during the night after they had been tied up by the owner after ceasing work for the day, and which escaped and went on a railroad right of way and were killed, were not running at large within the law prohibiting animals from running at large. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Selders, 110 S. W. 997, 999, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 568.

Animals on owner's land

Cattle on the owner's premises between which and a railroad there is no sufficient fence are not running "at large" within the meaning of the herd law. So in Kansas where, under the railroad stock law of 1874 (Laws 1874, c. 94), railroad companies are required to inclose their roads with a good and lawful fence to prevent animals from going upon their roads, and in a county where the herd law of 1872 is in force (Laws 1872, c. 193) cattle are not allowed to run at large, where an owner of cattle in a county where both of these laws are in force kept and pastured them on his own land, through which a railroad was constructed and operated, which railroad was not inclosed by any fence separating it from the owner's land, and the cattle strayed on the railroad, where one of them was killed by the railroad company in the operation of its road, he may recover of the railroad company such injury. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Riggs, 3 Pac. 305, 312, 81 Kan. 622.

AT LAW AND IN EQUITY

Laws 1880, p. 349, c. 292, confers power to appoint commissioners in condemnation proceedings upon the circuit court or the judge thereof. Laws 1905, p. 446, c. 295, confers on the superior court for Lincoln county jurisdiction equal to and concurrent with the circuit court of that county in "all civil actions and proceedings at law and in equity," with an immaterial exception and confers express authority to issue all commissions provided by law, and provides that, whenever a statute shall mention the circuit judge, the words shall be deemed to apply to the judge of the superior court for Lincoln county. St. 1898, § 2594, divides remedies in courts of justice into "actions" and "special proceedings"; the latter embracing all remedies other than actions, under the direct provisions of section 2598. Held, that inasmuch as the words "at law and in equity" embrace all exercise of judicial or quasi judicial power of courts, whether conferred by statute, common law, or equitable rules, the expression "all civil actions and proceedings at law and in equity" is extensive and general, rather than restrictive and particular, and confers on the superior court or the judge thereof the same power to appoint commissioners in condemnation proceedings as is possessed by circuit courts or judges. Wisconsin River Imp. Co. v. Pier, 118 N. W. 857, 859, 137 Wis. 325, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 538.

AT LEAST

"The meaning of the words 'at least' is in the smallest or lowest degree; at the lowest estimate or at the smallest concession or claim; at the smallest number." In re Gregg's Estate, 62 Atl. 856, 857, 218 Pa. 260.

The words "at least," as used in an instruction that if defendant shot decedent after an assault already ended, and when he was in no possible danger, defendant "would at least be guilty of the offense of voluntary manslaughter," did not amount to an intimation of opinion on the part of the judge as to the guilt of the accused. Lee v. State, 58 S. E. 676, 677, 2 Ga. App. 481.

An extension of "at least 60 days" is an extension for an indefinite time not less than 60 days, and gives a reasonable time after the 60 days expire. City of St. Charles v. Stookey, 154 Fed. 772, 782, 85 C. C. A. 494 (citing Roberts v. Wilcock [Pa.] 8 Watts & S. 464, 470; Stewart v. Griswold, 134 Mass. 391).

A certificate of incorporation, which fixes the term of existence of a corporation at "not to exceed the term of 40 years," is sufficiently definite, and means that the term during which the corporation shall exist will be "at least" 40 years—the limit prescribed by the statute. Hughes v. Antietam Mfg. Co. of Washington County, 34 Md. 316, 324.

Article 281 of the Civil Code, correctly interpreted, means that "family meetings in all cases . . . shall be composed of, at least five (persons), relations, or in default of relations, friends," etc. The words "at least" apply to all family meetings, and cannot be held to mean "neither more nor less than five." Succession of Carbajal, 36 South. 41, 48, 111 La. 944.

"When so many 'clear days' or so many days 'at least' are given to do an act or 'not less than' so many days must intervene, both the terminal days are excluded; and under a statute invalidating charitable bequests unless made at least one calendar month before death, such a bequest in a will, made on October 8th between 3 and 5 p. m., is invalid where testator died on November 8th between 7 and 8 p. m." In re Gregg's Estate, 62 Atl. 856, 857, 218 Pa. 260 (quoting and adopting the language of Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 391).

As indicating successive days' notice

The provision of the Code which requires "at least 60 days' notice of any application for the passage of an ordinance in at least two of the daily newspapers in the said city" does not require a daily publication for 60 days in two newspapers, nor any number of times for the publication, but it requires that the notice shall be published in two of the daily newspapers of the city, and that 60 days shall elapse after the publication of the notice before any such ordinance shall be passed. Mayor, etc., of Baltimore v. Little Sisters of the Poor, 56 Md. 400, 405.

AT ONCE

The term "at once" means immediately, or to-day. Patterson v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 94 Pac. 138, 140, 77 Kan. 236, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 733.

The term "at once," like the words "forthwith" and "immediately," does not mean instantaneously, but a reasonable time. Where defendant, who was engaged in the business of lending money on chattel mortgages and pledges and selling jewelry and merchandise on installment contracts, sold the business to plaintiff, under a written contract guaranteeing the title to all pledges and the collection of all mortgages but requiring plaintiff to signify her dissatisfaction with any mortgage or the title to any property within three months from the date of the contract, and, if dissatisfied with any such title, to foreclose the mortgage "at once," the contract did not require plaintiff to foreclose a mortgage within three months from the date of the contract. Cohen v. Silverman, 40 N. Y. Supp. 8, 10, 4 App. Div. 503 (citing Bennett v. Lycoming County Mut. Life Ins. Co., 67 N. Y. 274; Bamforth v. Raddin, 96 Mass. [14 Allen] 66; Roberts v. Brett, 11 H. L. Cas. 337; Oldershaw v. King, 2 Hurl & N. 399, 517).

Insured was injured January 31, 1903. He stopped work because of the injury for 15 minutes, and then continued to work until March 25, 1903, and died April 6th following from the injury. An accident policy provided for a specified payment if insured should receive personal injury "at once resulting in continuous" total inability to engage in any business, etc., necessarily resulting independently of all other causes in certain results including illness, loss of members and loss of life. Held, that while the disability occurred "at once," to wit, at the time the accident happened, there was no continuous total inability to engage in business from the time of the injury to insured's death, and that the insurer was therefore not liable. Continental Casualty Co. v. Wade, 105 S. W. 35, 101 Tex. 102.

In a contract to indemnify a person, in case of accident, for injury sustained by violent means which shall, "Independently of all other causes, immediately, wholly, and continuously prevent him from the prosecution of any and every kind of business pertaining to his occupation," the word "immediately" is not synonymous with "instantly," "at once," and "without delay." A disability is immediate, within the meaning of such contracts, when it follows directly from an accidental hurt, within such time as the processes of nature consume in bringing the person affected to a state of total incapacity to prosecute every kind of business pertaining to his occupation. Order of United Commercial Travelers v. Barnes, 80 Pac. 1020, 1023, 1024, 72 Kan. 293, 7 Ann. Cas. 809.

Under Rev. Laws 1905, § 3395, providing that, where a person acquires an interest in land pending proceedings to register the title thereof and prior to the entry of decree, he must appear and answer in such proceedings "at once," persons who delayed more than six months after actual notice of proceedings to register the title to certain land before making application for permission to answer in such proceedings, in order to assert interests alleged to have been acquired pendente lite, were not entitled to answer as a matter of right; Rev. Laws 1905, § 3396, having no application to such a case. In re Brown, 138 N. W. 941, 942, 119 Minn. 491.

Reasonable time

The words "at once" will not be construed strictly according to their literal meaning, but will be held to mean within a reasonable time in view of the circumstances of each case. Peterson v. Hansen, 107 N. W. 528, 530, 15 N. D. 198.

Like "forthwith" and "immediately," "at once" does not mean instantaneously, but requires action to be taken within a reasonable time. It is sometimes synonymous with "as soon as possible," and is usually construed to mean within such reasonable time as shall be required under all the circumstances for doing the particular thing. Lucas v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 109 N. W. 191, 193, 181 Iowa, 669, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1016.

A stipulation in a contract of sale to deliver certain described machinery "at once" binds the seller to deliver without unreasonable delay. Georgia Agr. Works v. Price, 74 S. E. 718, 720, 11 Ga. App. 80.

Where a wrecking contract provided that plaintiff was to remove a certain building "at once," and others at specified times, the words "at once" meant within such time as was reasonable under the attending circumstances. Wetter v. Kleinert, 123 N. Y. Supp. 755, 756, 139 App. Div. 220.

An order for a gasoline tank to be shipped "at once" denoted a prompt or immediate shipment of a tank then on hand, the reasonable time ordinarily allowed a seller for shipment, not being sufficient, and the failure of the seller to ship within 10 days after receiving the order warranted the buyer in rescinding the contract. Bowser v. Atkinson, 143 S. W. 75, 76, 161 Mo. App. 450.

A contract for 300 signs, to be used by the buyer's salesmen for distribution among the trade, 150 to be delivered "at once," and 150 in three months from the date of the order, calls for a prompt delivery of 150, and an offer to deliver six weeks after the making of the contract comes too late; the words "at once" contemplating the making of a delivery with greater celerity than is ordinarily comprehended by a reasonable time. Binger Co. v. Blumberg, 134 N. Y. Supp. 1115, 76 Misc. Rep. 432.

Where an accident policy only insured against bodily injuries caused through external, violent, and purely accidental means, causing "at once," and continuously after the accident, total inability to engage in any and every labor or occupation, etc., the term "at once" or "immediately" should be construed as adverbs of time and not causation, and were not intended to mean "reasonable time," but rather "presently," or without any substantial interval between the accident and disability. Continental Casualty Co. v. Ogburn (Ala.) 57 South. 852, 853.

Where, pending suit on a claim, a compromise was entered into whereby defendant agreed to pay $42 in settlement of $63, and $21 of the $42 was paid down, and a note given for the balance, payable "at once," the words "at once" will be construed to mean in a reasonable time, and not to mean a cash payment, especially where the parties themselves have so construed it. Rivers v. Campbell, 111 S. W. 190, 193, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 103.

AT OWNER'S RISK

Where apples were stored with a public warehouseman for hire, the recital in a receipt given therefore that they were "at owner's risk" did not relieve the warehouseman from liability for injuries arising from his negligence in failing to protect them from unusually cold weather. Denver Public Warehouse Co. v. Munger, 77 Pac. 5, 6, 20 Colo. App. 56.

AT PLEASURE

In Rev. Laws, c. 102, § 172, authorizing municipal officers to license theatrical exhibitions and to revoke the same "at their pleasure," the quoted words mean from time to time in the exercise of a wise discretion, having in view the purposes of the statute, to prevent theatrical performances contrary to good morals. Commonwealth v. McGann, 100 N. E. 355, 356, 213 Mass. 213.

The phrase "dividend payable at the pleasure of the company," in a certificate reciting that one is entitled to a specified amount of script dividend, and declaring that this dividend is payable at the pleasure of the company, etc., means reasonable time, and, where script dividends representing the undivided earnings of a corporation were evidenced by a certificate reciting that it was payable at the pleasure of the company, it was payable within a reasonable time, and, some having been paid, all were payable. Billingham v. E. P. Gleason Mfg. Co., 91 N. Y. Supp. 1046, 1048, 101 App. Div. 476.

Under Springfield City Charter, § 8, providing that the administration of police shall be vested in the mayor and aldermen, who shall have exclusive power to appoint police officers "and the same to remove 'at pleasure,'" the mayor and aldermen had the absolute power to remove the city marshal and his assistants, without notice or hearing. Stebbins v. Police Com'rs of City of Springfield, 82 N. E. 42, 43, 196 Mass. 365.

Ky. St. 1903, § 3619, provides: "The marshal, assessor, treasurer, clerk and city attorney shall be appointed for a term of two years by the city council, but may be 'removed at the pleasure' of the city council." The language of the statute is that the officers named may be "removed at the pleasure" of the city council. These words have a well-defined legal meaning. The right to "remove at pleasure" is an entirely different thing from the right to remove for cause. To hold that the statute only authorizes the council to remove for cause would be to deny the words used by the Legislature their ordinary meaning. Its meaning is that the officers named shall hold at the pleasure of the city council, but not longer than for a term of two years. The council is elected itself for two years, and for this reason their power of appointment is also limited to two years. But their appointees during the term hold at their pleasure. In other words, their appointments are subject to the pleasure of the council, but expire in any event after two years. London v. City of Franklin, 80 S. W. 514, 515, 118 Ky. 105.

The right to remove at pleasure is entirely different from the right to remove for cause. Ky. St. 1903, § 3404, provides that the council of a city of the third class shall elect a city assessor, who shall hold his office until his successor is elected and qualified. By section 3249 all officers or employes elected, appointed, or employed by the council may be removed by it at pleasure; and section 3254 provides that, except as otherwise provided, any officer, whether elected or appointed, may be impeached and removed by the council for incompetency, inefficiency, neglect, or misconduct. Held, that the council of a city of the third class may remove the city assessor at pleasure. Rogers v. Congleton (Ky.) 84 S. W. 521, 522 (citing London v. City of Franklin, 80 S. W. 514, 118 Ky. 105).

AT PRIVATE ENTRY

Acts 1861, p. 12, relating to the sale and disposition of swamp and overflowed lands by the state, did not require that they be sold only to actual settlers; the phrase "at private entry," used therein, only contemplating a sale thereof to citizens generally. Jordan v. McClure Lumber Co., 54 South. 415, 423, 170 Ala. 289.

AT SAID TIME

In a suit by two children of a decedent to set aside decedent's deed of real estate to a third child, to the exclusion of one of the plaintiffs, the master found that the defendant and one of the plaintiffs "connived together to induce their mother to make a will in their favor to the exclusion of Thomas [her son] and her grandson, and that she was unduly influenced by them, and that, although she of her own volition and with the idea of preventing trouble, which might be occasioned if she left another will, suggested a deed instead, was nevertheless affected at said time by said undue influence." Held, in view of the fact that decedent made no will, at that time or later, that the finding that the mother was "unduly influenced" had no meaning except by reference to the deed, that the words "at said time" meant when the deed was executed, and that the word "affected" signified acted upon, moved, or changed. Lyons v. Elston, 98 N. E. 93, 94, 211 Mass. 478.

AT SETTLEMENT

The words "at settlement," as used in a provision in the by-law of a building association that, where its loan contracts are governed by laws that limit the aggregate amount of premium and interest that can be taken on them, only so much of the premium collected shall be taken as profits by it as will, with the interest collected, equal and conform to the highest contractual rate of interest (in such state, the balance of the premium being used "at settlement" in reduction of the debt, mean that the borrower is entitled to the benefit thereof only on final settlement, after maturity of the stock. Georgia State Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Grant, 34 South. 84, 86, 82 Miss. 424.

AT SUCH TIME

Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 3578, providing for the filing of a chattel mortgage where the property is "at such time" situated, refers to the time of execution of the mortgage, and requires it to be filed where the property is then situated, and not where it is subsequently taken and located at the time the mortgage is filed. Hales v. Zander, 103 Pac. 669, 24 Okl. 243, 138 Am. St. Rep. 879.

AT THE BASE

The phrase "at the base" in a deed conveying timber above a certain size at the base, when cut, to be cut at any time within 15 years meant at the ground, though it was customary in that vicinity to cut timber two feet above the ground. Banks v. Blades Lumber Co., 54 S. E. 844, 845, 142 N. C. 49.

AT THE COURTHOUSE

A tax sale "at the door of the courthouse" is a sale "at the courthouse," within the requirement of Sess. Laws 1897, c. 28, § 116 (Pol. Code, § 2195), that such a sale be at the courthouse. Hobart v. Scott, 125 N. W. 124, 25 S. D. 20.

AT THE END

The words "at the end," in 2 Hill's Ann. St. & Codes, §§ 462, 463, providing that the lien of a judgment remaining unsatisfied at the end of five years after the rendition may be revived, mean "after the expiration" of five years. Tacoma Nat. Bank v. Sprague, 74 Pac. 393, 394, 33 Wash. 285.

AT THE EXPENSE OF THE MUNICIPAL TREASURY

Acts 1900, p. 153, c. 119, § 6, requires all persons therein designated to work on the public roads or pay a commutation tax, and prescribes in addition an ad valorem tax on all property in the county, and provides that the commutation tax shall be paid to the treasurer of the municipality from which the same was collected, but that the ad valorem tax shall be treated as a general road fund for use anywhere in the county, except the taxes so collected on property within a municipality the streets of which are worked "at the expense of the municipal treasury," which shall be equally divided between the county road fund and the municipal street fund. Section 7, p. 155, declares that the provisions of that act relating to commutation tax shall not apply to municipalities which work their streets "at the expense of the municipal treasury." Held, that a municipality working its streets "at the expense of the municipal treasury" is not limited to a municipality working its streets with money raised by an ad valorem tax alone, but that any municipality assuming the burden of working its streets with money out of its own treasury, whether raised by an ad valorem tax or a commutation tax, is working its streets "at the expense of the municipal treasury," within sections 6 and 7. McComb City v. Pike County, 45 South. 871, 872, 91 Miss. 736.

AT THE EXPIRATION

Under a lease giving the lessee an option to renew "at the expiration" of the term, he was bound to elect at a point of time at or before the expiration of the old lease, after it had expired being too late. This was held against the contention that the request could not be made before such expiration and that "at the expiration" was just as much the day following as the day preceding the actual expiration. I. X. L. Furniture & Carpet Installment House v. Berets, 91 Pac. 279, 282, 32 Utah, 454.

The phrase "at the expiration of one year" in a lease for five years, with the privilege to either party to terminate the lease "at the expiration of one year" on 60 days' notice in writing, defines the limit of time and marks the close of a period and not its beginning, and the lease can be terminated only by notice within 60 days of expiration of the first year thereof, and not at any time thereafter. M. Fine Realty Co. v. City of New York, 103 N. Y. Supp. 115, 116, 53 Misc. Rep. 246.

AT THE HANDS OF JUSTICE

Though the killing by the husband of the paramour of the wife be under such circumstances that the law would class the act as justifiable homicide, such killing is not "at the hands of justice," either punitive or preventive, within the provision of a policy of life insurance, that if death was caused or superinduced "at the hands of justice," the full amount of the policy could not be recovered, and Civ. Code 1895, § 2118, declaring that death "at the hands of justice, either punitive or preventive," releases the insurer. Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias v. Crenshaw, 58 S. E. 623, 629, 129 Ga. 196, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 258, 121 Am. St. Rep. 216, 12 Ann. Cas. 307.

AT THE OPTION OF EITHER PARTY

A dealer in electric lamps agreed with a manufacturer to carry a specified number of the manufacturer's lamps in stock at all times, the dealer to give a note, which he was to be allowed to settle "by return of lamps * * * at any time at the option of either party, and by a 60-day notice by either party." Held, that the manufacturer did not have the right to elect to take lamps in payment of the indebtedness, such election being the right of the dealer, the words "at the option of either party" relating to the time of payment, giving either party the option of determining when the note should be paid. Union Trust Co. v. Michigan Electric Co., 103 N. W. 556, 557, 140 Mich. 131.

AT THE RATE OF

See Payable at the Rate of.

Carter's Alaska Code, pt. 5, c. 27, § 255, provides that the rate of interest in the district shall be 8 per cent. per annum, and no more, on all moneys after the same becomes due, but on contracts interest "at the rate of twelve per centum" may be charged by express agreement of the parties. Held, that there can be no reasonable doubt that the intention of Congress in using the words "at the rate of 12 per centum" was to designate an annual rate of interest. Such words will not be deprived of that meaning from the fact alone that they are found in a penal statute. Hemple v. Raymond, 144 Fed. 796, 798, 75 C. C. A. 526.

AT THE STUMP

The expression "at the stump," in the agreement, means the point at which the trees would be cut, and the custom in the vicinity, known to the parties, being to cut pulp wood 20 to 24 inches above the ground, that was the point meant by the phrase, which did not apply to a point 3 feet above the ground, as provided in Laws 1897, c. 220, § 7, under which the state acquired the land under the deed, providing that the owner of land to be taken under the article might, at his option, within the limitations thereafter prescribed, reserve the spruce timber thereon 10 inches or more in diameter at a height of 3 feet from the ground. Turner v. Bissell, 126 N. Y. Supp. 234, 237, 69 Misc. Rep. 167.

AT THE TIME

The words "at the time," in Act Cong. May 2, 1890, c. 182, § 20, 26 Stat. 91, providing that no person who shall "at the time" be seised in fee simple of 160 acres of land in any state or territory shall be entitled to enter land in the territory, mean the time an application is made to enter the land. Gourley v. Countryman, 90 Pac. 427, 430, 18 Okl. 220.

The phrase "at the time," as used in an instruction in an action for personal injuries from being struck by a train at a crossing, referred to the entire transaction or series of circumstances from the time he reached the tracks to the time when he was injured. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Johnson, 26 N. E. 510, 512, 135 Ill. 641.

An instruction, conditioning the right of recovery upon the fact that the injured person was "at the time" of the injury exercising due care, refers to the whole transaction, and is not objectionable as requiring due care only at the very moment of the injury. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Ouska, 37 N. E. 897, 898, 151 Ill. 232.

Under Rem. & Bal. Code, § 1183, providing that a materialman must deliver or mail a duplicate statement of such material to the owner "at the time" the material is delivered to the contractor, the acts of delivery of the materials and the giving of the notice must be coincident. Seattle Lumber Co. v. Richardson & Elmer Co., 120 Pac. 517, 518, 66 Wash. 671.

Rem. & Bal. Code, § 1183, provides that a materialman, to be entitled to a lien for materials furnished, at the time the material is delivered, shall deliver or mail to the owner a duplicate statement thereof, etc. Petitioner contracted to furnish materials for a dwelling, and commenced delivering the material September 14, 1909, and continued until March 31, 1910; the deliveries being made from day to day. On the date of the first delivery, petitioner mailed to the owner a duplicate statement of all the material covered by the contract, and no other duplicate statement was given or mailed. Held, not to constitute a substantial performance of the statute, and that petitioner was therefore not entitled to a lien for the material. Heim v. Elliott, 119 Pac. 826, 827, 66 Wash. 361.

Under the Colorado statute of frauds (Mills' Ann. St. 1891, § 2025), which provides that every contract for the sale of any goods, chattels, or things in action for the price of $50 or more "shall be void, * * * third, unless the buyer shall, at the time, pay some part of the purchase money," a verbal contract to deliver stock of a corporation in part payment for services "thereafter to be rendered" is not taken out of the statute by the subsequent rendition of the services which is not a payment "at the time" within the exception of the statute nor a part performance which can validate the contract at law. Franklin v. Mator Gold Min. Co., 158 Fed. 941, 943, 86 C. C. A. 145, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 381, 14 Ann. Cas. 302.

Rev. Codes 1899, § 5894, relating to the redemption of personal property sold under mortgage, provides that the mortgagor or his assignee desiring to redeem such property shall "at the time of sale" give written notice to the person making the sale of his desire to make such redemption, otherwise he shall be deemed to have waived his right to do so. Held, that a notice of intention to redeem, made 33 minutes after the sale, is sufficient, and that the phrase "at the time of the sale," taken in connection with the context and the intent of the law, should be construed to convey the same meaning as the word "forthwith" or "immediately" would convey if used in the same connection. Brown v. Smith, 102 N. W. 171, 173, 13 N. D. 580.

AT THEIR DISCRETION

Under a will providing that dividends of certain stock shall be paid to testator's children by the executors "at their discretion," the executors have no right to determine capriciously and without ground whether or not the income should be paid, but the words, "at their discretion" refer to the times and manner of payment. Lembeck v. Lembeck, 68 Atl. 337, 340, 73 N. J. Eq. 427.

AT THEIR (Or His) PLACE OF BUSINESS

The phrase "at their place of business," appearing in the prohibition statute of 1907 (Acts 1907, p. 81, § 1), includes the immediate room or place in which the business is conducted, also any nearby room or place used by the proprietor in connection with the business, or in such a relation to it as to indicate that it is a convenient place which the proprietor would probably use for keeping such liquors as he might desire to furnish others for the purpose of inducing trade or for unlawful sale. Jenkins v. State, 62 S. E. 574, 576, 4 Ga. App. 859.

This court reaffirms the ruling in Jenkins v. State, 62 S. E. 574, 4 Ga. App. 859, that "the phrase 'at their place of business,' appearing in the general prohibition statute of 1907 (Acts 1907, p. 81, § 1), includes in its meaning the immediate room or place in which the business in question is conducted, also any nearby room or place used by the proprietor in connection with the business or in such a relation to the actual 'place of business' as to indicate that the nearby room, compartment, etc., is a convenient place which the proprietor would probably use for keeping therein such liquors as he might desire to furnish to others for the purpose of inducing trade, or for keeping therein liquors intended for unlawful sale under cover of the business carried on in the main place." It was not error to instruct the jury in the language above quoted. Smith v. State, 74 S. E. 711, 11 Ga. App. 89.

From the room in which defendant kept a restaurant a door led into a closed hall, and opening into this was a door leading into other rooms, with a storage room downstairs from the hall and another upstairs. In the downstairs room was found whisky, and in the upstairs room several cases of whisky, and in the adjoining storage room several unopened cases of different sorts of liquor. Held to justify a finding that the rooms in which defendant kept the liquors were "at his place of business," within the general prohibition statute of 1907 (Acts 1907, p. 81). Bashinski v. State, 62 S. E. 577, 578, 5 Ga. App. 3.

AT THEIR VALUE

Under B. & C. Comp. §§ 3042, 3058, declaring that shares of stock in banks shall be assessed "at their value," and that personal property shall be assessed at its true value in cash, the cash value of shares in national bank stock, for the purpose of taxation, is their market value, and not their pecuniary value as computed by adding to the par value of the paid-up stock the undivided earnings or profits of the bank. Ankeny v. Blakley, 74 Pac. 485, 488, 44 Or. 78.

AT WILL

See Hiring at Will; Lease at Will; Tenant at Will.

AT YOUR HOUSE

Defendant gave a firm a guaranty to pay all bills which might be contracted "at your house" by W. At the time of sale to W. the firm had been formed into a corporation having the same parties. Held, that defendant was not liable, on the theory that by the use of the words "at your house" the guaranty was to the proprietors of the store, whoever they were. Jordan-Marsh Co. v. Beala, 87 N. E. 471, 201 Mass. 163.

ATLANTIC SEABOARD

The words "Atlantic seaboard" as used in a contract by which a seller of a fishing trade agreed as a condition of the sale that he would not become engaged or interested in the business of catching or manufacturing the products from certain classes of fish along the Atlantic seaboard, in competition with the business of the purchaser, for a specified term, would seem to be broad enough to include such indentations in the coast as Delaware, New York, or Massachusetts Bay, and, at least, a location of a plant on Chesapeake Bay, about 70 miles from the Atlantic Ocean. Fisheries Co. v. Lennen, 130 Fed. 533, 535, 65 C. C. A. 79.

ATROCITY

See Extreme Atrocity or Cruelty.

ATTACH

A fire policy insured $1,000 on plaintiff's machinery, tools, etc., and all building material while contained in one story frame metal roof building, and its "additions thereto attached," and while stacked on yard within 100 feet of the above described mill, situated, etc. Held, that a brick boiler house located 27 feet from the mill and connected with it by steam and sawdust and shavings pipes constituted an "addition" within the terms of the policy, and that lumber and shingles piled within 100 feet of the boiler house, though not within that distance of the mill building, was covered by the policy. Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Mayfield Planing Mills (Ky.) 119 S. W. 1190.

As to buildings

The word "attached" in a fire policy on a two-story building, and "additions attached thereto," used as a stable, having the meaning of "connected with," or "joined to," the policy covers an extension of the main floor, by means of an excavation, partly of unoccupied higher ground; the same then being planked over and partly under another building on higher ground. Montana Stables v. Union Assur. Soc. of London, 101 Pac. 882, 883, 53 Wash. 274.

Within the law that lands are excepted from a grant if any homestead claim is "attached" thereto, the word "attached" did not merely mean settlement, residence, or cultivation, but a proceeding in the proper land office. It meant that by such a proceeding the right of homestead had fastened to that land which could ripen into a proved title by a future residence and cultivation. Whitney v. Taylor, 15 Sup. Ct. 798, 798, 158 U. S. 85, 89, 39 L. Ed. 906 (citing Natoma Water & Mining Co. v. Bugbey, 98 U. S. 165, 24 L. Ed. 621).

Under the Lien Law as amended by Laws 1904, c. 698, incorporated in Personal Property Law (Laws 1909, c. 45) art. 4, providing that contracts of conditional sale, accompanied by delivery of the thing sold, shall be void as against subsequent purchasers in good faith unless filed as directed, and that, where chattels are so sold to be attached to a building, the conditions of the contract shall be void against bona fide purchasers of the premises, unless before delivery of the chattels at such building the contract shall have been duly filed, electric generators which were conditionally sold to a purchaser for use in the plant of an amusement company, and were delivered some months after the date of the contract by the seller to the amusement company at the request of the buyer, and were permanently affixed to the foundation and connected with an engine, making them part of the plant of the amusement company, were "attached to the building" within the statutes, and, the contract not having been filed, the sale was absolute as to subsequent bona fide purchasers of the premises. Crocker-Wheeler Co. v. Genesee Recreation Co., 125 N. Y. Supp. 721, 724, 140 App. Div. 726.

As to counties

Because two or more counties compose one judicial district they are not "attached" for judicial purposes within the meaning of Act Nov. 28, 1861 (Comp. Laws, par. 2967), providing that "the sheriff in any county in any judicial district in this state, to which any other county or counties in such district may be 'attached' for judicial purposes shall have power and authority to serve all process, writs, orders or other papers, issued or directed to him by the district court, or the clerk thereof, within any county or counties the same as if the said county or counties were not separate or district counties." Sadler v. Tatti, 30 Pac. 1082, 1083, 17 Nev. 429.

As to pre-emption rights

Notwithstanding its subsequent cancellation, on the filing of a declaratory statement a pre-emption claim "attached" to land within Act Cong. July 1, 1862 (12 Stat. 489), granting land, in aid of a railroad "to which a pre-emption or homestead claim may not have attached." Whitney v. Taylor, 45 Fed. 616, 617 (citing Leavenworth, L. & G. R. Co. v. U. S., 92 U. S. 734, 23 L. Ed. 684; Newhall v. Sanger, 92 U. S. 761, 23 L. Ed. 769; Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Dunmeyer, 5 Sup. Ct. 112, 113 U. S. 629, 28 L. Ed. 1122; Hastings & D. R. Co. v. Whitney, 10 Sup. Ct. 112, 132 U. S. 357, 33 L. Ed. 363; Burlington & M. R. R. Co. v. Abink, 15 N. W. 817, 14 Neb. 95).

The word "attached," as used in Act Cong. March 3, 1855 (10 Stat. 683), granting land to Minnesota to aid in constructing certain railroads and reserving from the grant lands, to which rights of pre-emption had "attached," did not mean mere settlement, residence, or cultivation of the land, but a proceeding in the proper land office by which the inchoate right to the land was initiated, and a right of pre-emption "attached" at least as early as the time of filing the application. Weeks v. Bridgman, 43 N. W. 81, 83, 41 Minn. 352 (quoting and adopting the definition in Kansas P. R. Co. v. Dunmeyer, 5 Sup. Ct. 566, 573, 112 U. S. 414, 28 L. Ed. 794).

The word "attached," within the rule that no pre-emption or homestead claim attaches to a tract until an entry in the local land office, does not mean mere settlement or residence or cultivation of the land, but means the proceeding in the proper land office by which the inchoate right to the land was initiated. It means that by such a proceeding the homestead right had fastened to the land which could ripen into a perfect title by future residence and cultivation. The word "attached" was probably the best word that could have been used. Northern P. R. Co. v. Colburn, 17 Sup. Ct. 98, 99, 164 U. S. 383, 41 L. Ed. 479 (citing Kansas P. R. Co. v. Dunmeyer, 5 Sup. Ct. 566, 573, 113 U. S. 629, 644, 28 L. Ed. 1122).

ATTACHED BUILDING

As dwelling, see Dwelling—Dwelling House.

ATTACHÉ

The word "attaché," as employed in a constitutional provision authorizing municipal charters to provide for the appointment and compensation of the "attachés" of the judges, is to be taken in its general and enlarged sense as applying to any one recognized as a necessary adjunct to a court, tribunal, or office, and, by virtue of the necessity existing at practically all preliminary examinations for the appointment of a stenographer, he should be treated as coming within the term. Elder v. McDougald, 79 Pac. 429, 432, 145 Cal. 740.

ATTACHMENT

Discharge of attachment, see Discharge. See, also, Garnishment.

An "attachment" is merely a possessory process. Lowenthal v. Hodge, 105 N. Y. Supp. 120, 124, 120 App. Div. 304.

An "attachment" is merely a proceeding ancillary to the action by which a party may acquire a lien for the security of his demand, and is a provisional, independent proceeding, initiated by affidavit forming the basis for the writ, and can only be made available through a judgment, which neither changes the nature nor determines the validity of the attachment. Nail v. Superior Court in and for the County of Los Angeles, 103 Pac. 902, 903, 11 Cal. App. 27.

As civil action

See Civil Action—Case—Suit—etc.

Execution distinguished

"Attachments" may be a species of executions but "executions" is a broader term, and the lesser does not include the greater. The levy of execution on the property of a judgment debtor is not an "attachment" of such property, within Kirby's Dig. § 4055, authorizing the receiver to have all attachments of the insolvent debtor's property dissolved. J. M. McGuire & Co. v. Barnhill, 115 S. W. 1144, 1145, 89 Ark. 209.

The word "attachment," as ordinarily understood in American law, has reference to a writ the object of which is to hold property to abide the order of the court for the payment of a judgment in the event the debt shall be established. An attachment has but few of the attributes of an execution; the execution contemplated by statute being the judicial process for obtaining the debt or damages recovered by judgment, and final in its character, while attachment is but mesne process, liable at any time to be dissolved, and the judgment upon which may or may not affect the property seized. Neither the words "attachment" or "arrestment," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 4536, providing that no wages due or accruing to a seaman shall be subject to attachment or arrestment from any court, and declaring that payment of wages to seamen shall be valid notwithstanding any previous sale, or assignment, attachment, incumbrance, or arrestment, etc., when considered literally has reference to execution or proceedings in aid of execution to subject property to the payment of judgment, but refers to process of holding property to abide the judgment, but, when liberally construed in the light of other provisions of the statute to effect the protection intended to be secured to seamen, will include proceedings in aid of execution. Wilder v. Inter-Island Steam Nav. Co., 29 Sup. Ct. 58, 61, 211 U. S. 239, 53 L. Ed. 164, 15 Ann. Cas. 127.

Of person

"An 'attachment' is merely process requiring one to be arrested and produced before the court and does not of itself import that when produced the party is to be punished." In re Doland, 64 Atl. 1091, 1093, 69 N. J. Eq. 802.

ATTACHMENT OF A CHIP

The return of an "attachment of a chip" is a legal fiction; it represents a nominal and not an actual attachment of property. Martin v. Bryant, 80 Atl. 702, 108 Me. 253.

ATTACK

See Collateral Attack; Direct Attack. Impeach equivalent, see Impeach—Impeachment.

Where the evidence was that defendant shot deceased upon his throwing his hand to his hip pocket, an instruction as to defendant's right of self-defense, if the deceased had made an attack was insufficient, since, though the act of deceased may have been an attack in law, as ordinarily understood the word "attack" means more than a threatening gesture, and the law should have been applied to the evidence and the jury instructed that, if by the act of deceased it reasonably appeared to the defendant that his life was in danger, he had a right to shoot. Johnson v. State, 138 S. W. 1021, 1024, 63 Tex. Cr. R. 50.

An unlawful attack warranting one in killing his assailant is such an attack as puts him, as a reasonable person, in fear of being killed or of receiving great bodily harm, and one cannot deliberately proceed in the immediate exercise of a mere technical right when he has reason to know that by so doing he will be placed under the necessity of killing another in self-defense. People v. Webster, 109 Pac. 637, 639, 13 Cal. App. 348.

ATTAINDER—ATTAINT

See Bill of Attainder.

Conviction distinguished, see Convicted—Conviction.

Attainder signifies an extinction of civil and political rights and capacities, and includes a bill of pains and penalties, and hence Act Oct. 14, 1879, authorizing the removal of a railroad commissioner by a majority vote of each house of the General Assembly after suspension by the Governor, is not violative of Const. art. 1, § 3, par. 2, providing that no bill of attainder shall be passed, the action of the Legislature in removing such a commissioner not amounting to a conviction of crime nor of the infliction of any punishment, but simply depriving him of the right to hold the particular office at the time. Gray v. McLendon, 87 S. E. 859, 872, 184 Ga. 224 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, pp. 620, 621, 779, 780).

ATTEMPT

See Criminal Attempt.

The word "attempt" is defined thus: To make an effort to effect some object; to make a trial or experiment; to use exertion for some purpose; to perform an act toward accomplishing a purpose. It can only be made by an actual deed done in pursuance and furthermore of a design. Radebaugh v. Scanlan, 82 N. E. 544, 547, 41 Ind. App. 109 (citing Anderson's Law Dict.; Prince v. State, 35 Ala. 367).

The word "attempt," in an instruction that the attempt of accused to prove an alibi does not shift the burden of proof, did not mean to discredit the evidence of defendant on the question of alibi; but it evidently meant that the fact that defendant had offered evidence for the purpose of proving an alibi did not shift the burden of proof. People v. Lang, 76 Pac. 232, 234, 142 Cal. 482.

Under an Ohio statute making it unlawful for an employer to coerce or "attempt" to coerce an employé from belonging to any lawful labor organization, the court said: "Was there an attempt to coerce? In order to constitute an 'attempt' to do anything, the means employed must have some adaptation to accomplish the intended result. 1 Bish. Cr. Law, § 749. If the employer threatens to discharge his employé because of his connection with a labor organization, then there may be some reason for saying that the threat is calculated to accomplish his withdrawal, and therefore that, by threatening to discharge, the employer attempts to coerce. But how is an actual discharge adapted to accomplish his withdrawal? It could not have been in the contemplation of the defendant that in consequence of discharging the employé he would withdraw from the organization. The discharge was not such an act as could have the effect to coerce him or compel him against his will to withdraw. Notwithstanding the discharge, he was at liberty to leave the organization or remain in it as he chose. His withdrawal would not restore him to the service. If therefore it is assumed that an attempt to coerce is the act which the statute prohibits and declares to be a misdemeanor, it is a serious question whether the indictment in this case states an offense." State v. Bateman, 10 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 68, 70.

As respects an attempt or offer to cast a ballot and vote, the terms "offer" and "attempt" are practically the same in meaning. One of the definitions given by Mr. Webster of the word "offer" is "attempt." State v. Fielder, 109 S. W. 580, 583, 210 Mo. 188.

ATTEMPT AT SUBORNATION

An "attempt at subornation" of perjury is an effort to induce a witness to swear falsely in a particular case, so that the act, if successful, would be perjury; a mere general attempt to induce another to swear falsely being insufficient. State v. Johnson (Del.) 84 Atl. 1040, 1041.

ATTEMPT TO COMMENCE ACTION

"An 'attempt' to commence an action shall be deemed equivalent to the commencement thereof * * * when the party diligently endeavors to procure a service; but such an 'attempt' must be followed by service within sixty days." Rev. St. Wyo., § 3462; Caldwell v. State, 74 Pac. 496, 497, 12 Wyo. 206; Clause v. Columbia Savings & Loan Ass'n, 95 Pac. 54, 59, 16 Wyo. 450.

If Code Civ. Proc. (Gen. St. 1901, § 4448), providing that an action shall be deemed commenced at the time of the first publication, applies to a case where plaintiff without causing a summons to be issued has filed his petition and affidavit for publication and caused a suitable notice to be delivered to the publishers of the only newspaper printed in the county, with directions for its insertion in the next issue thereof, such proceeding by plaintiff must be regarded as constituting an "attempt" to begin the action, within the meaning of the further provision of the same section that an "attempt to commence an action" shall be deemed equivalent to the commencement thereof, when the party faithfully, properly, and diligently endeavors to procure a service. Canaday v. Davis, 101 Pac. 626, 627, 79 Kan. 816.

An "attempt to commence an action," under Rev. St. § 4988, declaring that an attempt to commence an action shall be deemed equivalent to the commencement thereof, when the party diligently endeavors to procure a service, but such attempt must be followed by service within 60 days, and section 4991, providing that where, in an action commenced or attempted to be commenced in due time, a judgment be reversed, or if plaintiff fail otherwise than on the merits, and the time limited for the commencement of such action has at the date of such reversal or failure expired, plaintiff may commence a new action within one year after such date, an action brought within the proper time in the federal court, which dismisses the cause for want of jurisdiction over the parties or subject-matter, is the commencement of the action, and plaintiff failing otherwise than on the merits is entitled to commence a new action within one year from the date of dismissal. Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Bemis, 59 N. E. 745, 64 Ohio St. 26.

ATTEMPT TO COMMIT CRIME

An attempt to commit a crime is an act done in part execution of a criminal design with the intent to commit, but which fails short of actual consummation. Nider v. Commonwealth, 131 S. W. 1024, 1026, 140 Ky. 684; State v. Doran, 59 Atl. 440, 441, 99 Me. 329, 105 Am. St. Rep. 278 (quoting 1 Bish. Cr. Law, § 728); People v. Du Veau, 94 N. Y. Supp. 225, 226, 105 App. Div. 381 (citing Pen. Code, § 34).

An attempt to commit a crime contains three elements—the intent, the performance of some act toward its commission, and failure of consummation. State v. Thompson, 101 Pac. 557, 559, 31 Nev. 209.

An intention to commit a felony, and the doing of some act towards its commission, without actually committing it, is an "attempt." Cates v. Commonwealth, 69 S. E. 520, 521, 111 Va. 837.

An "attempt" is defined as "an intended, apparent, unfinished crime. * * * It must be apparent, since if it be obviously not likely to effect the result at which it aims (e. g., where a popgun is leveled at a ship or a witch is employed to use enchantments), it is not indictable. * * * It must be in such progress that it will be consummated unless interrupted by circumstances independent of the will of the attempter." Dahlberg v. People, 80 N. E. 310, 311, 225 Ill. 485.

Under Pen. Code, § 34, providing that an act done with intent to commit a crime, and tending, but failing, to effect its commission, is an "attempt" to commit that crime, there could be no attempt to suborn perjury, where the false testimony sought to be procured would not have constituted perjury if given as intended, as there would have been no subornation of perjury in such case. People v. Teal, 89 N. E. 1086, 1087, 196 N. Y. 372, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 120, 17 Ann. Cas. 1175.

Where defendant attempted to procure R. to kill a third party, and in furtherance of the purpose took a gun, loaded it, and started with R. to the point where the killing was to occur, but was arrested, the act was an act done tending to effect the commission of the crime, and was an "attempt," within the meaning of Code 1906, § 1049, providing that every person who shall design and endeavor to commit an offense, and shall do any overt act towards the commission thereof, but shall fail therein, or shall be prevented from committing the same, shall, etc., even though the third party did not go to the place of the proposed killing. Stokes v. State, 46 South. 627, 628, 92 Miss. 415, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 898.

Under Sess. Laws 1848, c. 11, § 12, making it an offense to attempt to burn a barn, an "attempt" can only be made by an actual but ineffectual deed done in pursuance of and in furtherance of the design to commit the offense. Uhl v. Com., 6 Grat. (47 Va.) 706, 709.

"Attempts" is a term peculiarly indefinite. It has no prescribed legal meaning.

It relates from its nature to an unconsummated offense. It covers acts some of which are indictable and some of which are not. * * * In an indictment for an attempt to commit a crime, it is essential to aver that the defendant did some act which, directed by a particular intent, to be averred, would have apparently resulted, in the ordinary and likely course of things, in a particular crime." Hogan v. State, 39 South. 464, 465, 50 Fla. 86, 7 Ann. Cas. 139 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Whart. Cr. Law [10th Ed.] 190, 192).

Intent distinguished

"The word 'attempt' is more comprehensive than the word 'intent,' implying both the purpose and an actual effort to carry that purpose into execution. In crimes which require force as an element in their commission, there is no substantial difference between an assault with intent, and an assault with attempt, to perpetrate the offense." Smith v. State, 55 S. E. 475, 126 Ga. 544 (quoting and adopting definition in Johnson v. State, 14 Ga. 55; 2 Bish. New Cr. Proc. [4th Ed.] § 80).

The only distinction between an "intent" and an "attempt" to do a thing is that the former implies purpose only, while the latter implies both the purpose and an actual effort to carry that purpose into execution; and, since the word "attempt" embraces the full meaning of "intent" with something more, it is not impossible that the courts may hold it to be an admissible substitute in an indictment. Smith v. State, 100 N. W. 806, 807, 72 Neb. 345 (citing 2 Bish. Cr. Proc. § 80; Atkinson v. State, 30 S. W. 1064, 34 Tex. Cr. App. 424; Runnells v. State, 30 S. W. 1065, 34 Tex. Cr. App. 431).

Intent required

The word "attempt," in a verdict finding defendant guilty of assault with "attempt" to murder in the second degree, carries with it the idea that there was "intent" to commit the crime, and the verdict is not fatally defective. Bunch v. State, 50 South. 534, 535, 58 Fla. 9, 138 Am. St. Rep. 91.

An "attempt" is an act in part execution of a crime which exceeds a mere design, but falls short of complete execution, and implies an intent as well as an endeavor to commit the crime. Flower v. Continental Casualty Co., 118 N. W. 761, 762, 140 Iowa, 510.

"'Attempt' involves an intent to do a particular thing which the law declares to be a crime." An attempt to commit suicide is not an indictable offense in the state of Maine. May v. Pennell, 64 Atl. 885, 887, 101 Me. 516, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 286, 115 Am. St. Rep. 834, 8 Ann. Cas. 351.

One cannot be convicted of an "attempt" to commit mayhem by destroying an eye with red pepper, there being no other evidence of intent than the throwing of the pepper, and the evidence showing that an eye cannot be destroyed by red pepper, unless it is allowed to stay in the eye longer than it would take to remove it in the ordinary course of events. Dahlberg v. People, 80 N. E. 810, 811, 225 Ill. 485 (quoting and adopting the definition in 1 Wharton on Criminal Law [10th Ed.] § 178).

Under Pen. Code, § 113, making it a felony to give or offer to a witness, or one about to be called as a witness, any bribe upon any understanding or agreement that his testimony shall be thereby influenced, or to attempt by any other means fraudulently to induce any witness to give false testimony, the essence of the crime is the understanding under which the money was given to a prospective witness and not the giving of the money; the words "upon any understanding or agreement," and "attempts fraudulently to induce," being equivalent to "with the intent." People v. Kathan, 120 N. Y. Supp. 1096, 1099, 136 App. Div. 303.

Offer synonymous

A verdict finding defendant guilty of an "attempt" to bribe sufficiently showed a violation of a statute prohibiting the offer of a bribe; the words "offer" and "attempt" as so used being synonymous. Johnson v. State, 92 S. W. 257, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 250.

As sufficient charge of intent

The word "attempt" itself implies an intent formed, and also an attack or endeavor to commit the offense, and, employed with the language of the statute defining the substantive offense, advises the court and the accused of the nature of the accusation made. State v. Evans, 78 Pac. 1047, 1048, 27 Utah, 12.

Comp. Laws Nev. § 4208, provides that an indictment is sufficient if it can be understood therefrom that it is entitled in a proper court; that it was found by a grand jury of the proper district; that defendant is named or described; that the offense was committed at some place within the court's jurisdiction, and at some time prior to the time of finding the indictment; that the offense charged is clearly set forth in ordinary and concise language and stated with such certainty as to enable the court to pronounce judgment upon a conviction. Section 4840 provides that every person lawfully confined in a county jail who shall escape or attempt to escape shall be punished. Accused was indicted for "the crime of attempting to escape from a county jail," in that, while accused was lawfully confined in the jail of said county under an indictment for burglary, he "did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously attempt to break out of said county jail and in pursuance of said attempt did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously break out of a cell in said county jail" in which he was confined, and assaulted and overpowered a jailer of said jail; contrary to the statute, etc. Held, that the indictment sufficiently alleged that the acts complained of were done with intent to escape, as the word "feloniously" means "done with intent to commit a crime," and with a design on the part of the accused to commit the felony with which he is charged, and the word "attempt" implies both an intent and an endeavor to accomplish it, and that the indictment complies with requirements of section 4208. State v. Clark, 104 Pac. 593, 595, 32 Nev. 145, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 754.

Overt act

"An act done with intent to commit a crime, and tending, but failing, to effect its commission, is an attempt to commit that crime." Pen. Code, § 84. "Felonious intent alone is not enough, but there must be an overt act shown, in order to establish even an attempt. An overt act is one done to carry out the intention, and it must be such as would naturally effect that result, unless prevented by some extraneous cause." Defendant formed a plot to obtain possession of certain indictments, for the purpose of destroying them, by bribing the assistant district attorney having them in his charge to deliver them to him for a certain consideration. A third party, pretending to act for the district attorney, delivered them to him, and he took possession of them and walked away, whereon he was arrested and the indictments recovered. Defendant was properly convicted, under Pen. Code, § 94, of an attempt to unlawfully remove documents from a public officer, and, under section 531, of an attempt to commit grand larceny in the second degree. People v. Mills, 70 N. E. 786, 789, 178 N. Y. 274, 67 L. R. A. 131.

To constitute an "attempt" there must be something more than mere intention or preparation; there must be some act moving directly toward the commission of the offense after the preparations are made. State v. Doran, 59 Atl. 440, 441, 99 Me. 329, 105 Am. St. Rep. 278 (citing People v. Youngs, 81 N. W. 114, 122 Mich. 292, 47 L. R. A. 108); Ex parte Turner, 104 Pac. 1071, 1073, 8 Okl. Cr. 168.

To constitute a crime at common law, some act must be done in execution of the criminal design. Mere preparation is not sufficient. The distinction between the preparation and the "attempt" itself is not abrogated by the statute. State v. Wood, 103 N. W. 25, 19 S. D. 260.

An "attempt" to commit the crime of larceny is an overt act or acts done with intent to deprive the true owner of his property, or of the use and benefit thereof, or to appropriate the same to the use of the taker, and tending to effect the commission of the crime, but failing to accomplish it. State v. Miller, 114 N. W. 88, 103 Minn. 24 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 622).

"An 'attempt' to commit a crime is an act done with intent to commit that crime and forming a part of a series of acts which would constitute its actual commission if it were not interrupted." The mere fact that a prisoner procured tools adapted to jail breaking did not constitute an attempt to break jail. State v. Hurley, 64 Atl. 78, 79, 79 Vt. 28, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 804, 118 Am. St. Rep. 934.

An "attempt" to commit a crime implies both intention to do the act committed and an actual offer to consummate such attempt; hence an allegation that accused did attempt to murder another is good, though the indictment did not charge that the act constituting the attempt was done with intent to murder. State v. Hager, 40 S. E. 393, 394, 50 W. Va. 370 (citing 1 McClain, Cr. Law, § 228; 1 Bish. Cr. Law, 729).

To constitute an "attempt to commit crime," the act done with an intent to commit the crime must go beyond mere preparation, and there must be an overt act, amounting to a step towards the execution of the criminal purpose. Johnson v. State, 55 South. 321, 323, 1 Ala. App. 102.

An "attempt" is an endeavor to accomplish a crime, carried beyond mere preparation, but falling short of execution of the ultimate design in any part of it. It is an intent to do any particular thing combined with an act which falls short of the thing intended; an act immediately and directly tending to the commission of the principal crime, and committed by the prisoner under such circumstances that he has the power of carrying his intention into execution, including solicitations of another. Mere intention to commit a specific crime does not amount to an attempt; but there must, in addition to the mens rea, be some act done toward the accomplishment of the proposed crime. People v. Paluma, 122 Pac. 431, 18 Cal. App. 131.

"An indictable 'attempt' * * * consists of two important elements: First, an intent to commit the crime; and, second, a direct, ineffectual act done towards its commission. To constitute an attempt, there must be something more than a mere intention to commit the offense, and preparation for its commission is not sufficient. Some overt act must be done toward its commission, but which falls short of the completed crime. It need not be the last proximate act before the consummation of the offense, but it must be some act directed toward the commission of the offense after the preparations are made. It is often difficult to determine the difference between preparation for the commission of a crime and an act towards its commission. There is a class of acts which may be done in pursuance of an intention to commit a crime, but not, in legal sense, a part of it, and do not constitute an indictable attempt; such as the purchase of a gun with the design of committing murder, or the procuring of poison with the same intent. These and like acts are considered in the nature of mere preliminary preparation, and not as acts towards the consummation of the crime." "One may commit a crime by his own hand or that of another employed, aided, or encouraged by him. If he endeavors or attempts to commit it himself, and is interrupted or frustrated, he would clearly be guilty of an indictable attempt, and if he uses another person to accomplish the same purpose, and the other fails to carry out his design, whether purposely or otherwise, the result is the same." State v. Taylor, 84 Pac. 82-84, 47 Or. 455, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 417, 8 Ann. Cas. 627.

To constitute the crime of "attempting" to poison a white person by a slave, there must be actual attempt to poison by the administering of some poisonous drug or substance calculated to destroy human life; the offense consists in the attempt to do an action which if consummated would have caused death. An unexecuted determination to poison, though preparation was made for that purpose or the actual administering of a substance not poisonous or calculated to cause death, though believed to be so by the person administering it, is not an "attempt to poison." State v. Clarrissa, 11 Ala. 57, 60.

Preparation alone insufficient

An "attempt" in criminal law is an effort to accomplish a crime amounting to more than mere preparation and planning for it, and which, if not prevented, will result in the consummation of the act attempted. State v. Hewett, 74 S. E. 356, 357, 158 N. C. 627.

An attempt to commit a crime is an endeavor carried beyond mere preparation, but falling short of execution of the ultimate design. It is an act immediately and directly tending to the execution of the principal crime, and committed by the prisoner under such circumstances that he had the power of carrying his intention into execution, and would have done so but for some intervening cause. Ex parte Floyd, 95 Pac. 175, 7 Cal. App. 588.

Solicitation to commit

The weight of authority is that a solicitation to commit a crime is not an "attempt" to commit it. The very definition of "attempt" precludes the possibility of its including a mere solicitation. To constitute an "attempt" the act must reach far enough toward the accomplishment of the desired result to amount to the commencement of the consummation and must not be merely preparatory. In other words, while it need not be the last proximate act to the consummation of the offense attempted to be perpetrated, it must approach sufficiently near to it to stand either as the first or more subsequent step in a direct movement towards the commission of the offense after the preparations are made. State v. Bowles, 79 Pac. 726, 730, 70 Kan. 821, 69 L. R. A. 176.

ATTEMPT TO COMMIT RAPE

The words "attempt to rape" implies an assault. State v. Sullivan, 84 S. W. 105, 109, 110 Mo. App. 75.

An attempt to commit rape embraces every element of the crime except its accomplishment, and if the assault is made under such circumstances that the act of sexual intercourse, if it had been actually accomplished, would be rape, it would be an "attempt to commit rape." While to constitute an "attempt to commit rape" there must be, in addition to the intent, some overt act in pursuance of such intent, the overt act need not amount to a technical trespass. Payne v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 110 S. W. 311, 312.

An indictment, alleging that accused made an assault on a female under the age of 15 years and attempted to ravish her, charges an assault with intent to rape, in violation of Pen. Code 1895, art. 608, providing that, where any person shall assault a woman with intent to commit rape, he shall be punished; the word "attempt" in the indictment being equivalent to the word "intent." Fowler v. State (Tex.) 148 S. W. 576, 577.

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 640, providing that if it appears, on a trial for rape, that the offense, though not committed, was attempted by the use of any of the means stated in articles 634, 635, and 636, but not so as to make it an assault to commit rape, the jury may find accused guilty of an attempt to commit rape, and article 634, making the definition of "force" in assault and battery applicable to the crime of rape, in which case it must be sufficient to overcome resistance, considering the relative strength of the parties, etc., in order to constitute an "attempt to commit rape," there must have been an intent to use such force as would constitute rape or an assault to commit rape, but the attempt to apply the force must have failed, so that it did not amount to rape or an assault to commit rape. Holloway v. State, 113 S. W. 928, 933, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 465.

ATTEMPT TO ENTER

The term is used in treaties in regard to blockaded ports. Persisting in an intention to enter a blockaded port after warning is not "attempting to enter" it. The intention must be accompanied by some overt act. Fitzsimmons v. Newport Ins. Co., 8 U. S. (4 Cranch) 185, 199, 2 L. Ed. 591; Calhoun v. Insurance Co. of Pennsylvania (Pa.) 1 Bin. 293, 308.

An importer swore to a false invoice value before an American consul, but on importation presented at the custom house an invoice to which was added sufficient to make the true value. Held, that the case was not within Customs Administrative Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, § 9, 26 Stat. 135, relating to any "attempt to make any entry of imported merchandise by means of any fraudulent or false invoice." The illegal intent was abandoned before any "attempt" was made to enter the goods. United States v. One Trunk, 171 Fed. 772, 774.

Where an importer took out a fraudulent invoice, but concluded not to use it in making entry of the goods covered by the invoice, but used instead a corrected invoice, the goods were not forfeitable on the ground of a fraudulent "attempt to enter" imported merchandise, under Customs Administrative Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, § 9, 26 Stat. 135. Inasmuch as articles for sale which accompany a person arriving in the United States are not required to be declared at the same time as the passenger's personal baggage, an intentional misstatement of the value of such articles does not make the articles forfeitable, because the importer was under no obligation to enter them or declare their value at that time, under section 2799 Rev. St. relating to "baggage." United States v. One Trunk, 175 Fed. 1012, 1015.

ATTEMPT TO PURCHASE

A attempt to get an option is not an "attempt to purchase" within Comp. Laws, § 6234, subd. 8, empowering a railroad company, if unable to purchase real estate required for its purposes, to acquire it by condemnation. Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Ferguson, 127 N. W. 320, 321, 162 Mich. 220.

ATTEMPT TO USE

Accused purchased a street car transfer and paid for the same and passed along a street on which the cars ran on which his transfer would be good, and the cars on that line were convenient for him to take for the purpose of going to his work, but he was arrested before he could take one of the cars. Held, that his conduct did not constitute an "attempt to use" such transfer within the meaning of a city ordinance making it unlawful for any person to purchase a transfer from any one not an agent of the street car company and "attempt to use" the same. City of Chicago v. Taub, 150 Ill. App. 611, 613.

ATTEND

ATTENDANCE

See Medical Attendance.

Under Code 1896, §§ 4580, 4581, entitling regular jurors to $2 for each day's service and special jurors to the same compensation for their "attendance," a special juror, who attended court upon summons for one day, and was then discharged, without being sworn as a juror, was entitled to compensation for his attendance. Chitty v. Tisdale, 45 South. 587, 154 Ala. 246.

Under a statute providing that jurors shall receive a certain sum per diem for "attendance" upon court, a juror is not entitled to fees for the time during which he is dismissed from attendance on the court before his final discharge. Jacobs v. Elliott, 37 Pac. 942, 104 Cal. 318.

One summoned to testify before a police court upon a complaint charging another with illegally selling intoxicants, who, upon accused being required to furnish bail for his appearance at the next term of court, was ordered to give sureties for his appearance as a witness at the same term, but, being a stranger in the town, was unable to furnish sureties, whereupon he was detained in jail 80 days until the next term, when he testified before the grand jury which did not indict, was "in attendance" upon court without the statute for the period detained in jail without his own fault, so as to be entitled to witness' fees therefor. Kirke v. Strafford County, 80 Atl. 1046, 1047, 76 N. H. 181, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 807.

ATTENTION

Where an order for goods is taken by a traveling salesman and transmitted to his employer, who thereupon writes to the proposed buyer acknowledging the receipt of the order, thanking him for it, and saying that it will receive prompt and careful "attention," such communication either is in itself an absolute acceptance of the order, or is such an expression as may, in connection with an otherwise unexplained omission for a long time to make any further response, be deemed some evidence from which an acceptance may be inferred; if not conclusively an "acceptance," it may be given that effect if the subsequent conduct of the parties indicates that they have each so treated it. Bauman v. McManus, 89 Pac. 15, 17, 75 Kan. 106, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1138.

ATTEST—ATTESTATION

The word "attest" has several variations of meaning subordinate to the general sense, among which the Oxford Dictionary gives: (a) To bear witness to, to testify, to certify; (b) formally by signature. In re Paxson's Estate, 70 Atl. 280, 285, 221 Pac. 98.

A test to decide whether the will of a person who has the use of all his faculties is "attested" in his presence is to inquire whether he understood what they were doing when they affixed their signatures and could, if he had been so disposed, readily have seen them do it. Healey v. Bartlett, 59 Atl. 617, 618, 73 N. H. 110, 6 Ann. Cas. 418.

Where a witness "attests" the signature of one maker of a promissory note, and another maker afterwards signs it, it seems that it is not an "attested" note, as to the latter, within the provision of the statute of limitations. Walker v. Warfield, 47 Mass. (6 Metc.) 466, 470.

"In the case of Drury v. Connell, 177 Ill. 43, 52 N. E. 368, it was said that the attestation of a will consists in the subscription of the names of the witnesses to the attestation clause as a declaration that the signature of the testator was affixed or the will acknowledged in their presence." Calkins v. Calkins, 75 N. E. 182, 183, 216 Ill. 458, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 393, 108 Am. St. Rep. 233.

As certify or verify

Since the town recorder is the official custodian of the town records, his certificate to the correctness of a copy of a resolution is sufficient, in view of Code, §§ 4630, 4635, relating to the effect of documents as evidence which are duly authenticated and certified by public officers, and section 4643, raising a presumption of genuineness of the signature of such officers, and the copy of the resolution filed was sufficiently certified by the town recorder; to "certify" a document being to affirm or assert in writing its correctness or identity, and to "attest" being to affirm to be true or genuine. Sawyer v. Lorenzen & Weise, 127 N. W. 1091, 1093, 149 Iowa, 87, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 940 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1033).

A certificate reading: "A copy. Attest"—implies that the document authenticated is a "true copy." Commonwealth v. Quigley, 48 N. E. 782, 783, 170 Mass. 14.

Subscribe distinguished

"Attestation" is the act of witnessing the execution of an instrument and subscribing the name of the witness in testimony of fact. The dictionary definitions, without exception, show conclusively that the notion associated with the word 'attested' both in its technical and nontechnical use is that of observation and subscription. The word 'attested,' as used in Mills' Ann. St. Rev. Supp. § 4664, providing that all wills by which any property is devised or bequeathed shall be attested in the testator's presence by two or more witnesses, contemplates not only the mental act of observing, but also the certification of the thing noted by the manual act of subscription, the word being derived from the Latin words 'ad' and 'testari,' meaning to witness or to bear witness and being in fact synonymous with 'witnessed' when used in connection with wills, which word implies the act of subscribing as well as of observing; and hence where two persons saw a testator execute a purported codicil and heard him declare it to be such, but one of them subscribed it in his presence, it was insufficiently attested." International Trust Co. v. Anthony, 101 Pac. 781, 783, 785, 45 Colo. 474, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1002, 16 Ann. Cas. 1087 (quoting Calkins v. Calkins, 75 N. E. 182, 216 Ill. 548, 1 L. R. A. [N. S.] 393, 108 Am. St. Rep. 233; citing 4 Cyc. p. 888).

To "subscribe," within Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 93, § 317, providing that wills shall be in writing signed by the testator and attested and subscribed in his presence by two or more credible witnesses, means that the witnesses shall sign their names to the same paper for the purpose of identification and implies that attestation has been performed. Brengle v. Tucker, 80 Atl. 224, 226, 114 Md. 597.

Witness synonymous

See Witness.

ATTESTED ORDER

Under Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 23, § 210, providing that a benefit shall not be assignable except to the beneficiaries and then only by the consent of the association, but the member may surrender his certificate and have a new one issue to any one or more of the beneficiaries as provided by the by-laws of the society, and the by-laws of a fraternal society providing that the benefit, on the death of a member, shall be paid to his widow, orphans or parents or "attested order," a will of a member disposing of his death benefit is not an "attested order," and the beneficiary under the will is not entitled to the benefit due under the certificate. Mineola Tribe No. 114, Improved Order of Red Men, v. Lizer, 83 Atl. 149, 150, 117 Md. 136, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1170.

ATTESTING WITNESS

"An 'attesting witness' is a subscribing witness." Historical Society of Dauphin County v. Kelker, 74 Atl. 619, 226 Pa. 16, 134 Am. St. Rep. 1010.

Under Act April 26, 1855 (P. L. 328), providing that no property shall be bequeathed to any person in trust for religious or charitable uses except by deed or will, attested by two credible witnesses, at least one calendar month before the decease of the testator, an attesting witness must be a subscribing witness. In re Paxson's Estate, 70 Atl. 280, 281, 221 Pa. 98.

ATTORN

See Attornment.

One of the meanings of the verb "attorn" is to transfer or turn over to another. Eichelberger v. Sifford, 27 Md. 320, 330.

ATTORNEY

The name of the drawee in a check was followed by the abbreviation "Atty.," and there was a marginal note, "in full for A. J. K. mortgage." Held, that the abbreviation did not give notice to the bank in which the check was deposited that it was impressed with a trust, for "attorney" may mean "assignee," "agent," or "attorney at law," and the marginal memorandum did not broaden that meaning; for banks are not required to notice marginal memoranda. First Denton Nat. Bank v. Kenney, 81 Atl. 227, 231, 116 Md. 24, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1837.

Administrator as attorney

An administrator was held to be neither an "attorney," agent, factor, trustee, nor debtor, for purposes of foreign attachment. Conway v. Armington, 11 R. I. 116, 117.

As attorney at law

On an issue as to the sufficiency of a notice to vacate certain railroad depot grounds, signed in the name of the railroad company by F. and A., "its attorneys," the word "attorneys" should be construed to mean attorneys at law. Nolan v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 91 Pac. 1128, 1129, 19 Okl. 51.

Defendant's affidavit of merits for change of place of trial, averring that he has fully and fairly stated all the facts to his "attorney," C., is sufficient without further stating that C. is his counsel in the case; "attorney," "counselor," and "attorney at law" being used synonymously by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 275-299. Pittman v. Carstenbrook, 104 Pac. 699, 702, 11 Cal. App. 224.

The word "attorney" following the name of a person, when not qualified, is ordinarily understood to mean a member of the legal profession, and one who, as an attorney at law, is legally authorized to appear for and represent clients who are parties to causes in courts of record. People ex rel. Colorado Bar Ass'n v. Erbaugh, 94 Pac. 349, 351, 42 Colo. 480.

The word "attorney," when used in connection with the proceedings of courts and the authority to conduct business in them, as well as when employed in a general sense as to the transaction of business usually and almost necessarily confided to members of the legal profession, has a fixed and universal signification, and has reference to a class of persons who are by license made officers of the courts, and empowered to appear, prosecute, and defend, and upon whom peculiar duties, responsibilities, and liabilities are devolved by law in consequence. Danforth v. Egan, 119 N. W. 1021, 1024, 23 S. D. 43, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1030, 20 Ann. Cas. 418.

An "attorney" is a man set apart by the law to expound to all persons who seek him the laws of the land relating to high interests of property, liberty, and life. To this end he is licensed and permitted to charge for his services. The relation he bears to his client implies the highest trust and confidence. An attorney may be disbarred, if he has been guilty of an act of immorality or impropriety inconsistent with the character or incompatible with the faithful discharge of the duties of his profession or any other good cause. Under Shannon's Code, § 5781, providing that the courts must strike from their rolls any attorney guilty of such misdemeanor or acts of immorality or impropriety as are inconsistent with the faithful discharge of the duties of his profession, where a firm of attorneys procured a number of cases by personal solicitation by their representative, they are not entitled to compensation for their services from a coal company on its procuring a settlement with the clients, though the contract of employment of the attorneys was free from fraud or misrepresentation and no infidelity to the interests of their clients was imputed to them. Ingersoll v. Coal Creek Coal Co., 98 S. W. 178, 189, 117 Tenn. 263, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 282, 119 Am. St. Rep. 1003, 10 Ann. Cas. 829.

Code Civ. Proc. § 417, requires a summons to be subscribed by plaintiff's "attorney," who must add to his signature his office address; and section 418 prescribes, as part of the form of a summons, the words, "You are hereby summoned . . . to serve a copy of your answer on the plaintiff's 'attorney.'" Held, that the use of the singular form of the word "attorney" does not indicate that there can be no more than one "attorney" for plaintiff; the use of the word being no more significant than the use of the singular form of the word "plaintiff's." In either case the singular is used as the simple and natural mode of the expression without any intent to exclude the plural but to embrace it. Jones v. Conlin, 95 N. Y. Supp. 255, 256, 48 Misc. Rep. 172.

Where plaintiff was admitted to the bar in 1893, but never filed the certificate required by Laws 1899, p. 406, c. 225, with the clerk of the Court of Appeals, or practiced law, except for about a year after admission, he is not an attorney, within Code Civ. Proc. § 73, prohibiting an attorney from buying a chose in action with intent to sue thereon. Thompson v. Stiles, 89 N. Y. Supp. 876, 877, 44 Misc. Rep. 334.

Where a notice of appeal was signed by certain persons, "attorneys for plaintiffs," these words clearly meant to convey the information that the signatures were attached in a representative capacity and were not merely descriptive. Igo v. Bradford, 85 S. W. 618, 620, 110 Mo. App. 670.

Defendant's affidavit of merits for change of place of trial, averring that he has fully and fairly stated all the facts to his "attorney," C., is sufficient without further stating that C. is his counsel in the case; "attorney," "counselor," and "attorney at law" being used synonymously by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 275-299. Pittman v. Carstenbrook, 104 Pac. 699, 702, 11 Cal. App. 224.

In England the legal practitioners are divided into two classes, denominated solicitors or attorneys, and "barristers," and their respective duties and functions are well defined. It is only "barristers" and not "attorneys" that at common law could not recover for professional services, and it is not and never has been the common law in England or in this state that an attorney could not recover. In this case the plaintiff described himself as an attorney and counselor at law, indicating that in Missouri, as in this state, the distinction between an "attorney" and "counselor" at law no longer obtains. Spencer v. Busch, 98 N. Y. Supp. 690, 692, 50 Misc. Rep. 234.

As officer of court

An "attorney" is an officer of the courts generally. State v. Babin, 50 South. 825, 826, 124 La. 1005, 18 Ann. Cas. 837.

An "attorney at law" is a sworn officer of the court. In re Holland's Estate, 97 N. Y. Supp. 202, 203, 110 App. Div. 799.

An "attorney at law" is an officer of court, exercising a privilege or franchise to the enjoyment of which he has been admitted, not as a matter of right, but upon proof of fitness, through evidence of his possessor of satisfactory legal attainments and fair private character. In re Durant, 67 Atl. 497, 500, 80 Conn. 140, 10 Ann. Cas. 539 (citing Fairfield County Bar v. Taylor, 22 Atl. 441, 60 Conn. 11, 15, 13 L. R. A. 767; Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall. 333, 373, 18 L. Ed. 366; Butchers' Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co., 4 Sup. Ct. 652, 111 U. S. 746, 763, 28 L. Ed. 585).

An "attorney at law" is an officer of the court, and it is as much incumbent on him to attend the sittings of the court when a case in which he is of counsel is on trial, and which trial cannot proceed in his absence, as it is for the sheriff or the clerk of the court to be present. The absence of an attorney from the court in which he has business, and when he should be there to attend to it, and when his absence necessarily impedes or delays the court's business, is contempt of court. In re Clark, 103 S. W. 1105, 1108, 126 Mo. App. 391.

An "attorney at law" is an "officer of the court," authorized to appear therein, and as such present to the court for its consideration the interests of his client, as well as to appear generally for his client with reference to the transaction of business usually confided to members of the legal profession, and are, before being authorized to appear in court or to do business as an attorney at law, required to prove their qualification and to take an oath that in the transaction of business as attorneys they will do no falsehood or consent that any be done in court, and will not knowingly promote, sue, or procure to be sued any false or unlawful suit. These requirements of the law have given to attorneys, admitted to the practice of the law, a status before the courts, and with reference to business they assume control of, different from that of other agents. A presumption follows their act, when acting for another, that they are authorized by such other to act for him touching the particular subject-matter. Attorneys admitted to the practice in Oklahoma obtain such right through and by reason of the authority of the Supreme Court, and the courts of the territory may therefore properly take notice of the right of an individual to act as an attorney at law, and to presume that in so acting they are not prosecuting any false or unlawful suit. Nolan v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 91 Pac. 1128, 1129, 19 Okl. 51.

Code, § 1166, declares that all process authorized by the Code to be issued by any court or officer thereof shall run in the name of the state of Oregon, and be signed by the officer issuing the same, and, if issued by the clerk of the court, he shall affix thereto his seal of office. While an "attorney" was in one sense an officer of the court, he was not such an officer as was meant or referred to by that term as used in the statute, so as to authorize an attorney for a party to issue process of the court. Bailey v. Williams, 6 Or. 71, 73.

An "attorney at law" is an officer of the court, and, if his authority is denied, the burden of proving that he is unauthorized rests on the party making the denial. Schlitz v. Meyer, 21 N. W. 243, 244, 61 Wis. 418.

An attorney at law is an "officer of the court" and as such is under special obligation to be considerate and respectful in his conduct and communications to the court or judge. He is also as such officer entitled to such treatment from the trial judge that the interest of his client will not be prejudiced. Dallas Consol. Electric St. Ry. Co. v. McAllister, 90 S. W. 933, 936, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 131.

An "attorney and counselor at law" is an officer of the court, and when he retains his client's money, claiming a lien thereon for his services, the Supreme Court clearly has jurisdiction to determine the whole question summarily on application to compel the payment of the moneys retained.
